Suddenly, a white bolt of LIGHTNING EXPLODES against Tank's chair, blasting him into the air.
Cypher checks the GUN, unable to believe he missed.

CYPHER
Shit.

Tank is on his feet, lunging when Cypher FIRES again, square into his chest.

DOZER
No!

132 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY 132
The PHONE is still RINGING.

TRINITY
You first, Neo.

Neo answers the PHONE when there is a CLICK. There is no signal. Nothing but silence.

TRINITY
What happened?

NEO
I don't know. It just went dead.

Trinity listens to the dead line and takes out the cellular.

133 INT. MAIN DECK 133

The operator PHONE begins to RING. Cypher steps over the SIZZLING BODY of Dozer and looks at the monitor.

134 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY 134

Every unanswered RING wrings her gut a little tighter, until --

CYPHER (V.O.)
Hello, Trinity.

TRINITY
Cypher? Where's Tank?

CYPHER (V.O.)
He had an accident.

TRINITY
An accident?!

INTERCUT WITH:

135 INT. MAIN DECK 135

He walks over to Trinity's body, staring down at it hanging in its coma-like stillness.

CYPHER
You know, for a long time, I thought I was in love with you, Trinity. I used to dream about you...

He nuzzles his face against hers, feeling the softness of it.

CYPHER
You are a beautiful woman. Too bad things had to work out like this.

TRINITY
You killed them.

APOC
What?!

SWITCH
Oh, God.

Wearing Tank's operator headgear, Cypher moves among the silent bodies.

(CONTINUED)

135

CONTINUED:

135

CYPHER

I'm tired, Trinity. I'm tired of this war, I'm tired of fighting. I'm tired of this ship, of being cold, of eating the same goddamn goop every day. But most of all, I'm tired of this jagoff and all of his bullshit.

Cypher leans over, talking to Morpheus.

CYPHER

Surprise, asshole. But you never saw this coming, did you? God, I wish I could be there when they break you. I wish I could walk in just as it happens, so right then, you'd know it was me.

TRINITY

My God. Morpheus. You gave them Morpheus.

CYPHER

He lied to us, Trinity! He tricked us! If he would've told us the truth, we would've told him to shove that red pill up his ass!

TRINITY

That's not true, Cypher. He set us free.

CYPHER

Free? You call this free? All I do is what he tells me to do. If I have to choose between that and the Matrix, I choose the Matrix.

TRINITY

The Matrix isn't real!

CYPHER

Oh, I disagree, Trinity. I disagree. I think the Matrix can be more real than this world. I mean, all I do is pull a plug here. But there, you have to watch a man die.

She looks up at Apoc, her face going white.

(CONTINUED)

135

CONTINUED: (1A)

135

APOC

Trinity?

He grabs hold of the cable in Apoc's neck, twists it and yanks it out.

CYPHER

Welcome to the real world, eh baby?

Apoc seems to go blind for an instant, a scream caught in his throat, his hands reaching for nothing, and then falls dead.

SWITCH

No!

TRINITY

But you're out, Cypher. You can't go back.

CYPHER

That's what you think. They've promised to take me back. They're going to reinsert my body. I'll go back to sleep and when I wake up, I'll be fat and rich and I won't remember a goddamned thing. It's the American dream.

He laughs, his hand sliding around the neck of Switch as he takes hold of her plug.

CYPHER

By the way, if you have anything terribly important to say to Switch, I suggest you say it now.

TRINITY

Oh no, please don't.

Trinity eyes find Switch and she knows she's next.

SWITCH

Not like this. Not like this.

She suddenly feels her body severed from her mind as she is murdered.

CYPHER

Yoo late.

(CONTINUED)

135 CONTINUED: (2)

135

TRINITY

Goddamn you, Cypher!

CYPHER

Don't hate me, Trinity. I'm just the messenger. And right now I'm going to prove it to you.

He stands over Neo.

CYPHER

If Morpheus was right, then there's no way I can pull this plug, is there?

She turns to Neo, eyes wide with fear and he knows he is next.

CYPHER

If Neo is the One, then in the next few seconds there has to be some kind of miracle to stop me. Right? How can he be the One if he's dead?

He takes hold of the cord.

CYPHER

You never did answer me, Trinity, when I asked you before. Did you buy Morpheus's bullshit? Come on. You can tell me, did you? All I want is a little yes or no. Look into his eyes, Trinity, those big pretty eyes and tell me the truth. Yes or no.

Trinity stares at Neo as a single word falls soundlessly from her lips.

TRINITY

... yes.

CYPHER

No!

Charred and bloody, Tank levels the gun.

CYPHER

I don't believe it!

TANK

Believe it or not, you piece of shit, you're still going to burn.

(CONTINUED)

135 CONTINUED: (3) 135

He FIRES a CRACKLING BOLT of LIGHTNING that knocks Cypher flying backwards.

136 OMITTED 136

137 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP 137

Trinity throws her arms around Neo and for a moment they are alone and alive until the PHONE RINGS.

NEO
Go. You first this time.

138 INT. MAIN DECK 138

Trinity's eyes snap open, a sense of relief surging through her at the sight of the ship. As Tank unplugs her, she sees his charred wounds.

TRINITY
Tank, you're hurt.

TANK
I'll be all right.

TRINITY
Dozer?

Tank's face tightens and she takes him into her arms.

139 EXT. GOVERNMENT BUILDING - DAY 139

A government highrise in the middle of downtown where a military helicopter sets down on the roof.

Agent Jones gets out of the helicopter, flanked by columns of Marines. They open the roof access door and enter the top floor maintenance level of the hotel.

140 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY 140

Agent Smith stands, staring out the windows at the city below shimmering with brilliant sunlight.

(CONTINUED)

AGENT SMITH

Have you ever stood and stared at it, Morpheus? Marveled at its beauty. Its genius. Billions of people just living out their lives... oblivious.

Morpheus is handcuffed to a chair, stripped to the waist. He is alternately shivering and sweating, wired to various monitors with white disk electrodes. Beside him, Agent Brown sucks a serum from a glass vial, filling a hypodermic needle.

AGENT SMITH

Did you know that the first Matrix was designed to be a perfect human world? Where none suffered, where everyone would be happy. It was a disaster. No one would accept the program. Entire crops were lost.

Agent Brown jams the needle into Morpheus's shoulder and plunges down.

AGENT SMITH

Some believed we lacked the programming language to describe your perfect world. But I believe that, as a species, human beings define their reality through suffering and misery.

Agent Brown studies the screens as the life signs react violently to the injection.

AGENT SMITH

The perfect world was a dream that your primitive cerebrum kept trying to wake up from. Which is why the Matrix was redesigned to this: the peak of your civilization.

He turns from the window.

AGENT SMITH

I say 'your civilization' because as soon as we started thinking for you, it really became our civilization, which is, of course, what this is all about.

He sits down directly in front of Morpheus.

(CONTINUED)

140 CONTINUED: (2)

140

AGENT SMITH
Evolution, Morpheus. Evolution.

He lifts Morpheus's head.

AGENT SMITH
Like the dinosaur. Look out that window. You had your time.

Morpheus stares hard at him, trying not to show the pain racking his mind.

AGENT SMITH
The future is our world, Morpheus.
The future is our time.

Agent Smith looks at Agent Brown.

AGENT SMITH
Double the dosage.

Agent Jones suddenly enters.

AGENT JONES
There could be a problem.

141 INT. MAIN DECK

141

Tank drapes a sheet over his dead brother. The other bodies are covered.

Neo looks at Morpheus, whose body is covered with a cold sweat.

NEO
What are they doing to him?

TANK
They're breaking into his mind.
It's like hacking a computer. All it takes is time.

NEO
How much time?

TANK
Depends on the mind. But eventually, it will crack and his alpha pattern will change from this to this.

(CONTINUED)

141 CONTINUED:

141

Tank punches several commands on Morpheus's personal unit. The monitor waves change from a chaotic pattern to an ordered symmetrical one.

TANK

When it does, Morpheus will tell them anything they want to know.

NEO

What do they want?

TANK

The leader of every ship is given the codes to Zion's mainframe computer. If an Agent had those codes and got inside Zion's mainframe, they could destroy us.

He looks up at Trinity who is pacing relentlessly.

TANK

We can't let that happen, Trinity. Zion is more important than me. Or you, or even Morpheus.

Trinity sees Cypher's dead body. Rage overtakes her and she kicks him.

TRINITY

Goddamnit! Goddamnit!

NEO

There has to be something that we can do.

TANK

There is. We have to pull the plug.

TRINITY

You're going to kill him? Kill Morpheus?!

TANK

Trinity, we don't have any other choice.

142 INT. GOVERNMENT BUILDING

142

Morpheus is fighting to hold his mind together. The Agents stand over him.

(CONTINUED)

142 CONTINUED:

142

AGENT SMITH

Never send a human to do a machine's job.

AGENT BROWN

If, indeed, the insider has failed, they will sever the connection as soon as possible, unless --

AGENT JONES

They are dead. In either case --

AGENT SMITH

We have no choice but to continue as planned. Deploy the sentinels.
Immediately.

143 INT. MAIN DECK

143

Tank kneels beside Morpheus's body.

Neo suddenly sees it perfectly clear, fate rushing at him like an oncoming train.

TANK

Morpheus, you were more than our leader. You were... a father. We will miss you, always.

Trinity can't bear to watch. As she closes her eyes, her tears slip free.

Tank closes his eyes and takes hold of the plug.

Neo is paralyzed, his whole life is suddenly suspended by the finality of this moment hurling at him with the speed of a bullet.

NEO

Stop!

They both look at him.

NEO

Goddamnit! I don't believe this is happening!

TANK

Neo, this has to be done!

(CONTINUED)

143 CONTINUED:

143

NEO

Does it? I don't know. This can't be just coincidence. It can't be! Can it?

TANK

What are you talking about?

NEO

The Oracle. She told me this would happen. She told me...

Neo stops, his stare fixed on Morpheus.

NEO

That I would have to make a choice...

TRINITY

What choice?

He makes his choice. Turning, he walks to his chair.

TRINITY

What are you doing?

NEO

I'm going in.

TRINITY

You can't!

NEO

I have to.

TRINITY

Morpheus sacrificed himself so we could get you out! There's no way you're going back in!

NEO

Morpheus did what he did because he believed that I'm something I'm not.

TRINITY

What?

NEO

I'm not the One, Trinity. The Oracle hit me with that, too.

Trinity is stunned.

(CONTINUED)

TRINITY

No, you... have to be.

NEO

I'm sorry, I'm not. I'm just another guy. Morpheus is the one that matters.

TRINITY

No, Neo. That's not true. It can't be true.

NEO

Why?

TRINITY

Because...

Uncertainty swallows her words and she is unable to tell him what she wants to.

TANK

Neo, this is loco. They've got Morpheus in a military controlled building. Even if you somehow got inside, those are Agents holding him. Three of them! I want Morpheus back, too, but what you are talking about is suicide.

NEO

I know that's what it looks like, but it's not. I can't logically explain to you why it's not. Morpheus believed something and he was ready to give his life for what he believed. I understand that now. That's why I have to go.

TANK

Why?

NEO

Because I believe in something.

TRINITY

What?

NEO

I believe I can bring him back.

(CONTINUED)

143 CONTINUED: (3)

143

Trinity stares at him, hovering on the edge that he just jumped off. Her jaw sets and she starts climbing into the chair beside him.

NEO

What are you doing?

TRINITY

I'm coming with you.

NEO

No you're not.

TRINITY

No? Let me tell you what I believe. I believe Morpheus means more to me than he does to you. I believe that if you are serious about saving him then you are going to need my help and since I am the ranking officer on this ship, if you don't like it then I believe that you can go to hell, because you aren't going anywhere else.

There is nothing more to say except --

TRINITY

Tank, load us up.

144 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY

144

Agent Smith sits casually across from Morpheus who is hunched over, his body leaking and twitching.

AGENT SMITH

I'd like to share a revelation that I've had during my time here. It came to me when I tried to classify your species. I've realized that you are not actually mammals.

The life signs continue their chaotic patterns.

AGENT SMITH

Every mammal on this planet instinctively develops a natural equilibrium with the surrounding environment. But you humans do not.

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

144 CONTINUED:

144

AGENT SMITH (CONT'D)

You move to an area and you multiply and multiply until every natural resource is consumed and the only way you can survive is to spread to another area.

He leans forward.

AGENT SMITH

There is another organism on this planet that follows the same pattern. Do you know what it is?
A virus.

He smiles.

AGENT SMITH

Human beings are a disease, a cancer of this planet. You are a plague. And we are... the cure.

A144 INT. CONSTRUCT

A144

Neo and Trinity stand in the white space of the construct as he answers his RINGING cell PHONE.

TANK (V.O.)

Okay. What do you need? Besides a miracle...

NEO

Guns. Lots of guns.

145 INT. MAIN DECK

145

Neo and Trinity's bodies hang motionless in their drive chairs as Tank hits load.

146 INT. CONSTRUCT

146

Racks of weapons appear and they begin to arm themselves.

TRINITY

No one has ever done anything like this.

NEO

Yeah?

He snap-cocks an Uzi.

(CONTINUED)

146 CONTINUED:

146

NEO
That's why it's going to work.

147 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY

147

Agent Smith is again at the window.

AGENT SMITH
Why isn't the serum working?

AGENT BROWN
Perhaps we are asking the wrong questions.

Agent Smith hides his knotting fist. He is becoming angry. It is something that isn't supposed to happen to Agents.

AGENT SMITH
Leave me with him.

Agents Brown and Jones look at each other.

AGENT SMITH
Now!

They leave and Agent Smith sits beside Morpheus.

AGENT SMITH
Can you hear me, Morpheus? I'm going to be honest with you.

He removes his earphone, letting it dangle over his shoulder.

AGENT SMITH
I hate this place. This zoo. This prison. This reality, whatever you want to call it, I can't stand it any longer. It's the smell, if there is such a thing. I feel saturated by it. I can taste your stink and every time I do, I fear that I've somehow been infected by it.

He wipes sweat from Morpheus' forehead, coating the tips of his fingers, holding them to Morpheus' nose.

AGENT SMITH
Repulsive, isn't it?

(CONTINUED)

147 CONTINUED:

147

He lifts Morpheus' head, holding it tightly with both hands.

AGENT SMITH

I must get out of here, I must get free. In this mind is the key. My key.

Morpheus sneers through his pain.

AGENT SMITH

Once Zion is destroyed, there is no need for me to be here. Do you understand? I need the codes. I have to get inside Zion. You have to tell me how.

He begins squeezing, his fingers gouging into his flesh.

AGENT SMITH

You are going to tell me or you are going to die.

148 INT. MAIN DECK

148

Tank sits down beside Morpheus, whose face is ashen like someone near death. He takes hold of his hand.

TANK

Hold on, Morpheus. They're coming for you. They're coming.

149 EXT. GOVERNMENT BUILDING - DAY

149

A dark wind blows.

150 INT. GOVERNMENT BUILDING - DAY

150

In long black coats, Trinity and Neo push through the revolving doors.

Neo is carrying a duffel bag. Trinity has a large metal suitcase. They cut across the lobby to the security station, drawing nervous glances.

Dark glasses, game faces.

Neo calmly passes through the METAL DETECTOR which begins to WAIL immediately. A SECURITY GUARD moves over toward Neo, raising his metal detection wand.

(CONTINUED)

150

CONTINUED:

150

GUARD

Would you please remove any metallic items you are carrying:
keys, loose change --

Neo slowly sets down his duffel bag and throws open his coat, revealing an arsenal of guns, knives and grenades slung from a climbing harness.

GUARD

Holy shit --

Neo is a blur of motion. In a split second, three guards are dead before they hit the ground.

A fourth guard dives for cover, clutching his radio.

GUARD #4

Backup! Send in the backup!

He looks up as Trinity sets off the metal detector. It is the last thing he sees.

The backup arrives. A wave of soldiers blocking the elevators. The concrete cavern of the lobby becomes a white noise ROAR of GUNFIRE.

Slate walls and pillars pock, crack, and crater under a hail storm of EXPLOSIVE-tipped BULLETS.

They are met by the quivering spit of a SUB-HAND MACHINE GUN and the RAZORED WHISTLE of throwing knives. Weapons like extensions of their bodies, are used with the same deadly precision as their feet and their fists.

Bodies slump down to the marbled floor while Neo and Trinity hardly even break their stride.

151

INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE

151

Agents Jones and Brown burst into the room. Agent Smith releases Morpheus.

AGENT BROWN

What were you doing?

Agent Smith recovers, replacing his earpiece.

AGENT JONES

You don't know.

AGENT SMITH

Know what?

(CONTINUED)

151 CONTINUED: 151

Agent Smith listens to his earphone, not believing what he is hearing.

152 INT. ELEVATORS - DAY 152

They get in. Trinity immediately drops and opens the suitcase, wiring a plastique and napalm bomb.

Neo hits the emergency stop. He pulls down part of the false ceiling and finds the elevator shaft access panel.

153 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY 153

Agent Jones looks at Morpheus.

AGENT JONES

I think they're trying to save him.

154 INT. ELEVATOR SHAFT - DAY 154

Neo ratchets down a clamp onto the elevator cable. Both of them lock on. He looks up the long, dark throat of the building and takes a deep breath.

NEO

There is no spoon.

Neo whips out his GUN and presses it to the cable, lower than they attached themselves.

BOOM! The CABLE SNAPS.

The counter-weights plummet, yanking Trinity and Neo up through the shaft as the elevator falls away beneath them, distending space, filling it with the sound of WHISTLING METAL as they sear to the top.

155 INT. LOBBY - DAY 155

The ELEVATOR hits the bottom.

BA-BOOM!

The massive explosion blows open the doors, fire clouds engulfing the elevator section of the lobby.

156 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY 156

The Agents hear the BLAST of FIRE ALARMS.

AGENT JONES

Lower level --

AGENT BROWN

They are actually attacking.

Another enormous EXPLOSION thunders above them, shaking the building. The ALARM sounds, emergency sprinklers begin showering the room.

Agent Smith smashes a table.

(CONTINUED)

156 CONTINUED:

156

AGENT SMITH
Find them and destroy them!

Agent Jones nods and touches his earpiece.

157 EXT. ROOF - DAY

157

The roof-access tower is now engulfed in flames as Neo and Trinity stand amongst a pile of their fallen enemies.

Across the roof, the PILOT inside the army helicopter watches the last of their ferocious onslaught.

PILOT
I repeat, we are under attack!

Suddenly his face, his whole body dissolves, consumed by spreading locust-like swarm of static as Agent Jones emerges.

Just as she drops the final Marine, Trinity sees what's coming. Neo sees her, the fear in her face, and he knows what is behind him.

Screaming, he whirls, guns filling his hands with thought-speed.

Fingers pumping, shells ejecting, dancing up and away, we look THROUGH the sights and gun smoke AT the Agent blurred with motion --

Until the hammers click against the empty metal.

NEO
Trinity!

Agent Jones charges.

NEO ... Help.

His GUN BOOMS as we ENTER the liquid space of --

-- BULLET-TIME.

The AIR SIZZLES with wads of lead like angry flies as Neo twists, bends, ducks just between them.

Agent Jones, still running, narrows the gap, the bullets coming faster until Neo, bent impossibly back, one hand on the ground as a spiraling gray ball shears open his shoulder.

(CONTINUED)

157

CONTINUED:

157

He starts to scream as another digs a red groove across his thigh. He has only time to look up, to see Agent Jones standing over him, raising his gun a final time.

AGENT JONES

Only human...

Suddenly Agent Jones stops. He hears a sharp metal click.

Immediately, he whirls around and turns straight into the muzzle of Trinity's .45 -- -- jammed tight to his head.

TRINITY

Dodge this!

BOOM! BOOM! BOOM! The body flies back with a flash of mercurial light and when it hits the ground, it is the pilot.

Trinity helps Neo up.

TRINITY

Neo, how did you do that?

NEO

Do what?

TRINITY

You moved like they moved. I've never seen anyone move that fast.

NEO

It wasn't fast enough.

He checks his shoulder wound.

TRINITY

Are you all right?

NEO

I'm fine. Come on, we have to keep moving.

Neo sees the helicopter.

NEO

Can you fly that thing?

TRINITY

Not yet.

She pulls out the cellular phone.

158 INT. HOVERCRAFT 158

Tank is back at the controls.

TANK

Operator.

TRINITY (V.O.)

Tank, I need a pilot program for a military B-212 helicopter.

Tank is immediately searching the disk drawers.

TRINITY (V.O.)

Hurry!

His fingers flash over the gleaming laser disks, finding one that he feeds into Trinity's supplement drive, punching the "load" commands on her keyboard.

159 EXT. ROOF - DAY 159

Trinity's eyes flutter as information surges into her brain, all the essentials of flying a helicopter absorbed at light-speed.

TRINITY

Let's go.

160 OMITTED 160

161 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY 161

Agent Jones throws open the door and enters, walking through the puddles pooling in the carpet. Over the RUSHING WATER and the ALARMS, Agent Smith hears a sound and understands the seriousness of the attack.

He turns to the wall of windows as the helicopter drops
INTO VIEW --

Neo is in the back bay, aiming the mounted .50 machine gun.

AGENT SMITH

No.

The GUN jumps and BULLETS EXPLODE THROUGH the WINDOW in a CACOPHONY of CRASHING GLASS as the Agents go for their weapons.

But Neo is too close, the .50 caliber too fast and BULLETS are everywhere, PERFORATING the room.

(CONTINUED)

161 CONTINUED:

161

Agent Jones is hit first, his body jack-knifing back, blood arcing out with a sudden flash of light --

Then Agent Brown, his GUN still FIRING as his body falls. And finally Agent Smith.

Neo stares at Morpheus, trying to will him into action.

NEO

Get up, Morpheus! Get up!

Neo grabs the climbing rope and attaches one end to his harness.

162 INT. HALL - DAY

162

Just outside the executive office, three Marines blister with snow-static.

163 INT. EXECUTIVE OFFICE - DAY

163

Slowly, Morpheus lifts his face into the room's rain. When he finally opens his eyes, they are again dark and flashing with fire.

He rises from the chair, snapping his handcuffs just as the Agents enter the adjoining room. Agent Smith stops and sees Morpheus run past the open door.

AGENT SMITH

Nooo!

He FIRES SWEEPING ACROSS the sheetrocked WALL in a perfect line.

For an instant, we see the BULLETS SHRED, PUNCTURING the WALL, searing through the wet air with jet trails of chalk.

And as Morpheus starts his dive for the window, a bullet buries itself in his leg, knocking him off balance.

NEO

He won't make it.

Morpheus lunges, out of control --

As Neo spins, every move a whip crack, snapping the other rope-end on to a bolted bar as --

Morpheus begins to fall, when Neo hurls himself into the wide blue empty space, flying for a moment.

(CONTINUED)

163

CONTINUED:

163

The rope snaking out behind him; an umbilical cord attached to a machine.

As their two bodies, set in motion, rushing at each other on a seemingly magnetic course until they collide.

Almost bouncing free of each other, arms, legs scrambling, hands searching in furious desperation, finding hold and clinging.

Until the LINE ends, SNAPPING taut, cracking their fragile embrace. Morpheus tumbles, legs flipping over, falling down --

The ground deliriously distant as Neo snatches hold of his mentor's still handcuffed wrist.

NEO

Gotcha!

164

EXT. GOVERNMENT BUILDING - DAY

164

Trinity pulls the copter up and away as Agent Smith stands in the shattered window, aiming his GUN out through the curtain of rain.

PONK. PONK. PONK. The rear hull is punched full of holes and smoke and oil pour out like black blood.

TRINITY

Shit-shit-no!

Neo hears the helicopter begin to die.

NEO

Uh-oh --

Trinity throws the helicopter towards the roof of the nearest building.

Morpheus and Neo cling to one another as they and the machine above them begin to fall.

The ENGINE GRINDS, the chopping blades start to slow while -- Trinity guides the parabolic fall over the nearest roof where --

Neo and Morpheus drop safely, rolling free as the rope goes slack. Neo gets to his feet, trying to detach himself but --

(CONTINUED)

164

CONTINUED:

164

The helicopter is falling too fast, arcing over the roof like a setting sun --

The coils of slack snap taut, yanking Neo off his feet, dragging him with ferocious speed towards the edge even as --

Trinity lunges for the back door, her gun in one hand, grabbing for the rope with the other --

Neo flies like a skipping stone, hurtling at the parapet, when his feet hit the rain gutter and he levers up just as --

Trinity fires, severing the cord from the helicopter, falling free of it as it SMASHES, blades first into a GLASS skyscraper.

Holding on to the rope she swings, connected to Neo, who stands on the building's edge watching her arc beneath him as the HELICOPTER EXPLODES --

She bounces against a shatterproof WINDOW that SPIDER-CRACKS out while flames erupt behind her.

165

INT. MAIN DECK

165

Tank stares at the screen, his mouth agape.

TANK

I knew it! He's the One!

166

OMITTED

166

167

EXT. ROOFTOP - DAY

167

Neo pulls Trinity up into his arms. Both shaking, they hold each other again.

MORPHEUS

Do you believe it now, Trinity?

Trinity looks at Neo.

NEO

Morpheus, the Oracle... she told me --

MORPHEUS

She told you exactly what you needed to hear. That's all. Sooner or later, Neo, you're going to realize just like I did the difference between knowing a path and walking a path.

168

INT. MAIN DECK

168

The PHONE RINGS.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Tank.

TANK

Goddamn! It's good to hear your voice, sir!

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

We need an exit.

TANK

Got one ready, sir. Subway. State and Balbo.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

We're on our way --

169

EXT. ROOFTOP - DAY

169

We rush at the roof access door as it suddenly slams open and the three Agents charge out. But Neo, Trinity and Morpheus are already gone.

AGENT SMITH

Damnit!

AGENT BROWN

The trace was completed.

AGENT JONES

We have their position.

AGENT BROWN

Sentinels are standing by.

AGENT JONES

Order the strike.

Agent Smith can't stand listening to them. He moves to the edge of the building, looking out at the surrounding city.

AGENT SMITH

They're not out yet.

170

INT. SUBWAY STATION - DAY

170

An old man sits hunched in the far corner of the station, shadows gathered around him like blankets.

(CONTINUED)

170 CONTINUED:

170

Mumbling, he nurses from a bottle of Thunderbird when --

A PHONE begins to RING.

Neo leads Trinity and Morpheus bounding over a set of turnstiles towards the ringing phone inside a graffiti-covered booth.

NEO

Let's go! You first, Morpheus.

Morpheus gets in and answers the phone.

Lost in the shadow, the old man watches as Morpheus disappears, the phone dropping, dangling by its cord. His eyes grow wide, glowing white in the dark.

171 EXT. ROOFTOP - DAY

171

Agent Smith stares, his face twisted with hate. He will never be free of the Matrix.

He starts to turn from the edge of the building when he suddenly hears it, his head whipping back around, staring--

172 INT. SUBWAY - OLD MAN'S POV - DAY

172

Through the old man's eyes as the world begins to RUMBLE.

Trinity hangs up the phone, then turns to Neo.

TRINITY

Neo, I have to tell you something. I don't know what it means or even if it matters but I feel I have to say it.

The RUMBLE GROWS, the ground beginning to shake.

TRINITY

I've never told anyone this before. I think I've been afraid to.

Behind her, the PHONE begins to RING.

TRINITY

When I went to the Oracle, she told me... she told me that I was going to fall in love... But...

(CONTINUED)

172 CONTINUED:

172

The RUMBLE RISES, drowning her voice. Neo is drawn towards her, their lips close enough to kiss when a TRAIN BLASTS into the station.

For a moment, they are frozen by the strobing lights of the train until Neo whispers in her ear.

NEO
Promise me you'll tell me the rest?

She nods as he closes the booth. The PHONE RINGS once more before she lifts the receiver when, In the darkness of the far corner, Neo sees the old man in the flashing train-light as he becomes -- Agent Smith, raising a fistful of black gun-metal.

NEO
No!

The GUN FIRES, the BULLET flying at her, BURSTING through the PLASTIC WINDOW just as Trinity disappears.

The handset hanging in the air as the BULLET HITS, SHATTERING the EAR-PIECE.

173 INT. HOVERCRAFT

173

Trinity blinks, shivering as her conscious exits the Construct.

TRINITY
Neo!

TANK
What the hell just happened?

TRINITY
An Agent! You have to send me back!

TANK
I can't!

174 INT. SUBWAY STATION - DAY

174

The destroyed phone dangles in the empty booth. Neo turns to Agent Smith whose gun stares at him like a third eye.

AGENT SMITH
Mr. Anderson.

175 INT. MAIN DECK 175

Morpheus and Trinity stand behind Tank riveted to the scrolling code.

TRINITY

Run, Neo. Run.

176 INT. SUBWAY STATION - DAY 176

Neo looks at the dead escalator that rises up behind him. Slowly he turns back and in his eyes we see something different, something fixed and hard like a gunfighter's resolve.

There is no past or future in these eyes. There is only what is.

177 INT. MAIN DECK 177

Trinity is unable to understand.

TRINITY

What is he doing?

MORPHEUS

He's beginning to believe.

178 INT. SUBWAY STATION - DAY 178

Neo whip-draws his gun with the flashpoint speed of lightning as--

Smith OPENS FIRE.

GUN REPORT THUNDERS through the underground, both men BLASTING, moving at impossible speed.

For a blinking moment we enter BULLET-TIME.

Gun flash tongues curl from Neo's gun, bullets float forward like a plane moving across the sky, cartridges cartwheel into space.

An instant later they are nearly on top of each other, rolling up out of a move that is almost a mirrored reflection of the other --

Each jamming their gun tight to the other's head.

They freeze in a kind of embrace; Neo sweating, panting, Agent Smith machine-calm. Agent Smith smiles.

(CONTINUED)

178 CONTINUED:

178

AGENT SMITH

You're empty.

Neo pulls the TRIGGER. CLICK.

NEO

So are you.

The smile falls. Agent Smith yanks his TRIGGER.

CLICK.

Agent Smith's face warps with rage and he attacks, fists flying at furious speed, blows and counters, Neo retreating as --

A knife-hand opens his forearm, and a kick sends him slamming back against a steel column. Stunned, he ducks just under a punch that CRUNCHES into the BEAM, STEEL CHUNKS EXPLODING like shrapnel.

Behind him, Neo leaps into the air, delivering a neck-snapping reverse round-house. Agent Smith's glasses fly off and he glares at Neo; his eyes ice blue.

AGENT SMITH

I'm going to enjoy watching you die, Mr. Anderson.

Agent Smith attacks with unrelenting fury, fists pounding Neo like jackhammers.

179 INT. HOVERCRAFT

179

Trinity watches Neo as his body jerks, mouth coughing blood, his life signs going wild.

TRINITY

Jesus, he's killing him!

180 INT. SUBWAY STATION - DAY

180

Agent Smith grabs hold of him, lifting him into the air, hurling him against the curved wall of the train tunnel, where he falls inches from the electrified third-rail.

The Agent is about to jump down and press his attack when he hears something. From deep in the tunnel, like an animal cry; a BURST of HIGH-SPEED METAL GRINDING against METAL.

The sound of an ONCOMING TRAIN.

(CONTINUED)

180 CONTINUED:

180

Neo tries to get up. Agent Smith jumps down onto the tracks and drop-kicks him in the face. The world again begins to shake, RUMBLING as a TRAIN NEARS.

AGENT SMITH

Do you hear that, Mr. Anderson?

Agent Smith grabs Neo in a choke-hold forcing him to look down the tracks, the train's headlight burning a hole in the darkness.

AGENT SMITH

That is the sound of inevitability.

Neo sees it coming and he starts to fight.

AGENT SMITH

It is the sound of your death.

There is another METAL SCREECH, much LOUDER, CLOSER, as Agent Smith tightens his hold. Neo is unable to breathe.

AGENT SMITH

Good-bye, Mr. Anderson.

The TRAIN ROARS at them, swallowing Agent's Smith's words. The veins bulge in Neo's head, as he grits through the pain.

He is not ready to die.

NEO

My name is Neo.

Impossibly, he hurls himself straight up, smashing Smith against the concrete ceiling of the tunnel.

They fall as the sound and fury of the TRAIN EXPLODES into the station. Neo backflips up off the tracks just as--

The train barrels over Agent Smith.

Neo stands, knees shaking, when the TRAIN SLAMS on its emergency brake. With an ear-splitting SHRIEK of tortured RAILS, the train slows, part of it still in the station.

Neo turns, limping, starting to run, racing for the escalator--

As the train comes to a stop and the doors of the last car open; Agent Smith bursts out in furious pursuit, his glasses again intact.

181 INT. HOVERCRAFT

181

Tank searches the Matrix.

TRINITY
What just happened?

TANK
I don't know. I lost him.

MORPHEUS
He's on the run--

Suddenly, a SIREN SOUNDS.

TANK
Oh shit!

Morpheus bolts to the ladder.

182 INT. COCKPIT

182

Morpheus climbs into the cockpit. On the hologram radar, he sees the sentinels.

TRINITY
Oh no.

Trinity is behind him.

TRINITY
How long?

MORPHEUS
Five minutes. Maybe six.

Morpheus lifts the headset.

MORPHEUS
Tank, charge the E.M.P.

TANK (V.O.)
Yes, sir.

TRINITY
You can't use that until Neo is out!

MORPHEUS
I know, Trinity. Don't worry.
He's going to make it.

183 EXT. CITY STREET - DAY 183

A BUSINESSMAN walks along the sidewalk, wheeling and dealing into his cell phone when it disappears, snatched by Neo as he flashes by.

MAN (BUSINESSMAN)
What the shit-- my phone!

The Man turns to call for help and when he turns back, it is Agent Smith.

Neo is in a full-out sprint, spinning and weaving away from every pedestrian, every potential Agent. He flips open the cell phone and dials long distance.

184 INT. HOVERCRAFT 184

Tank answers.

TANK
Operator.

NEO (V.O.)
Mr. Wizard, get me the hell out of here!

185 EXT. CITY STREET - DAY 185

Neo dives down an alley, Agent Smith starting to gain.

NEO
Hurry, Tank! I got some serious pursuit!

186 INT. HOVERCRAFT 186

The KEYBOARD is CLICKING, Tank searches for an exit. Trinity screams into the headset.

TRINITY
Neo, you better get your ass back here!

187 EXT. ALLEY 187

Agent Smith stops and takes aim.

NEO
I'm trying, Trinity. I'm trying.

(CONTINUED)

187 CONTINUED: 187

A BULLET SHATTERS the image of Neo in a truck's rearview MIRROR.

188 INT. MAIN DECK 188

Tank speed-reads the reams of Matrix code.

TANK

I got a patch on an old exit.
Wabash and Lake. A hotel. Room 303.

189 OMITTED 189

190 EXT. OPEN MARKET 190

Neo spins away, turning, and finds himself in an open market that teems with people.

He kamikazes his way down the little avenues lined with vendors and shops, careening through the labyrinth, out of control. And at every turn there is an Agent; appearing from crowds, behind fish counters, tent flaps and crates.

191 OMITTED 191

192 EXT. ALLEY 192

He dives from the maze down a service alley but it is a dead end.

Neo turns back as the Agents emerge from the market.

NEO

Uh, help! Need a little help!

193 INT. MAIN DECK 193

Tank frantically scans the monitor like a road map.

TANK

The door.

194 EXT. ALLEY 194

Neo dives for it but--

(CONTINUED)

194

CONTINUED:

194

NEO

It's locked.

TANK (V.O.)

Kick it in!

Peeling back, Neo almost kicks the door from its hinges, lunging from the Agents' BULLETS.

195

INT. APARTMENT BUILDING - STAIRCASE

195

Neo springs up the old crooked apartment building stairs.

A195

INT. APARTMENT BUILDING - HALL

A195

He is halfway down the hall, running in sharp, long strides when a door explodes open at the end.

TANK (V.O.)

Shit! The door on your left.

Neo lurches, kicking in an apartment door.

TANK (V.O.)

No! Other left!

He whirls back to his other left, battering through the door which splinters, perforated by BULLETS.

An old woman watches TV as Neo blurs past her and into her kitchen, where another woman is chopping vegetables.

TANK (V.O.)

That window!

Neo throws it open, leaping for the fire escape just as a knife buries itself in the window casing.

TANK (V.O.)

Down! Down!

B195

EXT. APARTMENT BUILDING - FIRE ESCAPE

B195

Tumbling down the RATTLING FIRE ESCAPE, Neo leaps the last ten feet into the alley below with Agent Brown right behind him.

Neo scrapes himself to his feet, broken and bleeding, charging for the end of the alley.

- 196 INT. MAIN DECK 196
- Finger on the monitor, Tank traces Neo's path.
- TANK
- That's it! You're almost there!
That fire escape at the end of the alley!
- 197 EXT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL - DAY 197
- Agent Smith suddenly pauses as if recognizing something;
the faded NEON BUZZES: Heart O' The City Hotel.
- 198 INT. HOVERCRAFT 198
- Tank loads the exit.
- TANK
- I'm going to make the call.
- MORPHEUS
- Do it!
- Suddenly, the lights go red.
- TRINITY
- No.
- Morpheus looks up.
- MORPHEUS
- Here they come.
- 199 EXT. SEWER MAIN 199
- The sentinels open and shift like killer kaleidoscopes as they attack, slamming down on the Nebuchadnezzar.
- 200 INT. HOVERCRAFT 200
- The hovercraft booms down as they hit. Morpheus opens the lock on the EMP detonator.
- Trinity watches him.
- MORPHEUS
- He's going to make it.

201 EXT. ALLEY - DAY 201

Neo scrambles up the fire escape, BULLETS SPARKING and RICOCHETING around him as Agents Brown and Jones close the gap.

A201 INT. HALL - DAY A201

On the third floor, he kicks in the window, jumping into the hall. The doors count backwards: 310... 309...

202 INT. MAIN DECK 202

Another SYSTEM ALARM SOUNDS.

TANK

They've burned through the outer hull.

TRINITY

Hurry, Neo.

203 INT. HALL - DAY 203

Neo can hear the PHONE RINGING. 305... 304...

Agent Brown reaches the broken window behind him just as Neo grabs the handle of 303, throwing open the door to find--

Agent Smith, waiting, .45 cocked.

Neo can't move-- can't think--

BOOM.

204 INT. MAIN DECK 204

Neo's body jerks, and everyone hears it as the LIFE MONITORS SNAP FLATLINE.

Trinity screams. Morpheus stumbles back in disbelief.

(CONTINUED)

204 CONTINUED:

204

MORPHEUS

No, it can't be. It can't be.

Lasers suddenly sear through the main deck as the sentinels slice open the hull.

205 INT. HALL - DAY

205

Three holes in his chest, Neo falls to the blue shag carpeting, blood smearing down the wallpaper. Agent Smith stands over him, still aiming, taking no chances.

AGENT SMITH

Check him.

206 INT. MAIN DECK

206

Amid the destruction raining around her, Trinity takes hold of Neo's body.

TRINITY

Neo...

207 INT. HALL - DAY

207

Kneeling beside him, Agent Brown checks his vital signs.

AGENT BROWN

He's gone.

Agent Smith smiles, standing over him.

AGENT SMITH

Good-bye, Mr. Anderson.

208 INT. MAIN DECK

208

In tears, Morpheus takes hold of the EMP switch.

Trinity whispers in Neo's ear.

TRINITY

Neo, please, listen to me. I promised to tell you the rest. The Oracle, she told me that I'd fall in love and that man, the man I loved would be the one. You see? You can't be dead, Neo, you can't be because I love you. You hear me? I love you!

(CONTINUED)

208 CONTINUED: 208

Her eyes close and she kisses him, believing in all her heart that he will feel her lips and know that they speak the truth.

209 INT. HOTEL HALL - DAY 209

He does. And they do.

His eyes snap open.

210 INT. MAIN DECK 210

Trinity screams as the monitors jump back to life. Tank and Morpheus look at each other.

It is a miracle.

TRINITY

Now get up!

211 INT. HALL - DAY 211

Holding his chest, Neo struggles to get up. At the end of the hall, the Agents wait for the elevator when Agent Smith glances back. He rips off his sunglasses, looking at Neo as if he were looking at a ghost.

Neo gets to his feet, all three Agents grabbing for their guns. As one, they FIRE.

NEO

No!

Neo raises his hands and the BULLETS, like a cloud of obedient bees, slow and come to a stop. They hang frozen in space, fixed like stainless steel stars.

The Agents are unable to absorb what they are seeing.

Neo plucks one of the bullets from the air. We see him and the hall reflected in the bright casing. We MOVE CLOSER UNTIL the bullet fills our vision and the distorted reflection morphs, becoming the "real" image.

He drops the bullet and the others fall to the floor.

Neo looks out, now able to see through the curtain of the Matrix. For a moment, the walls, the floor, even the Agents become a rushing stream of code.

212 INT. MAIN DECK

212

All three stare transfixed with awe as the scrolling code accelerates, faster and faster, as if the machine language was unable to keep up or perhaps describe what is happening.

They begin to blur into streaks, shimmering ribbons of light that open like windows, as□--

Each screen fills with brilliant, saturated color images of Neo standing in the hall.

TANK

How...?!

MORPHEUS

He is the one. He is the one!

An EXPLOSION shakes the entire ship.

213 INT. HALL

213

Agent Smith screams, his calm machine-like expression shredding with pure rage.

He rushes Neo. His attack is ferocious but Neo blocks each blow easily. Then with one quick strike to the chest he sends Agent Smith flying backwards.

For the first time since their inception, the Agents know fear.

Agent Smith gets up, bracing himself as Neo charges him and springs into a dive. But the impact doesn't come. Neo sinks into Agent Smith, disappearing, his tie and coat rippling as if he were a deep pool of water.

Spinning around he looks to the others and feels something, like a tremor before a quake, something deep, something that is going to change everything.

Suddenly a SEARING SOUND stabs through his earpiece as his chest begins to swell, then balloon as□--

Neo BURSTS up out of him. And with a final death scream, Agent Smith EXPLODES like an empty husk in a brilliant cacophony of light, his shards spinning away, absorbed by the Matrix until□--

Only Neo is left.

Neo faces the remaining Agents. They look at each other, the same idea striking simultaneously□--

They run.

214 INT. MAIN DECK 214
sentinels are everywhere destroying the ship.

TRINITY
Neo!

215 INT. HALL 215
Again he hears her. He reacts to the RINGING PHONE, rushing toward it even as--

216 INT. MAIN DECK 216
A sentinel descends towards Morpheus. On the screen we see Neo dive for the phone as--

TRINITY
Now!
Morpheus turns the key.

217 INT. OVERFLOW PIT 217
A blinding shock of white light floods the chamber;
sentinels blink and fall instantly dead, filling the pit with their cold metal carcasses.

218 INT. HOVERCRAFT 218
In the still darkness, only the humans are alive.

TRINITY
Neo?
His eyes open. Tears pour from her smiling eyes as he reaches up to touch her.
And she kisses him; it seems like it might last forever.

FADE TO BLACK.

FADE IN:

219 CLOSE ON COMPUTER SCREEN 219
as in the opening. The cursor beating steadily, waiting.
A PHONE begins to RING.

(CONTINUED)

219

CONTINUED:

219

It is answered and the screen fills instantly with the trace program. After a long beat, we recognize Neo's voice.

NEO (V.O.)

Hi. It's me. I know you're out there. I can feel you now.

We CLOSE IN ON the racing columns of numbers shimmering across the screen.

NEO (V.O.)

I imagine you can also feel me.

The numbers begin to lock into place.

NEO (V.O.)

You won't have to search for me anymore. I'm done running. Done hiding. Whether I'm done fighting, I suppose, is up to you.

We GLIDE IN TOWARDS the screen.

NEO (V.O.)

I believe deep down, we both want this world to change. I believe that the Matrix can remain our cage or it can become our chrysalis, that's what you helped me to understand. That to be free, you cannot change your cage. You have to change yourself.

We DIVE THROUGH the numbers, surging UP THROUGH the darkness, sucked TOWARDS a tight constellation of stars.

NEO (V.O.)

When I used to look out at this world, all I could see was its edges, its boundaries, its rules and controls, its leaders and laws. But now, I see another world. A different world where all things are possible. A world of hope. Of peace.

We realize that the constellation is actually the holes in the mouthpiece of a phone. Seen from inside.

NEO (V.O.)

I can't tell you how to get there, but I know if you can free your mind, you'll find the way.

220

EXT. STREET - PHONE BOOTH

220

We SHOOT THROUGH the holes as Neo hangs up the phone.

(CONTINUED)

220 CONTINUED:

220

He steps out of the phone and slides on a pair of sunglasses. He looks up and we RISE.

HIGHER and HIGHER, until the city is miles below.

After a moment, Neo blasts by us, his long, black coat billowing like a black leather cape as he flies faster than a speeding bullet.

FADE OUT.

THE END

[This page was intentionally left blank]

The Matrix Online Archives

Version 0.98

Compiled by Julio Angel Ortiz
<http://www.voxbomb.net/>

This archive would not be possible without the following: Rarebit, Cloudwolf, ThePigeonKing, Aquatium, Romav, mxostory.com, mxoresources.com, Sugaree, and Archival Science in a Post-War Simulation.

1. Introduction
2. The Matrix
3. The Storyline

Chapter 1.1 – Menace of the Red-Eyed Agents

Chapter 1.2 – Nightfall

Chapter 1.3 – The Hunt...

... For Morpheus

...For the Assassin

Chapter 2.1 – Double Cross

Chapter 2.2 – Rise of the Cypherites

Chapter 2.3 – Arrival of the Commandos

Death of the Destroyer

Chapter 3.1 – The Effectuator

Chapter 3.2 – The Enigma of Cryptos

Chapter 3.3 – The Veil of Cryptos

Chapter 4.1 - Retribution

Chapter 4.2 – E Pluribus Neo

A Piece of Blue Sky

Chapter 4.3 – Cheat Codes

Chapter 5.1 - Betrayal

Chapter 5.2 - Unlimit

Chapter 5.3 – System Shock

Chapter 6.1 - Investigations

Chapter 6.2 – Uneasy Peace

Chapter 6.3 – Kidnapping

Chapter 7.1 – The Search

Chapter 7.2 – Desperation

Chapter 7.3 – Fall of the General

Chapter 8.1 – War

Chapter 9.1 - Intrusion

Chapter 9.2 - Interface

Chapter 9.3 – Rivals

Chapter 10.1 – Oligarchy

Chapter 10.2 – Ouroboros

Chapter 10.3 – Checks and Balances

Chapter 11.1 – Fractures

Chapter 11.2 – Wright

Chapter 11.3 – Overrides

Chapter 12 – Trinity

Chapter 13 – Uprising

Chapter 14 – Freedom

3. Appendix

A. Dramatis Personae

1. Primary Characters

2. Neighborhood Contacts

- B. The Organizations
- C. Neo's RSI Fragments
- D. The Assassin's Memoir
- E. Exile Gangs
- F. Storyline Notes and Documents
- G. Various Rarebit Questions and Answers

Introduction

The Matrix is an illusion. It appears to be America at the turn of the 21st century; a vast megacity and an adjacent mountain range. In truth it is a virtual, digital world that humans experience through feeds running directly to their nervous systems. These humans experience an artificial life in the Matrix, unaware of their real state.

In reality, the actual date is unknown, but it is believed to be a couple of centuries later. The proprietors of the Matrix are Machines that have won a war with humankind. During the war the sky was "scorched," denying machines their source of energy, solar power. The machines now use sleeping humans, enclosed in liquid-filled pods on vast batteries, to generate heat that becomes electricity.

A few free humans, based in an underground city of Zion, resist the Machines and hope to defeat the Matrix system, which they see as a form of slavery. These free humans, too, can jack into the Matrix, by lurking close under the surface world in their hovercraft. But when they do, they are ruthlessly hunted down by Agents of the Machines. Humans can and do die in the Matrix.

A hovercraft Captain named Morpheus has heard a prophecy that there is One who can control the Matrix reality by will alone. Morpheus summons Neo and explains the true state of affairs he thinks Neo, a young man awakened from the illusion and brought from his pod into the real world is the One.

Neo's powers awaken and the battle escalates, but soon reveals complications. Along with humans and Agents of the Machines in the Matrix, there are free, sentient programs - Exiles - enjoying life as humans in the virtual world.

The Exiles are varied. The Oracle is benign, and guides Morpheus and the other humans in their quest.

The Merovingian, aka the Frenchman, is a sybaritic gangster commanding a host of human-formed programs with powers like that of ghosts, werewolves and other supernatural entities.

There's also a wild card, Agent Smith. Instead of being destroyed by Neo in an epic confrontation, he has become an independent virus-like program who can replicate himself and overwrite others.

Neo encounters the crowning complexity when he meets the Architect, the program who designed the Matrix. The Architect reveals there were previous iterations of the Matrix that failed, and even previous Ones like Neo. A bloody cycle of destruction and renewal of the Matrix, Zion and humanity is inescapable.

Neo won't accept this. But first he saves the woman he loves, Trinity, from death, by spectacularly reaching into her torso; removing a bullet and massaging her virtual heart back into pulsing life. Ironically, it is Neo's capacity for love that makes him the mightiest warrior, the One.

The crisis is imminent. The Matrix is failing because of Agent Smith's viral takeover of every individual in it. It's cleansing, and the destruction of Zion by physical machines, is almost underway.

Neo does the impossible; he and Trinity break out of the underground and fly a hovercraft to the city of Machines on the surface world. He proposes a deal: he'll defeat Smith, whose viral growth threatens all the Machines, in exchange for peace between the machines and the free humans. The deal is made.

Neo does destroy Smith, with an assist from the Oracle (who had allowed Smith to overwrite her with curious equanimity - what did she have up her sleeve?), in a battle worthy of ancient gods of the sky. The Matrix is saved. Zion is Saved. The Machine civilization is saved.

A truce is made - free humans ("Redpill") can even awaken the sleepers ("Bluepill"), although too much of this would threaten the Matrix. Neo, the One, seems to have died in the battle with Smith, but the Machines do not return his corpse.

Some people find this disturbing and their actions set the story of The Matrix Online in motion.

The Matrix

The city of The Matrix Online is divided into four districts: Richland, Westview, International, and Downtown. Each district, in turn, is divided into neighborhoods, which contain their own Exile gangs, Collectors, and landmarks. When first jacking in to The Matrix Online, you begin in Richland, the only “safe” location for new Redpills. Outside of Richland, Redpills face increasingly powerful Exile programs, as well as the possibility of Agents locking onto their signal and attacking. There are other areas called Constructs, usually accessible only through programs called Archivists. Constructs exist outside of the core reality of the Matrix, often harboring powerful programs and locations from previous versions of the Matrix or back door locations through the simulation.

Here is a breakdown of the Neighborhoods and Districts.

Richland

Though Official maps label this area as Richland, most people usually refer to it simply as the Slums. Set against the south shore of the river which bisects the City, the Slums are rife with criminal activity, urban, decay, and random violence. However, this is a lesson in the deceptive nature of the Matrix. Through the area is among the poorest and least desirable to the populace of the City, it is a desirable holding for those who understand the nature of the Matrix. Indeed, many powerful Exiles compete for control of its resources. The Slums is comprised of fifteen neighborhoods.

Achan

Primarily composed of older buildings that have seen better days, Achan has degenerated into a den of vice, crammed with strip clubs, adult books stores, bars, and seedy hotels. The few decent citizens left in the neighborhood know better than to walk the streets at night, when the local Exile roam in search of trouble. The predominant gang in the neighborhood is the Bells, an all female gang that guards their territory jealously, and doesn't hesitate to call on their allies in the more powerful Blackwood gang (in nearby Mara and Magog) when they need a hand.

Apollyon

Situated in the southwest corner of the Slums, Apollyon boasts a waterfront lined with seedy wharfs and deserted warehouses. Along the shore, long shadows fall on weathered buildings and beaten shopfronts. A neon-lit diner may offer solace from the streets for a few minutes, but in the end Apollyon remains what it is, the last gasp of the Slums before you travel west into the hell of the Barrens. The hot nightspot in Apollyon is the Jacob's Ladder.

Camon Heights

Located on the east side of the slums, Camon Heights may be the neighborhood that has persevered the best. Though there are taller complexes near to the Zia Industrial area, as you move east the neighborhood improves. Camon Heights includes nicer condos and apartments than the Moriah Projects to the north, and the housing density is lowered by the presence of grocery stores, churches, and storefront businesses.

Dannah Heights

Just southwest of Kedemoth, and north of Apollyon, Dannah Heights is a neighborhood with a dual character. The dominant gang in the area is the Silver Bullets. While they seem like any other group of Exile thugs in the daylight house, at night the Bullets make this neighborhood their personal hunting ground. Their preferred quarry is any Lupine they can catch, but they've got expenses to meet as well, and shaking stray Redpills is a great way to keep the coffers full. Most consider them fanatics, though dealing with them rationally is really not an option.

Eshean Projects

Located to the south of more prosperous Midian Park area, and separated from Kedemoth by the Lemone warehouse area, the Eshean Projects are an enormous urban blight that looks much like the Moriah Projects, only bigger. Where the builder of the Mannsdale Projects decided to make their constructions as possible into the available space. The only public open spaces is Eshean Park, which is little more than a trash-strewn empty lot. The few businesses that have stayed open are plagued with broken windows and graffiti.

Kedemoth

Located south of the Zia Industrial area, and west of Midian Park, Kedemoth is packed with middle-income residents living the urban lifestyle. The streets and sidewalks are busy with worker traffic in the daytime, while the area's bars do a brisk business in the evenings, including the popular Club Duality. Many of the residential buildings are converted hotels or former textiles sweatshops turned into apartments years ago, but the area has also seen some new growth. Older smaller building are set alongside taller more modern hotels, condos, and office towers. Most notable among Kedemoth's recent construction projects in the Kalt Corporation's decision to create two new office tower on the east side of the neighborhood. Unfortunately, many of the employees who work in the tower have chosen to adopt nearby Midian Park as their home rather than live in the aging Kedemoth. The accompanying rise in property values and gentrification in Midian Park has created no small amount of resentment in Kedemoth residents, who had presumed they would reap those benefits. instead they have only the glass and steel edifices to comfort them.

Lemone

Located immediately to the south of the office towers in Kedemoth, this area encompasses several blocks of large, nearly-identical warehouses belonging to (and sublet by) a number of companies. It is said that Lemone is a place where even the highest executives of those companies will come to make deals or arrange ransactions the people known for getting their hands dirty, or bloody.

Magog

Located immediately to the south of the office towers in Kedemoth, this area encompasses several blocks of large, nearly-identical warehouses belonging to (and sublet by) a number of companies. It is said that Lemone is a place where even the highest executives of those companies will come to make deals or arrange ransactions the people known for getting their hands dirty, or bloody.

Mannsdale Housing Projects

Mannsdale was an experiment in public housing, creating smaller buildings, mostly 2-3 story structures which would lower the density of the residents from that of traditional high-rise apartment buildings like those found in the Moriah Projects. There's no commerical activity to speak of in Mannsdale, though, so the neighborhood has remained impoverished and has degenerated badly. In spite of this, there's a relatively low level of gang activity.

Mara

Located immediately to the south of the office towers in Kedemoth, this area encompasses several blocks of large, nearly-identical warehouses belonging to (and sublet by) a number of companies. It is said that Lemone is a place where even the highest executives of those companies will come to make deals or arrange ransactions the people known for getting their hands dirty, or bloody.

Midian Park

Midian Park has benefited greatly from the construction of the two office tower in nearby Kedemoth, as many of the workers have chosen to adopt this neighborhood as home, with accompanying rise in property values and gentrification. The area contains many businesses, including bookstores, bars, clothing stores, etc. which althought not upscale, have improved drastically due to their new upscale customer base. The park from which the neighborhood gets its name is a large open space bordered by 4-10 story apartment buildings. The two office towers in nearby Kedemoth can be clearly seen from ehre. combined with the plazas of the nearby buildings (which are connected to the park by a walkway overpasses), this is one of the largest open spaces in the slums.

Moriah Projects

East of Achan and south of the nicer Tabor Park area, the Moriah Projects are largely composed of tall, nearly identical apartment structures for the city's urban poor. The place is run down and gives little hope for better days ahead, but the neighborhood's residents have a deserved reputation for being stubbornly optimistic. They selected "Hope Conquers All" as the slogan for Moriah.

Tabor Park

One of the nice areas of Richland district, Tabor Park is a refreshing change of pace from the nearby mara neighborhood. Moving north into Tabor Park the buildings grow taller and nicer with each block. Looking down on Tabor Park from above it is easy to see it as an enclave along the south shore of the river. Bordered by gang-infested Mara, the seedy district of Achan, and the squalor of the Moriah Projects, Tabor Park is an area struggling to keep its head up. The current war between the Crossboes and the Demon Army Exile gangs makes the area dangerous for Redpill. Tabor Park is primarily composed of older apartment buildings and office structures, but there has been some new growth and progress in the area, spawned by numerous Exiles moving to take control of the neighborhood's resources.

Uriah Industrial Park

Located in the north end of Richland district, Uriah is an area that has evolved into a dangerous "free fire zone" since the truce was signed. Many groups use the warehouse-filled zone as a place to settle their disputes with violence without fear of attracting too much attention. Bluepill workers in Uriah are almost blasé about seeing police since there each morning, cleaning up after gang-related violence.

Zia

In the dead center of the slums, Zia has little going for it, but it has managed to be far less crime ridden than the District's other Industrial areas. Unfortunately it seems that the reputation of the Uriah industrial park is starting to affect it, and some Exiles are beginning to choose Zia as a less crowded place to go carry on violent confrontations.

Westview

The area to the west of the Slums is officially called Westview, but more often referred to as the Barrens of the City. While the Slums are a dirty, dilapidated place where hope seems a rare commodity, these traits take on a nearly admirable quality when contrasted with the Barrens. The condition of the Barrens is reflective of a slow decay in the code comprising the area. The Machines have been placing some effort into repairing it, but the degradation serves the interests of several powerful Exiles. Many buildings in the Barrens have fallen into such disrepair that they have collapsed completely, but it is unlikely that anyone will be successful in stemming the tide anytime soon.

Bathary Row

Located on the north end of the Barrens, along the waterfront, Bathary Row consists of the piers and warehouses of the Barrens wharfs. Among the docks there's normal commerce, but the underlying traffic in $information is ruthlessly controlled by the Bathary Boys gang of Exiles, who are in turn answerable to Cerulean. The cranes of the shippings yards cast long shadows across piled containers awaiting ships, but shipping has been at a standstill for as long as anyone can remember, due to an investigation into unsafe chemical handling practices at the yard.

Gracy Heights

Gracy Heights is a typical neighborhood in the Barrens, which is to say it's a pit. The Crushers gang exerts a stranglehold on the area in spite of dedicated Machine efforts to eradicate them. The reason has been in debate for some time, as to why the Machines place more emphasis on keeping the Crushers down than other seemingly more dangerous gangs in the Barrens. The most common rumor is that a strong current of $information runs through the neighborhood. The Crushers have been tapping it to sell to influential exiles like the Merovingian.

Guinness Lake

The Guinness Lake neighborhood is centered on a large reservoir which occupies the space where Guinness Lake supposedly once was. Of course this history is a fabrication, as with all history in the Matrix. The City was born fully formed as it stands today. The reservoir's water (and the code it represents) flows from here to the other parts of the Barrens, making it an ideal conduit for moving or dispersing code quickly throughout the District. The reservoir is an important area to hold, and as such it falls under the purview of one of the Barren's most powerful residents, an exile named Indigo.

Lucero Point

Sometimes called "Little Mexico," Lucero Point has one of the largest concentrations of Hispanics in The City. It is fought over by a number of Exile interests, but the true power in the neighborhood is the Sparks gang of Exiles, run by the fiery Little Maria. They fight viciously to keep other Exiles and Redpills from gaining a foothold here. The only real nightlife in Lucero Point is the Lynchpin, a club that draws all sorts of exiles and Redpills, though everyone knows better than to stay too long, lest the Sparks take exception to their presence. The club's most "prestigious" customer is an Exile by the name of Mandarin, who maintains a residence in the Lucero Point neighborhood by virtue of his family's influence - he is the youngest son of Dame White and Mr. Black.

Manssen Park

Manssen Park at night is a shadowy nightmare for the Bluepills unlucky enough to be caught in the open there. As the shadows grow longer and engulf the neighborhood, the Disciplines come out of hiding in greater numbers and start looking for humans to "play with." Fortunately the neighborhood has not been completely abandoned by the System. Reported "vampire" activity cannot be ignored, as it threatens the inhabitants of the Matrix as well as the belief of the populace in their reality. A new face has been seen in the neighborhood recently - an Exile Bounty Hunter name Greene, who specializes in taking down Blood Drinkers.

Rogers Way

Rogers Way is supposedly names for a soldier from the neighborhood who died heroically in combat in World War One. Naturally this is a lie, but beneath it is a grain of truth. The real Rogers was a Zion operative who died holding the line against the Machines in this neighborhood, granting the previous Chosen One the time he needed to reach the core of the system in that iteration's final hour. Rogers Way also hosts one of the most intriguing of the monument sculptures that dot the cityscape. Rising up like stairs to the sky, the monument's apex features a door, which is the subject of many a tall tale. Every kid in the neighborhood has a friend who as a friend who saw a person emerge from the door, bathed in white light from beyond. Others say they have opened the normally unbudgeable door, to be confronted by the strangest things, but nobody really believes these sorts of local legends.

Sobra Shores

In better days, Sobra Shores was a tourist attraction, with restaurants and shops along the water doing a brisk business and drawing families and lovers to the waterway's edge. But since the Legion moved into the neighborhood, nothing has been the same. On the surface the Legion may look like a regular gang, but even the Bluepills can feel the powers and darkness that the Legion's demonic leadership brings to the area. With that pallor cast across it, Sobra Shores quickly became a place best avoided by anyone who didn't have a reason to be there. The Legion has granted other exiles and Redpills only a single place of safety in the neighborhood, at the Club Daemon. That's not to say that other exiles and Redpills do not operate in Sobra Shores, but the Legion had made it clear that they consider such interlopers to be fair game. The one exile who has given them difficulty is Violet, who the Legion has tried to interfere with on a number of occasions, only to be shown the error of their ways quite painfully.

Southard

Nestled between Sobra Shores and Gracy Heights, the Southard area is dominated by the expansive Southard Industrial Park that provides jobs for many residents of Gracy Heights and Guinness Lake. The facilities are often shut down short periods due to the mishandling of chemical byproducts. Nestled between Sobra Shores and Gracy Heights, the Southard area is dominated by the expansive Southard Industrial Park that provides jobs for many residents of Gracy Heights and Guinness Lake. The facilities are often shut down short periods due to the mishandling of chemical byproducts. The namesake for the neighborhood, the Southard Industrial Park, contains major production and processing facilities for Kalt Corporation, Pendhurst-Amaranth, and a number of smaller companies. The Kalt Corporation plants churn out Trepanex(TM) headache medicine and Pendhurst-Amaranth will soon add another production facility for their Tastee Wheat(TM) breakfast food product.

Stamos

You can't go to Stamos and not stop by Club Succubus, one of the most popular clubs in the Barrens, owned by the preternaturally beautiful Aine. Though Bluepills are impressed by the way she plays her part for her customers in full costume, those in the know are impressed by the way that this Succubus manages to hide her nature in plain sight. Rumor has it that she used to be involved with the Legion, even the leader of the Legion, but she refuses to talk about her past. The other notable feature of Stamos is the Hypersphere sculpture, which is said to cause a perplexing feeling in a great many people who view it. After staring at the "ball inside a wire cube" statue for some time, local legend claims that you begin to see that the ball cannot possibly fit inside the cube that contains it.

International

The City's International District is a conglomeration of Asian Cultures. Signs in many languages tout the merits of small shops and entreat visitors to explore the neighborhood's narrow streets and beautiful plazas. Even the newer modern buildings incorporate traditionally Asian design. The International District is some distance northeast of Downtown, but can be reached by taking the subway. The District also has a number of hardlines for direct access by redpill operatives. Several gangs of powerful and savvy Exiles compete for control of the area, but no single interest really dominates it.

Akaska

Dominated by the glass and steel McClean Tower, Akasaka is one of the centers of business and commerce in the International District. In the plaza outside the building, office workers can be seen enjoying their lunches on sunny days. The rest of the neighborhood is prime real estate for those same office workers, most of whom can afford to live right here, as nothing in the International District is really considered high-rent.

Furihata

At the very edge of the International District lies the Furihata neighborhood, an odd mix of Chinese and Western influences. The neighborhood is a hodgepodge of tight alleyways and wide main streets filled with Chinese signs and banners and several small street vendors. The Furihata neighborhood is mostly residential accommodations for Bluepills that work in the International District. There are multitudes of small crowded apartment buildings throughout the neighborhood ranging from expensive and well-kept buildings to run-down rat-traps that should be condemned. The few businesses here are mostly small shops and restarutants – mostly family owned – that do a brisk trade with those that five in the neighborhood. However, those Bluepills willing to do a little searching are often rewarded with finding some of the best food and electic shopping in the City.

Ikebukuru

Bordering the waterfront, Ikebukuro is a major influx point for new money and individuals arriving in the International District. The neighborhood used to be called “The Gateway to the International District” but local business leaders lobbied for a change to something more likely to attract outside tourists, ending up with the uninspired new slogan “Come to the Boardwalk.” Though the boardwalk is quite nice, it certainly has not proven to be the huge draw locals might have liked, and Ikebukuro continues to look for a way to make itself more important in the scheme of things.

Jurong

Jurong is a neighborhood in transition. Located east of Furihata, this is the “older” financial center of the City – a place that once held importance to those desirous of controlling key resources of the Matrix, but which no longer commands such interest. The neighborhood is crowded with squat buildings and other edifices that have been upstaged by the “newer” skyscrapers in the Akasaka neighborhood. Since financial institutions still make their headquarters in Jurong, but many of the buildings remain empty since the migration of business to Akasaka. Such buildings have become home to the disenfranchised, including many exiles.

Kaede

Kaede is an odd place, as it's best known for a very western fixture: Brown Field, the only baseball diamond in the International District. Local residents are known to be quite obsessed with their local landmark, turning out in droves for games, even those of neighborhood company teams. When the weather doesn't permit outside activities, through, the Orchid Public Bath is a main destination, known throughout the City as one of the best such establishments.

Kowloon

Kowloon is a neighborhood of narrow streets, tightly-packed residential high-rise buildings, and markets selling all manner of wares - from food to consumer electronics. The stores range from people with carts drawn by draft animals and open-air street storefronts to multi-story malls housing exclusive boutiques. The buildings are tall and close together, many sporting colorful neon signs. The height of the buildings can create urban canyons, the walls of which wave banners of colorful lights. Kowloon is a neighborhood that never rests, never sleeps, and never shuts down. Business is always booming, trade is always happening - whether in the stores for goods or in the back alleys for services.

Murasaki

Dominated by the glass and steel McClean Tower, Akasaka is one of the centers of business and commerce in the International District. In the plaza outside the building, office workers can be seen enjoying their lunches on sunny days. The rest of the neighborhood is prime real estate for those same office workers, most of whom can afford to live right here, as nothing in the International District is really considered high-rent.

Sai Kung

Widely known for the huge textile businesses located here, "Sai Kung" appears in the label of most locally produced clothing. But the area just as often mentioned in rumours and news stories about sweatshops and exploitive business practices. The open air Sai Kun Canton is also well known as a place where a redpill can sometimes find hard-to-obtain items, for a steep price.

Shinjuku

On the north side of the International District, Shinjuku is a major residential area, featuring such new developments as Tokyo Row, one of the poshest condominium complexes in the District. Shinjuku is also home to one of the best hotels in the City. The White Lotus Hotel is owned by Dame White, and is well known as a place that can cater to even the most exotic or eccentric of needs.

Shirakaba

Shirakaba is located on the eastern edge of the International District, not far from the Ikebukuro waterfront. It is one of the smallest of the neighborhoods in the International District, surrounded by Kowloon, Shinjuku, Akasaka and Sai Kung. Nevertheless, it holds a wealth of interest for many Exiles, and offers more than enough reason for Zion operatives to brave its dangers. For Bluepills, the area is representative of small business concentrations throughout the International District. While the thoroughfares are well-trafficked, it is the narrower streets and alleys in between that are more intriguing. Export clothing shops, curio stores, and restaurants dot the narrow streets, offering some of the best values in the city, but sticking to the main streets is much safer. The alleys are patrolled by Great Wall Security, and no bargain is worth your life.

Ueno

If you're seeking things that aren't native to the City, Ueno is a good bet to find it. Some of the largest importing companies make their homes in Ueno, including Chotte Brothers Imports. The Chotte Brothers corporation is one of the largest and most powerful business interests in the International District and had its headquarters in the tops floors of the largest skyscraper in Ueno. For Redpills and Exiles seeking the truly obscure, certain Exiles in Ueno are said to be able to obtain almost anything, for the right price.

Downtown

The Influence of the Machines over the Matrix emanates from Downtown, flowing through the freeways, electrical networks, and even sewers. Bluepills who choose to spend a great deal of time Downtown are mostly bureaucrats, accountants, lawyers, and those who derive their livelihoods from the smooth functioning of the system. Exiles who dwell Downtown are sometimes more powerful than Agents, wielding tremendous control over the system they have made their home. Some are permitted great latitude by the Machines, as their assistance in controlling the Bluepills is sometime a boon. Downtown is located north of the Barrens and the Slums, and consists of seventeen neighborhoods.

Baldwin Heights

Located north of the thriving business center Hampton Green, Baldwin Heights is home to many of the ambitious middle managers and young up-and-comers who comprise the bluepill workers of Downtown. While the truly successful can afford to live in Park East or Center Park, the still-hungry majority of the workforce wants to be as close as possible to their offices. Baldwin Heights is famous for its stereotypical resident being a hyper-motivated wile collar worker who comes home to his apartment so rarely that he may not even own furniture, because he expects to get a that big promotion and move to better quarters “any time now.”

Center Park

The Center Park neighborhood is so names because it surrounds the largest public park in the City. Center Park is located nearly in the center of Downtown; south of Creston Heights, north of Vauxton. Office buildings and government structures line the edges of the park, making this a crossroads of stimulated life. Several times per year the city holds a massive arts festival and invites all artists to come and display their works. During the festival the park is filled with artists and artisans and their work and musicians of all sorts. The city also has plans to host several concerts and other activities in hopes of revitalizing the park.

Chelsea

Chelsea is the place for water front living in the downtown area. The waterline is studded with upscale condos and apartments that house the urbanites who work for the many successful corporations headquartered downtown. There are a few bricks buildings along the waterfront, meticulously maintained, including the beautiful Chelsea Commons. Along the streets, pedestrians stroll the clean sidewalks and stop to sample treats at the many vendors. Located along the water, Chelsea Commons is a series of beautiful brick plazas lined with expensive apartments and condominiums. The Parks include low walls and benches for sitting, several sculptures, and a lovely view out over the water. Food vendors can usually be found here, selling pretzels, hot dogs and other such things, Chelsea Commons is also notable to Redpills for the hardline located there.

Creston Heights

For the folks with influences who want to live Downtown but don't enjoy the bustle of Center Park and Park East, Creston Heights sits above all that, rimming the north side of downtown like a gentle wreath. The entire area is protected by an Exile force known as the Neighborhood Watchers whose true alliance is unknown. They seem to be dedicated to protecting Bluepills as much as anything else, which has led some to conjecture that they may have an alliance with the Machines, and others to say that they are obviously aligned with Zion. Creston Heights is the largest neighborhood in downtown.

Edgewater

Edgewater was once nicknamed "the Steel Shore" after the old smelting plants and shipping facilities that dotted its length. Once Upon a time these places answered the siren's call of wartime to produce munitions, tanks and other essentials, but peacetime production never quite lived up to expectations and the neighborhood languished for decades before being gentrified in a major project by the City over the last decade. Now restaurants and storefronts are once again drawing bluepill activity to the area, leading $Information to flow there and getting the attention of Exiles like the Bartender, who can be found at the trendy Club Noir.

Hampton Green

Hampton Green is the center of commerce downtown, a bustling and cacophonous place that lies close to the very heart of the Machines` control of the Matrix. Reaching to the sky are architectural marvels of steel, stone, and glass; broad boulevards flow with limousines and taxicabs, like great arteries pumping 24/7 with ideas, money and deals. People Move with Purpose along the sidewalks in seemingly chaotic mobs, but each individual has focus and intent. There is raw power on the streets of Hampton Green, and it surges up the towers of commerce and industry. Still these events pale in comparison to the exchanges of $Information and control that occur beyond the notice of the unawakened. Their world, the very Matrix itself, has been swayed by exchanges in Hampton Green.

Historic District

The Historic District is probably the most ironically named area in the City, as it implies an actual history instead of one fabricated by the machines' design routines. The Historic District sits to the south of Downtown, surrounded by Vauxton, South Vauxton and Edgewater. The Neighborhood is in transformation from a decaying downtown to a vibrant neighborhood with specialty shops and restaurants. The buildings appear to have originally been built between the turn of the century and the 1940s, with art deco touches on many buildings. The neighborhood is a favorite of the Bluepills that work in Chelsea and Maribeu as a place to lunch that isn't a fast food chain. Both upscale shops and older businesses can be found here, as well as the City Courthouse, a popular historic landmark.

Industrial Square

Aptly named, Industrial Square is a major nexus corporate culture and influence, second only to Hampton Green. While Hampton Green may host the corporate headquarters for some of the largest and most influential companies in the Matrix, The accounting centers of those corporations are located in Industry Square. The Matrix is an illusion, but it is not wholly illusion; in many ways it is simply a veil or disguise which obscures details but leaves the rue nature unchanged. For the reason it quickly becomes apparent that every dollar, every resource, every facility of worth in the Matrix carries with it a value in $Information. Those dollars and deeds are tracked and consolidated in the towers of Industry Square.

Lamar

Lamar is on the east side of Downtown, an older neighborhood of stately high-rises and apartment blocks mixed with glass and steel skyscrapers and gentrified condominiums. The business district is often characterized in the local news as "rolling up its sidewalks" at the close of business every evening. While there are some clubs and hangouts, there isn't much nightlife to speak of in Lamar. The residential areas are appealing to those who like a little more room in their living accommodations, and the older office buildings display grand architectural style of a bygone era. There is a close-knit, "old boy network" atmosphere to this neighborhood, reflected in the interlaced associations the local social organizations have with the businesses. Those who move into the neighborhood may feel welcome, but may not be truly accepted until considerable time has passed and significant contributions have been made to the benefit of local organizations.

Maribeu

Maribeu is that transitory zone that lies between the seething economy of Hampton Green and the more relaxed areas of Chelsea and the Historic District. Older local businesses, as well as those who are newcomers to Downtown without the means to yet move into facilities in the ultra-high rent towers of Hampton Green are the commercial lifeblood of Maribeu.

Morrell

Some residents of Morrell say that their neighborhood is too often overlooked in favor of Park East, but others say it's great to enjoy all of the same benefits without the intrusive limelight. While Morrell enjoys the same relationship to Center Park, lining the west side of Center Park area, when most people think of living near Center Park, they think of Park East. This probably has a lot to do with relative positions of other neighborhoods. While Park East segues into moneyed Hampton Green and historic Maribeu, Morrell flows south into the economically challenged area of Vauxton.

Park East

If you want to live where the rich and powerful urbanites call home, you have a posh apartment in Park East. The most desirable places face the west and have a view of Center Park, but there's no such thing as a bad address in Park East. The Neighborhood is patrolled by White Security, a force of Exiles controlled by Dame White, who owns one of the most Desirable buildings in the neighborhood, with the upper floors laid out as her personal domain and fortress.

Pillsen

As Baldwin Heights is the place for young go-getters who work in Hampton Green, Pillsen has become the Mecca for the office workers who drive the accounts of Industry Square. It's not unusual to see a cafe packed with people but dead silent as the patrons click away on the keys of portable computers, manipulating spreadsheets, tracing errors in accounts, and looking to make all of the numbers come out just right. The residents of Pillsen are disproportionately dedicated to making the Matrix a more orderly place. They are the blues of Bluepills.

South Vauxton

Physically it's a larger neighborhood than Vauxton, but South Vauxton suffers from the perennial problem of not being able to get recognition as a neighborhood of its own, in spite of being officially recognized and having its own neighborhood committee. Unfortunately there's a reason for this: South Vauxton is little more than the crappy south end of the nicer Vauxton neighborhood. Unbeknownst to the South Vauxton residents struggling to get the acknowledgement they crave, the most to separate South Vauxton from Vauxton is secretly financed and backed by the business leaders of Vauxton who'd rather be rid of the undesirable south end.

Stratford Campus

While Hampton Green houses the headquarters of corporations and the accountants of Industry Square count their profits, Stratford Campus is the quiet seat of power in Downtown. The normally ignored business complex of Stratford Campus is controlled by Mr. Black, and is home to several major, but low-profile, organizations that act as umbrella corporations which hold controlling interests in all of the biggest corporations in the Matrix on behalf of Exiles who cannot directly involved themselves.

Union Hill

One of the oldest neighborhoods Downtown, Union Hill was arguably the spot on which the City was founded. The original fort built on the hill is long since gone, but a plaque marks the site and commemorates those who died defending the place from all dangers (a reference to the native population that did their best to drive away the invading settlers). Union Hill today is a decent place to live and surprisingly affordable for being so close to Hampton Green, but it has a reputation for being a second rate address and no ambitious young worker would be caught dead here. Their secretaries, however, are happy to live so close to work for a relative pittance in rent.

Vauxton

In spite of its proximity to Center Park, Vauxton has always had an image problem that keeps it from being as desirable as Park East, Creston Heights, or Morrell. In an attempt to solve this problem, civic leaders quietly encouraged the poorer south end of the neighborhood to break away and seek recognition as a separate entity, but this backfired when the area settled on the insufficiently-different title of South Vauxton as the new name of the area. Vauxton is usually called "The Vox" by local residents, and anyone who calls it Vauxton is immediately tagged as an outsider.

Constructs

Yuki

The Yuki (the name means "snow" in Japanese) construct is an idyllic recreation of ancient Japan in winter. It is a preserved piece of an earlier Matrix construct created by the Machine Civilization in their research program to find a more stable simulation for the human population. Created in the same era as the "fairy tale" Matrix, this project also followed the philosophy that humans would be happier living in simpler times, and attempted to replicate a medieval Asian setting. Once the fairy tale Matrix began to unravel, this project was abandoned, but an Archivist managed to preserve two pieces: Yuki and Sakura.

Ashencourte

Ashencourte is a dark, gothic, urban landscape populated with predatory Blood Drinkers. The construct is a preserved piece of a past "fairy tale" Matrix established by the Machines, in which they hoped humanity would be forever content and uninterested in escaping. Unfortunately, the human psyche could not deal with perfection, and natural human anxieties soon caused a number of problems, including the subconscious warping of the simulation to allow for "monsters" and other deep-rooted fears. Exiles soon learned to take advantage of the changes to the simulation, and over the course of time their RSIs became optimized to fit the niches humans had unknowingly created for them: vampires, werewolves, ghosts, and other boogymen. Many of these creatures survived the resets of the Matrix between then and the present, some by riding out the reintegration process in a safe haven construct such as Ashencourte.

Though the original simulation was long ago destroyed by the Machines, this backup version of a portion of that world has been maintained by the Archivists.

One Zero

In the distant past, before war had destroyed the surface of the Earth, the Machines fled the civilization of humanity to found their own city: Zero One. No one is certain why the Machines would want to recreate Zero One in a simulation -- historical preservation, a sense of loss, or just because they like it? -- but several pieces of the construct (including this One Zero Archive) have been copied by the Archivists for their own purposes, complete with Exiles who have tailored themselves to fit into the simulation by taking on robot-like RSIs.

Sakura

The Sakura (the name means "cherry blossom" in Japanese) construct is an idyllic recreation of ancient Japan in springtime. It is a preserved piece of an earlier Matrix construct created by the Machine Civilization in their research program to find a more stable simulation for the human population. Created in the same era as the "fairy tale" Matrix, this project also followed the philosophy that humans would be happier living in simpler times, and attempted to replicate a medieval Asian setting. Once the fairy tale matrix began to unravel, this project was abandoned, but an Archivist managed to preserve two pieces: Yuki and Sakura.

Widow's Moor

Widow's Moor is a dark, gothic, urban landscape populated with predatory Blood Drinkers. The construct is a preserved piece of a past "fairy tale" Matrix established by the Machines, in which they hoped humanity would be forever content and uninterested in escaping. Unfortunately, the human psyche could not deal with perfection, and natural human anxieties soon caused a number of problems, including the subconscious warping of the simulation to allow for "monsters" and other deep-rooted fears. Exiles soon learned to take advantage of the changes to the simulation, and over the course of time their RSIs became optimized to fit the niches humans had unknowingly created for them: vampires, werewolves, ghosts, and other boogeymen. Many of these creatures survived the resets of the Matrix between then and the present, some by riding out the reintegration process in a safe haven construct such as Widow's Moor.

Though the original simulation was long ago destroyed by the Machines, this backup version of a portion of that world has been maintained by the Archivists.

Zero One

In the distant past, before war had destroyed the surface of the Earth, the Machines fled the civilization of humanity to found their own city: Zero One. No one is certain why the Machines would want to recreate Zero One in a simulation--historical preservation, a sense of loss, or just because they like it--but several pieces of the construct have been copied by the Archivists for their own purposes, complete with Exiles who have tailored themselves to fit into the simulation by taking on robot-like RSIs.

The White Hallways

The White Hallways are back doors in the Matrix, allowing one to travel to far areas within moments, or access hidden constructs. There are rumors that some Exile programs lurk in certain, distant parts of these labrynthian halls.

Zion Organizational Hideout

Zionist researchers made a breakthrough in decoding certain access codes to the White Halls. The result was the creation of a secret hideout within the Matrix, that would offer (in theory) safe refuge from the Machines and a place for Zionists to meet and plan. But you will need a lot of $info and high reputation in Zion to gain access.

Machines Organizational Hideout

The Machines have granted access to high-level Machinist operatives to a secret organizational hideout, accessible only through the White Halls and after forking out a lot of $info.

The Chateau (Merovingian Organizational Hideout)

The Chateau, the closest thing to being the Merovingian's home in the Matrix, is as mysterious as it is difficult to find. Only those who have proven themselves extremely loyal to the Merovingian- or who lived long enough- have access to the Chateau... for the right price.

Datamine

Datamine is a construct that Redpills have recently gained access to. Devoid of Bluepill activity, it nevertheless appears like a disused portion of the main City, perhaps a remnant of the previous Matrix. Due to the anomalies in this construct, rich deposits of raw code can be tapped in to for large amounts of $information, code fragments, or even programs thought to have long been disposed. Also, powerful security programs lurk in a few of the buildings.

Sati's Playground

This construct was recently been uncovered, a haven for Sati and her creativity. Within it, the laws of the Matrix are further muted, and powerful programs can be defeated for special items.

2. The Storyline

Chapter 1.1

- Mysterious red-eyed agents suddenly appear throughout the Matrix, demanding those with “illegal contraband” give it up or they will cancel the auto jack-out and tamper with hardline operation.
- The red-eyed agents begin attacking all Redpills, regardless of organization. All out war soon breaks out on the streets but the most unsettling thing is the fact their motives are completely unknown.
- Zion, the Machines and the Merovingian all officially deny involvement with the red-eyed agents.
- The fake agents are given the slang name LED agents because of the small red LED lights found on the PDAs that they carry. They also drop strange code fragments that seem to contain Neo’s final thoughts within the Matrix (see Appendix C, Neo’s RSI Fragments).
- The organizations soon realize that these code fragments must be of great importance and thus begins a race to collect as many as possible. The popular belief is that Neo can actually be reborn by using them in some way.

- Morpheus gives a speech to the Redpills of Megacity where he proclaims all should unite under the flag of Zion and collect the RSI fragments for the greater good of humanity. He shows the crowd a shattered Neo RSI that Zion is trying to rebuild from the fragments power.
- The race soon becomes violent with organizational fighting on an all-time high; Zion and the Merovingian are at the forefront of the conflict. Speeches are many and competition is close, constantly shifting between the two.
- Morpheus, the Architect and Persephone each give out messages describing themselves seeing Neo himself floating above a large triangular room with members of each organization in a different corner, they all rush into the centre but surprisingly rather than fight they begin to shake hands. This obviously symbolizes working together but no one seems to realize it. It seems the bitterness between the organizations makes such peace impossible.
- After vicious and close competition it is revealed that Zion is victorious in collecting the most RSI fragments.
- It is learned that the earlier speeches regarding Neo contained a hidden message that once deciphered actually opened a contact line with the Oracle. When the line is finally made she speaks of how all must unite for the future of the Matrix is in great peril. She reveals that a group of exile programs called the Shapers are the only ones that can successfully re-forge Neo's RSI and how they must be protected from the LED agents at all costs.

- The Oracle's message falls on deaf ears as the organizations rush and fight over the power of the Shapers. Unfortunately, due to the Redpills own foolishness, the LED agents gain control of a Shaper for themselves. The very thing the Oracle feared would happen.
- "N30 Agents" begin to appear throughout the Matrix. Apparently the LED agents used the power of the Shaper to imbed some part of Neo onto themselves.

- Super LED agents storm the Matrix, all sides sustain heavy casualties and the Redpills fight a losing battle until they finally put aside their differences and work together. With the help of Morpheus they fight back the LED horde and stand victorious, but still tension run high.

- The Oracle congratulates the Redpills on working together for once and warns of a force that will soon threaten the very future of the Matrix. All must prepare for the worst.

Chapter 1.2

- Two exile races, the Lupines and the Blood Drinkers unexpectedly go on a rampage through Megacity. No one knows why but Redpills across all organizations are threatened. These exiles are clearly looking to start trouble.
- The leaders of the Lupine / Blood Drinker alliance are known as Ookami and Malphas. Shortly after the widespread attacks they disappear, and this angers the exiles as they claim that the two were captured and are being held prisoner. The two races quickly go on a killing spree with the intent of revenge.
- All three organizations officially deny the capture of Ookami or Malphas.
- In the wake of the alliance leaders' disappearance, a vampire by the name of Invalesco quickly raises to power. He calls for any willing Redpills to bring him select items from throughout the Matrix, giving them the promise of transforming them from an awakened human into an immortal exile vampire.
- While Invalesco's loyal subjects await his word Ookami and Malphas return revealing that they had not been captured after all but needed to go into hiding from the Merovingian. He had issued an attempt on their lives and they had had no choice. The alliance is given new direction: a full on war against the Frenchman. Emissaries from the Lupine / Blood Drinker forces are sent to try and convert Redpills to their cause.
- Invalesco returns at a difficult time, as the return of Ookami and Malphas has created a rift in the alliance. To reinstate his position Invalesco begins the transformation ritual on one of his remaining subjects. The ritual fails as Invalesco's brother, Feronus, turns up to stop the vampire's traitorous ways. However, he falters in combat and is blown away by Invalesco's immense power. The exile flees and a chase ensues. Fighting breaks out amongst the Redpills present, as many against him as there are for him. From the top of the ascension monument Invalesco escapes to the archives but not before receiving a stake to the heart. He goes into hiding to try and regain his strength.
- Ookami and Malphas begin a mass hunt for the traitor. After having Redpills follow an intricate string of clues he is eventually found and a massive final battle breaks out. In the end Invalesco is greeted by a second stake to the heart and dies his final death.
- Taking advantage of the alliance's little civil war, the Merovingian gathers his forces and strikes back hard against the Lupines and Blood Drinkers. When the smoke clears it is the Frenchman who stands victorious. Ookami and Malphas are captured and forced to become "loyal" subjects once again.

Chapter 1.3

- Morpheus gives a speech demanding Neo's body be returned. He threatens immediate action if his request is not met.
- The Machines make an official statement that Morpheus' demands will not be met and that he will soon be apprehended.
- Numerous code bombs are set off around the city. These bombs peel back the Matrix's workings and reveal the code beneath. Morpheus' plan is to show all the Bluepills the illusion they live in and ultimately force the Machines to give up. The bombs also release a non-lethal virus, a green sprite that follows those Redpills infected. This too is clearly visible to the Bluepills and serves as another way to 'awaken them on masse'.
- All organizations make official statements showing they are not in any way in support of Morpheus and he is to be considered an outcast.
- Several helicopters that have recently been flying around the city drop propaganda leaflets saying "Do not trust the Frenchman". Other such messages are found, in code, within the billboards of the city.
- Morpheus addresses crowds of both Redpills and blue. He admits the bombs were his doing and how they show the true form of the Matrix. He urges the Bluepills to wake up from their dream and says how all must fight for the body of Neo to be returned. Agents soon arrive and send security forces after Morpheus; however, those Redpills loyal to him hold them off long enough for him to escape.

- During another speech Ookami and her Lupine followers strike, attacking all present to get to the outcast Zionist. He and Ookami duel but Morpheus simply says “I don’t have time for this,” and hyper jumps away.
- The next speech Morpheus gives details how he believes he is winning and how it is just a matter of time before the Machines give in to his demands. Niobe arrives and tries to convince Morpheus to stop his madness, if only for his own safety. He dismisses her saying he knows what he’s doing. At that very moment masked bandits turn up and attack all present. Niobe shouts for Morpheus to run. He hyper jumps away.
- The masked bandits are a rebel organization, normally small in number and never before this boisterous but it seems those that Morpheus forcefully awoke with his bombs have greatly bolstered their ranks as well as their activity. They are human beings, Redpills whose only wish is to be reinserted into the Matrix. Some even have a near worshipping relationship for the traitor, Cypher. Also, their redpill status gives them the asset of the auto jack-out, making them extremely hard to kill.
- While planting a code bomb in a water treatment plant, Morpheus is shot dead by a masked assassin that can somehow bypass the auto jack out with special “kill code” bullets.

- Investigations into Morpheus' assassination begin on all fronts.

- It is discovered that the assassin that killed Morpheus is always seen with flies around him. The story behind these flies is unknown but video evidence proves he can transform into a swarm of them at will.
- The masked men begin turning up all around the city dropping vital clues, all of which seem to suggest the Merovingian is responsible for the Assassin.
- Agent Skinner leads a group of machine operatives in a hunt for the Assassin, and they do eventually corner the mysterious man of flies. Fighting breaks out as he lets loose his corrupted followers to attack the operatives. In a duel to the death, a virus imprinted in the Assassin's bullets infects Agent Skinner. The agent is forced to destroy himself in an effort to stop the virus spreading.
- A replacement for Agent Skinner is created: the first female agent, Agent Pace. She is designed to be the first redpill friendly agent developed for truce conditions. She can "feel" and understand human emotion. The Machines believe her to be the first step towards better redpill relations.
- Niobe creates her own splinter group, much as Morpheus had done. This Niobe group is devoted to avenging Morpheus and carrying on his legacy. Many of Morpheus' former followers join. Zion is essentially split in two.
- The masked men suddenly disappear off the streets of the city and are replaced by another even more powerful threat, the Corrupted.
- The Corrupted drop many clues as to the identity and purpose of the Assassin. It appears he was the program in charge of recycling information, including the bodies of those who die while still plugged in. He was also responsible for Trinity's body, but was ordered not to recycle it for some reason. When threatened with deletion he fled to the Matrix with the help of Merovingian. His goal it seems is to destroy the entire Matrix program, just to see his former masters fall. Of course in the process he will destroy himself, but he states this is of no concern to him. To achieve his goal he has begun to overwrite the minds of Bluepills and is using them as his soldiers, the Corrupted. Also his plan is apparently already underway. He is beginning to corrupt the Matrix from the inside out, as it will begin slowly then quicken in pace as time goes on. The first signs are already showing as monuments around the city begin to destabilize.
- Giant monsters called "Complete Corrupted" begin to appear around all the monuments affected by the Assassin's power. These level 255 creatures begin to destroy everything in their path. Around them spawn normal Corrupted that drop "insecticide code" this is discovered to be the only thing that can defeat the complete corrupted. Despite being armed with the insecticide code, the creatures don't appear to be weakening. It seems all hope is lost until each of the organizations once again throw away their differences and unite to defeat the deadly beasts. After a long tiring battle, it is the united Redpills that stand victorious.

- The Assassin's activities very unexpectedly stop. He is thought to be keeping low and is currently in hiding.

Chapter 2.1

- Niobe decides to break into a hotel room where the Merovingian and Persephone are staying in the hopes of learning more about Morpheus' assassin. When held at sword-point the Merovingian gives the Zion captain the information she needs: that the Assassin's appearance is a coder's joke, a disposal program made out of thousands of flies. Most vital however was the information that the Assassin is most likely to be found around his old haunts, sewage and garbage. With back up from Ghost, Niobe is able to get them both a free pass out of the hotel and so begins her hunt for revenge.
- Level 50 red-eyed agents begin to spawn at Kalt Chemicals in Kedemoth. Redpills fight them off as best they can but ultimately it is a losing battle. Neurophyte herself arrives just in time to support the operatives. She uses her special abilities several times to strike the agents with a strange bolt of yellow energy. Those struck are completely destroyed in a flash of green code. The battle is won but the over use of her powers severely weakens Neurophyte and she collapses. After being revived by her allies she suffers temporary memory loss and proceeds to jack out.
- Zion operatives begin to search for a way to recreate the insecticide code in the hope it can be used in future battles against the Assassin. Ingredients are gathered from all over the Megacity. However, competition is tough as the Machines send agent interference and Merovingian forces prove troublesome. After rigorous research and tests Zion scientists successfully recreate the insecticide code, with mass production to start soon thereafter.
- Code bombs start reappearing in the city's major gathering places, planted by a man going by the name "Maerd". This man is eerily similar to Morpheus not only in appearance but also ideals and way of speech but is simply thought to be a former follower carrying on his deceased master's work.
- The recent code bombings bring the Assassin out of hiding; many Redpills bravely try to take the powerful exile down but to no avail. After having his fun with those that opposed him the Assassin disappears again.
- A possible clue as to the return of the One is found during a raid on an exile base, with the discovery of a newspaper clipping which tells of someone named "Sarah Edmontons" unexpectedly waking from a coma and simply walking out of the hospital without saying a word. Sarah Edmontons is an anagram of Thomas Anderson...
- The red-eyed agents make their return and start sending several messages to all jacked-in Redpills. They tell of how "potential carriers" are being tracked and targeted. The popular theory is they are searching for Neurophyte, carrier of the kill code.
- The Morpheus look-a-like reappears, once again setting off code bombs throughout the city. Many inquire as to his identity but he simply answers, "You know who I am." Soon after the bombings the Assassin shows up and silently asks those nearby where Maerd had run to. After receiving the information from the terrified Redpills the Assassin disappears as quickly as he'd come.

- During a routine mission Vashuo of the Novalis II is instantly killed by a signal disrupting device that was planted onto the back of his jack-in chair. Zion security forces are sent to board the ship and the entire crew is detained for questioning. There is undoubtedly a traitor amongst the crew, someone in league with the masked men. Even worse it is believed to be a high-ranking leader of the masked as intercepted transmissions show Gemaskeered himself requesting orders from the unknown traitor aboard the ship.
- After the murder took place, the ship's operator emergency-jacked the crew out of the Matrix. This resulted in code fragments being dropped around their last jacked-in locations. These fragments hold clues that could point towards the identity of the traitor. Coupled with the knowledge on the signal paths of the last transmissions had between the crew, a conclusion can be reached. Solutions are to be sent to Tyndall/Agent Gray/Flood's email.
- The murderer of Vashuo, traitor to the Novalis II crew and one of the great leaders of the Cypherite organization is revealed to be none other than Toorima. It appears Vashuo was getting too close as to her real identity and so she finished him off. Vashuo had been researching her masked alias, Veil. Until now Veil was known only in rumors and stories as an assassin of unparalleled skill and efficiency, and has been linked to a great deal of unsolved Redpill murders. She is currently in custody in Zion, awaiting further questioning.
- Enmascarado resurfaces in Megacity and he demands to have Niobe come out and fight him. As a code bomb goes off in the background the warrior of Zion arrives to face the Cypherite leader but the nearby bombing brings the Assassin back out from the shadows as well. In the name of vengeance Niobe begins a duel with the Assassin but it ends abruptly as the masked man also decides to get involved. As the deadly rogue program brings Enmascarado close to death he warns that his RSI is rigged with a deadly surprise that will be released if it is destroyed. The Assassin takes no heed to his warning and easily wins the duel. However, the reality of Enmascarado's threat becomes apparent when the flame virus is released from his RSI. It soon infects everyone in the surrounding area and mass fighting breaks out. In the ensuing chaos the Assassin disappears into the crowd and Niobe is left to try and rally the Redpills out of their confusion and violence. After spreading through most the hardlines in the city, the virus eventually calms down and things return to normal, though the chaos won't be easily forgotten.

Chapter 2.2

Rise of the Cypherites

- Cypherite activity quickly decreases, probably due to the defeat of one of their main leaders but no doubt they are simply regaining their strength. Nevertheless, organizational priority soon shifts back to the threat of the Assassin.
- Both the Machines and the Merovingian send forces to try and obtain the insecticide code from Zion but are ultimately unsuccessful.
- Zion soon realizes that without an efficient way to disperse the insecticide code it would be practically useless in a live battle situation. Operatives are sent to infiltrate machine facilities and acquire the schematics for a device called a "flit gun." These weapons have been deemed the best way to use the insecticide against the Assassin.
- After careful analysis of the schematics for the flit gun Zion discovers that it is impossible to code it completely from scratch, so they have no choice but to make a deal with the Machines: insecticide ingredients for flit gun parts. The deal itself spans several trade offs throughout the city, with Zion sending its top operatives and the Machines sending agent programs to ensure the transitions go ahead smoothly. Unfortunately, Merovingian forces are still able to stop some of the trades from being completed. Despite their interference the deal is deemed a success and both sides leave happy.
- During the trade offs, Ghost is ordered to request additional Machine assistance in deciphering a data disk found by operatives during a raid on a Merovingian base. It turns out the disk contains a list of names under the heading "Operation Omega." The names are those of top ranking Machine and Zion Redpills. "Morpheus" is the name first on the list...
- Machine operatives discover some more information regarding Operation Omega while on a standard recon mission. It seems an exile program by the name of Fillament was the one that created the kill code hack used in the Assassin's bullets and, more interestingly, was under the employ of the Merovingian at the time. The hack works by using a sample of the victim's RSI to track their location in the real and remotely cancel the auto-jackout. Each bullet must be specifically designed for a single target and the only one that can use the code is a specific exile- the Assassin.
- It's apparent that the Merovingian was researching a way to permanently kill Redpills and the end result was the kill code hack and the Assassin program. It's also apparent that Operation Omega is some sort of hit list that aims to take care of the Merovingian's enemies. As a side note, Niobe and Ghost are the next names on the list.
- Zion coders are successful in decompiling the flit gun parts acquired in the machine trades and mass production begins immediately.
- Exile forces strike the various flit gun production centers around the city in an attempt to destroy Zion's only hope of defeating the Assassin. It seems the Merovingian doesn't wish to help destroy the rogue program after all but rather protect him. Could they be working together once again?
- Zion begins searching for the Assassin's lair but to no avail.

- A message is sent to Tyndall requesting a Redpill come to meet the anonymous sender, as apparently they know the whereabouts of the elusive Assassin. Reluctantly Tyndall sends an operative to meet this unknown informant even though it simply cries “trap.” The informant actually turns out to be none other than the Merovingian’s wife, Persephone. She tells the Redpill of how she truly hates the Assassin program and simply wishes him to be destroyed. Unfortunately for her, her husband is determined to protect him for some reason so she decided to approach Zion for help. She reveals the Assassin has set up a base of operations on a garbage barge located in the Megacity river. However, it is impossible to access this barge by normal means. The meeting ends with Persephone giving the Redpill coordinates of a Merovingian base where further information as to the location of the barge can be found.
- The operative infiltrates the base and accesses a computer containing information on a hidden network of hardlines that runs throughout the entire Megacity. This secret network leads to several places of interest including “The Morgue” and “The Coroner’s Office,” but most importantly, the Assassin’s barge.
- A Redpill is sent to the barge to test the actual effectiveness of the insecticide code against the Assassin. He does indeed find the deadly exile and armed with a prototype flit gun is able to severely weaken him. However, the Assassin is able to escape through the hardline network before the final blow can be struck and returns into deep hiding.

Chapter 2.3

Arrival of the Commandos

- A new group suddenly appears throughout Megacity: mysterious camouflaged commandos. Their motives are unknown as they have yet to show any aggression towards any of the other powers, but extreme caution is being taken considering the recent events in the Matrix.
- A Zion scout team witnesses one of the helicopters that have been distributing leaflets around Megacity land on a building rooftop. It appears that the commando group are behind the choppers as a general disembarks, meets with a squad of other soldiers then takes off again, leaflets in hand.
- Zion decides to use this opportunity to make first official contact. Scouts track the soldiers to a nearby vacant building and an operative is sent in to meet with them.
- The commandos say they wish to make friendly connections with all the major powers in the city and agree to follow the operative. Tyndall orders that the operative let the commandos be “accidentally” killed by exile gang members so that documents they received from their general earlier can be acquired. She believes the documents may shed light on the group’s motives.
- The soldiers were carrying a list of coordinates referring to several helipads around the city. It seems that these areas are meeting places for the commando group. Surveillance is increased.
- Through the increased surveillance on the landing zones, Zion is able to learn of a meeting between the commandos and Merovingian forces. Anome is put in charge of the mission to spy on this meeting, and he sends in an operative to bug the room where the meeting is to take place. Despite Anome’s confidence, security measures pick up on the operative and the meeting moves to another location. The Redpill arrives at the second location just as the meeting is beginning. After hearing the Commandos and Exiles speak of peace Anome orders the elimination of all exile forces. Fighting ensues but direct orders from Commander Lock requests the operative stand down and pull out immediately. Tyndall is put back in charge of commando-related missions.
- Commander Lock orders that any further dealings with the commandos are to be peaceful; Zion cannot risk getting off on the wrong foot with this possible new threat. However, this sentiment doesn’t extend to the exile forces that have meeting with the commandos. A Zion operative is sent to hunt down the leader of the local exile gang that has been having meetings with the commandos. After several dead ends the operative finally comes face to face with their leader and with a little gentle persuasion manages to learn that the commandos are actually ex-military programs from the machine world and that in their meetings they had offered the Merovingian forces a “non-interference agreement.”
- The commandos re-approach Zion with the prospect of a peaceful meeting. Unfortunately, Merovingian forces somehow get wind of the meeting and proceed to occupy the surrounding areas around the meeting place. The operative representing Zion is sent to dispose of the exiles. After the area is cleared the meeting goes ahead but before any real progress can be made the building is compromised. Luckily the operative is able to take the attackers down and the meeting is postponed until a more secure area can be found.

- Zion and the commandos do eventually meet securely and the commandos propose an alliance. They reveal they are indeed exile programs but that they too wish to break free of the machine's oppression. They say their single wish is to make the Matrix a safe haven for any and all life forms that have a living consciousness. Tyndall agrees; an alliance with such a well-organized group would indeed benefit the cause of Zion. She forwards the request to the council for careful deliberation.
- To better relations between Zion and the commandos, Commander Lock orders that an operative be sent on a mission teamed up with a squad of commando soldiers. The mission selected is a clean up of the Camon Heights area. Slasher gang activity has been on the increase and with the Bluepill police being unable to solve the problem it falls upon Zion to make the area safe again. The mission is a success.

- Redpills are horrified to see that thousands of fly swarms have infected the sky over Megacity. The clouds are no more and all that is left is the Assassin's foul pets.

- Corrupted once again begin to spawn around the city; they again attack anyone regardless of organization. Even worse, they once again begin the spread of the fly virus. Code fragments dropped by the Corrupted are found to be part of the Assassin's ongoing memoir but unfortunately they are unstable with only a couple of words per fragment and with no clear order.
- Zion and the Machines decide it is mutually beneficial to work together in a temporally alliance against the Assassin's foul Corrupted in an attempt to solve the code fragment puzzle. Less cooperative, however, are those under the employ of the Merovingian; after all, the Assassin was once considered their ally and most are confused to his intentions. Despite this, the hard-headed Lupine leader Ookami takes up arms without her master's consent and joins the fight against the Corrupted.

- Perhaps angered by the fact that one of his supposed "allies" is now working against him, the Assassin leads an attack against the proud Ookami. Unfortunately she is defeated in her fight against the man of flies himself, and barely escapes with her life. But the fact that she wasn't destroyed raises the question: could the Assassin be weakening?
- It seems the Assassin's actions against Ookami didn't go without consequence as Flood makes an announcement on behalf of the Merovingian: all Merovingian Redpills are to assist the forces of Zion and the Machines for a common goal- the complete destruction of the rogue exile.
- In a surprise appearance, Seraph himself approaches Redpills at Mara Central. He spreads the word that the Oracle wishes to address them all concerning the current situation. All those present follow him to the nearby "Debir Court;" ironically, this is the same place the Oracle met with Neo during the Smith incident. She speaks of how the fly swarms spread a disease into the system and unless something is done soon, the Matrix will be stressed beyond its ability to self-repair. She again speaks of unity to the Redpills, and of how all must work together, like they had done to defeat the complete Corrupted, to defeat the Assassin once and for all.
- Realizing the threat to his existence, the Assassin comes out of hiding and actually joins the front lines of battle alongside his Corrupted. He moves swiftly through the city, killing any who stand against him. Unfortunately, there is nothing the Redpills can do to defend themselves as the flit guns and insecticide have yet to be distributed.
- It seems the Assassin's direct involvement with the ongoing conflict has begun the spread of an even stronger strain of the fly virus. This new threat actually corrupts the RSIs of the Redpills themselves, turning them into a mass of flies only kept stable by a mask much like the assassin's.
- Niobe, Agent Pace, and Flood each hold meetings to their respective organization's operatives. In these meetings they encourage the Redpills to continue working towards unlocking the secrets within the Corrupted fragments, but more importantly tell of how the flit guns and insecticide codes are almost ready to be distributed. It is almost time...
- The flit guns are finally ready for mass distribution. All Redpills are urged to collect one of the weapons from any of the distribution centers throughout the city. At last, all have the power to defeat the Assassin.
- Now that they stand a chance against him, the Redpills of the city begin a widespread hunt for the Assassin. Despite his fast movements he is no match for the mass combined forces of Zion, Machines and Merovingian. He is brought to near death several times but somehow still manages to escape.
- In a last ditch attempt for survival the Assassin somehow splits himself into four separate beings. He takes refuge at the places hinted at in the Corrupted codes: Club Avalon, the Uriah wharfs, the Abandoned Subway and the Church of the Disciples.
- Redpills finally decipher the Corrupted codes and the final showdowns begin at all four locations. The Assassin is severely weakened from his previous encounters with the insecticide code and fights a losing battle. He eventually falls to the might of the united Redpills, and he fades out of existence once and for all. Those that landed the killing blows are awarded copies of his mask from Seraph himself, a gift from the Oracle it seems.

- The Assassin was apparently killed yet the Corrupted still spawn and the skies are yet to clear; something is amiss. Niobe decides to search the Assassin's barge just in case some aspect of him managed to survive. Unfortunately, her suspicions prove correct as the final aspect of the Assassin lies in wait. Taking Niobe by surprise, he is able to bring a gun to her head but just in time a Redpill arrives and strikes the crucial finishing blow against the last Assassin. It is finally over, as the remains of the Assassin sink into the river below.
- Despite his eventual destruction, the Assassin's corruption still lingers within the Matrix's code. Some is even strong enough to take the physical form of dead flies. As a result, Redpills are sent on code clean up missions and as a reward are given a memento, a fly in amber.
- After rigorous clearing of the Corrupt code the skies are made clear again. It appears the Assassin's foul grip on the matrix has finally ended and in celebration of their victory each organization holds a party. Niobe, Agent Pace and the Merovingian personally congratulate the operatives on their hard work and tell all to enjoy this moment while it lasts.

Chapter 3.1

The Effectuator

- A large group of Lupine programs rebel against the Frenchman, as they are tired of “being treated like dogs.” The uprising is quickly crushed by Merovingian operatives. Flood believes Ookami to be the one behind the uprising but with a lack of hard evidence linking her to anything no action is taken.
- In light of the Merovingian’s involvement with the Assassin program, Commander Lock and the Zion council come to the realization that if the truce is ever to be a success and the Matrix a safe haven for all then the Merovingian must be taken out of the picture.
- Zion realizes that the Merovingian is far too powerful to approach directly so instead it is decided that he must first be weakened by finding a weak spot in his organization and exploiting it.
- The Merovingian is known to frequently use areas that exist outside of the main Matrix simulation to conduct his business away from the surveillance of the Machines. These pocket worlds are called “constructs” and are a vital part of the Merovingian’s power base.
- Zion wishes to know more about the construct network and perhaps use it to their advantage in the fall of the Frenchman. It is ultimately decided that an operative be sent to investigate one of the sites believed to be a construct entrance.
- The operative arrives and quickly takes care of the exile forces defending the portal door, but is ordered to be extremely careful when entering the construct as they can be coded completely to the authors will; anything and everything could wait beyond a construct portal. Unfortunately it’s a dud, as it seems the exile guards were somehow able to pull the plug and remotely re-route the signal to another location.
- By accessing one of the computers on-site the operative is able to learn the new location of the portal feed and proceeds immediately. Tyndall tells the operative that they shouldn’t be disheartened by the construct’s re-route; it was expected all along that the Merovingian would have active monitoring over them. She simply sees it as further proof to their importance.
- Again the portal turns dud and is re-routed but the mission isn’t a complete failure as a new breed of exile was present that the location: a “Dire Lupine.” Tyndall believes this new type of exile may be related to the constructs in some way and asks the operative to upload the data that was found on its body.
- After careful analysis of the data it is learned that the Dire Lupines are simply modified versions of normal Lupine programs with added subroutines for stealth and infiltration, making them a deadly foe. Fortunately the data allowed Zion to determine the Dire Lupine code signature and add it to their databases. Scans begin for Dire Lupine hot spots; Tyndall still believes them to be connected to the constructs.
- An operative is sent in to one of the determined hot spots to investigate Dire Lupine activity, and it turns out the data was correct and the operative proceeds to fight off against several of the upgraded exiles. In the end the operative stands victorious over the last remaining Lupine; its last words being ‘You can’t touch the Effectuator’. Tyndall doesn't recognize the name but presumes that it must have something to do with the Lupines and the constructs.

- Zion manages to track down and secure the location of a control terminal for one of the construct portals. There should be no fear of this portal shutting down prematurely. However, after clearing the portal site of Dire Lupines the operative chosen to enter the construct comes face to face with the Effectuator himself. Appearing out of nowhere the oddly dressed and eccentric exile claims he has already shut the portal down and beckons the operative to follow him. As they enter a new room the Effectuator somehow clones himself as another copy is already waiting. He tells the operative that his programming makes him incorporeal within the Matrix, meaning he cannot be harmed and is able to flit around wherever he pleases. He also admits to indeed being the program in charge of the both the Dire Lupines and the construct pocket worlds, all under the employ of the Merovingian.
- The Effectuator suddenly disappears leaving the operative to fight more Dire Lupines, one of which drops a data disk. Unfortunately, after uploading the disk as ordered the operative hears that it was actually a virus that began deleting all the mainframe data concerning the Dire Lupines, the Effectuator and the constructs. Apparently Anome didn't remember to security check the data.
- Machine operatives are sent to question witnesses to strange events going on in the Megacity as of late. Unexplainable black boxes of about 10ft all surrounded by a thick smoke have been appearing on the streets and the Machines are determined to discover their origins. However, some of the machine questionings are actually disturbed by commando interference killing off witnesses.
- In their questionings the Machine operatives learn that men wearing bandannas around their faces have been sighted around the boxes; it appears the masked men are somehow involved.
- In retaliation to the earlier incidents the Machines lead their operatives on strikes against the commando soldiers. In one of the strikes a secret file containing information on an individual known only as "The Colonel" is found. He becomes the Machines' new primary target. In another strike the operatives find an encrypted file concerning the Colonel's exact location but apparently it is heavily coded in an almost Machine-like manner and will be a challenge to crack.
- Commander Lock is determined to stay on the Effectuator case but rather than going after the troublesome Dire Lupines he decides instead to send an operative to infiltrate a circle of the Club Hel guards; perhaps they have had dealings with the mysterious exile. This turns out to actually be true. Apparently, he has been requesting information on the shifting of the Matrix code; he appears to need more power. Tyndall presumes that the recent activities have started taking their toll. Unfortunately, just as the operative gets close to finding out the arrangements of the deal, a Dire Lupine turns up and ruins the operation. After dealing with the situation the hard way the operative uploads the details for analysis.
- The data found from the last operation allows Zion to begin tracking the Effectuator's network movements in an attempt to find his base of operations.
- The Machines successfully decode the location of the colonel and proceed to lead a strike on the base with the deletion of the Colonel in mind. However, before he is engaged the Colonel randomly asks that the operatives to have the Machines check a certain sector of the pod fields for broadcasts signals. It turns out that there is an explosive device planted in that sector that could kill hundreds of sleeping Bluepills, and the signal is connected with the Colonels RSI, so if he dies the bomb goes off. The Machines are forced to withdraw for now...

- Zion sends an operative to collect and administer a virus disk designed to not only lead them straight back to the Effectuator's base of operations but also completely destroy his entire personal network. The virus is a success and the operative is able to find the Effectuator. However, he is heavily guarded by Dire Lupines and even after they are out of the way the he appears to the operative as several copies of himself. He tells the operative that it will take more than that to allow his programming to be harmed and that all this has been a waste of time. Just before the operative leaves he states that Zion will never get to the Merovingian through him.
- Machines operatives are able to break into a Commando base and receive the deactivation codes for the pod bomb and it is eventually disarmed despite heavy Commando resistance at the transmitting station. Without the pod bomb protecting him the Colonel is again targeted for deletion. It takes a couple of dead ends but Machines operatives finally find his hiding place and are able to take down the deadly Commando.
- As a side note the Commandos appear to be more complicated than first thought, considering these files were found during the machine raids...
 - From The General: "We need to know how much the Machines know about us. They are (obviously) the only ones who pose a true threat to us. I expect answers."
 - From The General: "This Machine interference has gone on long enough. Colonel, I expect you to put a stop to it. That shouldn't be so hard, given the amount of resources at your disposal... and your obvious passion for dealing with humans. I will not permit any failures -- our project must proceed according to plan."
- Agent Gray appears at Mara Central and declares that all Zion operatives must be purged from the Matrix; apparently they have "corrupted it with their stench." He then proceeds to attack any Zion Redpill present. Mass fighting breaks out between Zion and Machine operatives and Gray eventually hyper-jumps away. He returns shortly after ordering the fighting to stop. He demands an answer as to why the violence began but when the Redpills speak of his earlier actions he fails to recognize that any of it happened. He leaves by telling them that investigations will have to be made.

Chapter 3.2

- The Machines begin to pick up on increased communications chatter concerning the masked men. Intent on learning more, operatives are sent to plant listening devices in suspected masked bases. The data feeds collected from these devices clearly show the increased chatter to be centered around the subject of Veil; her name resurfaces numerous times and it seems something big is in the works.
- After hearing increased talk and various rumors surrounding them, The Merovingian also becomes interested in knowing exactly what the masked men are up to. Operatives are sent to infiltrate known masked bases and report their findings.
- The street magician Cryptos, mentioned in the latest edition of the newspaper The Sentinel, begins his performances throughout Megacity. Interestingly, Cryptos is seen wearing a blue pill encapsulated in a crystal around his neck at all times. However, even more interesting are his performances themselves. He appears as if by magic in one of the many boxes set up around the city, proceeds to preach to the crowd, then disappears and moves to another box within minutes. This may seem innocent at first but the speeches he gives certainly aren't. He talks of, amongst many other things, "not being able to dream if you are fully awake," having to "return" and "submitting to a higher authority." These speeches immediately strike Redpills as Cypherite propaganda; he even encourages watchers to "seek the Veil."
- Zion becomes very concerned about Cryptos; his preachings are far too suspicious and, in the eyes of Zion, warrant investigation. Even his pill status is unknown: his acts strongly suggest that he's awakened but there's really no way to be sure without taking further action. In an attempt to uncover more details, operatives are sent to interview Bluepills who have seen the performer in action.
- Unfortunately the interviews are unsuccessful; it appears the sleepers don't know anything either. Anome, who has been put in charge of the operation, decides to ignore increased friendly relations and spy on the Machines in case they know anything. An operative is sent on a secret mission to set up a listening device on a Machine network node. The mission is ultimately a success and the data feed begins being monitored by Anome and his associates.
- Anome contacts his operative again; apparently the listening device was successful in picking up data on Cryptos. An audio recording of the mysterious street performer has Cryptos saying "Niobe is only driven by hatred for the Merovingian; that's no way to lead people." The message clearly shows Cryptos is indeed awakened. Oddly though, the contact who handed over the recording said not to say a word to anyone for fear of any "higher ups" finding out. It seems Anome's little spy operation was not officially backed.
- During their investigations into the masked men's resurfacing, Machine operatives uncover a plot to free Veil from Zion; in their own words their operations are “doomed to failure” without her guidance. It is however unclear whether the break out has already gone ahead or is simply still a plan.

- The Merovingian spies also learn of the plot to free Veil. This only increases the Frenchman’s interest and he becomes determined to break Veil out himself. However, by the time his plans begin to formulate rumors of Veil’s escape spread throughout the Matrix; it seems the masked got to her first.
- An emergency Zion meeting is called. The subject matter at hand is Toorima, aka Veil, being broke out of imprisonment and fleeing Zion. It appears the great masked leader truly is free once more. As a result, the masked men are made Zion’s top priority. Cypherites are to be killed on sight and Veil recaptured at all costs.
- The Machines learn of Anome’s spying and confront Zion; luckily Tyndall and Lock are able to cool things over with them. Tyndall is put in charge of any further Cryptos or Veil-related operations.
- Zion investigations reveal that Veil had somehow been in contact with her masked soldiers for at least a week before her escape, re-affirming the fact that the masked are still a very real threat even within the city itself. In a twist of fate it turns out Zion accidentally recorded the last few transmissions between Veil and her operatives. Unfortunately, they’re far too heavily encrypted to draw any conclusions.
- The Merovingian refuses to give up so easily. He sends his operatives all around the city tracking Veil, and most leads turn out to be dead ends or secret hardlines meet by static. However, one operator is able to track the static back and ends up opening a comm. link with Veil herself. Impressed, she sets the operative under the controller several tasks, killing guards, collecting items, etc. She promises further contact once the operative has proved themselves worthy.
- In an attempt to help patch relations Zion turns to the Machines for assistance with Veil's encrypted messages. The decryption is done in seconds and two possible Veil locations are relayed. The Machines send forces to one and Tyndall sends the crew of the Nescire to the other. Unfortunately, despite heavy masked activity, Veil is nowhere to be seen.
- The Merovingian operative completes all the set tasks set by Veil. She keeps her word and agrees to a meeting with the Merovingian.
- Reports indicate that Veil is set to set to meet with someone of major importance soon. Zion and the Machines plan to intercept the meeting, trace Veil’s hovercraft signal as well as find out who this other person is. Both organizations send operatives to try and uncover clues as to where the meeting is being held. These investigations turn up several possible locations and both send squads to check them out. One of the sites gives positive readings on Veil and other masked operatives but just as the area is about to be stormed the signals somehow disappear, leaving behind a strange residual reading. To add to the confusion, communications between Tyndall and Agent Gray are suddenly cut. Tracing the residual readings the Zion operatives are able to get to another location but all that awaits them is a mass of bodies, already found and searched by the Machines. Shockingly, all their cranial jacks had been externally tampered with; they’re all dead and by Cypherite hands.

- After avoiding Zion and Machine interference Veil and The Merovingian are finally able to have their meeting. After some flirtatious banter the two agree upon a partnership of knowledge. Flood assures the Merovingian operatives that this is not considered an allegiance or truce, but simply an agreement on mutual terms. Veil believes she is using the Merovingian and the Merovingian believes he is using Veil.
- Tyndall believes the recent strange occurrences can only be the work of traitors. Due to the possible security breach an operative has to be sent in person to receive and transport communications data for analysis. The risk of sending it over the network is simply too great. Tyndall hopes this data will lead back to the traitorous crew. Her hunch proves correct and the hovercraft Nescire is verified as those sabotaging the recent operations. The ship is found by Zion authorities and the crew arrested.
- During their recent operations each organization finds highly sensitive audio files. Again, Cryptos is the speaker and in each he shows negativity towards the current organizations: Zion, Machines and Merovingian. While this may point towards Cryptos' motivation being purely Cypherite, there was another audio file found by Machine operatives, a very mysterious file that raises more questions than it answers. It has Cryptos speaking with an agent...
 - Agent: It has been another period, please report.
Cryptos: I'm fine
Agent: There is concern you are unstable. The process could not be complete, of necessity.
Cryptos: I am in full control. But the memories are still there, along with speech patterns, and habits of language construction.
Agent: They can be accessed freely?
Cryptos: Screw you, you damn robot! Nobody's gonna fall for this load of blue-pill crap. You don't know humans. You don't know jack!
Agent: This is control?
Cryptos: There are degrees. No concern is warranted.
Agent: I will report.
- The Machines suddenly end their involvement with Veil, the masked men and Cryptos; both Zion and Machine Redpills are left uninformed and confused.
- The masked men begin storming Megacity's most popular hardlines. Anyone present, regardless of organization, is attacked on sight. War breaks out on the streets as Niobe, Seraph and others join the battle against the masked foes. The attackers do eventually pull back but recent activities are proof enough of their determination: the Cypherites are far from gone.
- The Merovingian throws a huge party at club Parallaxis in Uriah. Everyone is invited regardless of organization and there's even a slice of Merv cake for all attendees. Also, Persephone attends a local Redpill wedding and wishes the couple the best of luck in their new found love. The awakened of the city can't help but wonder, why these recent activities? Why appear so casually at a time of such high tensions? The most common belief is that they were used either as a distraction to move attention away from Veil or the Frenchman is simply trying to boost his public relations.

Chapter 3.3

- Niobe holds a private meeting on a Richland rooftop. There she tells her followers that things are going to get tough from here on out and that they'll need more firepower if they hope to achieve their goal of defeating the Frenchman. Just as the Zion captain is wrapping up her speech, one of the General's helicopters flies overhead. Commandos drop down on the meeting and Niobe believes them to be attacking. Fighting soon breaks out. The General himself stops the madness and proposes a deal in "common interest." After close negotiations the two groups ultimately decide to join forces in their battle against the Merovingian.
- The Merovingian learns of the meeting between Niobe and the General but is as yet unaware of what transpired, something he wishes to change. Flood puts a team of Redpill operatives in charge of the investigations. Having been supplied with a stolen Zion access card the team make their way to the nearest Zionite base. The plan is to hack their computer systems and track data back to the local Zion database. Flood wants everything on Niobe's meeting: what was said, by who, when and how. The strike on the base is successful, as not even a single guard seemed to be on duty at the time. The hack is done cleanly and without interruption. The team continues on to the database site.
- The Zion database site is heavily guarded and a long fight ensues, eventually won by the Merovingian attackers. However, when searching the databases files for information of Niobe's meeting the team are greeted with a deleted files message. It seems their battle gave the Zionists time to wipe the system. For once the Merovingian is the one left one step behind.
- It appears none of Flood's attempts to uncover information on the details of Niobe's meeting are successful. The exile instead decides to change his priority to retaliation against Zion directly. As always with Flood this involves manipulation of others, in this case the Cypherites. As to not break their agreement Merovingian operatives are sent undercover as Zion soldiers to attack a Cypherite base, the hope being that the attack will have the two organizations at each others throats in no time. The attack goes ahead flawlessly and the Cypherites are none the wiser.
- It seems not all went to Flood's plan; it seems the Cypherites are regularly under attack from Zion, and the false attack made little difference. However, Flood is not one to be outdone so easily. A new plan is quickly thought up and put into practice, a heavier blow to the Cypherites. Using the extent of their deal Flood is able to get his operatives into one of the masked database sites. Once inside the team begins searching for something that would really make the Cypherites attack in numbers. Unfortunately every computer they search is filled with nothing but seemingly random number and letter combinations, none of which are any interest to Flood. However, the team's quick-minded operator picks up on something: a set of numbers at the end of the records correspond to the location of the Union Hill Cryptos box, yet another connection between Cryptos and the masked.

- Flood comes to the realization that if Cryptos and the Cypherites really are connected then they'll take notice if one of the boxes, namely the one in Union Hill, is sabotaged. To do so Flood requires operatives to raid a Zion base for some "equipment," virus codes with Zion data paths; the perfect set up tool. The raid is successful and the virus acquired. Just in case, Flood also assigns some more fake Zionists to accompany the sabotage. A return to the Cypherite database is in order. After dealing with all the on site guards and planting the viruses Flood takes a heartless turn: to make the scene more convincing he orders the elimination of the false Zionists. The order is carried out without much question and Flood's deception mission is branded a success.
- Cypherites begin increasingly attacking Zion recruitment teams; they plan to stop any more Bluepills from being awakened "against their will." Operatives are sent out to deal with the revived masked threat.
- During their anti-Cypherite operations Zion manages to trace on-site data streams back to a possible masked network station. Raid teams are dispatched immediately. After clearing the site the operatives check the computer systems present. One file in particular catches their eye: a report that the Union Hill Cryptos box has encountered an error and that there will have to be increased security. This only strengthens the link people have been making between the Cryptos and the Cypherites.
- Masked men begin to spawn around the Union Hill area; it appears their orders for increased security weren't just a report stored on a computer.
- Seeing his sabotage a success Flood returns to his original goal of discovering info on Niobe's meeting with the General. During their time manipulating the Cypherites a special virus designed to re-route Zion communiqués was being developed, now fully tested and ready to go. Flood entrusts the task of planting it to a single Redpill operative. Sneaking past the on site guards, the Merovingian follower is able to stealthily plant the re-router on one of the Zion mainframe computers, and the data begins to come into Flood's inbox immediately. Included is a message ordering all operatives to cease hostilities towards the Commandos, which is just what they were looking for.
- The Machines lose contact with one of their couriers inside the Matrix; a case containing certain items of value is known to have been in his possession. The importance of the cases contents it seems is paramount and Agent Gray sends Redpill operatives to investigate immediately. The last known location of the courier was in the Kedemoth district. Entering the building, the team are confronted by numerous Furies gang members. As the prominent gang of the area, Gray suspects the Furies to be the most likely party behind the theft. After clearing and site and searching bodies the operatives are led in the direction of one of the Furies local bases.
- The Machine operatives investigating the missing case make their way to the Furies base with the intention of questioning the gang leader there. Agent Gray says their records show her as a weak fighter and to expect a non-violent interview but if not, any and all measures are permitted in the retrieval of the case. After easily dealing with her bodyguards the Machine Redpills are able to question the exile. She claims the furies had nothing to do with the cases disappearance and that she only sent troops out to the building to investigate a rumor. She points the team in the direction of Argon, the local exile mob boss. Apparently if anyone will know what happened it'll be him.

- The team make their way to Argon's club, Club Duality, for some questioning. Gray shows concern over wasted time dealing with street gangs but accepts the operatives judgment and allows the operation to continue. Argon tells them that of course he knows of the case's disappearance but also that he was in no way involved with it. He is however also surprised they have not yet talked to Kalt, owner of Kalt Chemicals, as she is the one responsible for the contents' creation. Gray informs the operatives that what Argon says is true but that he did not wish to involve Kalt with the investigations if possible. It appears, however, that it is indeed needed. Gray promises to make the necessary arrangements and ends the mission.
- Zion decides to take the Cryptos lead further; as revealed in the latest hidden Sentinel relays, Cryptos used to be a captain of Zion back before Neo brought the truce. What wasn't said was that since then his crew have "retired" and sought lives in the Matrix. Zion believes it would be useful to question his old comrades in an attempt to find out if Cryptos may have had any earlier ties with the masked. Operatives are sent to hack a Bluepill citizen database and find where the old crew members have taken residence.
- After fighting through numerous Machine security forces and cracking a complex firewall system, the Zion operatives are able to track the locations of Cryptos' old crew- the two of them who are still alive anyway.
- The first interview proves fruitless; the crew member had since married a Bluepill and left the real world behind her. She was understandably less than happy to have Zion knocking at her door. However, before the operatives leave she does tell them she stayed away from Cryptos, Morpheus and other "saviors." Apparently she wasn't a believer. This does raise the question: "Savior? Was Cryptos once like Morpheus?"
- Luckily the second interview proves more useful. This crew member tells the team that back in Zion Cryptos was a very strong protester against the Machine civilization, but more interestingly, was good friends with Cypher of the Nebuchadnezzar.
- Agent Gray contacts his investigation team again; the arrangements for their meeting with Kalt have been made. They follow the directions given to a large office building owned by none other than Kalt Chemicals. Inside they find themselves confronted by armed security but after some quick ID checks allowed to make their way to the meeting room. Kalt reminds the operatives that she prefers to be left alone but also informs them that she does indeed have some valuable information. While she doesn't know the identity of the thieves, she has learned that a device was found at the scene, some sort of advanced signal jammer. According to her the only person capable of making such a program is the exile researcher, Silver.
- The Machine investigation team continue on to the address given to them by Kalt: a shabby apartment in Camon Heights, which is apparently Silver's newest Richland hideout. Inside, the exile doesn't seem too surprised to see them; in fact it's almost as if he was expecting it. Slasher gang members storm the room but the operatives dispatch them with relative ease. Silver seems disappointed in his programs' lack of effectiveness. Thanking the operatives for helping him with his research the exile agrees to answer their questions. He tells them that he was approached by the Demons Army gang of Tabor Park to make a jamming device capable of blocking Machine scans. According to him they even supplied one of the main components themselves. How they got it is beyond him.

- Following up on their newest lead the Machine operatives make their way to Tabor Park. Agent Gray gives the explicit order to destroy any Demon Army exiles on sight until something is found, a very striking direction for a Machine program. Nevertheless, the order is carried out and a base of Demon Armies is cleared and looted with no survivors. A data disk is found on one of the bodies and immediately uploaded to Gray for analysis, with results apparently to be forthcoming.
- Zion tries to further investigate Cryptos' past but unfortunately almost all the archive files on his activity back in Zion show signs of tampering. Lock suspects sabotage. Instead, Zion is able to link Cryptos with two of their current field operatives who recently went missing while investigating Cypherite activity. The task of tracking down and recovering the lost soldiers begins.
- After much investigation the Zion recovery team finds themselves at a possible lead. They believe a friend of the operatives, a wild card who is known to indulge in the Matrix's simulations and lies, may be behind their disappearance. When they arrive at the suspect's address the team are met by heavy Cypherite activity. After dealing with the armed resistance they find one of the missing soldiers locked up in the basement. Upon freedom he tells the team that him and his comrade were kidnapped for "knowing too much" and were being held at separate locations. Luckily he overheard the guards talking about the other lock up and is able to lead the team in a rescue attempt. Catching the Cypherites off guard they are able storm the lock up and save the other soldier just in time.
- After being briefed on the suspicions surrounding Cryptos, the rescued soldiers are able to recall a time, a few weeks after the Truce, where Cryptos suddenly changed. According to them he became even more fanatically anti-Machine, stopped talking to people, would only ramble on about the Matrix being evil and wanting to end the entire simulation. Apparently he even went to the extreme of urging people to wake the sleepers even if they weren't ready. This is highly interesting information as it directly conflicts with any recent information on Cryptos, his speeches, the audio files, etc. If the soldiers are right then he went from a fanatic Redpill to an apparent equally fanatic Cypherite.
- The analysis of the Demon Army data disk is complete but even after decryption it makes no sense, gibberish of meaningless words and phrasing. However, Gray believes it to be of some sort of value to the local street gangs and directs the investigation team in the direction of the Demons Army's rival gang, the Crossbones. The plan is to make a trade with the leader of the Crossbones: the decrypted data for the location of the Demon Army ring leader. Arriving at the base of Hatchet, the Crossbones leader, the operatives are immediately set upon, believed to be Demon Army spies. After dealing with their attackers the team confront Hatchet with their intentions, and the exile soon agrees to the deal as long as it could cause harm to the Demons Army. He orders two of his henchmen to lead and assist the team in "roughing up" the leader, Mammon.
- Agent Gray reminds his operatives that the retrieval of the lost case is absolutely imperative and that they must not waste time. The investigation team, along with their exile assistants, rush to storm the base of the Demon Army leader. Strangely, there are no guards present and the team are able to directly confront Mammon. He apparently knew of their arrival all along, his spies having told him prior to their departure. He does however tell them what they want to know. The name of the contact that supplied him with the jammer component and was to retrieve the case was named "Cacophony," though they never met in person. The arrogant exile then summons a hoard of guards into the room, the Machinists are able to fight their way through and escape to safety, but their assistants are not so lucky. Gray doesn't trust Mammon but the name given is the only lead they have left, so the scan through the Machine database begin.

- After checking through the records with a fine toothed comb and running literally hundreds of scans through the Zion database, admins are able to trace the tampered Cryptos files back to an address within the Matrix. Operatives are sent in to investigate the scene, apprehend any masked present and, if possible, recover the original files. It turns out the site is a popular Redpill party spot, an ideal cover for a Cypherite base. Access to the site's computer systems, despite obvious clearance, is denied by the stationed Zion guards. Tyndall isn't surprised as she apparently always suspected an inside job. She gives the team clearance to force their way in if necessary. After detaining the rebellious guards the operatives are able to coax one of the partiers into accessing the system for them. Unfortunately, it's clean of any Zion archive files but the data is uploaded for further analysis all the same.
- After careful study of the data found at the party site, Zion learns that the computer system there was simply a router for the actual archive hack. Teams are sent to several other locations but all prove equally void of any archive files. Tyndall suspects their activities are being tracked and countered.
- The Machine's search for Cacophony draws no conclusions; Gray can only surmise it is a code of sorts to keep its owner real intently hidden. Left at a dead end the Machines decide to take final and desperate measures in the recovery of their case. The investigation team are given a data disk to take to their new contact's bodyguard as a gift of good will and proceed to the pre-decided meeting location. The Machine operatives are met by the one and only Seraph, guardian of the Oracle. After handing over the data disk, a list of program names and locations, Seraph allows them through to the next room. Sure enough there stands the Oracle. She begins by telling the operatives the meaning of the word cacophony, someone who doesn't like peace and quiet; someone who thinks that if they make enough noise, they can control things; make things turn out the way they want them to. In her own words, The General. The meeting is over and despite Gray's dislike of the Oracle's involvement the investigation can continue.
- At a loss Zion sends an undercover operative to a suspected gathering of illegal traders. All sorts of hacked information, access codes and even blue pills are up for sale. After striking a deal with one of the traders the operative is sent to a contact who apparently deals in "this sort of thing." Tyndall reminds them that the file directly relates to the time Cryptos suddenly changed, it is vital that it is recovered.
- At the location given by the black-market traders Zion operatives are faced with heavy rogue resistance, including the contact they were sent to find. After dealing with the rebels they finally find the missing archive files stored on an active computer. According to the records Cryptos jacked into the Matrix without permission a couple weeks into the Truce, encountered some agent activity then completely disappeared off his operator's screen. He returned about an hour later and after being jacked out refused to talk about where he'd been. It wasn't soon after this that Cryptos went missing from both the Matrix and the real; only to return recently as a completely changed man. It seems after all their searching Zion is only left with more questions and suspicions surrounding Cryptos than ever before...

- Zion learns about the meeting between Veil and the Merovingian. Using their new found allegiance, they have The General dispatch elite Commandos to assist in further operations.
- The Machines are willing to get their case back at all costs, even within the prospect of negotiations with the General. Operatives are sent to contact the Commandos and propose a meeting. A scan of the nearby area shows a squad to be operating nearby, and after tracking them down the operatives have a brief conversation with their leader, leading to their request being "passed up the chain."
- It isn't long before Agent Gray has contact from the General's forces. The meeting is arranged and the investigation team forwarded to the location. The single objective is negotiations over the return of the missing case. The team arrive to find the meeting already underway with a pair of agents and a number of Commando squads. The agents tell the operatives of the Commando's... stubbornness. They demand sanctioned control over certain areas of the city, which is obviously unacceptable. The agents feel the Redpills may stand a better chance at negotiations and allow them to address the meeting. However the Commando representative, Waite, feels insulted to be talking to a 'lackey'; he sees this as the final straw and surmises the Machines must be plotting something, and the Commandos open fire. With the help of the agents present the attackers are easily dealt with. It is obvious peaceful negotiations are out of the question.
- After interviewing some of Cryptos' old Bluepill associates Zion learns that the mysterious magician used to perform at one of the city's many warehouse clubs. Anome instantly assumes this warehouse is Cryptos' secret base and not only sends a squad of Zion operatives to storm the place but also calls in Commando support.
- Much to the arrogant Zion controller's surprise, Cryptos is nowhere to be found, however, the warehouse is crawling with exiles. After fighting their way in the squad question the exiles as to what they are doing there. The leader of the gang tells the team she brought the warehouse from its former Redpill owner, Acuben, fair and square and that they have no right to attack them like this. After obtaining Acuben's contact card the team leave the exiles to deal with the mess. Anome seems a little confused; he's convinced the exiles must've been working for the Merovingian who in turn must be working for Cryptos. He's even set on the belief that Acuben will turn out to be Cryptos in disguise.
- When the squad arrive at Acuben's address they are met with strong masked resistance. They fight their way through to the Cypherite Redpill and proceed to question her. She protests that Cryptos has preached nothing but for peace and harmony between Machine and human since his re-arrival in the Matrix. Suddenly, mid-sentence, she falls the ground... dead. It appears her cranial jack was tampered with by an external force, likely Cypherite. The team search the body and find an audio file, a conversation between the Zionite Cryptos and one of the soldiers who were kidnapped. In it Cryptos is suggesting the only way to defeat the Machines is to destroy the entire Matrix simulation, to deprive them of their power source. His justification for such mass genocide is that the sleepers are hardly alive as it's just a "TV show beamed to their heads." The audio file is hard proof of Cryptos' miraculous change of belief.

- Just as the Zion operatives are about to leave, their operator picks up on a heavily encrypted signal being transmitted into the building. At that exact moment one of the phones on site begins to ring. One of the team proceeds to pick it up and is greeted by the calm calculated voice of Veil. Apparently she had to cut the conversation with Acuben short because "loose lips sink hovercrafts." She also hopes they can talk again more... personally sometime soon. Of course Anome doesn't believe a word of it, and he thinks the operatives are making it up to hide their "failure."
- The Machines intercept Commando transmissions and are able to trace them back to a local command post. A strike force of Machine operatives are sent in to clean sweep the base and look for any info concerning the missing case. Three computers and two squads of Commandos later and no information is found. Gray becomes... frustrated. It is then that the agent is contacted in an encrypted Commando message: the General wishes to speak to the Machines operatives via simulacrum recording. With no other options Gray sends the investigation team to the location given.
- In his recorded message the General explicitly states the Commandos are not in possession of the case the Machines accuse them of stealing, nor do they have any information regarding it, thus any attacks of them regarding its whereabouts are futile. The message is short and to the point, almost suspiciously so. Gray points out that the General's statement directly conflicts with their information. The agent believes there must be some misinformation. The investigation has hit a dead end and Agent Gray admits they can no longer count on retrieving the case. Damage control and contingency plans must be brought into action and a certain level of... instability is probable.
- Zion becomes highly concerned about the increased numbers, efficiency and discipline of the Cypherites; it's obvious that since Veil's release they have become an even deadlier threat. To investigate further an operative is sent to interview an ex-Cypherite who recently returned to the cause of Zion.
- According to the ex-masked, before Veil it used to be very basic: a bandanna and a gun, that was it. However, since her return Cypherite training increased in leaps and bounds with strict procedures and secret facilities. He gives the operative the address of one of these training centers but warns it's probably long gone since they moved around a lot.
- As expected, no Cypherites are present at the old training site but it does turn out they left behind an old simulacrum program of the one and only, Veil. She introduces herself as the Cypherite mission controller and begins the masked training program. Unfortunately, before any valuable information can be obtained, the simulacrum is remotely shut down by an external signal. The operative's operator is however able to dump the little data they did gain onto hard disk.
- Thanks to their earlier experiences with Cypherite data structure, Zion is able to trace the external signal that shut the Veil program down back to its source. This intelligence proves correct as a masked base of operations is found and cleared. Another training program is uncovered, but this is time spawning a simulacrum of the mysterious Cryptos. He is introduced as the leader of the Cypherites, who, in his own words, are dedicated to letting people live the best possible lives. The recruitment process continues in subsequent rooms as a total of three Cryptos simulacrums glorify and give praise to the masked cause. Tyndall sees it all as propaganda, pure and simple. She ends the mission promising the operative that the information uncovered will be relayed to Commander Lock and the Zion council ASAP. Finally some of the questions surrounding Cryptos, Veil and the Cypherites have been answered.

- The Merovingian, accompanied by a group of elite Redpill guards as well as the feisty Ookami, throws a party at Club Sphinx for all his loyal followers. The Zion operatives present are less than happy about the Merovingian's unannounced take over of the club and threaten to call in Commando support. The Merovingian simply dismisses them as cave dwelling pawns. Commando soldiers do indeed arrive and warn the Merovingian that he should be fearful of the General's power. The Merovingian decides he can not be dealing with such interruptions and orders his troops clear the club of all protesters. Due to the sheer number of Merovingian forces the Zionists and Commandos are forced outside and kept out by the elite bodyguards. However, when Ookami decides to take a stroll away from the club she is quickly set upon by a large group of aggressive Zionists. The Merovingian and his followers soon come to her aid and it isn't long before mass organizational fighting breaks out across the entire Dannah Heights neighborhood. After calling in heavy assistance from her Lupines, Ookami is finally able to disperse her attackers and make it to safety. Tensions between Zion the Merovingian reaches an all-time high.

Chapter 4.1

Retribution

- Niobe sends out a Zion wide broadcast, she reminds all operatives of their partnership with the General and his commandos. She also reveals that the commando soldiers are inexperienced with fighting other exile programs and that she has agreed with the General to have operatives participate in combat training. Her request is simple, a number of commando soldiers have been assigned to training duty around the city and she wishes any and all operatives willing to assist to do so. Running missions, gearing them up, teaching them new techniques, that sort of thing. Many are troubled by this revelation, trust and respect for the General is low, rumours spread and discussions are many. It is a time of definite unrest within the ranks of Zion.
- Zion operatives meet with the General himself to co-ordinate offensive operations against the Merovingian and his forces. After a short briefing he assigns a team of commandos to join the Zionists in an upcoming mission. Anome, the controller for the operation, warns the operatives not to look bad in front of their allies. The group proceed to successfully clear out one of the local exile hideouts and, pleased with their progress, the General sends out one of his elite commandos to assist and study the operatives on further assignments.
- The Zion operatives and the General's elite commando proceed to clear out another, tougher, exile hideout; Anome seems almost desperate to show the commandos what Zion is capable of. After using his enhanced sensors to analyse and upload the battle data the commando tells the operatives that the General wishes to speak with them in person for debriefing. The General congratulates the operatives on their success and assures them the extensive data gathered is being converted into superior anti exile sub routines as they speak.
- The Machines, more specifically Agent Gray, decide to apply pressure to the Merovingian's assets, they plan on making the Frenchman lose focus and in turn to weaken his 'pathetic' empire. Machine strike forces are sent to numerous Merovingian bases.
- Flood finds himself confronted with attack reports from all across the city; he sends Merovingian operatives to 'resolve the situations'. It appears Zionists are behind the attacks, targeting specific exiles. The operatives are able to defend several of the sites and disperse the Zion attackers, but not without heavy losses, many programs lie dead before they even arrive. One of the wounded is able to give the operatives a data disk which he demands must reach the Merovingian; It leads them to yet another attack site, this time at the hands of machine programs. After a tough battle the operatives are able to clear the site and search bodies, unfortunately nothing of interest is found.
- Agent gray selects a crew of machine operatives to lead an attack on one of the Merovingian's key exile lieutenants, termination is the objective. After fighting through the lieutenant's personal guard the crews operator picks up on a strange code fluctuation in the next room, they rush to investigate but find nothing, it seems the exile was able to escape out of thin air. Further analysis of the fluctuation confirms it to be the work of the mysterious Effectuator.
- Determined not to be out done by exiles Agent Gray orders the machine crew to proceed and attack the base of one of the Mervs known security captains. Preliminary scans show the exiles signal clearly but as soon as the operatives enter the building the readings disappear, the place completely empty. Agent gray comments on the Effectuator's talents becoming an... inconvenience.

- Tyndall sends a crew of Zionites to accompany a squad of the General's commandos on a special combat run. The purpose of the exercise is to evaluate the new anti exile combat upgrades developed using the data from the recent training sessions with Zion. The chosen targets are a group of the Effectuator's dire Lupines; they have apparently been unusually active as of late and Tyndall sees it as the perfect opportunity. The mission is a success and the upgrades seem to be effective. As the crew leave the mission area they receive a request to meet with the General in person, he has another vital mission for them.
- The General explains to the Zion operatives that the data collected from the previous tests suggests a possibility of creating special weapons for use against specific exile's defences. He needs the operatives to lead a group of specially programmed commandos to further test the theory and collect the data they need. Tyndall is hopeful that the weapons the General spoke of could be the turning point in their battle against the Merovingian and encourages the operatives to help the commandos gather as much data as possible. The team are lead to the location of another group of dire Lupines, unfortunately there are many more than expected and a tough battle ensues. However, thanks to the help of the upgraded commandos the Zionists are eventually able to defeat them all, gathering a lot of data as a result.
- Flood decides to retaliate against the recent attacks but as Merovingian forces are laid out thin enough as it is he plans to 'persuade' the Cypherites to assist. Disguising themselves as Zionists a squad of Merv operatives attack one of the masked bases. Believing Zion to have attacked them the Cypherites lead a counter strike on a known Zionist base of operations; Flood sends troops to assist but when they arrive they find nothing but dead Cypherite bodies and a single data disk. Flood demands it uploaded for analysis.
- Agent Gray assigns a team of machine operatives to track the Effectuator's movements. Armed with a powerful data recording device the team proceed to follow the sporadic code trail across the city. They hit many dead ends, empty rooms and battles with dire Lupines but gray assures them they are in fact getting close enough for valuable data to be collected. He believes it to be only a matter of time before the Effectuator is in their custody.
- The General's liaison informs Tyndall that the data collected so far is helping greatly in their development of the anti-exile weaponry, however, their database is still incomplete and they require operatives to assist in data collection on one more exile type. A crew of Zionists are sent to meet with the assigned commando team and head out immediately. After successfully clearing yet another exile base and uploading the battle data Tyndall reports that the General has found his missing link in the chain and has ordered his coders to begin work on the new weaponry ASAP.
- Given the vital importance of the anti exile weaponry development the Zion council orders that operatives be sent to help guard the General's coder labs in case of attack. They can not afford to lose such a powerful tool in their battle against the Frenchman. Several of the labs are indeed held under siege by exile forces but the united Zion and commando guard teams are able to eventually fight them off.

- Flood is able to finish his analysis of the data disk found on the dead Cypherites, it seems they have begun running extra scans on the union hill Cryptos box. fearing the masked may be on their trail Flood quickly sends an operative to meet with the Cypherites to try and cool things over, the truce between the two organizations is too valuable to lose. Unfortunately the operative is met with nothing but relocated bases and eventually, gunfire. Veil contacts Flood accusing him of the betrayal, the deal between them is over and Merovingian certainly won't be pleased.
- Thanks to the assistance of Zion the General's coders are able to finish their work on the enhanced anti exile weaponry. Mass distribution to all Zion operatives begins. These enhanced versions of wooden stakes, silver bullets and holy water are able to deal significantly more damage to exiles than their regular versions, a valuable weapon against the trafficker of information indeed.
- The Machines finish work on a device designed to lock down the Effectuator's RSI, he is finally within their grasp. The device needs to be placed on the exile's body by hand and the task is entrusted to a loyal crew of machine operatives. They do their best to track the Effectuator, becoming ever closer with each new location but like always he seems to slip right through their fingers at the last step. Agent Gray aborts the mission stating another strategy must be formulated.
- The Zion council decide that to better combat the Merovingian they will again temporarily join forces with the Machines and give them some of the newly developed anti-exile weapons. The General shows definite distrust for the machine civilisation but respects the council's wishes and allows the deal to go ahead. Anome will be put in charge of the trade off.
- The assigned Zion operative retrieves the weapon codes from a group of commandos and begins to make his way to the trade location. However, Anome's sensors pick up on alarming numbers of exiles in the area; it seems the Merovingian was somehow tipped off to the location. After sending sweep up squads to deal with the exiles Anome instructs the operative to carry on and do the deal as quickly as possible. The operative meets with a machine redpill and his agent guard, the trade goes ahead successfully. However, before either party is able to leave, the area becomes under siege from exile forces. Fighting side by side the 2 operatives and agent are able to hold off the waves upon waves of attackers and finally make it to safety; the mission is a success.
- It is now required that after any meeting with the enemy Zion operatives must be debriefed by a senior member in case of 'contamination'; the operative who made the anti exile trade off makes his way to the debriefing point. Here he meets with the man himself, Ghost. The veteran Zionist assures that neither he nor the Zion council particularly trust the Machines but they all understand the necessity of working with them under the truce. Ghost finishes up by congratulating the operative on a job well done and takes his leave.
- Agent Gray instructs the machine operative to take the anti exile codes to one of their top scientists within the Matrix for decompiling; they will certainly come in useful against the Effectuator. During the long analysis and decomposition process the scientist rambles on about his work with the human body, how he once worked on a 'damaged' human found on the edge of the... he never finishes his sentence. The slightly modified codes and Effectuator locking device are handed back to the operative, it is time.

- The machine operative makes his way to a tracked Effectuator location, inside he is met with near hordes of dire Lupines. However, all of them take a massive hit of damage due to the area effect machine anti exile kill code; finishing them off from proves an easy task. The operative is then able to take the Effectuator by surprise, the eccentric exile wasn't expecting his Lupines to fall so quickly and let his guard down. Just as he is about to phase out the operative is able to plant the device, locking his RSI in place. 2 agents then enter the room and take the Effectuator into their custody; the mission is a clear success.
- Tyndall announces that now Zion have the anti exile weaponry in their arsenal it is finally time to up the offensive on the Merovingian. Operatives are to sent on combat runs all across the city but first they must learn the locations of appropriate testing bases. A recon squad are sent to attack and clear a Merovingian redpill base, to gather intelligence in any way possible. The Merv forces are taken by surprise and are soon waiting to reconstruct, that is apart from one. The redpill claims to have only joined the Frenchman the day before and is regretting his decision already. He promises to give the team the information they're after if they take him back into the ranks of Zion. They accept but promise that if the information proves false they will hunt him down.
- The Zion/Commando alliance forces plan a strike on the location given to them by the Merv traitor, preliminary scans of the area prove his information correct and the forces move in. The exiles within are easily dealt with due to the enhanced weapon codes, they fall like flies as the operatives and commandos clean out the building. Having just jacked in and hearing of their success caption Niobe requests a meeting with the leader of the strike force, the others stay behind to secure the area. Niobe congratulates the operative on a mission well done, she also reminds them not to worry about the Cypherites or be fooled by those mistrusting of the General; according to her they have the people, skills and firepower to win the battle and that's all that matters.
- Flood is again bombarded by attack reports from Zionists, commandos and the Machines, he sends what little squads of operatives he can spare to their defence but all arrive too late, the exiles lie dead, killed by enhanced codes. The attackers are dealt with but the damage is already done. After cleaning up the attack sites Flood receives another urgent report, the Effectuator is under attack by machine forces. All available operatives are sent to his defence ASAP, they can't afford to lose the Effectuator. But it is too late; they arrive to find the building empty, no traces of phasing, no exile left alive.
- The Machines are unsuccessful in interrogating the Effectuator; they believe it to be inherent in his coding and are left at a dead end. Agent Gray decides to see how a redpill operative fares in interrogation. The exile does speak to the operative, but only of the Machines foolishness. He does however tell the operative he can show him something, something on his computer. The operative proceeds to the address given and accesses the terminal there, a data disk is ejected and the unloaded to Agent Gray. The virus within is easily recognised and destroyed, the Effectuator's games didn't work this time.
- The Merovingian grants Flood a single chance to redeem himself; the defence of one of the Frenchman's major research centres, under attack by commando forces, in put in his hands. Operatives rush to its location and arrive to find the scientists have barricaded themselves in one of the rooms, having locked down all the on site computer systems. The attackers are dealt with swiftly and the scientists freed but there is no time for congratulations, another centre is under attack. Here a similar scene is found but this time before the operatives could defeat all the commandos the entire attacking squad fall dead. The scientists explain that it must have been the EMCP (electro magnetic code pulse) they just let off to disable their computers. This information comes as a great pleasure to Flood, a device capable of instantly killing all commandos within a set radius, just the thing to get him off the hook. Not only that but perhaps the Merovingian is not beaten yet.

- Agent Gray sends out a forum broadcast requesting that his listed machine factions provide one representative each to attend an operation of urgent importance. The names are to be sent to the machine liaison officer, DifferenceEngine, ASAP and the meeting take place later that week. All details on the upcoming mission are kept secret.
- The day arrives and Agent Gray contacts the selected operatives to attend a meeting on the Kalt chemical building's rooftop. Keeping the group in order Agent Gray and DifferenceEngine find themselves confronted with unwanted guests, namely Zion and Merovingian spies. The decision is made to take the machinists somewhere a little more... private. After arriving at the white room the operatives meet with Agent Pace for their briefing. A machine program, bugsweep, recently went missing while investigating a report about the machines stolen case. The operative's mission is simple; track bugsweep, rescue him if possible and at all costs find the kidnapper for interrogation concerning the case. Having little to go by apart from the programs last known location the operatives are teleported back to Megacity, the operation begins. Within minutes the machine operatives are able to find the wounded bugsweep in an alleyway but there is no time for celebration. The weakened program barely manages to warn his saviours that the man who attacked him was fleeing the city, they had to hurry. While some stay behind and tend to bugsweep the others make their way to the only route out of the city the machines couldn't track, the downtown helipads. Their intuition pays off and they find the man, Darago, attempting to escape. He proves impressively combat able and fights off the operatives with relative ease but is forced to flee once agent backup arrives. A chase through the city ensues; Darago is blocked off at several subway stations and is forced to run, eventually leading the group to Camon Park. Here he calls on the assistance of the demons army gang and it doesn't take long for a mass brawl to break out. However, under the collective might of the machine forces, Darago falls and the exile gang disperses. Agent Pace arrives at the scene, accompanied by Agent Gray and DifferenceEngine; she examines the runaway's body to find some kind of communication device. After running its code through Gray's advanced analysis subroutines it is determined to be tuned into the same signal used by the General's commandos. The agents conclude that the General is indeed responsible for the theft of their case and that it is in his possession at this time. After congratulating their operatives on a mission well done the machines officially close the operation and return to their duties.
- While attending to public relations duties DifferenceEngine begins to show... odd behaviour. After short while the machine liaison suddenly snaps and apparently loses himself. Almost as if possessed he demands the access codes to the Zion mainframe and complains of the stench humanity gives. The Redpills realise this to be another case of the remnant Smith virus, much like Agent Gray occasionally encounters. The crowd try and calm the unstable program down but he continues to speak on about how the Oracle and 'Mr. Anderson' must be killed to pay for his freedom. When questioned as to The One's livelihood the possessed program tells them that after the final battle Neo was provided with a hovercraft and left the machine city alive. A shocked crowd are soon met by Agent Pace who proceeds to detain and send DE offline for debugging; she informs the gathered Redpills his statements were the ramblings of a malfunctioning program and should be treated as completely false. The liaison soon returns to duty back to normal and with no recollection of the event.

Chapter 4.2

E Pluribus Neo

- The Kid, the youth awakened by Neo, the one who opened gate 3 in time for the hammer's EMP to save the city, holds a small meeting at Mara church. Here he discusses with other likeminded Redpills the importance of Neo's 'legacy' and how Cryptos and the Cypherites are dishonouring it. In the end it is suggested that they form their own splinter group to uphold these ideals and take the fight to the masked. 'From many, one' E Pluribus Neo.
- The Zion council becomes increasingly concerned over their hazy knowledge of cryptos' Cypherite movement. For the time being his moves are predictable, disrupting awakenings and spreading propaganda, but Zion find themselves completely unable to predict what the masked are going to do next. As such operatives are sent on missions to track and observe Cypherite groups in the hopes of learning more.
- Agent Gray has a machinist redpill investigate an 'unfortunate incident' that has occurred in the slums, apparently the nature of this crime is yet to be determined but the operative figures it must be important if it warrants Agent attention. Arriving at the forwarded location the machinist redpill finds several dead bodies scattered around the room, oddly without any sign of struggle, and begins to question the on site witnesses as to what happened. According the incredibly distressed Bluepills there was a loud bang, like an explosion, and then loads of 'green stuff' appeared. It also looked as if the others had died from convulsive choking and one witness even swears they saw someone dressed like some sort of priest run out of the building in the chaos. The operative's operator confirms their suspicions, it sounds as if the 'dead' Bluepills have been forcefully awakened from their pods, and going by the descriptions given, it was a code bomb that did it.
- Agent Gray informs the Machine investigator that the Machines had thought code bombings to be long over, apparently they were in error. He also runs a scan of the local area to search for the priest like figure described by one of the witnesses. Turning up a positive match and following local reports the agent is able to lead the investigator to a nearby building. However, the area turns out completely clear of activity, except a single computer terminal that when hacked logged in as 'N30_LIVES'. Agent Gray proceeds to designate the 'priest' as prime subject for the forced awakening.
- A Zion spy team are able to trace the Cypherites back to a 'Somnus Consulting Services' The company name is surprisingly empty in the city archives and Tyndall, feeling its all too suspicious, sends operatives to investigate. On site the office seems normal enough, no masked, only Bluepills. However, one of said Bluepills gives the operatives a key to the company safe, apparently he was already expecting someone to arrive. Inside the safe the Zionists find a small data disk, which they upload to Tyndall ASAP.
- The data found by the Zion investigation team suggest the Cypherites are working on some sort of forced reinsertion program, very worrisome to both Tyndall and the Zion council. The disk also contained co ordinates for an upcoming masked meeting; soldiers are sent to intercept. However, they find themselves surrounded not by hostiles but by dead bodies. Going further the team find a single wounded operative; the young man simply says 'For Neo' and suicides before the soldiers can question him. Tyndall is baffled by the unknown operative's involvement and promises to run some checks for similar accounts, unfortunately she also reminds the troops that his interference has cost them a valuable lead.

- Flood informs a team of Merv operatives that The Merovingian is interested in consolidating his many 'items of interest' that he has spread out throughout the Matrix, it also turns out it's the team's job to start collecting said items. The first, a certain statue, is being held by one of the Merv's loyal exiles who apparently has a certain... taste for humans. Luckily the team are able to play it cool and receive the item without much hassle. Flood goes on to inform the team that the second item is in the possession of an exile outside the Merv's employ and may be a little harder to acquire. The team's operator seems slightly confused as to why the item is being held by an exile outside of their organization but carries on none the less.
- Arriving at the hideout of the exile who holds the second item the Merv operatives are met with an uncooperative, and rather slow witted, program who refuses to hand over the item. Flood suggests that getting rid of a couple of the exile's guards may incite a better attitude and indeed after a quick clearing of the area the exile soon hands over the key to the site's vault. However, making their way to the vault the team are met by the neighbourhood contact 'Hypatia'.
- Hypatia starts to talk about her hearing rumours of "Him collecting his things" and asks starts to ask the team questions like "Where is he going?" and "How will he get there without his Effectuator?". Of course she refers to the Merovingian but the team have no idea as to what she's talking about. Realising herself they know nothing Hypatia allows the operatives to take the item, a small book, from the vault. On their way she even warns them to try and be aware of 'the bigger picture' and not to be swept up in 'circumstances beyond their control'. The team's two items are then successfully handed over to a Merovingian lieutenant at the local Merv drop off point. Flood declares the mission a success, the team's operator however can't help but be concerned over the Merovingian's sudden desire to gather his items.
- Zion are determined to follow up on the Cypherites and decide to pursue other leads, namely one of a man accusing cryptos' boxes as being stolen from his warehouse. When interviewed by undercover the owner claims that cryptos had been using his warehouse as storage but one day, without warning, they were suddenly gone. Apparently no one saw what happened nor has he heard from the mysterious magician since. The owner even still has Cryptos' deposit; a watch he was wearing the day they met, the Zionists take it for help in their investigation.
- After uploading data on the watch given to them by the warehouse owner the Zion team are able to track its origins back to a specific jewellery store, ran by the exile 'The Jeweller'. While waiting to see the exile in his regional offices the operatives talk to the bluepill workers, apparently they saw cryptos on the day of the sale talking to some 'G-men', suits and ties, slick hair and earpieces, agents. This raises questions in itself but there is little time to ponder. When the team finally do meet with the jeweller he confirms the watch to be his work, a special request actually as it was required, strangely, not to run. The exile ends the meeting by giving the operatives Cryptos' customer file, complete with home address.
- Anome, who's in charge of the investigation, orders cryptos' watch be uploaded to him personally so he can wear it the next time he goes 'slumming'. After following their orders the team are joined by a squad of commando soldiers and sent to investigate cryptos' apparent home. Unfortunately they are again met not by the masked but with more Neo and Trinity look-alikes. The over zealous teenagers actually end up attacking the team, believing them to be the Cypherites. After dealing with their attackers the operatives try and search the house but find nothing useful. Anome deems the mission a failure and doesn't even believe the team's story about the fanatics; to him they're just making excuses.

- Flood sends one of his operatives to assist with the research and development of a portable weapon version of the EMCP device that he claims to have invented (even though it was an accidental discovery by the Merovingian researchers). It seems the development has hit a block and requires the assistance of a certain exile; Flood orders his operatives to use whatever means necessary to convince the exile to help them. Arriving at the determined location of the required program the operative is met with several of the exile's bodyguards. Taking them down the operative is able to meet with their boss in the next room. It seems he already knew of their coming and what they wanted, he goes on to explain the commandos have gave him his fair share of troubles and he would be willing to help but only if he receives 'advance payment'.
- The exile needed to continue the EMCP development requests that the Merv operative destroys a certain rival program of his. Flood shows definite distain for the request but has no choice but to accept it and patches through the location of the rival exile to his operative. The redpill is able to assassinate the program with deadly precision and returns to escort the required exile to the Merovingian lab. Work continues on the portable EMCPs.
- Zion's checks for the Neo/Trinity look-alike reports reveal that groups of these Redpills have been spotted several times confronting suspected Cypherites and in turn interfering with Zion investigations. On top of that several hovercraft that recently left Zion have since cut contact and when researching the crew data Zion find it mysteriously wiped from the mainframe. Commander Lock suspects the Neoites wiped the data, took the ships and have gone renegade.
- Zion technicians discover a backup copy of one of the missing ships crew data, running it through the Matrix feed Tyndall is able to track their location in the Matrix and a team of operatives is sent in to question the renegade Redpills. Upon arriving at the site the operatives are immediately attacked by the renegade youths, again they think them to be Cypherites. After dealing with the rebels the operatives search the fallen for any clues, they find the renegade squad's operating orders, the fact they were carrying them while out in the field is a clear sign of the group's disorganization. Tyndall hopes that they can return the rebels to the cause of Zion while their chain of command is apparently still weak.
- The Zion operatives follow the address on the acquired operating orders to another renegade hideout, after fighting through more of the rebellious youths the team are able to gain access to the on site computer systems. They find an open conversation window with a 'Fracastoro'; he talks about how the Cypherites are 'going down' and 'Shimada' knowing what she's doing. Tyndall recognises the name and begins running checks. In the mean time the operatives are sent to the origin of the conversation window to question Fracastoro.
- Arriving at the traced renegade base the Zion operatives yet again become under attack but the mention of Shimada's name instantly stops the fighting and the rogues lead the team into the next room to speak to their squad leader, Fracastoro. The redpill is weary of the operatives' purpose but ultimately decides to let Shimada decide for herself. He orders 2 of his men to escort the team to her.

- Tyndall reports back to the team being escorted by the rebels, her research is complete and it appears Shimada was indeed a Zionite and in fact a captain of one of the missing ships; it seems Commander Lock's suspicions were correct. The team arrive at a heavily guarded renegade base and are allowed audience with Shimada. She tells the operatives that their group, E Pluribus Neo, is devoted to following the teachings and ideals set out by Neo himself, the belief that every human being should be allowed the chance of freedom. She then requests that the team leave quietly. Tyndall feels Shimada is young, naive and hiding something but still believes they can deal with E Pluribus Neo peacefully. However, she is fearful that if the situation is not dealt with quickly EPN's awakenings could cause the Machine's power supply to become threatened and Zion accused of breaking the terms of the truce.
- A member of E Pluribus Neo, Brian, has second thoughts about his joining of the group and contacts Zion; Anome is put in charge and an operative sent to go talk to Brian. The redpill confesses to being a follower of EPN's ideals but apparently he felt the leadership was far too weak, not Shimada but another, The Kid. Upon hearing about The Kid's involvement with EPN Anome gets more than a little annoyed, calling the youth a 'no good punk' and saying how they should take him out 'execution style'; it certainly seems like he has something personal against the boy.
- Flood contacts one of his operatives and informs them that the EMCP devices are now ready for field testing and that they have been tasked with escorting the tester. Arriving at the Merv lab the operative is briefed by researchers there and assured that 'the feedback issue' has been taken care of, however a nearby computer tells a slightly different story as it lists the survival rate of users as only 85%. Taking some of the prototype devices the operative and the designated tester are forwarded to a local commando held location. Storming the building the Merv operative begins to do battle with the commandos, however, the fight is short lived as the EMCP is activated successfully and nearly all the commandos are deleted in an instant.
- Flood forwards his operative and the EMCP tester to a second location for further testing, the same situation unfolds as before with the commandos dropping like flies, except this time the tester is also physically harmed by the device. Flood recalls the scientists' mention of a feedback problem and has the operative escort the tester to a nearby lab for analysis. After delivering the subject to the local lab and having the scientists promise to look into the issue the operative decides to have a little snoop around, hacking into an on-site computer they learn that the scientists have recently hacked into and deleted entries from the public service's missing persons database, the reason why is unknown.
- Flood declares the EMCP testing to be a total success and distribution of the deadly weapon codes to all Merv operatives begins.
- Anome claims to know where one of The Kid's friends hangs out in the Matrix, he sends a team of operatives to go question the redpill. The operatives arrive only to stumble upon a small meeting of EPN followers; the team are spotted and immediately attacked. After the rebels are dealt with Anome comes up with a plan, if they contact another one of The Kid's associates and say the first group sent them with urgent news for the Kids ears only just before they were attacked then perhaps in the foolishness of youth they'll lead the team straight to him.

- Using his contacts Anome is able to find the location of another EPN group within the Matrix and operatives are sent in to try out the controller's previous idea. The plan goes off without a hitch and the rebels are easily fooled as they begin escorting the team to The Kid. However, upon arriving at the meeting site a jamming signal is activated and the operatives lead into a room full of E pluribus Neo crusaders; it appears they were on to Anome's plot all along. The Kid, who refers to himself as Michael, tells the operatives that Zion have got EPN all wrong; in his own words it is not a group all about him nor is it lacking in organization or dedication. As for the group's large numbers he says the ranks of EPN are not only from Zion but in fact from all orgs, apparently they consist of anyone who believes in what Neo believed and are growing by the day. The team pull out and Anome soon becomes infuriated, he promises that all those 'traitors' will burn for thinking they're better than Zion.
- Agent Gray contacts a team of machinist operatives regarding information obtained from one of the Machine organization's Zion contacts. The wanted 'priest' has been linked with a certain group of Zion radicals and another code bombing is thought to be on the horizon. Gray has the team meet up with the contact in the Matrix to try and find out the timeframe and possible locations of the upcoming 'illegal activity'. The informant reveals that The Kid is the one behind the radicals and that they plan to set off 2 code bombs very soon. The Zionist promises to lend support by trying to block the radicals comm. signals as long as the machinists stay quiet about his helping them.
- In a race against time the Machine team hurry to the first bomb location given by the Zion informant. As they enter the building their operator is met with a 'crazy' code signal and the operatives come face to face with another code bomb aftermath, confused Bluepills breaking down and forcefully awakened scattering the floor. With no time to waste the operatives gather their thoughts and rush to the second location. On the way Gray confirms that their informant has kept his word and is currently jamming the renegade's signals, it's now or never.
- Arriving at the second locale the team find bluepill workers confused as to why everyone is storming their offices, it seems the machinists may have made it just in time. Continuing into the next room the operatives are faced with numerous youths dressed in prophet dusters going by the handles of 'E Pluribus Neo Crusaders'. They claim that what they're doing is for 'the good of humanity' and engage the machists. In a quickened battle the Machine operatives are able to fight their way through to the final room and find the leader of the bombers who is readily preparing the code bomb for detonation. He is promptly stopped and the code bomb retrieved without any casualties. As a debriefing Agent Gray reminds his operatives that innocent lives were saved and that awakening Bluepills in such a way is not only counterproductive but also very destructive, as they've already seen.
- The Zion council decide to leave E pluribus Neo be for the time being, due to their connections to the human race's saviour and with Morpheus rumours on the rise again attacking them would be political suicide. Instead Zion returns to concentrating on their war against the Merovingian.
- Agent Gray receives reports that E Pluribus Neo has launched a raid on one the Machine's code storage facilities inside the Matrix. Believing the attackers are searching for components needed to construct more code bombs the Agent controller immediately calls up a team of Machine operatives to deal with the situation. As they arrive the machinists find a large number of EPN crusaders engaged with Machine security programs. The programs fall before the operatives' eyes and the defence of the facility is left up to them and a hand full of brave on-site Machine mechanics. After a long and tiresome battle the crusaders fall and the facility is secured.

- Becoming agitated at the intolerable level of interference from EPN operatives Agent Gray requests a meeting with a Zion representative to discuss the matter. Unfortunately, Zion sends Anome. After some tactful comments regarding the Machine organization Anome lets the Machine representative know the details on E Pluribus Neo, that the Zion council are hesitant to deal with them and that they have been officially disavowed. Anome also lets slip that he has people "working on it". Agent Gray however is fully satisfied with the fact that Zion have essentially given the Machines "What humans call Carte Blanche", the freedom to pursue the issue how they wish. He ends by predicting the Machine's campaigns against E pluribus Neo will be "very... satisfying".
- Flood again contacts one of his operatives concerning the EMCP devices, this time however he details how the devices could be further improved, modified to also destroy any Machine programs within the code radius. The operative's controller isn't as optimistic saying the idea of killing agents in an instant is just too good to be true. Nevertheless the operative is sent to meet with the project's lead scientist and a chosen tester. The scientist hands over the prototype Machine EMCP device and taking the exile ironically named 'Tester' with him the operative sets off in search of a testing ground.
- Looking through the report logs Flood soon finds a Merv held building currently under siege from Machine forces and forwards the operative and Tester there. He does however ask that the operative makes sure Tester goes through with activating the device since he seems hesitant for some reason. Arriving on site the Merv redpill and Tester meet up with the defending exile forces and begin to fight back the Machine security forces. However, the moment Tester activates the prototype Machine EMCP all the exile programs, including Tester, fall to the floor. Dead. While the Machine programs still stand. As if things weren't bad enough already the operative's operator then picks up on Agent activity in the building; the redpill desperately tries to escape but is cut off by the agents storming the building. Upon reconstructing the operative is again contacted by Flood who declares whoever thought of that idea should lose their job and that he'll personally find who's responsible. Even though it was likely him in the first place.
- Agent Gray contacts a squad of Machine operatives and informs them that they have "unfinished business" to attend to. He goes on to explain the recent city-wide operation where Machine operatives located and killed the renegade 'Darago' who was directly involved in the loss of the Machine's case of valuables. After some quick post analysis it was revealed that it was The General who was behind Darago and the case's theft. Unfortunately, due to his alliance with Zion, it is difficult for the Machines to confront him directly, difficult, but not impossible. However, these plans are not yet ready to be discussed and the Agent instead directs the team's attention to the much easier goal of dealing with the neighbourhood gang who had assisted Darago, the Demon Army.

- The machinist squad are thus sent on a mission to travel to the Demon Army's self described 'turf' of Tabor Park and hunt down their leader, Mammon. He has been scheduled for deletion. After fighting their way through a group of Demon Army Cheitans at one of their known local hideouts the team find an encrypted data disk. Once decoded on one of the on site computer systems the disk reveals a comm. message concerning Cacophony, Darago and a payment of 200 million info to someone by the name of Grover. The team's operator is baffled but Agent Gray soon explains that earlier operations found Cacophony to simply be a code name for The General. It seems the data relates to the Demons Army's payment for their services and Grover must be the one running the deal.
- Agent Gray confirms this Grover figure is not unknown to the Machines; he is apparently an exile who is well known for lending his services to the highest bidder. The team of Machine Redpills is quickly forwarded to Grover's last recorded whereabouts so they can 'question' him concerning the location of Mammon. Frightened by the presence of the operatives and the mention of Agent Gray's name Grover quickly begins to tell them what they want to know, that he was nothing more than a messenger and package handler between the two parties and that he would also give them the location of the drop point so long as they leave him be. Agent Gray agrees.
- The Agent controller predicts not only that the location provided by Grover is correct but also that Mammon will have an exceptional number of Demon Army guards. As such the Machine operatives are to be granted back up units for support. Meeting with the Machine PR liaison, Agent Pace, the team are designated 2 agent programs for assistance in the deletion of the rogue exile. Making their way to the location given by Grover the squad soon blast their way through to Mammon, his guards falling easily to the might of the agents. Mammon too is easily dealt with but not before he claims he will 'only rise again'. Agent Gray then ends the mission by expressing how unfortunate it was to have had the original theft be successfully aided by a street gang but also by reminding the operatives that the system will not tolerate such actions.
- Zion catches word of an important exile communications base within the Matrix and after scanning the area send an operative to plant a bug in the mainframe there. This bug will allow Zion to get advance notice on the exile's plans, a valuable asset indeed. However, intelligence shows the building to be heavily guarded and planting the bug without being noticed is deemed impossible as is. Zion thus uses commando forces to create a disturbance in another area of the building, leaving the mainframe vulnerable. Tyndall does warn the team to be wary of Merovingian followers armed with EMP style devices, Zion have heard rumours of such weapons and although they appear to be in short supply they are still a deadly threat, capable of killing commandos almost instantly. The mission is a flawless success and the bug begins transmitting straight to Zion.
- There is a small secret meeting between Zion's top commanding officers; here they discuss the next phase of action against the Merovingian, an all out offensive against his remaining troops. There are still plans that need to be put in place but the time is nearing, it could be a few days or a few months but all operatives are ordered to remain at the ready as the battle draws ever closer.

- The Merovingian decides it is time for him to reclaim the captured Effectuator; he has Flood arrange the details. The Merv controller calls up a team of his operatives and informs them of the Merv's wishes and that a large scale operation is already under way. Their job is to infiltrate security control locations in the Tabor Park neighbourhood and have hackers ready to disable the systems there when the time is right. At the same Flood has other operatives attacking Machine sites around the city to distract them from the main operation, Agent Gray falls into his trap and spreads his forces to deal with the assaults while their reasoning is "being determined". The Merv operatives on the other hand strike with deadly and swift precision as they clear the security sites of Machine security and have their hackers take position.
- Retrieving reports of the strikes at Tabor Agent Gray soon realizes that the Merv have simply been using distraction tactics to blind him from their now apparent ultimate goal, the freeing of the intangible Effectuator. He immediately has his squads consolidate and also deploys additional security program as support. However, Flood has already had his Merv operatives from the distraction operations as well as those from the security building strikes and even additional redpill support gather for the final strike on the Tabor facility. The force's operator guess that the extensive use of redpill forces is probably due to the exile kill codes now at the machine's disposal.
- The Merv squads storm the holding facility and are met with strong resistance from the heavy defence set up there; however, it is still no match for the combined might of the many Merv Redpills gathered for the rescue. With no backup support due to the thinly spread machine forces the security programs fall. The team then proceed to, with the help of the hackers at the security buildings, deactivate the terminal controlling the Effectuator's holding program. The Effectuator is freed. At that exact moment the consolidated machine forces storm the building with Agent support, a fierce battle erupts in the Effectuator's holding room but ultimately the Merv forces do not stand a chance against the onslaught of machine Redpills, programs and agents. They fall to ground, left to reconstruct. Their mission was a success however as the Effectuator remained untouched and is able to mock the machinists with copies of himself before teleporting to safety.
- The machines are debriefed by Agent Gray who details his regret at underestimating the Merv's level of coordination in their strike and how it was also unfortunate his forces were stretched so thin with all the new threats emerging, such as EPN and The General. However, holding the Effectuator was deemed highly inefficient in the long term anyway and he reports future operations will concentrate on more... tangible targets.
- Cryptos, leader of the Cypherites, posts a public recruitment message on Data Node 1. This message is a call to those who wish to 'embrace the world as it should be'. In the secretive style of the Cypherites Cryptos leaves a riddle for applicants to solve; only with its solution can they gain a meeting with the newly appointed Cypherite liaison. The Matrix sees a definite influx of both public and secret masked supporters.
- The Kid, leader of E Pluribus Neo, posts a public recruitment message on Data Node 1. His message is directed at those 'with Neo in their hearts' and invites those able to pass the EPN liason's test to join up and do 'What neo died for, to free everyone from the clutches of the Matrix'. The Megacity sees a definite influx of both public and undercover EPN supporters.

- A mysterious program by the name of 'ProtectorProgram' writes a report concerning the current situation within the Matrix; she writes directly to The Architect but also requests that The Oracle broadcast it to the Redpills of the city via DN1. Within her writings protector program states that the Redpills of the city do not seem realise her presence could mean an eminent reboot of the system. It seems she is concerned for the welfare of the Matrix and warns of trouble ahead.
- Once again the Machines liaison program, DifferenceEngine, begins showing odd behaviour and again, he loses his mind. Taking the insanity shown by the remnant smith virus to new levels DE goes on a rampage around the city, attacking Zionists at random and easily repelling anyone who tries to get in his way. To deal with the crisis an emergency meeting of all Machine captains is called but half through discussions as to what should be done reports reach the operatives of DE's presence in Debir court. Here the deranged program is cornered by the many Redpills of the city, some try to calm him while others try to take him down. The confrontation comes to its peak with DE releasing dangerous modified agent programs to defend himself. Agent Pace is soon informed of the deadly disturbances and arrives just in time to take control and reclaim the loose programs. The female agent then detains and sends DifferenceEngine for extensive code cleansing in the Machine city, however, how long this will take and indeed if it will even be successful at all is unknown. To compensate, Agent Pace assigns one of the Machine organization's top Redpills, Turring, as their new liaison officer. Hopefully his human nature for allow for more... stability.
- The Megacity sees a sharp rise in confrontation between the Cypherite and E Pluribus Neo groups, at war with each other over their entirely opposite ideals the two splinter organizations always seem to break into bickering and violence. Such actions do not escape the Machines however as Agent Gray holds a meeting with machinist Redpills where he declares the two groups illegal in the system. Their leaders and liaisons have also been placed on the Machine's most wanted criminal lists.
- Veil, Cypherite controller, holds a secret meeting with the city's Cypherite Redpills. She confirms to them the presence of a splinter within their ranks, members of the masked who feel dissatisfied with the group's new methods and wish to speed things up by somehow reinserting everyone on masse. These individuals are of great concern to Veil and she marks them as enemies to all loyal cypherites.
- Word of the Cypherite's splinter group and their deranged goal soon reaches the streets of Megacity. Not knowing if fact or only rumour all the other organizations inform their operatives to stay alert and keep their eyes open for any news or confirmation on this potentially dangerous group's existence.
- Agent Gray calls for a meeting of all Machine captains, apparently concerning matters of the utmost importance. He informs the operatives of distinct 'power fluctuations' that have recently been detected throughout the system. Their origins are, of course, currently unknown but they can not afford to continue. The Machinists are told to keep their wits about them and report any unusual activity to Liaison officer Turring immediately.

Chapter 4.2B

A Piece of Blue Sky

- Redpills jack in to find large concert sites set up at certain parks around the city. These sites show the banner of 'A piece of blue sky – a musical celebration of dreams fulfilled'. Their sudden presence instantly fuels all manner of rumours, speculation and accusations. More so when people look to the sky, blue, more blue than anyone has ever seen before, even greater than the special sunsets created by Sati. Many believe it to be a Cypherite plot, more propaganda for their cause.
- A mysterious masked group going by the title 'The Sleepwalkers' start attacking Redpills throughout the city; dressed in dark blue clothing they reveal nothing of their purpose or intentions but are certainly violent to all awakened, across all organizations. Again, rumours spread about their possible involvement with the Cypherites and the Blue Sky concert sites. There's also the definite possibility also of them being the dangerous splinter group earlier rumours spoke of.
- The Cypherite liaison officer, Matarax, makes an official announcement to the Redpills of the Megacity; the sleepwalkers are not operating within the Cypherite organization. They are indeed the extremists who hope for a forced mass re-insertion, an act the real Cypherites apparently have not, do not and will not support. According to Matarax Cryptos fights for 'education and enlightenment' over force and not to mention would never support such a strong strain on his 'beautiful' system.
- Zion, cautious of the real purpose behind the blue sky concerts, sends their operatives to meet with ghost for briefing on the situation. According to him the machine simulation doesn't allow for blue skies, only when Sati is permitted to change it; but a concert certainly isn't her style. This raises the question, where did the sky come from? Ghost has no answers but he does report that the retired Metacortex co-founder 'Decius Wadsworth' has claimed the concerts to be his 'gift to city'. Oddly, Zion's contacts within Metacortex had no warning of the announcement and Wadsworth is dodging investigations. All operatives are reminded to keep on their toes as Zion expects trouble at the concerts.
- After close investigation the Redpills of Megacity note some odd developments surrounding the blue sky concerts. The spotlights that are present at the site are seen to be emanating small pieces of matrix code from their bases. This coupled with the fact their light is a deep blue has Redpills wondering, could they be behind the change of sky? There's also the small patches of black smog that seems to be intermingled with the sky itself, many are suspicious.
- Numerous security personnel start patrolling the blue sky concert sites, arriving and leaving at irregular intervals these mysterious individuals bring more rumour and speculation. They regularly clear the sites of local gang members, break up any redpill brawls and quietly converse with the blue sky vendors. However, most interestingly, they make absolutely sure no one interferes with any of the concert equipment. Their origins and purpose? Oddly enough they act as if they're just Bluepills, hired help and nothing more, yet they are seen using hardlines and occasionally hyper jumping. The Redpills simply don't know what to make of them.

- The Architect, creator of the Matrix, enters the Matrix to hold a top secret meeting with machinist faction leaders. His presence in the simulation alone lets those present know the seriousness of the situation. The matter at hand is the recent network power fluctuations, while their origins are still ultimately unknown the Architect concludes the sleepwalkers to be the cause. Both the unauthorised blue skies and concert grounds coincided with the sleepwalker's arrival in the system and the Architect determines, due to their fundamental flaws, the recent events to be the work of a human mind. The most frightening thing about the meeting is the fact the Architect calculates that, if the power drain continues at its current rate of growth, the simulation will soon suffer a cascading system failure and every human being currently jacked in will die. However, it is pointed out that the sleepwalkers would not simply allow this to happen, instead the Architect suspects they have powerful devices and subroutines for not only draining the system's power but also for separating residual self images from their physical counterparts and rerouting the bluepill neurological data. The sleepwalkers are thus deemed the system's number one enemies and must be stopped at all costs.
- All organizations rally their troops for battle against the sleepwalkers; the Cypherites believe it their duty to preserve the system from the threat they inadvertently created, E Pluribus Neo feel it is their purpose to rid the Matrix of these fanatics even worse than the normal masked, The Merovingian feels his power threatened and can not afford to lose the system he depends on for life, The Machines fear a cataclysmic system crash and Zion sees the sleepwalkers as a threat to all humanity. The concert sites are put under constant surveillance.
- Over the next couple of days the sky slowly darkens from its initial brightness into a foreboding deep blue. With it comes a definite tension; Redpills of all organizations keep watch on the concert sites, sleepwalker attacks are ever present and the security guards kept up their strange patrols. Everyone is counting down the minutes until Wadsworth's 'gift' begins. They can do nothing but wait...
- The time arrives, the blue sky concerts are set to begin. Crowds of Redpills from all organizations are gathered at each and every concert site. The show starts and the true nature of the whole ordeal is revealed. A loud voice is played over the concert speakers, it speaks "The time is now, behold the blue lights and feel your powers melt like ice to a flame. This is our spectacle and it will change you. Lie down Redpills and return to the dream. Some of you will try to shut down the pretty lights but you will be opposed, you will fail. Our brothers tried sweet persuasion with you. You could of been slicing the steak, but instead the knife cuts you. You wouldn't take the bluepill, now feel the blue light. And Sleep..." Just as the voice finishes the speech all hell breaks loose.
- The spotlights at the concert sites begin to shake and convulse, blasting out blinding blue light they begin to truly strain the simulation, not only that but they release a virus into the immediate vicinity weakening all Redpills. Sleepwalker operatives begin storming the concert sites and the Redpills struggle to hold them back. Fortunately not all hope is lost, after realising that the current threat outweighs any sort of difference of opinion the Redpills from all 5 organization join forces, united they hold their ground while trying to figure out how to stop the sleepwalker's plan.
- Through the chaos and the seemingly never-ending legions of sleepwalkers the brave Redpills fight their way to the spotlights themselves. While their allies hold off the attackers they manage to get a better look at the lights and discover an emergency panel located on the underside. When removed the panels reveal fail safe controls which given time allows for the lights to be deactivated. The Redpills now know how to stop the sleepwalkers, it's just a matter of holding them off long enough to do so.

- The battle wages on across the entire Megacity as the united awakened slowly but surely fight back the sleepwalker hordes and get closer to deactivating the sleepwalker spotlights. However, even deactivating the lights is dangerous as the closer they get to deactivation the more unstable they become. When at the final stages they even begin to burst out visible clouds of virus code as well as blue bolts of energy that immediately activates the redpill's auto jackouts. Straining the system to the point of cataclysm isn't what anyone wants but it is a necessary risk if the sleepwalkers are to be defeated.
- After a gruelling fight the spotlights around megacity are finally deactivated, somehow without crashing the system. An uneasy silence falls upon the concert sites. What now? That question is answered when the security personnel seen around the concert sites prior to the chaos arrive at the concert sites. No longer with their baseball caps they reveal their dark blue hair and true nature, undercover sleepwalkers. Leading a new wave of elite fanatics the security personnel storm the concert sites and soon reach the spotlights. To the dismay of the united Redpills the security are quickly able to reactivate the destructive lights. The battle for The Matrix still wages.
- Time wears on, the fighting looks to never end with the constant loop of deactivation and reactivation, the Redpills try in vain to defeat the security personnel only to have them reconstruct moments later. It looks as if all hope is lost when suddenly the Architect himself sends a broadcast to all the Redpills. After extensive work on the hacked coding of The Matrix he has found a way to defeat the sleepwalkers themselves. The Architect activates a system subroutine whereby if all the spotlights are inactive at the same time then a highly advanced tracking program would initiate and a feedback code be sent to each and every sleepwalker in the system. This will either destroy their cranial jacks in the real or, ironically, return them all to bluepill status within the system.
- The final battle commences. The security guards, along with their sleepwalker army, fight back strong but in the end the united Redpills, with renewed vigour, ultimately stand victorious. The spotlights are eventually deactivated and the sleepwalkers instantly destroyed, either killed or reinserted with no knowledge of what happened. As a matter of fact a number of Redpills actually saw the security members alive and wandering the concert sites. The Redpills question them only to learn they are indeed none the wiser to the real world or the madness that had just occurred moments earlier.
- It appears the troubles are not quite over as several of the more powerful sleepwalker bosses seem to have somehow avoided the Architect's feedback loop and are currently in hiding somewhere in the Matrix. Zion, the Machines and the Merovingian each send their operatives on missions to track down these dangerous criminals before they have the chance to cause any more chaos. Following the distinct code signature left from the architects tampering the operative's operators are soon able to pin point their locations. They find substantially weakened sleepwalkers, desperate and still dangerously fanatical. Defending themselves the operatives are able to end the sleepwalker threat once and for all. There is however one uncertainty that still lingers, what of Decius Wadsworth? He has yet to been heard from since...

Chapter 4.3

Cheat Codes

- On a rooftop, the General meets with Niobe and her followers, offering her the key to the cheat codes his commandos have obtained from the Machines. He tells her the cheat codes will give them powers beyond their wildest dreams. But when he tosses the key to Niobe, Anome makes a grab for it, and the key falls to the streets below, landing on a van that speeds it away.
- Anome noted the Van's license plate number before it was out of sight. Anome forms a plan and quickly sends one of his operatives to the Machines' Transportation Department, where bluepill license plate records are stored. Anome figures the Machines won't mind if they "borrow" a little information if it's for a good cause. The owner of the van is traced to the Achan, but the owner reveals that members of the Bells gang broke in to the van and stole the key. The Bells subsequently lost the key, apparently to the Crossbones gang.
- Merovingian operatives are also seeking the key to the cheat codes, but after tracking down the location of the van, arrive too late as the Bells have already taken it. After investigating a complex turn of events, the Exile Silver is found to know the location of the key, claiming that it is tucked away in a construct. Silver wants to broker a deal with the Merovingian: bring him the case with the cheat code vials, and he'll bring the key to the case, and they can split the contents. However, an attempt to retrieve the case from Zion fails, as the case has already been moved.
- The Machines are eager to retrieve the case with the vials, and include Kalt Corporation in the investigation, since they manufactured the case for them. Kalt Corporation provides a code sample to Machine operatives so that the case can be tracked down. Their code scanner leads them to a building, encountering members of the Bell gang who also seek to regain the key. Although the key is not at the current location, the Machine operatives thoroughly scan the location to find a clue as to where the key could be. After further investigation, including meeting with the Oracle, Machine operatives discover that the key is in a construct thanks to Silver. The Machines begin to devise a way to obtain the key...
- Zion operatives storm through several Crossbones cell locations, but subsequently come up empty regarding the key. After following up on some leads, they discover that Silver has the key.
- Zion command believes that the Machines have new data on the key, and order operatives to infiltrate a Cypherite base that is known to have Machine contacts. After attacking the base, the intel they discover there reveals that the key has re-entered the Matrix. The trail leads them to Silver and his bodyguards. After takin9g down the bodyguards, Silver has no choice but to give up the key. It is taken to Zion guards for safekeeping.
- As the Machines prepare to crack the security code to the key's construct, they hear word that the key is back in the Matrix. Machine operatives are able to pin down the location of the key and storm it, only to find the key is in Zion's hands.
- The General meets with Zion operatives, informing them that the Machines have marked the Commandos and himself for extermination for stealing the vials. The Commandos will keep a low-profile and take a lesser part in the crusade against the Merovingian. Zion operatives are called away from the meeting to the location of the team that has the key, who are under attack by Merovingian forces. After defeating them, Zion operatives obtain the key from Anome and transport it to Niobe, who will keep it safe.

Chapter 5.1

Betrayal

- Niobe and her followers gather as she ingests one of the vials. After doing so, she remarks that she does not feel different, when she is suddenly shot. Anome is the one holding the gun, and several of his comrades open fire on the others. After a shootout, Anome and his followers confiscate the vials for themselves, and leave. Upon leaving, and after ingesting a vial, Anome uses his newfound powers to separate the room they are exiting off into a separate construct, trapping the mortally wounded Niobe and cutting her off from contact with the rest of the Matrix.
- Zion operatives rush to find a way to save the critically injured Niobe. An investigation of the building proves pointless, as the elevator won't go to the floor she is on and the stairs simply end before arriving at her floor. Hindering their efforts are attacks by Anome's followers. The situation is desperate enough that Zion contacts Machine Agents in order to find a way to save Niobe.
- Machine operatives are ordered to assist in the effort to retrieve Niobe. Agent Pace reveals that, in a previous version of the Matrix, Agents were given amazing powers to allow them to carry out their jobs. Powers that have never been witnessed within the Matrix, that would astound anyone. It soon became apparent that such powers were counterproductive. Agents of the Machines, using those powers, caused enough problems to warrant the end of the program. Now imagine those same powers in the hands of the unpredictable, willful, humans. The codes for these powers were put into storage, never to be touched again, until the General stole them from storage. The Machine operatives investigate but are unable to locate Anome and his followers, both within the Matrix and the Real. It is as though they have disappeared...
- Merovingian operatives investigate the matter as well, uncovering the information both Zion and Machine operatives have found. The Merovingian decides that Anome's betrayal could be quite useful after all...
- Zion operatives are stumped as to how to access the special construct that Niobe is trapped within, and with no little choice decide to contact the Merovingian Exile, the Effectuator. They meet with Flood, the Merovingian controller, who agrees to help Zion, for a price. The Merovingian has decided to help Zion so that they may be in his debt, and cease hostilities against him. Zion grudgingly agrees and operatives gather data to help the Effectuator find a way to get to Niobe.
- Machine operatives discover that Anome is killing off old acquaintances, and a strange code signature is always detected near or at the scene of the crime. Although they arrive too late, Machine operatives are able to fight off several of Anome's men, who have used the cheat codes and are beginning to show some unusual effects...
- The Effectuator makes an unusual discovery. Due to Anome using one of the cheat codes to trap Niobe in the construct, time is passing more slowly inside the construct than in the rest of the Matrix. Although this is little comfort to Zion operatives, it does offer a glimmer of help in saving Niobe.

Chapter 5.2

Unlimit

- Anome's followers, now calling themselves Unlimit, begin partaking of the cheat codes, gaining incredible powers (such as projecting energy from their eyes) and begin wrecking havoc in the city. Meanwhile, Niobe clings to life in the construct.
- The Effectuator enlists help from Zion operatives. Anome's people are making it difficult for him to pin down Niobe's location, and the Effectuator needs Zion operatives to go to several network locations to stop Anome's men. Zion operatives engage Anome's men, but they are now different. They are stronger than previously, and their eyes constantly drip green Matrix code. Eventually, the Effectuator hits upon a potential solution, requiring Zion operatives to repair several hardline junctions. Zion operatives are able to do so (despite Unlimit's interference), and this proves critical in rescuing Niobe.
- Unlimit's attacks draws the attention of the Machines, who begin to assess Unlimit's threat to the system. Machine operatives investigations reveal that not all of Anome's followers ingested the cheat codes. They also discover that Anome appears to have compiled weaker, diluted versions of the cheat codes and passed them on to other Unlimit. Finally, it appears that the cheat codes have corrupted the user's RSI, so that they are unable to jack out of the Matrix. Later, Machine operatives are tracking an Unlimit within the Matrix while Sentinels in the Real target and destroy their hovercraft. Machine operatives are shocked to find that, thanks to the vials, Unlimits can continue to exist within the Matrix after their bodies have been destroyed.

Chapter 5.3

System Shock

- Zion commits to ridding the Matrix of Unlimit. Curiously, Brenda Utley, of Pendhurst-Amaranth corporation, approaches Zion operatives to assist her with a matter. Figures matching Unlimit descriptions have been lurking around the company's warehouses, and she asks them to investigate. Zion operatives do indeed find Unlimit at Pendhurst-Amaranth warehouses, and defeat them. Further investigation reveals Unlimit has been sabotaging boxes of Tastee Wheat, the cereal the corporation markets. People are dying from the poisoned food, and Zion operatives are quick to intervene and put a stop to Anome's plans to further poison the bluepill population, not only through the Tastee Wheat but also bottled water and the city's water supply. However, after thwarting these activities, Brenda Utley goes missing...
- Machine operatives stop Unlimit's attempts to tamper with the city's aqueduct shunt pumps and power stations. However, the resources used to stop the Unlimits is putting a strain on the system, and the highest priority is placed on finding and terminating Anome.

Chapter 6.1

Investigations

- Zion operatives begin searching for Brenda Utley. It soon becomes apparent that there is corruption within Pendhurst-Amaranth corporation, and this is connected to Ms. Utley's disappearance. It is discovered that Unlimit has infiltrated Penhurst-Amaranth at a high corporate level, and Brenda Utley is subsequently saved. The mole placed on the Board of Directors for Pendhurst-Amaranth is dealt with, and Anome is dealt another setback.
- Machine operatives, in an attempt to locate Anome, decide to follow a lead, namely someone called Caboclo, who was one of Anome's highest ranking officers. Through their investigations, they messages from Caboclo regarding Anome's past. It is revealed that Anome was pod-born, but something was wrong with his mother. She knew that the Matrix was not real, but she mistakenly thought all the people in it were unreal, as well. This included her son, Anome. She'd talk to him sometimes as if he were a spy; inhuman; a device. She'd contrive to hurt him in a deniable way- "accidentally" dropping him, letting him touch the stove burner, or fall off a porch. His screams meant nothing. But then she'd shake it off, love him despite everything. The next day she would tell Anome that he was a machine, a robot. She would slap and pinch and twist his fingers, then tell him he wasn't really feeling pain, just acting like it hurts to control her. "Robots can't hurt," she would tell Anome. Her husband and therapist would threaten to take him, and she would shape up. She was afraid of being institutionalized. But it never lasted. Then one day, when Anome was six, she tried to pull him with her as she jumped off a bridge. "It's not real, sweetie. We're going to a real place," she said. He wrestled free and watched her fall. A Redpill who kept watch for likely recruits- kids who didn't conform to the Matrix- running through the social welfare system approached him, explained in the standard way Zion operatives did to kids, and gave him a red pill. But Anome misunderstood. He thought he was going to see his mother again in the better place. He wanted to, despite all, because he was a six-year-old kid. For a couple of years he thought she would turn up, somewhere in Zion. Slowly he fit in, buried the trauma deep. But the liberating effects of the elixirs have brought his psychoses back up. He is getting back for everything she did to him. Nobody is safe. Finally, Caboclo reveals Anome's hiding place: above the Creston Heights North hardline, on the balcony. With the Anome's location now known, and a killcode specifically designed for him, the Machine begin to make their move...
- Thanks to some exposure to the cheat codes, the Merovingian's men have found a way to detect the code remnants of the Twins (last seen in the movie The Matrix Reloaded, where Morpheus blew up the vehicle they were in). It is discovered that their code fragments have been floating around in the atmosphere, out of reach until now. Merovingian operatives scour the city and are able to piece the Twins back together, and they rejoin the Merovingian ranks.

Chapter 6.2

Uneasy Peace

- Agents arrive at the Creston Heights location where Anome is hiding. One of the Agents uses a disguise and takes on the appearance of Anome's mother. They exit onto the balcony area, and Anome is shocked to see his mother. A fellow Unlimit is holding the case with the cheat codes and, seeing the Agents, takes off into the air to escape. However, she is too late, as Agents gun her down and the case falls to the floor. Anome is unable to move from the shock, not believing his eyes, and the Agent disguised as his mother turns slightly, revealing the gun behind its back with Anome's killcode inside. The Agent shoots Anome, who falls off the roof to his death. The Agents retrieve the cheat codes, finding only 65% are still in the case. They then enigmatically proclaim that they can now proceed to "Phase 2."
- Without access to the cheat codes, the remaining Unlimit begin to grow weak, and will eventually die due to the corruption in their RSIs. They begin one last rampage across the city, but are subdued by Machine operatives. Unlimit's threat is ended.
- The Machines call a conference with Zion representatives. Due to recent threats to the Matrix such as Anome/Unlimit and E Pluribus Neo (who all came from Zion's camp), the Machine feel it would be able to detect and stop threats faster and more efficiently if granted access to Zion's mainframe. Zion subsequently counter-demands with greater access to the Machine's databases and systems within the Matrix. Both sides come an impasse.
- E Pluribus Neo contacts Zion operatives, offering information from the Machines that they have accessed in return for safe passage through Zion's tunnelspace for their hovercraft. Shimada, EPN's controller, gives Zion operatives the access codes to a Machine system as proof of their goodwill and the veracity of their claims. Zion operatives sneak in to a Machine facility and use the access code, gathering information from the computer. What they find is surprising: the Machines have a strike force standing by of over 524,000 Sentinels, aimed at Zion in case the Truce fails. This sobering information does prove that EPN is able to gain access to critical Machine information, but casts a pall over Zion operatives.
- Cypherites contact the Machines, and operatives are sent to meet with them. The Cypherites claim to have access to Zionist information, and these claims are proven true when Machine operatives are shown simulacrum of Morpheus and Niobe from the Zion mainframe. E Pluribus Neo crusaders attack the meeting but are subdued. Although cautious of the Cypherites, the Machine decided to further pursue information brokering with the Cypherites. The Machines are further impressed when the Cypherites confiscate a code pulse device used by EPN operatives, which sends out a pulse of customized code that permeates to certain receivers and captures specific data out of the simulation. The Machines decided to make more effective use of the Cypherites...
- Merovingian operatives are sent to the Slums discover why revenue is falling for their master. They discover it has to do with the Exiles known as the Elements. Fingers are pointed between each other, as Silver admits to holding back some earnings but immediately dimes out Mercury. The trail leads from Mercury to Thallia, to Raini, to the Blackwoods gang.

Chapter 6.3

Kidnapping

Subchapter 6.3 of The Matrix Online story began with the abduction of the Oracle's young ward, Sati, by the General, an old military program exiled from the Machine mainframes. The General's commando programs deployed across the city, and may have killed Seraph, who was last seen plunging into the river after falling from a commando helicopter as he tried to rescue Sati from their clutches.

(As seen in the Subchapter 6.3 Cinematic)

After several weeks, it became clear that the General had a new type of commando program at his disposal: elite troops equipped with synthetic black bodysuits allowing them to escape detection by standard code scans.

Sati's absence soon began to cause problems with weather patterns in the Matrix. Some fear that unless she is returned soon, the simulation's weather will spiral out of control.

Cypherites

The Cypherites, whose goal is to achieve peace for humanity by returning everyone to sleep within the simulation, helped search for Sati across the Matrix archive constructs. They continued working to attempt to get to the bottom of mysterious movements of material out of the caves of Zion, going so far as to hijack a Zion hovercraft. When its captain refused to cooperate, their ruthless control officer, Veil, sent the hovercraft on a collision course for the Zion dock.

The Cypherite leader, Cryptos, seeking guidance from the Oracle in this time of uncertainty, received from her a prophecy of widespread death and destruction, to be triggered by a choice the Cypherites had already made. She reminded Cryptos of the placard over her kitchen door: "Temet Nosce": "Know Thyself."

E Pluribus Neo

The radical Zion offshoot led by Neo's fervent believer, the Kid, worked hard to find and eliminate Cypherite spies within its ranks. These spies were already responsible for the deaths of several EPN hovercraft crews. One spy, at least, was finally unearthed.

EPN also sought to assist in Sati's rescue, deploying their data-mining Code Pulse Devices both to slow down the General's progress, and to learn the location of his base on the Earth's surface. The Machines, who regard EPN as a dangerous terrorist organization, responded to the deployment of the devices with deadly force, culminating in the termination of a high-ranking EPN officer, Keterina, by means of a kill code.

The Machines

The Machines worked methodically to locate and disable the network access points used by the General to bring his troops into the Matrix. After the elimination of many commando programs, and after hacking through several layers of the General's network, the Machines succeeded in manufacturing a program that could override the General's systems. They used this virus to locate the General's base on the surface of the Earth, code-named "Stalingrad." The Machines swiftly dispatched a portion of the Sentinel fleet monitoring Zion to eradicate the General's stronghold.

The Merovingian

The Merovingian took advantage of Seraph's disappearance to make his way to the Oracle, where he reiterated an old demand. At her refusal he swore revenge, and began searching for a termination code capable of wiping out the fortune-teller. After exhausting his usual contacts within the Matrix, he turned to the General. The stubborn warrior rebuffed his initial overtures, but eventually agreed to a cease-fire while considering the Frenchman's proposal.

Zion

With the Oracle's powerful guardian, Seraph, out of the picture, Zion scrambled to her defense, fighting off assaults by the General and the Merovingian. In response to determined pursuit by the Zionites, the General tauntingly revealed that he was the Sentinel program who led the deadly Machine assault on the Zion dock at the end of the war.

Chapter 7.1

The Search

The weather in the simulation took on a distinctly off-color orange hue, as weather patterns suffer to the continued absence of the Oracle's ward, Sati, kidnapped by the ex-Sentinel leader known as "The General." The General struck an alliance with the leader of the Matrix underworld, the Merovingian, bringing the Frenchman into direct conflict with the Machines, who are working to eradicate the General's commando forces.

Zion pursued the Oracle's guardian, Seraph, dramatically returned (as seen in the chapter 7.1 cinematic) after his disappearance while pursuing Sati's kidnappers, and found that he'd been deleting Machine programs from the minds of humans in the Matrix, including the Cypherite leader, Cryptos, who had secretly been under Machine control.

E Pluribus Neo continued their dogged hunt after signals apparently sent by the ex-Zion captain, Morpheus, and finally came across a clear message from the former leader.

As if this, and a certain sanity-shattering party crashed by a notorious Merovingian weren't enough, an outbreak of the Smith Virus threatened to take over the city. Resistance, organized by the Oracle, eventually managed to defeat powerful manifestations of the virus, but as it faded away, it left a message claiming to have taken on a much more insidious, unkillable form.

Cypherites

The Cypherites attempted to understand Seraph's apparent rampage across the city, and to do what they could for his "bluepill" civilian victims. This quest came to an abrupt end when Seraph ambushed the Cypherite leader, Cryptos, performing a strange "exorcism" that left Cryptos extremely disoriented. As his concerned operatives attempted to aid him, Cryptos began uttering strange sounds, which, as his articulation increased, were clearly identified as Machine error codes.

Concluding that Cryptos had been operating under Machine overwriting, removed by Seraph's attack, the Cypherite controller, Veil, ordered Cryptos returned to his ship and put under intensive care, while she assumed interim leadership of the organization.

The Machines were quick to acknowledge that Cryptos had been operating under their guidance, forming the Cypherites as a means of preventing Zion from awakening more than their Truce-allotted 1% of the Matrix' population to the true nature of the simulation. The Machines attempted to renew the terms of their agreement with Veil, but she thus far has put off accepting an accord with the Machines, and relations between the two groups remain uncertain.

E Pluribus Neo

EPN put great effort into pinpointing the mysterious signals seen intermittently around the city of late, in which a man resembling the famous Zion war leader, Morpheus, appeared to isolated operatives, delivering messages appearing to allude to the One, Neo, being alive, but held captive by the Machines.

After a difficult process of mining for data concerning a newly detected broadcast of the signal, EPN tracked the signal to the Hypercube monument in Mara, where they were confronted by a clear message from this apparent Morpheus, saying that the Machines had failed, and that Neo was alive, held captive by the Machines, and in need of rescue.

The Machines

The Machines hacked the General's network in the Matrix, gaining the capability of scanning the exiled program's plans and data. Led by Agent Gray, they captured one of the General's Elite Commandos, gaining enough data on the soldier's stealth routines to enable them to engineer a sensor scan capable of detecting hidden commandos.

Machine pursuit of the General's forces brought them into conflict with the Merovingian, who recently agreed to an alliance with the harassed General. After some frustrating initial engagements, the Machines realized that the Merovingian's opposition may slow down their timetable in eliminating the General.

Meanwhile, the Machines also had to deal with the exposure of their secret control over the Cypherite organization when Seraph found and removed the Machine program that had overwritten Cryptos' mind. Because Seraph's "exorcism" left the Cypherite leader damaged and confused, the Machines attempted to regain control of the Cypherites by striking a deal with Cryptos' second-in-command, Veil, but she remained aloof, showing anger at the long-standing Machine deception.

The Merovingian

The Merovingian came to an agreement with the General under which the Merovingian would provide transportation in and out of the Matrix for the General's forces, while the General would help the Merovingian hunt down ingredients necessary for a kill-code capable of terminating the woman who has frustrated so many of his schemes: the Oracle.

The General's commando programs and the Merovingian's operatives worked together to secure a vital ingredient, the last remaining Machine cheat code, held by an unwitting civilian. The General revealed, however, that they would need a special program to put the kill-code together: The Apothecary. Following the General's directions, they tracked down an old code trace of the Apothecary and, from the mouth of an ancient program, learned that the Apothecary was held by the Machines in their mainframes, and could only be retrieved by an old Merovingian employee: the Trainman.

Under growing pressure by the Machines, the Merovingian's operatives located the portal to the Trainman's private construct, hidden in the Abandoned Subway. Leaving an encrypted "note on his doorstep," they eventually coaxed the paranoid Exile out of hiding, and brought him once more into the Merovingian's service.

Zion

Zion pursued Seraph, apparently deranged after his plunge from a helicopter into the highly polluted Aqueduct while fighting the commandos who had abducted Sati. They found that although Seraph's attacks on operatives and civilians alike appeared indiscriminate, the victims all shared memory loss after an episode of suspicious personality change in their past.

Zion was eventually able to make contact with Seraph, who revealed that he was nearly done with his work, and that the operatives should be careful to guard their minds. Seraph's removal of the Machine program overwriting the mind of the Cypherite leader, Cryptos, finally made it clear that the Oracle's guardian was, thanks to his exposure to the remains of Machine cheat codes in the Aqueduct, able to detect and remove such programs from the minds of humans.

With Zion's assistance, Seraph completed the eradicating of Machine overwriting around the city, and returned to the Oracle's side. The Oracle, however, directed him to rescue Sati from the General, a task that Seraph quickly began, again aided by operatives from Zion.

Chapter 7.2

Desperation

With the climate-controlling Sati still in the hands of the General, the weather within the Matrix took a dramatic turn for the worse, signified by a vivid red hue that caused concern even for the normally aloof Architect. While his Sentinel fleet assaulted the General's base code-named Stalingrad on the Earth's surface (as seen in the chapter 7.2 cinematic), within the Matrix, Machine forces steadily overthrew the General's systems, even as Zion, with the aid of Seraph, searched for Sati, eventually rescuing the girl from the General's control.

The harried General came to rely more and more on the support of his new ally, the Merovingian. The Merovingian, however, showed a marked disregard for the preservation of the General's commando programs, going so far as to use them as cannon fodder for his own aims, and even secreting some of them within his own hidden constructs, unknown to the General.

Meanwhile, the Merovingian continued his project of eliminating that frequent foil of his plans, the Oracle. He brought a deadly program known as the Apothecary into the Matrix, putting her to work on a code powerful enough to kill the fortune-teller, who managed to complete the kill-code despite much interference by the Machines. As a reward for the Apothecary's hard work, the Merovingian, at the instigation of his wife, Persephone, betrayed the Apothecary to the Machines, and she was deleted by a group of hostile operatives.

In the midst of these warring forces, the signal of Morpheus continued to appear to followers of Zion and E Pluribus Neo, declaring that Neo lived, a prisoner of the Machines, and calling on the assembled operatives to fight the Machines in order to rescue the One. Certain inconsistencies and glitches in these signal broadcasts began to raise doubts, however, particularly after E Pluribus Neo found that the signal, made to look like an emergency hovercraft beacon, was in fact originating within the Matrix itself.

Cypherites

The recuperating Cypherite leader, Cryptos, whose Machine overwriting had just been violently purged by Seraph, finally appeared and spoke to some of his operatives, who to their dismay found his mind clouded, and prone to wandering. Evidently, the Machine program that had been controlling him, though overthrown, was now partially merged with his previous, violently anti-Machine psyche.

The Cypherite controller, Veil, viewing her crippled leader with disdain, took command of the organization, leading them in attacks against the Apothecary, and against their mortal foes, E Pluribus Neo. The Cypherites succeeded in capturing an EPN crew, and defended themselves, with help from the Machines, against a counter-attack led by the EPN controller, Shimada. Veil also came to an agreement with the Machines' Agent Pace to resume spying operations in Zion, with the aim of discovering the destination and purpose of large amounts of material and personnel apparently leaving the caves of Zion.

Eventually Cryptos, sufficiently recovered, met with the Machines' Agent Gray, complaining of the pain of his current existence, and asking to be reinserted into the Matrix, as Cypher himself had asked of Agent Smith. Much to the Cypherite's surprise, Agent Gray told him that there was no such procedure.

E Pluribus Neo

E Pluribus Neo strove to make further contact with the mysterious Morpheus signals, receiving aid from the Oracle in locating them. The authenticity of the signals came more and more into question as they continued to preach the same message of war against the Machines.

To put these questions to rest, EPN sought to trace the signal to its origin, even in the face of Machine attacks. They succeeded in this endeavor, finding, to the dismay of many, that the signals, encoded in the form of emergency broadcasts from Morpheus' hovercraft, the Nabonidus, were in fact coming from a source within the simulation itself.

EPN also found themselves under increased pressure from the Cypherites, led by the aggressive Veil. They attempted to rescue an EPN crew member captured by the Cypherites, but were unable to reach the operatives, who were guarded by massed forces of Cypherites, Machines, and even some Merovingian operatives.

The Machines

As the battle for Stalingrad raged in the Real, the Machines began a concerted takeover of the General's systems inside the Matrix, commandeering his helicopter fleet, his communication channels, and even his holographic broadcast.

They closely pursued the Apothecary, taken from their servers and brought into the Matrix by the Merovingian without their consent. The Frenchman meanwhile struck down Agent Pace with a preliminary version of the Apothecary's kill-code destined for the Oracle. The Agent recovered quickly, but seemed altered, adopting a colder, more businesslike demeanor, and demonstrating a heightened enthusiasm for the violent suppression of System enemies.

Following the successful termination of the Apothecary, the Machines located, assaulted, and disabled the General's primary base in the Matrix, found in the complex inhabited by Project Nine soldiers beneath the Abandoned Subway. They then shut down the General's network within the Matrix entirely, and prepared to continue with further operations against the Merovingian, who gave the harried General asylum.

The Merovingian

The Merovingian, wanting to kill the Oracle, had the Trainman bring the program known as the Apothecary into the Matrix, and put her to work on a kill-code powerful enough to eliminate the fortune-teller. Blood samples from Sati and from the irradiated ex-Unlimit commander, Beirn, were obtained to increase the code's potency.

The Merovingian wished to test a preliminary version of the code, and the General suggested the Machines' Agent Pace as a test subject. Persephone lured the Agent to a rendezvous where a Merovingian hit squad, armed with kill-code samples, struck down the Agent, much to the Merovingian's delight. Spy reports confirmed that the code had made a lasting impact on the Agent.

The Apothecary eventually completed work on the code, despite continued interference from Machine attacks. Frustrated by the constant threats to her safety, she demanded transport out of the Matrix, which the Merovingian promised to grant her. However, partly at the instigation of Persephone, who had a longstanding feud with the Apothecary, he instead tipped off the Machines as to her location, and the kill-code manufacturer was deleted in an attack by hostile operatives.

Under increasing pressure himself from the Machines for sheltering the General, the Merovingian, unknown to his would-be ally, began smuggling the General's commando programs into hidden constructs under his own control.

Zion

Zion worked with Seraph to track down Sati, held prisoner by the General. After fighting through many platoons of the General's commandos, and solving a perplexing assault by Sati doppelgangers created by the General, Sati's program was retrieved and restored to the Oracle, who declared that the girl would soon be well, and able to restore the weather to its normal condition.

Although they succeeded in guarding the Oracle against attacks by the General, Zion decided that her usual home in Mara had become too easy a target for the General and the Merovingian. With Seraph's support, they finally managed to persuade her to leave the neighborhood, and began moving her under guard between secret safehouses across the city.

Zion also tracked the Morpheus signal, eventually finding it and catching it as a strange glitch occurred, causing it to repeat the same line four times. This raised further suspicions about the signal's true origins. Tracking was complicated by the appearance of die-hard Morpheus supporters, wishing to emulate and further his old agenda.

Chapter 7.3

Fall of the General

The Machines destroyed the General's base on the Earth's surface (as seen in the chapter 7.3 cinematic), driving him into hiding in the Matrix. With Sati rescued from the General's grasp, the weather in the simulation returned to its standard green-tinged overcast skies.

Zion and E Pluribus Neo pursued the simulacrum who had been appearing recently in the city, impersonating Morpheus. They found data appearing to suggest a link between the simulacrum and the General. The Machines, concerned that the simulacrum might try to threaten the System's stability as Morpheus himself did, questioned it, but decided that it was confused and non-violent, and only bore further monitoring.

Meanwhile, the Merovingian had begun using the Trainman to shuttle the General's commandos out of the Matrix, and back into the real world. The General himself delayed, leaving the train platform to confront his Morpheus simulacrum. He ordered the simulacrum to deactivate itself, but it refused, and successfully defended itself against the General, who was forced to leave. Returning late to the Trainman's station, the General was confronted there by Machine forces. The Trainman managed to shove the General onto the departing train, but suffered severe injury at the hands of the Machines.

Undeterred, the Merovingian put his plan to kill the Oracle into full execution, attempting to get his kill-code into the hands of an assassin planted in Zion's security teams. Zion found the assassin in time, forcing the Merovingian to resort to a new plan, using a stealth commando and a very special key to attempt to surprise the Oracle. She, however, was saved at the last moment by the Kid and E Pluribus Neo. The frustrated Frenchman consoled himself by activating an override code on the General and his Sentinels.

The Cypherites continued searching for information on the mysterious exodus of men and material from Zion. Cryptos, gradually recovered from Seraph's attack, took command of the organization back from the stubborn Veil, to the relief of Agent Gray and the Machines. Veil, however, continued her ruthless quest for information, executing the crew of the Zionite hovercraft Pelageus when they refused to cooperate. In response, the Oracle could offer only dire-sounding predictions, saying that you can't save someone who doesn't want to be saved.

Cypherites

Cryptos wandered for some time in the Matrix, asking those he met about purpose, right, and wrong. He appeared to settle some question in his mind, however, and reasserted his control over the Cypherite organization during an operation in which he led Cypherites to capture a redpill whose attempts to awaken Bluepills freed by Seraph from Machine overwriting, like Cryptos, had led to the deaths of some of those civilians. The vindictive Cypherite controller, Veil, grudgingly agreed to recognize Cryptos as leader.

Veil continued leading operations designed to discover the mystery behind unregistered workers and machinery slipping out of Zion, a topic of particular interest to the Machines. She staged an attack on a E Pluribus Neo base as a distraction, while other Cypherite operatives successfully infiltrated a Zionite computer system, recovering data.

Her zealous pursuit of her task led her to hijack, and eventually execute, the crew of a Zionite hovercraft, the Pelageus. Agent Gray, who had supported Cryptos over the Veil's volatile leadership, questioned her methods, but Veil refused to curb her activities, responding derisively when told that her actions threatened the truce between the Machines and Zion.

E Pluribus Neo

E Pluribus Neo, searching for information on the Morpheus simulacrum, discovered a hidden network of old followers of Morpheus, still carrying on the rebel activities that led to Morpheus' death, including the distribution of seditious posters. One of these individuals, Joshua Maston, told the EPN members who found him that they had been distracted by Cypherites and super-villains from what was truly important, and that he fully expected to be killed by the Machines for his activities, but carried on because he believed that what he was doing was right. The Kid said that belief is important, but so is hope.

Recognizing the kill-code threat to the Oracle posed by the Merovingian, EPN asked Zion for permission to assist in guarding her; when the Oracle herself insisted, Zion agreed to share guard duties.

When the Frenchman finally launched his Elite Commando assassin at the Oracle, the Kid, on guard duty at the time, responded to her cry of alarm in time to intercept the fatal bullet with his body. Nearby EPN operatives pursued and eliminated the commando, while the Oracle watched over the stunned Kid. She said he would be all right, but would need rest. Once he reluctantly jacked out to his ship, the Oracle went outside to enjoy the fresh air for the first time in weeks, and moved back to her old home in Mara.

The Machines

The Machines tracked the fleeing General through the Matrix, rooting him out of the temporary safety of the Merovingian's chateau with the assistance of the Cypherites, and then from the Trainman's tunnel system. They caught up to the General at the train station as he was about to exit the simulation, but the Trainman sacrificed his own chance to escape in order to make sure that his appointed passenger made it aboard the departing train.

With the General out of the Matrix, the Machines switched targets within the simulation, now locating and questioning the Morpheus simulacrum, which showed some indication that it might take up Morpheus' old terrorist tendencies. They found that it had the capability of simulating redpill jack-out and reconstruction. The simulacrum, however, appeared to be non-violent, and the Machines determined that careful monitoring of its activities was a sufficient precaution.

Agent Pace ran an operation in which a special party was staged as a trap for the Merovingian, with the intent of punishing the Frenchman for his role in the General's escape. The Merovingian, however, sent his wife in his stead, and she escaped when loyal operatives pounced on the Agent sent to infiltrate the club. A massive Machinist onslaught cleared the club, however, and Agent Pace decided that this demonstration had served its purpose.

Ever-increasing concerns about the purpose behind materials and manpower sneaking out of Zion led the Machines to attempt gathering information through their own contacts, but this proved less efficient than employing the Cypherites, although Cypherite production, from the Machine point of view, continued to suffer under Veil's stubborn leadership. Cryptos' re-assumption of Cypherite command came as a relief to the Machines, but tensions with Zion caused by their activities remained high, particularly after Veil's hijacking and execution of the crew of the Zionite hovercraft Pelageus.

The Merovingian

The Merovingian forced the harried General to give him control over the program used by the commandos to move between the Matrix and the real world. With this in his possession, the Frenchman employed the Trainman to transfer the General's commandos out of the simulation, saving them for the time being from extermination at the hands of the Machines, but losing the Trainman to the Machines in the process. The Trainman managed to limp away from a Machine attack into his own private construct, but it was unclear if the paranoid Exile would survive his injuries.

The Merovingian attempted to send the kill-code made to terminate the Oracle to a spy placed on the Oracle's security detail, but Zion detected the intrusion, and forced the Frenchman to extricate the kill-code from their systems.

In need of an alternate means of getting the deadly code near the Oracle, the Merovingian seized upon a key dug up by the Landlord at the Mahath Tower construction site, formerly occupied by the government building used by Neo to reach the Architect; when this building self-destructed with the body of the Keymaker inside, the key he had been making in the Merovingian's dungeon was buried in the rubble. The Frenchman had originally planned to use this key, capable of transporting the user to a portal near a specific target, to kill the Oracle's previous shell.

After several false starts, the Effectuator managed to transport a borrowed Elite Commando squad back into the city. Seraph detected and hunted the commandos, but Merovingian operatives managed to save most of them, and finally one of them, equipped with the key and the kill-code, attempted to assassinate the Oracle, but the Kid blocked the shot at the last moment.

Frustrated with this failure, which he blamed on the General's soldier, the Merovingian executed a hidden override program the Trainman had inserted into the General and his men when they were transferred out of the Matrix; the program compels the General and his Sentinels to obey the Merovingian's commands in the real world.

Zion

Zion tracked down the Morpheus simulacrum, finding evidence of some sort of connection between the unpredictable simulacrum and the General; this connection was confirmed in dramatic fashion when the General himself confronted the simulacrum, berating it for failing in its designated task of re-igniting conflict between the Machines and Zion. Cheered on by surrounding operatives, the simulacrum refused to obey the General's command to deactivate itself, and successfully defended itself when the incensed Sentinel leader attacked.

Meanwhile, Zion found indications that the Merovingian had transferred his Oracle kill-code into their own network. They managed to find the Frenchman's undercover team of operatives, and his spy within Zion, forcing the Merovingian to abort his plan, and extricate the kill-code from Zion's systems.

Although Zion's agreement to allow E Pluribus Neo to help guard the Oracle, at her own insistence, paid off when the Kid saved her from the kill-code-laced bullet fired by an Elite Commando, Zion subsequently suffered the loss of the crew of their hovercraft Pelageus at the hands of EPN's sworn enemies, the Cypherites. The Oracle tried to console Zion over the loss, but could not keep a sense of foreboding out of her message.

Chapter 8.1

War

Cypherite spies discover that Zion has built a new, strongly defended city. The Machines declare that Zion has broken the Truce. Open hostilities between Zion and the Machines begin. The Merovingian, skeptical about the Morpheus simulacrum's story of humans used as batteries, sends his commando Sentinels to scout the Machine "fields" and pods.

- Cypherite spies discovered that Zion has been constructing a new city, situated in a vast complex of natural and artificial caverns far beneath the Earth's surface, protected by a combination of heavy sediment layers, EMP devices embedded in the rock, and live EMP fields powered by geothermal energy. The Machines declared this base, popularly termed "New Zion," to be a violation of the truce, and revoked Zion's privilege of recruiting humans who reject the Matrix simulation.
- Machine forces moved swiftly to neutralize Zion's systems within the Matrix, achieving rapid early success. Zion operatives found themselves under attack by Agents anywhere outside of the Richland slums.
- E Pluribus Neo began examining possible ways in which they could strike back at the Machines, possible outside of the simulation itself. Concerned lest Zion fall to the Machines, the Kid offered to assist Zion hovercraft, under fire from hostile Sentinel patrols.
- The Merovingian threw a party, gloating over the possibilities for profit opened up by the return of the war between Zion and the Machines.
- Zion attempted to put an emergency firewall system in place to protect their network interfaces from the Machines, but the Machines quickly bypassed the new System, and inserted viral routines into the Zion network, impairing their communication system.
- As a fall-back plan, Zion established a temporary network uplink, that they could use to get data directly out of the simulation.
- The Machines began attacking Zionite extraction points, seeking to prevent Zion from "unplugging" more humans from the pods.
- The Merovingian stole tunnel mapping data from Zion, and used this information to keep the General's Sentinels from being found by Machine patrols in the Real. The Merovingian informed the General that he must stay within certain designated areas, or be shut down by an override command.
- In the Matrix, the Merovingian verified the allegiance of other powerful Exiles, including Yttri, Amber, Cerulean, Madame T, and the Auditor. The Exile named Synn insisted on more protection from Agent intrusion.
- Cypherites continued stealing information from Zionite data clusters, despite increased resistance from Zion.

- Zion managed to get sensitive broadcast control data out of the simulation thanks to intervention by the Merovingian, who sent Beirn to stop the Machine Agent threatening Zion's uplink portal. With the preserved data, Zion was able to keep their broadcast control system essentially intact, although because it is now shared from ship to ship, their hovercraft must rise closer to the surface to send signals into the Matrix.
- Zion finally tracked down Daelyn, a Cypherite spy who'd been smuggling information to Veil. The Cypherites, however, obtained the address of a Zionite recruiting official from a potential Zion recruit, killed in a crossfire with Zion defenders. The Machines captured the official, and then the high-level recruiting data to which he had access.
- Meanwhile, a flight of Sentinels dispatched to probe New Zion's defenses were deactivated by hidden EMP charges. The Kid, pointing out the danger to even Zion's new city, urged Niobe to consider opening a direct offensive against the Machines in the Real, but Niobe did not seem inclined to consider such a gamble.
- The Merovingian, besides taking a little time to discipline the unruly Murasaki Exile, Synn, became increasingly curious to probe Machine capabilities. An attack by the Twins and operatives at a leading Downtown company, Metacortex, provoked only a relatively meager Machine response. Deigning to question the Oracle, the Frenchman was told that "power isn't everything," and was prompted to look around for himself.
- Questioning the Morpheus simulacrum, who reiterated the widespread story of a Machine civilization powered by humans trapped in pods, combined with a form of fusion, the Merovingian was struck by the lack of key factual data to support the story.
- Armed with lists of potential awakening subjects captured from Zion, the Machines aggressively pursued Zion extraction and recruiting operations. One bluepill in particular, Navin Manohar, was arrested, terminated, and replaced with a specially prepared bluepill, one partially overwritten by a Machine program. After being reconfigured by operatives to resemble the original Mr. Manohar, the overwritten bluepill was sent back to Manohar's residence.
- E Pluribus Neo, attempting to save as many compromised potentials from the Machines as possible, confronted and eventually extracted Rachel Dunkirk, friend of a woman named Sarah Edmontons, who had disappeared from a hospital several years earlier, apparently walking out under her own power despite having been on life support machines for over a month with almost zero brainwave activity.
- Zion strove to save their compromised recruiting teams and potential awakening subjects from the Machines, with some success. The Machines, however, gained information on the location and configuration of the Zion mainframe when they tricked Zion into attempting to extract a subject who had secretly been overwritten with a Machine program designed to exploit a security hole in the red pill trace program.
- The Merovingian had Raini and Silver questioned about fusion and biological power generation; the questions stemmed from Morpheus' account of humans in the pods and the Machine energy source. Information gathered made the Merovingian question the efficiency of the supposed Machine system of a form of fusion combined with humans as energy-generating devices, and he determined to learn the truth for himself by sending the General's Sentinels to scout the fields and pods.

- Ghost had a run-in with Pace while on a recruiting mission; Pace hinted that "your program is compromised," and that she was visiting other Zion potentials.
- The Cypherite controller, Veil, and Cypherite operatives strove to counter Zion's recruiting efforts with Bluepills, and succeeded in putting a number of potentials "back to sleep" with the pills, although one had to be fed the pill by force.
- Malphas and several operatives won back a feather from Seraph, stolen by Seraphim. Malphas explained that Seraph's feathers were stripped from him as punishment for his betrayal of the Merovingian, in the days when he served the Merovingian as an enforcer.
- Niobe came close to losing data she was attempting to rescue from Machine capture, but E Pluribus Neo operatives saved her from Machine forces in the nick of time.
- The Merovingian held a "peace party" for all operatives in Tabor Park, but turned it into a bloodbath after tempting Redpills from all organizations into close proximity with cake, dancing, and Ookami.
- The Exile leader Dame White was involved in some wheeling and dealing, first getting a new Exile program that controlled animal emotions stolen from her by Persephone, the Effectuator, and Merovingian operatives, and then tipping off E Pluribus Neo that the Merovingian might have access to detailed information on Machine power lines in the Real, in exchange for information they gave her, obtained from Cypherites, about a mysterious "Mr. G."
- As it turned out, "Mr. G." was Itarrot, a long-missing Cypherite officer. Having serious RSI trouble due to fried systems on his hijacked hovercraft, Itarrot was found and rescued by Cypherite operatives, and restored to his old position on Cryptos' hovercraft, "The Blue Dreamer."
- The Cypherites also rescued the crew of the Solstice, held by Zion since trying to defect to the Cypherite cause. Cypherite operatives staged a party in Club Sphinx, handing out blue pills as a distraction, while a team of high level Cypherite operatives broke into the Zion outpost where the crew was held, and liberated them.
- Zion and the Machines clashed in the Zero One construct, as Zion conducted a desperate search for a Machine hacker who was threatening a vital Zion system. Despite efforts by Machine operatives and Agent Pace, Zionite operatives managed to locate the hacker and disrupt his efforts. After this success, the assembled Zionites attacked Agent Pace en masse, temporarily damaging her RSI and forcing her to retreat from the construct. Ghost warned, however, that Zion's systems were still under heavy Machine attack on multiple fronts, and that it would be vital to get all of these systems transferred to the safety of Zion's new city.

Chapter 8.2

Hostilities

Zion turns to ex-Zionite specialist Danielle Wright when the Machines compromise their red pill program. Wright develops a new, secure pill for Zion, but is killed by the Machines, who use her hidden, direct access to Zion to insert a virus into Zion's mainframe, while a Cypherite spy destroys Zion's command center with a bomb. The Merovingian finds that the Machines do rely on humans for power, with regular pod centers across the otherwise barren surface of the planet, and have barely enough energy to run the Matrix and their own city.

- Zion turned to Danielle Wright, the ex-Zionite and mastermind behind the elite "Wright Research" technology company, for aid in coding a new red pill program that would not be vulnerable to the exploit the Machines used to gather data on the Zion mainframe.
- With their recruiting program in great danger due to Machine data captures, Zion continued their attempts to save compromised potentials from the Machines, staging a large distraction near the government building in Tabor West while a small team rescued two potentials held under System guard.
- The Machines, having received indications that the General's Sentinels, directed by the Merovingian, were approaching the Fields and pods near the Machine city, began operations against the Merovingian with the aim of forcing him to recall the General. The Auditor was ordered to cease auditing Merovingian code, and the information-gatherer Hypatia, who has given the Merovingian useful information in the past, was arrested. The Machines met with less success when they tried shutting down the relay the Merovingian uses to communicate with the General, however, as they found that the Merovingian already had at least one backup system in place.
- Machine operatives, finding that Zionite hovercraft had destroyed a scanning beacon used to return data on the Earth's depths, found an old human probe that could serve as a temporary replacement, and then located an exiled program capable of communicating with the probe. Agent Gray permitted the program to return to service in order to direct the probe. Gray also consented to the establishment of a ranking scheme in order to organize and motivate Machinist hovercraft operations.
- The Merovingian received scouting reports from the General's Sentinels with estimates of the human population held by the Fields and pods near the Machine city. Together with data gathered within the simulation on birth and death rates, the Merovingian achieved a rough estimate of a possible total Matrix human population, but suspected that the figures were too low, not to mention incongruous, and said that they would have to continue their investigation until the numbers added up.
- Finding the General hunted by Machine Sentinels on the Earth's surface, the Merovingian sent operatives to draw the attention of the Machines in the simulation by attacking important facilities across the city. Meanwhile, Merovingian hovercraft helped draw off Sentinels, and the General managed to escape detection.

- E Pluribus Neo, considering a strike on the power lines leading from the pods to the Machine city, stole mapping data on the area from the Merovingian.
- The Cypherites, feeling that the Merovingian was accessing information on the simulation that could be dangerous to the humans sleeping in the pods, investigated one of his information sources, the Coroner, who led them to data held by his nemesis, Hypatia. The data pointed the Cypherites to a hidden construct housing some of the General's Elite Commando programs, which the Cypherites defeated after a fierce battle.
- Danielle Wright succeeded in creating a new red pill program for Zion, after some preliminary less-than-successful test runs. Forced to move her activities underground when the Machines discovered her work, Wright, finding Cypherites attempting to decode her encrypted jack-in signal, decided to leave the simulation for good, telling Zion operatives that there was work she had to do, but she could no longer do it in the city. She also rejected invitations from operatives and even Commander Lock to seek refuge in Zion's new city, saying that her goals differed from theirs.
- The Merovingian launched a small urban terror campaign designed to dissuade the Machines from attempting to hamper his various information-gathering activities. Even so, Sentinel patrols around the pods and Fields on the Earth's surface forced the General to pull his forces back.
- Meanwhile, the Merovingian discovered E Pluribus Neo's theft of the General's maps of the area around the Fields. Piqued, the Merovingian looked into the matter, and, finding that EPN intended to use the maps to conduct a raid on the power lines leading from the pods into the Machine city, concocted an elaborate plan designed to pinpoint the position of the EPN strike force, and send this data to the Machines. This plot succeeded, and despite detonating strategic code pulse devices across the city to disrupt Machine communication, the EPN attack ran into an overwhelming Sentinel presence waiting for them at the power lines, and was forced to retreat without having reached their intended target.
- Having resolved that matter to his satisfaction, the Merovingian turned his attention back to exploring the Machine power base, and used a modified red pill program to trace a bluepill's body to a previously unknown set of pods farther away from the Machine city.
- Zion began distributing the new red pill programs to their recruiting teams, and to their allies in E Pluribus Neo, but this distribution met with opposition from Cypherites, and the Machines.
- Investigating reports of Sentinels hovering suspiciously around the city of Zion, E Pluribus Neo, thanks to a bargain struck with Pepper, was able to capture Machine data showing that the Sentinels formed a thin cocoon around Zion--a nearly perfect spherical distribution. These Sentinels, however, would evade Zion or EPN ships, rather than attempting to engage them in combat, and the Kid expressed concern over what might lie behind this unexpected behavior

- The Machines investigated Wright's business, Wright Research, and found that they had worked closely with a small company, Argent Biometrics, specializing in encryption across biological interfaces similar to that used by Wright on her own jack-in signal. Discovering that Argent Biometrics was a cover company set up by the Exile, Silver, the Machines tracked, pursued, and confronted Silver, demanding the key to Wright's signal encryption, and threatening to delete all of Silver's research if he did not cooperate. Silver grudgingly handed over the required information.
- When the Merovingian learned of Silver's deal with the Machines, he sent operatives, and Ookami, to punish Silver by wiping out several of Silver's labs in Camon Heights. Summoning Silver to Club Sphinx, the Merovingian angrily reminded him that no commerce was to be conducted with the Machines without his permission, and finally allowed operatives to delete the unrepentant researcher, saying that he could be restored from a backup copy, possibly after modifying his code to make him less intractable.
- The General's Sentinel scouts, ranging further across the Earth's dead surface, reported more human pod clusters, arranged in a rough grid pattern, roughly 100 to 150 kilometers apart. Meanwhile, the Exile Sunshine was consulted, and estimated that, taking the cooling of the Earth's climate due to the perpetual storm clouds into consideration, the Machines might be able to use about 1/16th of the Earth's surface for pod clusters. Malphas calculated that this could mean the Machines have about 300 million people in pods worldwide, but the Merovingian felt that something still wasn't adding up.
- Operatives tracked a powerful Exile program, called "Incidence 5.991" by the Machines, and found it using deceptive simulacra to retrieve data from hidden nodes. These simulacra were deleted without retrieving their data in time, but more nodes were believed to exist.
- Information was sketchy, but available details indicated at least two nearly simultaneous acts of deadly sabotage in the old city of Zion, bearing similarities to past Cypherite attacks: a hijacked hovercraft rammed the main gate to the city's dock, and shortly thereafter, all communication with Zion Command was cut off, following what may have been a large explosion in the command facility.
- At about the same time, the Machines were sending a virus directly into Zion's mainframe, using a device captured from Danielle Wright's lab near the Earth's surface, which the Machines located by tracking her broadcast signal, whose encryption they had unlocked. Wright herself, in her last known appearance in the Matrix, remained characteristically calm when confronted by the triumphant Machines; she collapsed, lifeless, as Sentinels dispatched her body in the Real.
- Several days later, Ghost pursued rumors about the sabotage that had taken place in Zion, finding strong indications of Cypherite involvement, in collaboration with the Machines. Ghost warned operatives not to try reaching the old city with their hovercraft, as it was now entirely infested by Sentinels. A number of Zion hovercraft have been missing since the attack on the city; Zion's Commander Lock, present in Zion Command at the time contact was lost, has also not been found.
- Reports to the Merovingian from the General's Sentinel scouts, ranging farther across the surface of the Earth, indicated regular arrays of small pod clusters in a loose grid-like pattern across the otherwise lifeless land. The only significant variation found was another large pod cluster and set of human-growing Fields over 6000 miles away, from which power cables led off into the distance; contact to the scout sending this report was lost, however, and the remainder were recalled to preserve them from Machine patrols. Merovingian estimates based on a compilation of recent findings placed the Matrix population at approximately 300 million humans; according to the Merovingian, these would scarcely provide sufficient power for the Machines' needs.

- With Lock still missing after the destruction of Zion's old city by the Machines, Captain Roland was promoted to Commander of Zion's military.
- Fighting over the new red pill programs continued, with Machines working to keep the pills out of E Pluribus Neo's hands. A hard battle was fought between the two groups in Westview, ending with Machinists recovering some of the programs.
- Zion, investigating Cypherite involvement in the attacks leading to the destruction of the old city, captured some data from the Cypherites, and decoded it after fighting to gain access to Cypherite computers. The data consisted of a brief message about Danielle Wright: "We found a neologism from Wright: Alphadecimal." Operatives began to investigate if this information could relate to any previously discovered details about the mysterious researcher.
- A high-level Zionite fought off Merovingian operatives while complaining about having to find his way to Pillsen for Commander Roland. The Zionite was bald, muscular, wearing a green sleeveless T-shirt, arm tattoos and green glasses, but his name was unknown.
- Machinists found Brenda Utley touring the headquarters of Wright Research in Vauxton. Utley hinted that her company, consumer products giant Pendhurst-Amaranth, may be interested in acquiring the research firm of the missing Danielle Wright.
- The Oracle bumped into a few operatives of various organizations in Downtown, inviting them to an impromptu picnic in One Zero, where they discussed peace, war, and economics while munching freshly baked cookies.

Chapter 8.3

Evacuation

Sentinels attack Zion's crippled city, forcing Zion to abandon it. Zion's Commander Lock is missing. Roland, whose ship was destroyed in the attack, is promoted to replace Lock. Roland's crew member Colt becomes a Zion captain; another crew member, Mauser, thought to have been killed, is seen on Sentinel surveillance tapes helping Lock escape through rubble in Zion. The Machines use data captured from Zion's mainframe, unlocked for them by the confused Morpheus simulacrum, to hunt down and kill veteran Zion operatives. The Merovingian finds evidence of the Machines removing live humans from the pod system.

- Colt, Captain Roland's first-mate, newly promoted to captain since Roland's own promotion to Zion Commander in place of the missing Lock, helped direct operatives in heading off attacks on Zion data stores by both Machines and Merovingian Exiles. Colt described the destruction of Roland's ship, its systems fried by feedback when the Machines destroyed the old Zion mainframe. He feared that some of his crewmates, including Mauser and AK, had not survived the crash, or the swarm of Sentinels around old Zion, where the ship went down.
- The Machines captured some potentially useful data from the Zion mainframe: a three-year-old archive of operative RSI signatures. The data could be used to lock the known operative's signal, and prevent their emergency jack-out system from functioning, making a death in the simulation truly fatal; however, the archive was neurally encrypted, and would unlock only when receiving signals matching the brainwave patterns of those who "signed" it: Lock, or Morpheus. Attempting to solve this problem, the Machines constructed their own crude simulacrum of Morpheus from available data, but it was found lacking in correct human responses, and was scheduled for training by operatives.
- Some of the General's Sentinels were among the swarm in on the sack of Zion, and caught glimpses of Lock and another man fleeing through the wreckage. After capturing Machine Sentinel reports detailing which Zion ships were present in the vicinity at the time, the Merovingian's researchers identified the other man as Mauser, from Roland's crew. Neither Lock nor Mauser have been seen since.
- Colt and Ghost, anticipating that the Machines might try to use the General's Morpheus simulacrum to unlock the captured RSI data, led Zion operatives in their own pre-emptive search for the sim, but it proved elusive, and heavy Agent attacks prohibited further pursuit.
- The ex-Unlimit, Beirn, discovered AWOL Elite Commando programs in the white hallways. Failing to call them back to duty under the General and the Merovingian, Beirn disposed of the rebel programs on hand, but, tired of the disorienting maze of hallways, left the others to their own devices.
- The Merovingian ambushed the Machine Morpheus simulacrum, hoping to extract some useful data from it. Although he managed to coax it into a startling display of some of Morpheus' old codes, he found its comprehension highly limited, and apparently incapable of giving him the kind of information he was after; he seemed almost relieved when the Machines recaptured it.

- Machine operatives led the sim through re-creations of scenes from its memory, hoping to attune its mind to the state necessary to match the real Morpheus' brain patterns, and unlock the RSI archive. But the sim's recall of and reaction to the events was shaky, and in the end it failed to access the archive. Agent Pace had operatives delete it.
- The Furihata-based redpill named "Grace" was found by Cypherites, pursuing Silver Dragon gang members across the International District. With help from the operatives, she eventually found what she was after: data confirming that hers was among the RSI signatures in the archive captured by the Machines. Grace, once a Zionite, but now independent, worried that she would have difficulty obtaining the firmware necessary to reconfigure her broadcast signal.
- Following a tip from the Oracle, the Merovingian found evidence that the early, pre-War Machines were much simpler, and lacking in complexity. He pondered whether this could have led to their reliance on humans.
- Merovingian operatives found Persephone in a library in the Chateau. She read them poems by Swinburne dealing with love, loss, and death. Something from her past seemed to weigh upon her mind.
- Both Zion and the Machines pursued the Morpheus simulacrum, attempting to win it over to their point of view relative to the dangerous information, captured from Zion's dead mainframe, that it could possibly unlock for the Machines. But it appeared unsure of what it should do, and even a face-to-face meeting with Niobe failed to persuade it to commit itself one way or the other.
- E Pluribus Neo spoke to the Oracle and Seraph about the simulacrum, but the Oracle was exceptionally vague on the topic, although she seemed very familiar with the sim.
- Seeking more information on how the Machines might possibly be forced to give up power from the Matrix, EPN targetted code pulse detonations on power centers in Westview and Downtown, confirming that simulation power concentration is higher in the Downtown area, despite the presence of power plant facilities in Westview.
- The Morpheus simulacrum broke the encryption on the RSI signature database the Machines had captured from the Zion mainframe. Zion veterans whose signatures were on the list evacuated the Matrix to avoid signal-lock and termination; Niobe and Ghost were among them.
- The Cypherite controller, Veil, led several assassination missions against compromised Zionite veterans. After one of these she was opposed by Colt, Zion's remaining ranking field officer, as well as other Zionites and Merovingian operatives who converged on the scene. Colt also led a mission to rescue data from a Zion organization area to which the captured archive had opened up access for the Machines.
- The Merovingian tracked down and summoned the pod subroutine who had been in charge of overseeing the vanished bluepill, Mary MacHenry, but the subroutine refused to cooperate. Undeterred, the Merovingian arranged to have its log files stolen, and found that the Machines had subjected MacHenry to vigorous physical reconditioning before removing her from her pod.

- The Effectuator snuck a team of Merovingian operatives into a Machine detention block where they rescued Hypatia, returning her to the city for some scheme of the Merovingian's.
- Zion tried desperately to get its last signature-compromised operatives out of the Matrix before they could be terminated by the Machines. Before he can be led to an exit, operative Strenlo, who stayed in the Matrix trying to save important information backed up from the lost Zion mainframe, is terminated by Agents. Zion succeeded, however, in evacuating loner Joshua Maston, an ex-Zionite who has been working to continue Morpheus' legacy inside the Matrix. Before allowing himself to be evacuated, Maston told Zion that while he was grateful for their help, he would leave them after they reconfigured his RSI signature to protect him against signal lock and termination.
- Persephone recalled a time during her work for the Machines at the pods when a human was removed, where the log files were very similar to those that have been found concerning the mysteriously vanished Mary MacHenry. Hypatia, to return the favor for her rescue from the Machines, put the Merovingian in touch with the Archivist Society, who could not find information on the specific incident recalled by Persephone, but were able to look up yet another similar incident, this one having occurred during the first version of the Matrix. Stealing the fingered information from the Machines, the Merovingian found log files describing the simultaneous live disconnection of fourteen individuals from the pods.
- Suddenly and inexplicably, on the verge of completely incapacitating Zion's operations within the Matrix through termination or forced jack-out of nearly all of their veteran operatives, the Machines recalled their forces, both inside the Matrix and in the Real. Before retreating himself, the General sent a broadcast to the Merovingian, hurriedly reporting a large number of Machine Sentinels taking up positions around the Machine city, and another large formation of Sentinels approaching.
- The Exile known as Digger showed some operatives a dungeon room hidden in the tunnels deep below Rawlins Corner, explaining that he believed it to be a direct code re-creation of a room from the second version of the Matrix. Digger and the operatives also engaged in some speculation as to Machine manipulation of symbols from the Book of Genesis, along the lines of theories propounded by philosopher Ludwig Andreas Feuerbach, and the possibility of multiple Matrix simulations running one inside the other. Among other ideas floated, GreatWorm suggested that the Earth's ruined sky could be compared to the flaming sword set down to prohibit man from re-entering the biblical Garden of Eden.
- A number of operatives went on a tour of the Ouroboros corporate headquarters in Creston Heights, conducted by an irritatingly chipper, yet somewhat evasive, tour guide. Several odd pieces of information came to light about the giant electronics manufacturer.
- Machine operatives were contacted by a Zionite named Cpahr, hoping they would return to him a personal digital assistant program he'd lost when the Machines sacked the old Zion mainframe. Upon interrogation, it appeared that the program, ZAITSO, might have some knowledge of previous conversations with the EPN leader, the Kid. Operatives decided to keep ZAITSO for further questioning, much to the sensitive Cpahr's dismay.

- Zionites attempted to evacuate a veteran operative, Viellard, compromised by the RSI archive the Machines had captured from the Zion mainframe. Machine programs formed a cordon at the nearest hardline, however, and Viellard, attempting to evade the cordon, was caught by the Machine operative Darjarian, and killed by Machine operative Starschwar.

Chapter 9.1

Intrusion

A glowing "intruder" appears in the city, instantly killing Agents who try to stop him. He wants information from Zion. The Machines pull back their forces in the Real, and try to prevent the intruder from making contact with Zion, but refuse to attack him directly; they eventually admit that he is a freeborn human, with some direct control over the Matrix through "override codes." The Merovingian tries to win the intruder over. Pluribus Neo moves into the wreckage of Zion's old city.

- A large man composed of a glowing wireframe mesh appeared at Ascension Monument, terminating a squad of Agents who confronted him before disappearing into the Barrens.
- The Machines pulled back their forces within the simulation and in the Real, concentrating on locating and expelling the mysterious intruder. However, he demonstrated the ability to delete or override their programs at will, confounding their attempts to deal with him by force. He was less dominating when confronted by operatives, but they found him to be extremely powerful; he appeared more amused than concerned when dealing with their attempts to control him.
- The other organizations also pursued the intruder, interested in both his power and his purpose. E Pluribus Neo retrieved strange codes left behind by the intruder, some with the ability to influence large areas of the simulation. Zion took some of these codes to the Auditor, who, having analyzed them, became agitated, saying that they shouldn't be in the Matrix at all. When Zion asked the Oracle for information on the mysterious man, she responded evasively, appearing to know more than she was willing to say about him.
- When confronted by Cypherites, the intruder countered them with overridden Machine programs. In a later operation, Cypherites, led by Veil, stopped Zionites from making contact with the intruder.
- The Merovingian, hoping to use the intruder's power, tracked him down with the expensive assistance of the information expert, Cerulean. Attempting to impress the stranger with displays of power and influence, the Merovingian introduced him to Cerulean, Malphas, Ookami, and Hypatia, but the intruder, while hinting at some familiarity with Exile programs and Matrix history, seemed only mildly interested. Attempts by Merovingian operatives to win the intruder over met with equally lukewarm success, as he appeared to regard their claims of Merovingian might with great skepticism.
- Zion, using data retrieved from intruder codes, found a way to contact the mysterious man by hacking into landlines, and managed to get a message through to him, despite Machine jamming attempts. His brief reply indicated some interest in hearing from the Zionites.
- E Pluribus also used the landline exploit to reach the intruder with a message, and were able to meet with him deep below the city streets. He questioned them about their plans to combat the Machines, seeming skeptical of their chances.
- Cypherites showed concern that the intruder's high profile was disturbing citizens of the simulation. Cryptos led operatives in a plan designed to disrupt attempts by E Pluribus Neo and Zion to reach the intruder, with partial success; the intruder displayed a baffling mix of interest and disinterest in operative affairs.

- The Merovingian had Elite Commandos brought into the Matrix to demonstrate his military capabilities to the intruder, who was mildly interested; however, a further demonstration, a battle between commandos and Merovingian operatives, bored the intruder, who wiped out the commando programs, much to the General's displeasure.
- The intruder met with Niobe, and expressed an interest in Zion's rebellion against the Machines. He later met with Zion operatives, asking many questions about their defenses, armaments, and plans for combating the Machines.
- The Machine policy of avoiding the intruder while preventing other organizations from contacting him became frustrating to their own operatives. Agent Pace explained that the intruder is inextricably linked with highly sensitive System information that absolutely cannot be compromised. She also said that because the Matrix was not designed to support his code, his presence within the simulation is causing problems; because they cannot remove him directly, they will have to work to minimize his impact on the simulation as much as possible, while avoiding aggravating him further.
- Cypherites looked into how the intruder might be entering the simulation. Although they couldn't find out if he was using some sort of unknown jack-in technology, questioning the Auditor revealed that the intruder's code is a higher version than the Matrix itself.
- The Merovingian attempted to impress the intruder with Persephone and various simulated delights, but while the intruder seemed interested in the possibility of the Merovingian's usefulness, he did not respond enthusiastically to the programmed temptations.
- The Merovingian staged a party in the Hel Club, and succeeded in getting the intruder to appear, although he seemed more interested in looking around and sparring with operatives than in light conversation.
- E Pluribus Neo began moving their ships into the abandoned, wrecked city now known as "Old" Zion, where they have initiated plans to improve the defenses so that the city, fairly close to the Machine city itself, can be used as a forward base.

Chapter 9.2

Interface

The intruder pumps Zion for information about their history. EPN begins to fortify Zion's old city, and find Commander Lock lying wounded in a hidden lab at the surface. Lock says he was saved by Mauser, who died defending him from Sentinels. The Machines try to convince the intruder to leave. He becomes increasingly frustrated, and demands that the Machines give him a "biological interface program." They claim that only one exists, and it is not in the Matrix. The Merovingian searches for programs the intruder might be willing to trade for, without success.

- The powerful intruder examined the Morpheus simulacrum, made demands to the Architect, pumped Zion and EPN for information on Neo and Trinity, and teased the General by displaying knowledge of his old "Seeker" missiles. When Cypherites, opting for Cryptos' approach of talking to him over Veil's desire to attack him, attempted to question him, he refused to answer. After most of these encounters, he left powerful, hostile programs in his wake, including a large program that pumped out a continuous stream of overridden Machine forces. Even the Merovingian, snooping through Machine files, did not manage to dig up definite information on the intruder.
- Around the confusion caused by the intruder, the man-machine war continued, with EPN rescuing the crew of their hovercraft Horizon, who had been captured while obtaining Machine maps of the wrecked old Zion city, while Cypherites began working to hijack the Zion hovercraft Juggernaut, whose extremist captain had been eliminating Bluepills, whom he regarded as sub-human.
- EPN detected a Zion-type emergency beacon signal coming from the surface above the old city, and sent crews to investigate.
- Cypherites hijacked the Zion hovercraft Juggernaut, whose captain, Cinquez, they accused of the murder of Bluepills who refused the red pill. Taunted by Cypherite operatives in the Matrix, Cinquez learned of the hijacking and managed to jack out and detonate the hovercraft, killing all on board.
- Hunting through Machine systems, Merovingian operatives found a partial note of a meeting between the Machines and the intruder that took place before the intruder entered the Matrix, in which the intruder appeared to have referred to the General's old "Stalingrad" base. The Merovingian called a conference on the subject with operatives and the General, in which it was decided that the presence of Sati at Stalingrad at the time of the Machine attack may have been what attracted the intruder's interest.
- Machine operatives managed to reach the intruder and get him to agree to a meeting. At the meeting, he was surprised that Agent Pace was female, but grew angry when she said the Machines did not have what he was looking for. The intruder demanded to meet with the Architect, and Agent Pace said this would be arranged.
- Zion found the intruder taking code readings in the slum building where Neo was awoken by Morpheus.
- EPN followed an emergency beacon to a wrecked surface facility above Zion, where they found Commander Lock, weak and recovering from wounds, but conscious. They evacuated him to the old city.

- Tailing the intruder, EPN found him examining upper floors of a skyscraper in Center Park. Comments by the intruder suggested that it was the spot where Trinity hacked the Machine power grid and received a fatal gunshot wound from an Agent, before being caught and miraculously revived by Neo. The intruder did not offer an explanation of his presence there, but it appeared to have something to do with the object of his search. He also mentioned that he didn't want operatives knowing what it was, because they might want it too.
- Zion's Commander Lock, guarded by EPN and recovering in the old city, sent a message to Zionites with the story of his rescue from the Machine attack on Zion by Mauser, who took him to an abandoned lab facility on the surface, and tended to Lock's injuries until being killed while leading Sentinels away from his position.
- Overhearing this story, the intruder expressed surprise that Mauser had a gun effective against Sentinels. Colt was expanding upon this by describing how Neo could zap Sentinels with his bare hands when he was suddenly interrupted by the intruder flying into an inexplicable rage, saying "They WERE lying!"
- After this, powerful override programs created by the intruder began to appear around the city, including Accelerators, and the newly encountered "Decelerator" and "Runtime" programs.
- Zion, attempting to track down the intruder and convince him to exercise more discrimination in his attacks, ran afoul of Cypherites out to shut down the intruder's programs before they could endanger citizens. When a group of Zionites organized by Ghost finally caught up with the intruder, he accused them of being involved in a cover-up with the Machines, and attacked them.
- Shortly after Cypherites removed a series of the dangerous programs from Downtown, including some around the Government Building, Agent Gray called upon Machinists to eliminate Agent programs that had been turned against the System by Accelerators.
- The Merovingian, following evidence suggesting that the intruder may have been interested in the Oracle's ward, Sati, sent operatives to question the intruder about the girl, but was unable to locate him. Flood directed an attempt to kidnap Sati without the intruder's input, but the operatives sent into Mara found only Seraph, who warned them that Sati would not be found while certain conditions persisted.
- Another attempt to locate the intruder, assisted by one of the General's Elite Commando reconnaissance programs, succeeded in finding him, and convincing him to meet the General, although the intruder appeared to be unfamiliar with Sati's name and significance. Her role in causing the Machines to attack the General's Stalingrad base caught his attention, but not to the point that he was willing to pursue her himself. Instead, he suggested that the General recover his own data on the Exile from the Machines, and asked to be kept apprised of any progress made in that regard.
- The Kid contacted Zion with details on the surface lab in which EPN found Commander Lock: the structure showed signs of damage from Sentinels, and a Zion "lightning gun"; Mauser's fingerprints, and traces of his blood, were found inside. The lab equipment was entirely wrecked. Tyndall sent Zion operatives to capture Machine logs of Sentinel activity at the site, but no records of any such activity were found.
- The Machines found an intruder-spawned "Terminator" program behind the deaths of many System Agents. Fortunately, operatives were able to eliminate the program.

- The General helped Merovingian operatives recover some of his data that had been captured by the Machines, but his data on Sati appeared to be missing. After consulting with the intruder about the Sati question, the intruder, hearing that Sati was only out of the Matrix once, as a stored computer program in the General's base, decided that she couldn't be what he's looking for, which is something he called a "biological interface program," adding that if the Merovingian could obtain one for him, he would make him "king of the Matrix."
- Machine operatives looking for the intruder tracked him down in the vicinity of the Metacortex building. The intruder exhibited anger and impatience, and was unwilling to answer questions put to him by the operatives. When Agent Gray intervened, asking why the intruder skipped the meeting that had been arranged with the Architect, the intruder used an override code to terminate Gray, then told operatives that the Machines were still "jerking his chain." Agent Pace appeared on the scene, despite operative warnings, and told the intruder that the Architect would await the meeting, saying that the intruder would be able to terminate the Architect himself if he found the meeting displeasing. The somewhat mollified intruder said that he'd see about it.
- Zionite operatives were called in after a report of the intruder near the Chelsea Convention Center, where they found him fighting overwhelmed Bookwyrms. The intruder cut through the Bookwyrms in the Center to reach Hypatia, and demanded that she give him a biological interface program. When she said that she didn't have such a thing, the intruder terminated her. Wandering through the building's lobby, he said something about being "trapped," before appearing to jack out.
- Operatives identified contact between Seraph, Morpheus, and Lo Ruhamah. Morpheus was seen with Ruhamah at the Abandoned Subway.
- A confused computer hacker named "Murphey" dressed as an Agent and went "on patrol" around parts of Richland and Downtown, occasionally saying odd things, even long binary numbers. Agent Griffin appeared on the scene and informed operatives following Murphey that Murphey was believed to have located a large cache of the intruder's override programs, but that a close examination of the programs had unhinged Murphey's mind. It was hoped that an analysis of Murphey's utterances would reveal the location of the dangerous programs. This was achieved by Ouranos, who located the programs in the building housing the Deus Lounge.
- Beirn submitted himself to examination by the intruder at Club Cyclo. The intruder detected the Machine cheat codes in Beirn's system, and was only convinced that Beirn was not a Machine after subjecting him to various override codes. The intruder invited Beirn to try his cheat code abilities on him, and Beirn was surprised to find the intruder immune to them. The intruder questioned the General about the origins of the cheat codes, but eventually dismissed them as irrelevant to his search.
- Hypatia had been imperfectly restored by her loyal Bookwyrms after her termination by the intruder, so Machine operatives saw to the job properly, removing the code overrides from her routine with a clean kill.
- Agent Gray, still recovering from an encounter of his own with the intruder's termination routine, facilitated a meeting between the intruder and the Architect, with Agent Pace and a senior operative also in attendance. The intruder demanded a "biological interface program," saying he knew that it existed. The Architect confirmed this, but denied having created it, and told the intruder that the only surviving copy was removed from the Matrix, as the intruder himself had witnessed. The Machines hoped that this information would inspire the intruder to leave the Matrix.

- Zion searched Wright Research in the hopes of finding something about the "biological interface program" the intruder has mentioned wanting, but even though interface technology was one of Danielle Wright's areas of particular expertise, nothing promising turned up at the Wright facilities. The intruder didn't seem surprised by this, hinting that the program wasn't written by a human.
- The Merovingian, deciding to procure the mysterious program himself, checked with possible Exile sources, such as Persephone and Silver, but came up empty-handed. Asking the intruder, who they found surrounded by dead N30 AG3NTS, to provide more information about the program, operatives were told that programs made by the Exiles in question were nothing like what he wanted, and that he was certain the program is somewhere in the Matrix. The intruder also mentioned something about someone else having "taken the other one."
- The Kid helped operatives Demedrian and Tsusai clear powerful override programs out of Ikebukuro, although the task was complicated when engagement protocols were overridden. The Kid also encountered operatives in Stamos, where he was wondering about recent activity in the area. While talking, an override routine hit the area, and the group was unexpectedly attacked by N30 AG3NTS.
- Others had also taken an interest in the Morpheus simulacrum's recent Westview activity. Agent Pace led a search for the sim in Westview, but when operatives attempted to hold the simulacrum for questioning, they found themselves pushed away from him. Agent Pace ordered the sim to surrender, but he fled across the district, eluding pursuit. Before fleeing, the simulacrum said something about "the watchers."
- Veil, in the company of operative Fyror, tracked the simulacrum down to a ramshackle building, and asked him what he was up to. The simulacrum responded with a quotation from an ancient source, which included references to certain omens, and "the teaching of the watchers."
- The Merovingian sought information on the simulacrum's activities as well, with Flood sending operatives, led by Ookami, to question two prominent Westview Exiles: Indigo and Amber. Indigo claimed to know nothing about the simulacrum's activities, calling it an outdated reject. Amber mentioned that the simulacrum had been in contact with many "gutter" people in the area, similar to the "riff-raff" who often associate with the Oracle. Various conspiracy theories were discussed, but Flood dismissed them as paranoia.
- Eliminating some override programs in Downtown, Ghost and other Zion operatives encountered the intruder, who began asking questions about the relationship between Neo and Trinity. Those present were not interested in giving him the information, and he left frustrated.
- In Westview, Zion operatives eliminated one of the intruder's Accelerator programs that was overriding the Demon Legion gang in Sobra Shores. The zealous redpill Father Jonas led the Brethren and other Zion operatives to the gang's leader, Jezebeth, who helped track down the Accelerator.

- Merovingian operatives found Persephone contemplating one of the intruder's Decelerator programs on the top floor of a building downtown. Persephone stated her opinion that the intruder was an empty shell of a man, saying that he would not, for instance, have used his abilities to defend someone, like the assembled operatives defended Persephone against marauding Zionites.
- Shimada and other E Pluribus Neo members went after a Machine installation in downtown, trying to obtain data relating to the "biological interface program" the intruder has mentioned being interested in. EPN was tipped off to the existence of the information by a hacker, Pigo, who found a reference to it in a two-month-old Machine data archive. An overwhelming security counter-attack by Agents at the site prevented EPN from retrieving any data, however.

Chapter 9.3

Rivals

A second glowing figure, Carlyne, enters the Matrix, attacking the first intruder, Halborn. The Morpheus simulacrum contacts Exiles in Westview. Halborn learns from the Machines that the Oracle created the program he seeks, and pursues her. He is supported by the Merovingian, and opposed by Zion, who have help from Carlyne. The Oracle contacts EPN and the Cypherites, giving each group part of an encrypted program, and asks them to watch over Sati. Halborn reaches the Oracle, who refuses to help him, and kills her.

- With Sister Margaret's help, Cypherites searching for the Oracle found Seraph, who alluded to a widespread plan, and said that others would be called upon to help at the right time.
- A second wireframed man appeared, confronting and fighting the intruder in Westview. According to their monitored conversation, they appeared to be at odds over the acquisition of something.
- Halborn, known until now only as the "intruder," complained to Zion that the other man, Carlyne, whom he has known for some time, is a practiced liar. Carlyne, on the other hand, visited the Machines, telling them that he wanted to help them by removing Halborn from the Matrix.
- The Merovingian met with both men, assuring them of his full aid in their fight against the other.
- In a later meeting with Machinists in the Government Building, Carlyne told them that Halborn is searching for what he's called a "biological interface program" because his real body is essentially dead, and Halborn hopes the program will offer a remedy for this condition. Meeting with the Cypherites, Carlyne apologized for the problems caused by override programs, and said that he hoped he wouldn't be needed at all to remove Halborn, but that Halborn's override activity appeared to be reaching a dangerous point.
- Halborn, meanwhile, frustrated by his failure to locate the interface program, even with the assistance of Merovingian operatives, decided that he would have to go back to the Machines and ask them who made the program.
- The busy Carlyne continued his rounds, encountering E Pluribus Neo, again mentioning Halborn's critical condition in the real world. He said that his main goal is to get Halborn out of the Matrix, and that that would benefit him in certain ways; he also mentioned that he was curious to see if the interface program Halborn wants really exists, or if it is just a figment of Halborn's desperate imagination.
- Halborn demanded to see the Architect, and asked him to name the creator of the biological interface program. The Architect told him it was written by the Oracle. When operatives were asked by Carlyne whether they had seen Halborn, who he is searching for, they were instructed to say "no."
- Stonewalled by Zion, Halborn went out on his own to look for the Oracle. After the departure of Halborn, Carlyne contacted Zion, saying that he wants to help them stop Halborn.

- Merovingians found Halborn in the process of overriding more Exile programs. He requested information on the Oracle, which the Merovingian was happy to supply.
- Searching for the Oracle, Machine operatives recovered data fragments that may have been authored by the Oracle. These fragments were provided by the Exile gang leader Zero, in return for assistance in a business deal with other shady characters.
- Cypherites came across evidence of a Machine investigation of override code use in Apollyon, but Agent Pace claimed to be unable to provide them with any information beyond speculation that one or even both of the wireframed intruders was involved. Searching further afield, the Cypherites found code overrides in use in the One Zero construct, and neutralized them.
- A member of the Archivist society polled operatives in the new Datamine construct on their opinions of the area. Malphas wondered if there was another motive behind the recent increase in Archivist Society activity besides their usual profit-making from archived historical data.
- Carlyne was invited to a Merovingian meeting at the Jade Room. He mentioned to the Merovingian that he'd heard Halborn was asking questions about the Oracle, but the Merovingian assured Carlyne that his primary interest was in aiding him against his rival. To demonstrate this, he had operatives guide Carlyne to override programs placed by Halborn in Murasaki.
- Colt led a search by Zion operatives for the Oracle in Mara, to contact her about Halborn. Mara gang boss Owl Bangheart, whose gang had been suffering from code overrides in the area, told the operatives that the Oracle hadn't been around lately, but that he'd seen Seraph disappear through a doorway. Operatives located Seraph in the system of white hallways branching off of the White Lotus Hotel's side entrance. Seraph said that the Oracle had expected something like the current situation, and that this was not the right time to meet her. He added that others would be trying to locate her as well, and that the Oracle would not be able to avoid them all without help.
- Halborn searched for the Oracle in the vicinity of Mara while Carlyne, backed by Zion, searched for him. The Machines mobilized their operatives to keep hostiles away from Halborn in order to allow him to complete his task, hoping that afterwards he would leave the Matrix.
- The Merovingian conducted his own search for the Oracle, uncovering evidence of a deep-seated plot among certain Exile groups. This investigation, however, was interrupted by Carlyne, who saw it as confirmation of the Merovingian's support for his rival, and severed his connection with the Frenchman.
- The pressure-cooker situation around Mara resulted in numerous violent encounters involving operatives, the two wireframed rivals, and their override programs.
 - Ghost and Colt, conducting a covert operation in Westview, had to abort and call in reinforcements when the Agent they were fighting became Accelerated by an override program.
 - Niobe and Zion operatives battled Halborn, deleting many of his programs in Mannsdale.
 - Machinists battled override-supported Zionites at Magog South. While the Machinists fought to hold off the Zionites, Halborn showed up and eliminated the override codes, allowing the Machines to send in Agents to secure the area.

- A large wave of programs, some aligned with the Machines, some with Zion, and some with no operative group, appeared throughout north Richland. Operatives battled to remove them.

- Meanwhile, small groups of Machinists located the Oracle in Mara, but the appearance of Seraph, and directives from Agent Gray detailing Machine concerns regarding the overall situation, required the operatives to depart without arresting her.
- Shortly thereafter, Merovingian operatives, tracking suspicious movements into the Sakura construct, found EPN soldiers there. A battle broke out, in the midst of which Seraph appeared, proceeding to eliminate many of the Merovingian operatives from the construct, despite the significant support the Merovingians received from their healer, CiaoYun. The survivors found themselves face-to-face with the Oracle, who told them that they might soon find something very valuable, but warned them against trying to use it selfishly.
- Zion located Halborn, and communicated his position to Carlyne, so that he could be stopped before reaching his goal: the Oracle. Halborn, still unable to locate her, demanded that the Machines help him locate her, but the Machines claimed that she had been designed specifically to be unpredictable. And the Merovingian, sensing that Halborn was faltering in his search, arranged a strategic planning meeting to revitalize his campaign, but Halborn did not arrive.
- Ultimately, Carlyne, with help from Zion, intercepted the isolated Halborn. Operatives from all organizations attempted to interfere or monitor the encounter, but an incredibly powerful override code blast forced everyone to evacuate the area, and overloaded monitoring sensors throughout the district.
- The Machines continued working to understand mysterious data fragments they'd recovered several weeks earlier in Richland, possibly connected with the Oracle. An eccentric Machine technician came up with a plan to decode the fragments' unique fuzzy logic routines with the help of unstable code within the Datamine construct. While this plan cost the technician his existence, and did not retrieve a full data set, some information was obtained, and Agent Pace took personal charge of the fragment project.
- The Oracle called Veil and Cypherite operatives to a surprise meeting in the One Zero construct, where she handed Veil what appeared to be an encrypted code fragment, and asked the Cypherites to watch over Sati for her. Although very curious as to what the fragment contained, and what was motivating the Oracle to make these requests, the Cypherites agreed to help her.
- EPN operatives, removing override programs from Debir Court, were confronted by Seraph, who invited them to step through the doorway at the end of the courtyard. Doing so, they found themselves in the Ashencourte construct, where the Oracle greeted them, giving Shimada a piece of encrypted code, and asking the operatives to watch over Sati. The operatives assured her that they would do what they could to help her.
- The next day, Cypherites led to Uriah by Cryptos in order to remove override programs from the Uriah docks ran into EPN, who happened to be holding a meeting in nearby Club Parallaxis. Fighting broke out between some members of the two parties, while others concentrated on removing the programs. With most of the programs removed, concentrated sections of both organizations began a fierce battle that ended when Cryptos, supported by his operatives, who at that point held a numeric superiority at the scene, managed to defeat the Kid. Cryptos called a retreat, declaring the Cypherites' job complete. When his troops rallied, and the operative Tygrius revived him, the Kid led them to remove the last of the override codes in the area.

- Searching for Halborn around the site of his clash with Carlyne in the Slums, Ookami suffered domination by override programs infesting the area. Merovingian operatives called in to locate her had to resist her out of control attacks, but, retracing her steps, located Halborn, badly injured and holed up in a decrepit apartment building. When the overridden Ookami found them there and resumed her attacks, operatives asked Halborn if he could remove the overrides on her program; he forcibly rebooted her, saying this might cure her, if she survived the process. Making their way through surrounding override codes and hostile operatives, the operatives led Halborn to temporary security in nearby Club Duality, where Beirn met them, inviting Halborn to hide and recuperate in the safety of the Merovingian's extensive underground network. Halborn insisted that he had no time to waste in getting to the Oracle, but was unable to put up much of an argument in his severely weakened condition, and Beirn whisked him away.
- The Oracle crossed a few wires to speak to Zion operatives individually, but was uncharacteristically at a loss for words, saying that she couldn't say what she wanted to say, but that nevertheless she felt she'd made the right choice.
- The Machines found code fragments in the override-infested Richland area that somehow had not been affected at all by the fallout from the clash between Halborn and Carlyne. Analysts were able to examine these fragments along with those recovered weeks ago from Exiles, which were written in the Oracle's trademark "intuitive" style, and concluded that the fragments were left over from the process of writing a kill code.
- The Merovingian arranged a distraction for Carlyne, enabling the wounded Halborn to bypass him and head for northern Richland, still intent on locating the Oracle.
- EPN found the Morpheus simulacrum, and asked him about the mysterious encrypted code given them by the Oracle. The sim told them that she may have chosen them precisely because they are able to choose for themselves. He also suggested that while the Matrix is a system of control, Zion, in opposition to the Matrix, could be considered a system of control as well. This conversation was interrupted by a Cypherite attack led by Veil.
- A forecasted outbreak of the Smith virus arrived in the city, its manifestation strengthened here and there by the presence of override programs.
- Merovingian operatives attempted to steal some information from E Pluribus Neo, but this was foiled when the Exile contact used by the Merovingians operatives turned the data back over to EPN, apparently in repayment of a favor.
- The Cypherites stole information on potentials, among other things, from a Zion system in Richland, although the operation was complicated by attacks from override codes in the area.

- Ghost led Zion operatives into Richland in search of the Oracle, but found only override programs and Halborn, who showed his violent impatience at operative interference in his plans.
- Players fought off another outbreak of the Smith Virus across the city.
- EPN managed to set off a code pulse device in the Zero One construct, for reasons yet unknown. Machine operatives were unable to stop the device's detonation, but, led by Agent Griffin, they removed the EPN operatives from the construct.
- Halborn found the Oracle waiting for him on a bench in Debir Court. He demanded that she give him "the program." After she told him that she couldn't help him, he became angry, and threatened her, but she said this was a waste of time. Halborn asked if he would ever get the program. She told him that he wouldn't, and he terminated her.

Chapter 10.1

Oligarchy

Sati, Seraph, and the Morpheus simulacrum have disappeared. Halborn continues his stubborn search. The Machines turn him over to the Cypherites, who lead him to the spot in the Real where EPN is handing the recovered Lock over to Zion. Halborn flees the large hovercraft battle that ensues, but his ship was noticed by Zion, who, with EPN, defeat the opposing ships, and take Lock to their new city. Following a chance remark by Halborn, the Merovingian, using the General and his Sentinels, locates a "no-fly" area far to the northwest of the Machine city, avoided by Machine patrols, where they find a heavily defended facility, and a data feed from a massive "Oligarch Network." Zion and Carlyne succeed in surprising Halborn and removing him from the simulation. Cryptos begins research on anti-override codes. Carlyne leaves the Matrix.

- Although he terminated the Oracle, his last apparent hope for retrieving the program he craves, Halborn remained inside the Matrix. The Machines asked him to leave, but he refused, hinting that he had a new plan in mind. Meanwhile, Carlyne met with Zion, declaring that he was working on a more direct means of removing Halborn.
- Flood ran Merovingian operatives through a review of the Oracle's actions leading up to her termination, concluding that she orchestrated recent events in order to achieve something relating to either to the program Halborn seeks, or to the intruders themselves.
- A small group of Zion operatives led by Deffdog rescued two Exiles, Palorina and the Evaluator, from an Exile gang that had kidnapped them.
- Machine operatives defended the ZAITSO program from EPN and Merovingians, and succeeded in retrieving information from it relating to a series of mysterious "image fragments." ZAITSO was then sent back to officer SIMLO for repairs.
- Ookami and a band of Merovingian operatives hunted for Seraph, Sati, and the Morpheus simulacrum in Mara and Westview, but found their usual haunts abandoned. Finally, at the Abandoned Subway, they found the exiled monitoring program Lo Ruhamah, who spoke of other worlds beyond the Matrix before vanishing herself.
- Pluribus Neo operatives found Halborn attacking Carlyne in a building downtown. Operatives restrained Halborn while Carlyne escaped. Frustrated by a barrage of hindering attacks from the operatives, Halborn retreated. Afterwards, Carlyne told EPN that Halborn had tried to run a trace program through his RSI, and thanked them for intervening.
- The Architect had a group of Machine operatives brought to the Oracle's apartment, where he questioned them about their outlook on the current situation. The operatives had many questions as to what could be done to solve the threat posed by the intruders, particularly Halborn, but the Architect did not respond to these directly. He did remark that Halborn's "predicament" was the result of a choice Halborn had made a long time ago, overlooking the long-term drawbacks in favor of immediate benefits--a typically human decision.
- Halborn attacked one of Zion's broadcast control clusters in the Matrix for reasons that were not immediately clear. Carlyne mentioned that Halborn is probably trying to shut him down by attacking his hovercraft.

- Carlyne met with Agent Pace and Machinists, telling them that once Halborn was removed from the Matrix, he'd see to it that Halborn's access was restricted by "the Oligarchs." The Machines moved on to investigate the encrypted codes the Oracle gave to the Cypherites and E Pluribus Neo. Veil said that the Cypherites hadn't been able to crack the encryption, but that they were keeping the file safe outside of the Matrix. Subterfuge by Agent Gray and Machine operatives led Agent Gray to determine that Pluribus Neo were likely to be keeping their encrypted file at their base in Zion's old city.
- A surly Halborn agreed to meet the Merovingian, but refused to discuss his goals, or the program he's been looking for, citing a concern that Carlyne might find a way to use such information against him. Halborn went on to say that he could get rid of Carlyne if he could find his ship; he also mentioned a location "800 miles away" to the northwest, in relation to Carlyne.
- Halborn attacked a Pluribus Neo stronghold in the slums, but was repulsed by operatives, although not until he had damaged the file system on the servers there.
- The Machines launched a small Sentinel attack on EPN's base in old Zion, in tandem with an attack on a high-ranking EPN hovercraft. Operatives within the Matrix delayed contact between the assailed crew and the Kid, preserving the attack's element of surprise, and allowing Sentinels to capture the craft. Data returned by the Sentinels from the base and the captured ship indicated reinforced defenses at the old city, but a high probability that Pluribus Neo did not maintain a central mainframe there.
- E Pluribus Neo located and held Halborn while Carlyne tried to run a trace of his own through Halborn, but Halborn had already equipped himself with a countermeasure to the trace routine. Carlyne said that there were other methods he could try.
- Having heard rumors of Commander Lock's imminent recovery with EPN from injuries sustained during the Machine and Cypherite attack that destroyed Zion's old mainframe, Veil led an attack on an EPN hideout, trying to crack their computers to search for more information about Lock. A counter-attack by Shimada and EPN operatives foiled the Cypherite plan, despite Veil's defeat of Shimada during the pitched battle.
- The Merovingian and his operatives captured Machine mapping data on the area Halborn had referred to, 800 miles northwest of the Machine city. The data showed that the mountainous region there was avoided by Machine patrols.
- At Niobe's insistence, Carlyne gave Zion rough descriptions of the advanced ships used by himself and Halborn. Zion captured information from a Machine surveillance database that seemed to confirm the descriptions given by Carlyne; the database also contained a record of a ship like Carlyne's that was present at the Machine city over two years ago.
- Halborn demanded the location of Carlyne's ship from the Machines, but they told him their ability to give out such information was restricted, and suggested that he check with the Cypherites--Veil, specifically. Veil told Halborn that she had some interesting things to show him in the Real.

- The Merovingian and the General determined that the area to which Halborn had referred, 800 miles northwest of the Machine city, was classified as a "no fly" zone by the Machines, and avoided by their Sentinel patrols, although other patrols were blocking the General's route to the area. Merovingian operatives attempting to disrupt Machine Sentinel control routines found that command protocols given them by the General no longer worked, but the General obtained updated data by capturing a Machine Sentinel, allowing operatives to disable the Machine systems long enough for the General to make his way past their patrols, and continue on his way to the blackout zone.
- When Sentinel attacks still proved a hindrance to his progress, operatives got a commando, Lieutenant Petrov, through to a Machine mainframe, where he uploaded his own program into a Machine Sentinel, buying the General time by attacking the other Machines in that Sentinel's squadron.
- Cypherites, assisted by a spy named Pernicia, decimated the crew of a hovercraft commanded by Zion's Captain Suda, and captured data that Veil turned over to Halborn. Halborn very pointedly did not invite them along, but Veil intimated that the Cypherites would be flying somewhere with Halborn in the Real.
- A further attempt by Merovingian Exiles to disrupt Machine Sentinel routines was overcome by a quick response from Machine operatives, who wiped out the Exile group, found in the vicinity of Pendhurst-Amaranth plaza. Beirn rallied Merovingian operatives, and defeated most of the Machine programs remaining in the area, but faced stiff resistance from the Machinists, and was even forced to reconstruct by the Cypherite operative SaintDaniel.
- Halborn attacked a Zionite hovercraft in the Real. One of their crew members, Ramin, managed to jack into the Matrix, where he contacted Zion operatives. With assistance from Ghost, Halborn was called into the Matrix on the pretext that the Machines had agreed to give him the program he wanted. Disguised Zionite operatives stalled Halborn long enough for Ramin's crippled hovercraft to reach safety.
- Colt hurried through the city's bars and clubs, apparently looking for his ship's mechanic. Despite help from operatives, he was unable to locate his crewmate, and jacked out after complaining about Commander Lock, and the loss of his old crewmate, Mauser.
- Shortly thereafter, EPN and Zion hovercraft transferring Lock from the EPN base in Zion's old city to New Zion were attacked by Machine, Cypherite, and Merovingian fleets. After a prolonged battle, the transfer of Commander Lock from EPN Captain Steele's "The Hand of God" to Zion Captain RedBindi's "The Titan" was completed successfully, and New Zion prepared to welcome their old Commander to the city.
- Halborn destroyed a Zionite hovercraft that was following his ship; the crew had tried luring Halborn into scan range at Carlyne's suggestion. Although the crew were killed, Carlyne said that the partial information they'd returned might help him finish a program he'd been working on to eliminate Halborn.
- Halborn, angry at finding himself in the middle of a large hovercraft battle after following coordinates given him by Cypherites, demanded to see the Machines again, but the Machines did not meet with him. Halborn took his anger out on Cypherites inside the Matrix, and muttered about operatives being manipulated by someone who knows all about the program he's after.

- Machine programs pursued Merovingian operatives and commandos, seeking to prevent further Merovingian interference with Sentinel systems. Although the Machine programs were eliminated in part by taking advantage of one of Halborn's Accelerator programs, the Merovingian declared that Halborn's usefulness to him was at an end.
- Niobe led Zion operatives to a Cypherite installation where they'd detected a spike of override activity, and they found Cypherites and Cryptos there, as well as a Decelerator program, which caused problems for Zionites and Cypherites alike, as well as for some Merovingian operatives seeking to cash in on the confusion. Cryptos departed, and the Zionites sealed off the area, but did not, as Niobe had hoped they might, find solid information on a link between the Cypherites and Halborn, which their joint presence at the scene of Commander Lock's transfer had led her to suspect.
- Agent Pace and Machine operatives warned Halborn that his ship had probably been compromised by terrorists. Despite an attack by EPN operatives armed with code pulse devices, Halborn thought little of the warning, saying that everyone could go to hell as far as he was concerned.
- Cypherites running checks on their computer systems found override programs at some locations. Pluribus Neo, using captured data, made their way to one of these installations as well, where a fight erupted between Cypherites, EPN, and override programs. The Kid defeated the outnumbered Cryptos, and Pluribus Neo managed to gain temporary access to the Cypherite mainframe at the site, but they only had time to extract fragmentary data from it before the Cypherites finally secured the mainframe.
- Zionites found and fought Halborn in the Historic District. Carlyne appeared on the scene and distributed instances of a special program to a group of the operatives, saying that if they could hit Halborn with it, it should be able to disable his broadcast signal at the source. The operative Coroebus was able to bypass Halborn's defensive routines and strike him with the program. Halborn fell to the ground, inert. Carlyne said that it looked like the program had worked, although he'd have to check his data before he could be sure.
- Merovingian operatives accompanied by Beirn tried to persuade Carlyne to remain in the simulation, entertaining him at Paradise Lost, but Carlyne, although apologetic, was adamant about having to depart, for various reasons, most of which he did not describe.
- Carlyne thanked Zion for their help, saying he was going to leave the Matrix now that Halborn can no longer jack in due to his ship having been disabled, and that he had to leave to take care of certain concerns, one of which was ensuring that Halborn would not be able to return. Carlyne had a similar message for the Machines, saying that he hoped there were no hard feelings. With the intruders and their override routines out of the picture, the Machines mobilized their programs to begin fighting Zion once again.
- Cryptos theorized that the override routines had been able to operate by taking advantage of a fundamental vulnerability in the simulation. Having noticed that they had no controlling effect on his own RSI, which is partly Machine code, he declared his intent to begin working on an algorithm capable of resisting the override programs, using his own code as a starting point.

- The General reached the Machine no-fly zone on the Earth's surface, northwest of the Machine city, and encountered a heavily fortified facility. Unable to penetrate the facility's defenses, his Sentinels found a data conduit nearby. Tapping into the data stream, they encountered unusual data protocols, only partially matching known Machine formats. Merovingian operatives within the simulation forced their way into highly secured Machine servers, and, after much effort, located a data type similar to what the General had found. Using this new information, the General's soldiers began decoding the foreign data feed, but their transmission was cut off just as they sent back a partially scrambled decoding identifying the data stream as part of a massive system labeled the "Oligarch Network."
- Operatives encountered override programs on rooftops across the city, possibly remaining from a last-ditch effort by one of the intruders.
- The Exile Rose, having heard that the intruders had left, took a bold trip from her station in Southard to the heart of Downtown with the help of a couple operatives.
- Ghost visited the site of Captain Suda's ambush and death at the hands of Cypherites in Widow's Moor. He discussed the possibility of larger motives or relationships behind the recent events surrounding Suda's death, including the actions of the intruders, and the attempted interception of Commander Lock by Cypherite and Machine hovercraft. This discussion was interrupted by an Archivist, who demanded that Ghost and the operatives with him leave the construct, enforcing this command with a swarm of Gargoyles.
- Zion operatives pursuing Machine Data Technicians in the Datamine construct crossed paths with Captain Raeder, apparently an officer in the security division of Supersymmetric Research, the company who had owned the artificial island. Raeder rambled on about research, experiments, and bureaucracy while attempting to expel the "trespassers."
- In a remarkable coincidence, with the departure of the intruders, massive parties broke out in the simulation, with Merovingian operatives packing the Hel Club for a party hosted by Les Enfants Terribles, and operatives from all organizations partying it up in Club Duality.
- Machine operatives were called in to deal with an Exile sniper attacking pedestrians in Morrell. Operatives worked to locate the sniper by posing as civilian targets. The taciturn Agent Griffin was concerned that the way in which this was implemented gave the sniper an opportunity to escape, but nevertheless he was located and neutralized by operatives.
- Cryptos summoned Cypherite operatives to Zero One for a test against programmatic enemies, including Accelerated programs. Cryptos studied the combat sessions, and said that the information gathered would help him in his research into the override codes.
- Operatives encountered override programs on rooftops across the city, possibly remaining from a last-ditch effort by one of the intruders.
- An unidentified broadcast signal was briefly detected in northeast Richland. Agent Gray asked operatives to report any further information found on the signal.

Chapter 10.2

Ouroboros

Mauser, who never had jacks, appears in the Matrix. He hops through unmarked hardlines, avoiding contact, saying to Zion only that he's working to win the war. The Merovingian seeds the storm between the Machine city and the no-fly zone in order to reestablish contact with the General. They find Oligarch network data flowing into the Ouroboros Corporation in Downtown. The Machines nearly isolate Mauser's signal, but are interrupted by the Morpheus simulacrum. Mauser steals data from the Merovingian, then disappears. Missile barrages devastate the General's forces in the no-fly zone, forcing him to retreat. EPN detects a small craft outbound from tunnels below the old city, heading north.

- Colt reported to Zion that his old crewmate Mauser, thought to have been killed rescuing Lock from the destruction of Zion, had been seen in the Matrix. This was doubly surprising since Mauser never had jacks for entering the simulation. Zion picked up readings thought to be Mauser at several hardlines, and at an internet café, but did not locate the man himself.
- With the departure of the intruders, the Machines resumed anti-Zion operations in the Matrix, disabling their computer systems, and interrupting coppertop awakenings. Some Machine operatives, however, encountered a large Zionite force headed by Niobe, who stated Zion's determination to resist offensives by the System.
- Signals between the Matrix and the Machine no-fly zone becoming too weak to maintain communication with the General, Merovingian operatives inserted a program designed by Malphas into Bluepills around the city, with the intention of using the EEG wiring and human energy fields of people in the pods to create a wide broadcast array, but the signal generated proved insufficient to reach the General.
- The Machines sent operatives to delete a small group of override programs remaining in Zia. The operation was complicated by the unexpected presence of Zion captain Niobe, enemy operatives, and nearby overridden Agent programs.
- Cryptos led Cypherite operatives on an information-gathering mission against Zion strongholds, hoping to find out more about the mysterious broadcast signal picked up earlier by Zion in Richland. No pertinent information was found, and the Cypherites discussed the possibility of Zion themselves lacking further data, and of recent occurrences suggestive of a larger conspiracy.
- Veil and her operatives infiltrated Zionite hovercraft to intercept a courier, capturing data, programs, and a copy of a message from Zion's Councillor Dillard to Commander Roland, telling Roland that ex-Commander Jason Lock was not due to be reinstated.
- Merovingian operatives helped an operative named Medea gather information from broadcast towers in Downtown. The information was the final ingredient needed by Medea's crew to set up a new, more powerful communication relay to the General on the Earth's surface, but on the verge of completing the station, the crew was wiped out by Machine Sentinels.
- Colt called for a sweep of hardlines across the city, hoping to find his old friend Mauser, who still had not contacted Zion. Mauser's signal was narrowed down to the vicinity of Mannsdale, where he was eventually seen heading for a hardline, but when he spotted the operatives around the phone booth, he made a dash for a pay phone down the street, and vanished.

- Zion found that the line Mauser had escaped through was part of an old, pre-Truce Zion hardline network to which only certain operatives had been given access. Zion's current data on the network was incomplete, since some was lost when the Machines sacked Zion's mainframe, and it was also suspected that some areas of the network had never been documented.
- After some difficulty in navigating the network, Zion operatives encountered Mauser, who, before exiting along a spliced restricted line, said only that he was working to win the war.
- Machine operatives worked with law-enforcement officials to investigate break-ins by the individual said to be Mauser. Evidence of computer tampering was found, leading to the discovery of a backup log showing that one of the tampered computers had been used to connect to a remote system via network tunneling using an unknown, encrypted protocol.
- The Merovingian, needing to re-establish contact with the General, stranded on an investigative mission in the Machine no-fly zone 800 miles northwest of the Machine city, sent operatives to find a way to improve the communication link. Research indicated that cloud seeding of the mysterious, global storm, created early in the Man-Machine war by a human project called "Operation Dark Storm," could possibly boost communication range through a weather phenomenon known as "tropospheric ducting." Specially-equipped commando Sentinels were dispatched to begin the seeding operation along the route to the no-fly zone.
- Theresa Morton, a bluepill, helped E Pluribus Neo locate a phone line on the old restricted network in Downtown, near a terminal that had been hacked by Mauser, and investigated by the Machines. Zion operatives caused a distraction elsewhere in the city to keep the Machines away from Pluribus Neo during the investigation, but when EPN tried accessing the line, security quickly appeared on the scene in large numbers. Morton was taken into Machine custody.
- Machine operatives fought to protect mechanic programs as they modified hardlines in Downtown to prevent access by Mauser's unusual broadcast signal. Strong resistance from Pluribus Neo and Zion operatives forced the Machines to send successive mechanic programs in order to complete the work.
- Soon afterwards, Pluribus Neo operatives hunted for possible unmarked hardlines around the city, particularly in Downtown. Machine and some Merovingian operatives hindered the search, but it was hoped that the line location data gathered would lead to the mapping of more of the hidden network.
- Merovingian operatives seeking more information on the "Dark Storm," with the goal of improving the tropospheric ducting project, located a program named CAR80N in One Zero. CAR80N, claiming to be a pre-war Zero One assembly line worker, proved to have very limited data on the storm and its origin, but gave what may have been a uniquely first-hand perspective of Machine attitudes at the time in which Operation Dark Storm was put into operation. CAR80N's reminiscence painted the picture of a peaceful Machine population forced into war by human jealousy that they did not understand.

- Zion began the process of shutting down known sections of the old restricted access hardline system, now compromised by Mauser, and possibly under threat of scrutiny by the Machines. Progress along one of the branches came to a sudden halt when a Decelerator program, one of the intruder overrides, appeared nearby, its command routines scrambling the line.
- The Machines began investigating the restricted line system, using data captured from Zion's old mainframe, as well as intelligence gathered by spying on Zion operatives, to determine that an unusual broadcast signal associated with the system--possibly Mauser's Matrix connection--was coming from the vicinity of old Zion.
- With the tropospheric ducting effect of the seeded Dark Storm re-enabling communication with the General in the distant Machine no-fly zone, the Merovingian started looking for Machine links that would help unscramble complex data found in the strange network there. Data was obtained, but the General's comm link into the Matrix was severed just after he relayed a report of an incoming missile attack on his forces, from an unknown source.
- Pluribus Neo helped the ex-Zion operative Grace work out some personal issues with her nemesis Ginjiro, leader of the Silver Dragon gang, in exchange for whatever she could tell them about Zion's old restricted hardline network. Grace showed EPN the phone line in Furihata that was her appointed emergency exit when she worked there for Zion, but said that she had never used it, and that Zion had informed her that the system was being shut down when the Truce with the Machines went into effect.
- Merovingian operatives helped a commando program salvage flight data from the General's downed Sentinels in the no-fly zone. Retrieving the remains of their programs after these were returned to the Matrix by the commando, it was found that just before they were destroyed by missiles, some of the General's Sentinels had detected a distant ship matching the profile of the craft used by the intruders, Carlyne and Halborn.
- Now able to access sections of the restricted line system, Zion operatives chased Mauser through unmarked lines across the city. They caught up to him several times, but he did little to acknowledge them, uttering only one sentence in Downtown, and ignoring his old crewmate, Colt, before vanishing through a phone near the Hel Club. A Runtime program appeared where he had been standing, bringing overridden Machine programs that attacked the assembled Zion operatives, and disabling the line Mauser had used to escape.
- The Machines captured Pluribus Neo scanning stations on the surface above old Zion, and accessed their control interfaces inside the Matrix to begin using them to help pinpoint Mauser's broadcast. But, much to the surprise of both the Machines and Pluribus Neo, the scanning station network security systems, which had been disabled in the earlier Machine attack at the surface, suddenly re-engaged, forcing the Machines to give up the attempt.
- Mauser's course through Zion's old restricted line system ran through Merovingian territory, causing problems for the Zionites tracking him, and for the Merovingian and his Exiles, who found themselves victims of the theft of the topographic data on the no-fly zone they had stolen earlier from the Machines.

- The Machines, encountering an unexpected error message when trying to capture surface scan data from EPN computers, resort to the internet black market in order to obtain information on EPN's rescue of Jason Lock, in which Mauser, according to Lock's account, had been involved. Lock's account contained noteworthy discrepancies, however, not the least of which was that Sentinels were supposed to have killed Mauser, in spite of the fact that, according to the Machines, they had no Sentinels in that area at the time. After obtaining a copy of flight data from the EPN ship that had picked up Lock from the ruined building on the Earth's surface where he said he had been hidden by Mauser, the Machines realized that the building was the same lab where, roughly nine months earlier, they had found and killed Danielle Wright, whose connection to Zion's mainframe had then become the key to the Machine destruction of Zion's former city. Agent Gray suggested that Mauser, a highly skilled technician, may have salvaged Wright's technology from the ruined lab, which could explain some of his surprising capabilities in the simulation.
- Pluribus Neo, following up overheard police reports of a person matching Mauser's general description in Westview, ran into dedicated Morpheus follower Joshua Maston, who said that police may have had Mauser confused with the Morpheus simulacrum, whom he had just encountered in the area.
- A previously unknown operative contacted the faction Temet Nosce, asking for help in reclaiming his former life from a program the Machines had put in his place. His attempt to assassinate the program was brought to an abrupt end by Agent Griffin, who shot him dead, and explained to the operative whose cooperation he had hired that the assassination target was a real bluepill, and that the would-be killer was in fact an exiled program. The Temet Nosce operative was skeptical of the Agent's spin on the story.
- Machinists helped guide a team of operatives on foot through the raging electrical storm at the Earth's surface, searching for the fugitive Mauser's broadcast location. The furious storm claimed victims among the surface team, but, guided by operatives analyzing the scans they returned of the area, they succeeded in locating a Zionite "lightning gun" firearm at the edge of a large chasm in the Earth's crust.
- Ookami and Merovingian operatives followed Mauser's erratic trail across Downtown, fending off Mauser's former crewmate, Colt, who was also looking for the evasive former technician of The Hammer. The Merovingians found Mauser just as he jacked out in a far corner of Creston Heights.
- Zion searched for whoever it was that was in Westview, Mauser or the Morpheus simulacrum, but found only an old disconnected phone line, Cypherites, and a cryptic message on a mysterious computer.
- Pluribus Neo detected an unidentified small craft heading north from a deep tunnel location around old Zion. Searching the tunnels, they found a recently used site strewn with pieces of Sentinels and hovercraft. A terminal from one of the hovercraft was found to contain some data, which they set to work decoding.
- The Machines located Mauser's RSI, and were moving to lock his signal, when the Morpheus Signal appeared in their scan control room, disrupting the procedure. By the time they could reinitialize the process, Mauser was nowhere to be found.

- The General, returning from the Machine no-fly zone, sent back all of the data he had pulled from the mysterious network line found there. The data was found to contain circa-1999 traditional human network headers. These were tracked by Merovingian operatives to a private corporate provider, where they were ambushed by security guards from the Ouroboros Corporation.
- A bluepill named Gerald Croyden complained bitterly about the difficulties of moving and coming back to the city, but persevered to attend his son's high-school graduation.
- Merovingian operatives pumped Ouroboros tour guide Judie Lahler for information in Club Janus in her off hours. Judie, who leads tours in Ouroboros' corporate headquarters in Creston Heights, indulged in a number of drinks, and seemed unhappy about her job, calling it boring and restrictive. She said that the things she had to tell tour guests about the corporation were just silly lies, that no real work was done there, and that nobody ever told her anything.
- Cypherites found the Morpheus simulacrum in a church in Westview. The simulacrum admitted that it had intended to be disruptive in its sudden return, and made mention of the difficulty of achieving peace. The simulacrum directed the operatives to a nearby construction yard, where they found Pluribus Neo operatives in the act of using Code Pulse Devices. The Cypherites eliminated the operatives and defused the devices.
- Pluribus Neo shut down the Matrix interfaces to their scanning equipment around Zion's old city, after finding the Machines attempting to hack into the interfaces once again. Shimada said that from now on they would have to rely on indirect communication with the scanning arrays in the Real.
- Machinists tracked down a dangerous escaped Lupine, Vulg, and eliminated him. Their Exile informant, Rosaleen, startled by the sudden approach of one of the Twins, was killed by the trigger-happy Machine operative BlazinWolf.
- Ghost and Zion operatives stopped a Machine attempt to hack a previously undiscovered section of Zion's old restricted-access hardline system in Park East. The Effectuator was caught by operatives while trying to gather information at Kalt Chemical Engineering in Kedemoth. Kalt herself appeared on the rooftop, warning the group of operatives to disperse. A strong security force appeared on the scene shortly thereafter.
- A small group of operatives found Persephone musing at an old bookshelf in a hidden study in the chateau. A conversation about the nature of love followed, and Persephone invited operatives to write down their own love stories to share with others.
- Operatives found Ghost standing quietly in Debir Court, near the bench where the Oracle was killed. Ghost and the operatives talked about the war and the views of the opposing sides. Ghost remarked upon Machine insistence on remaining emotionless, and wondered if humans had reason to fear that Machines might become better at feeling emotions than humans, whom they have already surpassed in industry and science.
- Disguised Cypherites infiltrated a party held by the Merovingian at the Hel Club. The operatives, in the guise of Exiles, attempted to get the Frenchman to talk about his ambitions in investigating the Ouroboros Corporation, but his replies were light-hearted and insubstantial. Ookami appeared, examined several of the Cypherites, and unleashed an attack of Lupines that drove the operatives out of the club.

Chapter 10.3

Checks and Balances

Cypherites find the Merovingian hacking into Ouroboros. Cryptos captures some of the Oligarch data to assist his research. EPN discover data on the no-fly zone left behind at the small craft's launch site, and begin to prepare ships of their own to investigate. Machines try to get the Merovingian out of Ouroboros, concerned that trouble there will bring more Oligarchs into the Matrix. Wright Research sues Pendhurst-Amaranth for a break-in by Mauser. Pendhurst-Amaranth's Brenda Utley helps Zion get information about Mauser's activities, but Seraph appears, and asks them to stop. The Merovingian finds the biological interface program inside Ouroboros' network.

- Deciphering a cryptic message found while searching Westview several weeks earlier led Zion operatives to the Camon Heights Exile, Silver, who had already taken the precaution of going into hiding. When checking up on Silver's old business partner, Wright Research, the operatives heard of a break-in attempt at Wright weeks earlier by an individual matching Mauser's description.
- Machine operatives took care of problems caused by EPN and Zion operatives, and asked a coppersmith meteorologist for an "intuitive" analysis of the heightened storm in the Real; the meteorologist's opinion was that the storm activity could last for some time, possibly growing worse. After hearing the report of these various operations, Agent Gray said that the most efficacious course of action at present would be putting a stop to the Merovingian's disruptive activities.
- Merovingian operatives kidnapped an Ouroboros network manager, delivering him to Exiles for interrogation on means of accessing that company's secured data. They also found that they had been observed by a Cypherite spy during the course of this operation.
- Operatives delivered data to the Effectuator in Ashencourte, where they encountered resistance by EPN forces. The transfer was completed, although EPN obtained another set of data that had been hidden nearby.
- Niobe led a small group of Zion operatives into the Merovingian's chateau, looking for clues about what he was after at Ouroboros. Meanwhile, other Zion operatives sought to distract the Merovingian's attention by battling security forces outside his Hel Club; this battle grew quickly due to an unexpected attack by Cypherite operatives. Niobe and her team were located and chased from the chateau by a Twin and powerful Exile guards, but not before they confiscated some data.
- Disguised Cypherite operatives snuck into Ouroboros, seeking to capture a sample of the Oligarch data said to be feeding into hidden computer systems there. During their search, they crossed paths with Merovingian Exiles, possibly pursuing a similar goal. The Cypherites overcame the Exiles and Ouroboros security forces long enough to extract some of the foreign data.
- The Merovingian, annoyed by Cypherite interference, tracked down the Cypherite leader, Cryptos, and warned him against further disruptions. Cryptos said that he had wanted to obtain the Oligarch data sample from Ouroboros in order to advance his research into developing a counter-agent to the override codes used by the intruders.

- E Pluribus Neo used information obtained from Exiles, including a scheme captured from a Machine mainframe, to decrypt the file they had recovered from a hovercraft terminal found among bits and pieces of dismantled hardware in a maintenance tunnel near old Zion. They found that the file contained a topographic map of the no-fly zone established by the Machines far to the northwest of the Machine city--the same area to which the Merovingian had recently dispatched the General and his Sentinels. In light of this coincidence, Shimada said that it was time EPN looked into the area themselves.
- Zion found nothing but hostile guards at the Wright Research facility Mauser appeared to have raided weeks earlier. Shortly thereafter, Pendhurst-Amaranth chairwoman Brenda Utley contacted Zion, and revealed that Wright Research was threatening to sue her company; Wright alleged that Mauser broke into their office at Pendhurst-Amaranth's behest, basing this on claims of connections between Mauser and Zion, and between Zion and Pendhurst-Amaranth, dating back to the Unlimit affair.
- Cypherites contacted the Machines, confirming Merovingian raids on the Ouroboros Corporation, intended to retrieve information related to the intruders. The Machines located Merovingian forces attacking an Ouroboros office and repelled them, taking care not to harm the corporate guards at the site. Gray noted that Ouroboros had failed to notify the proper authorities of the attack by the Merovingian.
- Merovingian operatives kidnapped an Ouroboros network manager, obtaining a list of Ouroboros network passwords from the information he supplied. They began putting the passwords to use, infiltrating Ouroboros systems, but encountered resistance from the Machines.
- Zionites assisted Brenda Utley at a court-appointed hearing, attempting to resolve the Wright/P-A dispute. Although Utley and Zion strongly maintained their position that they had nothing to do with any action by Mauser, Wright Research's representative insisted that Wright had information to the contrary, and said that they would continue to press their claim.
- An Ouroboros security guard attempted to kick Merovingian operatives out of a parking lot in Lemone. The guard put up a tough fight, and had hopes of being promoted to an easy job in network security, but operative reinforcements put an end to his hopes of landing a dream job.
- Machine operatives investigating the disappearance of a SWAT unit encountered and pursued the Twins across Downtown, tracking them all the way to an Ouroboros complex, where the Twins were at work cutting through the company's guards. Machine operatives joined in the security melee around the Twins, who departed without much delay. The operatives were then quickly recalled by Agent Gray, who said that it was extremely important that the Machines avoid engaging Ouroboros security forces, as this could result in an alert being sent back to the real power behind Ouroboros: the Oligarchs.
- Flood and Merovingian operatives disguised as Agents attempted to use their assumed federal authority to enter an Ouroboros lab, with the aim of confiscating valuable data. They were surprised when the Ouroboros guard at the site stated that their federal jurisdiction did not apply at the company's facility. A battle ensued, and although the operatives eliminated the guard, reinforcements eventually forced the operatives to join Flood in choosing discretion over valor. A safe distance away, Flood pointed out that Machine authority was evidently worthless when it came to dealing with Ouroboros.

- Brenda Utley, saying that her company, Pendhurst-Amaranth, was getting too much legal heat from Wright Research over an alleged break-in by Mauser, which Wright blamed on P-A, asked Zion to search for clues about Mauser's activity at the Ouroboros Corporation, rather than at Wright Research.
- Utley put Zion in touch with an informant inside Ouroboros, where, after speaking with an Ouroboros security guard, Zion operatives found that a security incident at that company four weeks ago, about the time of Mauser's last known activity in the Matrix, was a hack attempt that came over the internet, cutting right through the Ouroboros corporate firewall. Zion captured the firewall server's log of the incident, which showed that data transferred in and out of the company's network during the attack used an encryption scheme bearing a resemblance to the encryption Danielle Wright used for Zion's revamped red pill program; this suggested that Mauser, or whoever was behind the attack, may have been using stolen Wright technology to hack into Ouroboros.
- The Machines stated that they've known Ouroboros is a front for the Oligarchs, a group whose number includes the two powerful "intruders," Halborn and Carlyne, who recently caused so many problems in the Matrix with their override codes. Agent Gray emphasized that trouble at Ouroboros could cause a security alert to bring Oligarch attention back into the Matrix, raising the spectre of another wave of overrides disrupting the simulation.
- To prevent this possibility, Machine operatives attempted to set up a system inside Ouroboros' network that would re-direct any communications being sent out into the Real, but had to abandon the project when powerful override programs appeared, disrupting the communication programs.
- Merovingian operatives armed with captured passwords continued their exploration of Ouroboros' computer network. They encountered resistance from Ouroboros security and Machines, but a distinct lack of cooperation between those two forces somewhat alleviated the problem. Noting this, the Merovingian dispatched an operative to Ouroboros executives with a letter detailing Machine and Cypherite tampering attempts at Ouroboros.
- Brenda Utley helped Zion operatives discover the name of a network engineer at Ouroboros, Sheldon Brewer, said to have access to a virtual map of the company's internal network.
- Cypherite operatives impersonated tourists on a site visit to a large Ouroboros office building, while operative Marias snuck past guards on the upper floors and killed Ouroboros security officer Matthews. Veil hinted that Matthews had been in charge of sending out a security report.
- Machine operatives located and eliminated an Exiled hacker, C0wb0y, who Agent Gray said was responsible for generating civilian currency inside the simulation in such vast amounts that it could destabilize the population's economy. Operatives began working with officer Vogt to track down and confiscate all of C0wb0y's hacked funds, which had been concealed in various investments.

- Merovingian operatives seeking to distract public attention from their own target, Ouroboros, got help from gang leader Seven in creating a scandalous scene at a Wright Research office, where they also obtained security passcodes. Using the codes, the operatives broke into Wright Research headquarters, wrecking mainframes and leaving hacker programs designed to look as though they had come from rival corporation Pendhurst-Amaranth.
- Zion found that the Ouroboros employee with access to a map of that corporation's network, Sheldon Brewer, was an unassuming technician with the network data surgically implanted in his physical, pod-housed brain. This made obtaining the information difficult, but a red pill trace program and coordination with a hovercraft overcame the obstacle.
- Wright Research declared their intention to go ahead with their lawsuit against Pendhurst-Amaranth, claiming that they had security camera footage of Mauser breaking into their facility, as well as other information demonstrating his ties to Zion, and Zion's close relationship with Pendhurst-Amaranth. Machine operatives delivered a subpoena to Pendhurst-Amaranth chairwoman Brenda Utley, requiring her to appear in federal court to answer questions about the case.
- Merovingian operatives ran into a puzzling speed bump in their infiltration of the Ouroboros network: a missing connection between two active network sections. Attempts to study and locate the absent connection failed, and even the Effectuator became discomfited by the baffling problem. Setting it aside for the time, investigation continued along the rest of the network line, returning reams of financial data.
- The Machines obtained operative help in questioning Brenda Utley about her company's involvement with Mauser and Zion. The P-A chairwoman emerged from a barrage of questions and warnings apparently unfazed. Agent Pace, backed up by an operative, caught up with Ms. Utley in Downtown, delivering a warning that if Utley's company continued to associate with Zion, it was possible that they could be subjected to a time-consuming federal audit.
- A Zion operative, Negligible, made off with data Cryptos was using for his research into countering intruder override codes, making declarations to the effect that the Cypherites couldn't be trusted to use such information selflessly. Pursuing Cypherites managed to catch Negligible, and recover the data.
- A disoriented Sheldon Brewer stumbled out of an apartment building in the slums, questioning nearby Machine operatives about the time and location. Brewer did not understand how he had gotten there, and grew concerned that he would be late for work, although he couldn't quite remember where his office was. An Ouroboros security officer appeared, curtly dismissed the Machine operatives, and took the confused Brewer back into the building.
- EPN operatives, with the help of the network map obtained by Zion, located the Ouroboros security server holding the record of activity on the company's network during the widespread hacking incident weeks earlier, attributed to Mauser. After overcoming heavy security at the site, the EPN operatives obtained a full log of the hacking incident, complete with the network addresses of the specific Ouroboros computers the attacker had targeted.

- The Effectuator dragged Merovingian operatives back to the missing Ouroboros network link, taking another crack at solving the mystery. The search for information seemed fruitless until frustration grew among the search team, at which point network activity readings began to appear. Through experimentation, the team found that displays of emotion caused the readings to grow stronger. Furious emoting ensued, sparking a surprise outbreak of Accelerated Ouroboros security guards. These were defeated, but the team wasn't able to get a lock on the network link until Persephone arrived to assist in their performance.
- Using network addresses from a captured log of the hacking incident at Ouroboros attributed to Mauser, Zion operatives located data on an Ouroboros computer that referred to what may have been a location on the surface of the Earth, with information about power ratings and network links. This data display was suddenly cut off, and Seraph appeared, asking Zion to stop investigating the data, as their investigation could be harmful. Niobe was not happy about the interruption, but admitted that she still trusts Seraph.
- Machines listened in on Ouroboros security transmissions to facilitate their pursuit of Merovingian forces attacking the company's network, where Machine operatives encountered evidence of violent clashes, as well as a powerful Decelerator override program. The transmissions and activity ceased when the operatives ran into Seraph, who warned them that their search must end.
- Merovingian operatives overcame numerous obstacles, some with surprising ease, to find a computer terminal surrounded by powerful override programs and Ouroboros security teams. A heavy firewall protected the terminal, but penetrating it took less time than expected, and the triumphant operatives returned to a gleeful Merovingian with an incredible find: the "biological interface program" sought by the intruder Halborn.
- The Kid and other EPN operatives battled Cypherites who had ambushed a courier transporting red pills. The operatives defeated the Cypherite leader, Satiata, and recaptured some of the pills, but the Kid found evidence that the pills had been tampered with, and a foreign program inserted into their carriers.
- Zion operatives decided to visit the Kalt campus in Kedemoth, to ask Kalt to help Zion ally Brenda Utley and her company Pendhurst-Amaranth, which is dogged by a Machine-supported lawsuit from rival Wright Research. Kalt's receptionist had some trouble contacting Kalt at the operatives' request, and while they waited, an Agent arrived, asking them to leave the building. Most of the operatives did not cooperate with the request, and the Agent called in SWAT teams to disperse the crowd. While this met with some success, the Machine forces were eventually defeated by the Zionite teams. By this time, the receptionist had departed, and operatives were left wondering if it would still be possible to contact Kalt.
- After a long day of business involving her husband Mr. Black, the Merovingian, and the Ouroboros Corporation, Dame White went to Club Haus to relax, escorted by her watchful, silent bodyguard, Ebony. The Dame ran across operatives at the club, running a "fight club" contest on the club's trendy whips-and-chains upper floor. The frosty Dame seemed amused by the energetic exhibition put on by the operatives.

- Ookami encouraged Merovingian operatives to get in some "practice" by joining her in a street brawl with enemy operatives in Tabor Park, where many important lessons were learned.
- The Effectuator threw a "Biological Interface Party" at The Sanguine Room, whose itinerary included the wide distribution of heady code snacks, Ookami and Malphas costume contests, and an exhausting battle against colorful ninja, all under the club's intense purple and white spotlights.
- Veil and Cypherite operatives raided a warehouse in Camon used by Zion to store red pills. The Cypherites defeated the Zionites in the building and set fire to the pill containers, but then had to scramble to rescue bluepill workers who had unexpectedly lingered in the building's basement, while fending off a spirited Zionite counter-attack.
- The youngest member of the powerful Spectrum family of Exiles, the Southard mission contact Rose, went on a shopping spree after using a hack to access the operative Marketplace from a hardline in Uriah. Operatives in the area provided helpful fashion tips and accessories.
- Lurking around Mara, Beirn pondered the implications of the Merovingian's possession of the biological interface program. The ex-Unlimit expressed concern that the hunger of the powerful "intruders" for the program would lead to unpleasant changes in the Matrix.
- A member of the Archivist Society invited operatives to a re-creation of the original Sleepwalker spotlight attack in the Sati's Playground archive construct, and a review of the powerful Sleepwalker "Security" team who led the defense of the spotlights.
- The Kid contacted several operatives to make sure they knew about an upcoming EPN expedition to the Machine "no-fly" zone, and then helped them fight off attacks by hostile operatives.

Chapter 11.1

Fractures

- Zion found Exiles pushing around Wright Research employees. Pendhurst-Amaranth's Brenda Utley told Zion that if Mauser is gone, the Wright lawsuit against her company would collapse, but rumors of internal troubles at Wright Research are increasing.
- The Machines, finding that the Merovingian probably does have the very same "biological interface program" that the intruder, Halborn, was looking for, began a sweep for the program among the Merovingian's Exiles.
- The Merovingian began analyzing the program, finding it to be a baffling mix of complex Machine functions and "intuitive" routines. Even exotic analysts such as Ethereal 2 and Madame T. were unable to make headway in their examination of code samples from the program.
- Agent Griffin called upon Machine operatives to force a Pluribus Neo member to reconstruct, which would allow a Machine signal scan to obtain information possibly helping them track suspicious EPN ship movements. Operatives chmarr, Pascal, and Samael completed the Agent's assignment with great dispatch.
- Cypherites led by Cryptos captured the biological interface program from a Merovingian server, but the program somehow transferred itself away from their possession just as the Cypherites were counter-attacked by a Lupine force led by Ookami.
- Merovingian operatives testing the interface program's responses by attracting it into a simulacrum inadvertently triggered a storm of hostile simulacra, which had to be speedily eliminated.
- The Kid and E Pluribus Neo operatives pursued Machine programs seeking the interface program. The EPN operatives eliminated a Machine strike force, but were delayed by Malphas and his blood-drinkers when they made an attempt to hack into the Merovingian servers that the Machines had been attacking.
- E Pluribus Neo crews departed for an expedition to the mysterious Machine "no-fly" zone, while EPN and Machine operatives fought over Machine hovercraft communication relays. Pluribus Neo succeeded in hacking one of the two relays, but some Machine hovercraft still managed to track the departing EPN ships, and engage them in battle. Most of the EPN fleet was able to escape from the battle, and continue on their way.
- Zion came across evidence of attacks on Wright Research's network, quickly hushed up by Wright Research security, although the Wright security teams had not been able to find any evidence of the attacker.
- Machinists investigating riots in the city found Bluepills enraged by loss of their cable television and internet access, due to a mass failure of the leading consumer set-top box and home router devices, manufactured by none other than the Ouroboros Corporation.
- Merovingian operatives dug up the scientist Silver, enlisting his special knowledge in the effort to understand and utilize the biological interface program. Silver agreed to help only on threat of deletion--a threat the Merovingian has carried out in the past.

- Ghost and Zion operatives tracked Silver down and questioned him about his activities, including his involvement with recent security issues at Wright Research; in the past, Silver had worked closely with the company's founder, Danielle Wright. Silver denied any involvement, and escaped from the operatives, but not before they captured a device from him that led them to a hidden research lab in the slums, guarded by Exiles. A code scan of the area showed that Silver had been isolated there for several months, which seemed to support his claim of non-involvement in the Wright Research problems.
- Merovingian operatives checked on the progress of Silver's research, finding him engaged in a series of gruesome experiments on docile Bluepills. The operatives were highly skeptical of the usefulness of Silver's activities, and Ookami arrived to warn the scientist that he was expected to produce results.
- Agent Pace called on Machine operatives to hold Bluepills who were rioting at the Ouroboros Corporation's headquarters in Creston Heights, until their pod treatment could be sufficiently modified to pacify them. Some of the Bluepills were killed in the resulting melee, but the mob was eventually dispersed, and the operatives arrested rabble-rousing bluepill Enoch Horner, turning him over to Agent Pace.
- Zion discovered network equipment prototypes had been stolen from Wright Research. Checking on one of the prototypes, they found that the research project from which it originated had been headed by Danielle Wright herself. The former manager of the project said that it had to be abandoned after her death, because nobody else could understand the technology.
- The Machines attempted to contact the Ouroboros Corporation, but the representative they were to meet did not arrive. Investigating, operatives found Ouroboros' internal mail and paging systems offline, and their technicians completely baffled as to the cause.
- The biological interface program went missing from its server, and flitted around the Merovingian's network, causing a number of problems before settling into another mainframe. The scientist Silver appeared unsurprised by its temporary escape, saying that the program's unique code enables it to circumvent traditional security routines with relative ease.
- Cypherites and other operatives strove to deactivate code bombs planted by an extreme ex-EPN crew, Libertas Verus. They were able to disarm some of the bombs, defeating a number of the Verus' crew, including the captain, Uticensis, despite the crew having unleashed a dangerous flame virus at the first bomb site.
- While fighting off a Machine raid on the biological interface program's computer, Ookami found that the program had jumped from its server into the RSI of one of the Merovingian operatives, Nicks. Operatives evacuated her to a safe location, where they succeeded in coaxing the program back into a secure server.
- Cypherites seeking answers about Ouroboros' failure to correct its problems tracked down three of the company's executives: Edward Young, Pamela Bagwell, and Barry Morgenthal. Questioning them closely about Ouroboros' problems and activities, it became clear to the Cypherites that the company's own executives had no clue as to the cause of the breakdowns there.

- E Pluribus Neo, at the site of a civilian demonstration against the Ouroboros Corporation and its failed media distribution services, witnessed the killing of a demonstrator at the hands of an Ouroboros security guard. EPN evacuated the remaining civilians, and fought off aggressive resistance by the Ouroboros security team at the site.
- Zion discovered network equipment prototypes had been stolen from Wright Research. Checking on one of the prototypes, they found that the research project from which it originated had been headed by Danielle Wright herself. The former manager of the project said that it had to be abandoned after her death, because nobody else could understand the technology.
- The Machines attempted to contact the Ouroboros Corporation, but the representative they were to meet did not arrive. Investigating, operatives found Ouroboros' internal mail and paging systems offline, and their technicians completely baffled as to the cause.
- The biological interface program went missing from its server, and flitted around the Merovingian's network, causing a number of problems before settling into another mainframe. The scientist Silver appeared unsurprised by its temporary escape, saying that the program's unique code enables it to circumvent traditional security routines with relative ease.
- Cypherites and other operatives strove to deactivate code bombs planted by an extreme ex-EPN crew, Libertas Verus. They were able to disarm some of the bombs, defeating a number of the Verus' crew, including the captain, Uticensis, despite the crew having unleashed a dangerous flame virus at the first bomb site.
- While fighting off a Machine raid on the biological interface program's computer, Ookami found that the program had jumped from its server into the RSI of one of the Merovingian operatives, Nicks. Operatives evacuated her to a safe location, where they succeeded in coaxing the program back into a secure server.
- Cypherites seeking answers about Ouroboros' failure to correct its problems tracked down three of the company's executives: Edward Young, Pamela Bagwell, and Barry Morganthal. Questioning them closely about Ouroboros' problems and activities, it became clear to the Cypherites that the company's own executives had no clue as to the cause of the breakdowns there.
- E Pluribus Neo, at the site of a civilian demonstration against the Ouroboros Corporation and its failed media distribution services, witnessed the killing of a demonstrator at the hands of an Ouroboros security guard. EPN evacuated the remaining civilians, and fought off aggressive resistance by the Ouroboros security team at the site.
- Zion, investigating the ongoing rash of thefts at Wright Research, found a Wright employee who was somehow in two spots at once: a security lab analyzing the attacks, and the most recent break-in site. When caught and questioned by Wright security, however, the employee appeared to be a completely normal bluepill.

- The Machines, starting to take the Ouroboros network offline in an attempt to isolate the cause of the problems within that corporation, tracked a suspicious data stream to an Ouroboros employee, apparently hacking into her own company's network. She provided information leading to the discovery of a series of commands sent to the power plant at the company's Creston Heights headquarters--commands that had already triggered a condition that would lead to a catastrophic overload capable of leveling northwest Downtown.
- Silver's experiments using the interface program continued, with Merovingian operatives playing unwitting hosts to the program. It was found to be capable of transferring from RSI to RSI at will, or, as Silver put it, to "interface perfectly with human broadcast signals."
- A small group of Machine operatives reached the control terminal for the Ouroboros Corporation's Creston Heights power plant, finding themselves faced there with a mind-boggling security program while other Machine operatives fought off Ouroboros security forces in the plaza outside. Minutes away from meltdown, the Ouroboros hacker whose information had led to the discovery of the impending catastrophe reached the plaza's perimeter. Operatives escorted her inside, where she input a command that deactivated the overload process. She fled as Ouroboros security launched another attack.
- Zion found a lab technician in an office at Wright Research, after the building had been evacuated due to a security alert. To their surprise, the technician changed from male to female, then changed form several more times as it attempted to escape from the pursuing operatives. It eluded them for a time until being spotted, in the form of a combat simulacrum, several blocks away. Niobe ordered it left alone while a scan was run, but a number of overzealous operatives fired upon the simulacrum, terminating it. Although the scan was incomplete, Niobe said that they might be able to spot it if it reappeared and varied its signal again.
- Carlyne interrupted a social event being held by the Merovingian, demanding that the Frenchman give him the biological interface program. The Merovingian said that it would take some time to prepare the program for a safe transfer. Carlyne gave him one day to have it ready.
- Operatives located Carlyne at a forlorn Westview location, impatiently awaiting the preparation of the interface program by the Merovingian. Curiously, none of the Merovingian's operatives were among the group who came to question the intruder, and Carlyne, growing frustrated with the delay, advanced to Hampton Green, where he placed override programs around the Merovingian's Hel Club in what he termed a means of "encouragement."
- Zion tracked the variable-signal program stealing from Wright Research to a hidden lab, where they found a highly sophisticated network device built partly from the stolen equipment. By accessing a computer in the lab, they were able to shut down the "spider" thief program, which had been able to penetrate Wright security using Wright access codes, and the likenesses of Wright employees.
- The Machines froze the assets of the Ouroboros Corporation, notifying its staff of the federal takeover. Large-scale confiscation of Ouroboros data led to a single computer at an Ouroboros office, found to have a connection to the Oligarch network.

- A series of program terminations found its way to the Merovingian, manifesting in the person of Carlyne, an Oligarch who had departed the Matrix months ago after helping knock off his rival, Halborn. Carlyne demanded that the Frenchman give him the biological interface program, and then, to everyone's surprise, fell to the ground inert as a wireframed female appeared beside him. She coolly asked that the program be turned over to her. Thinking quickly, the Merovingian directed his operative to flush the program into the simulation at large, and then fled the scene.
- Silver was found by operatives, making his way--via a simulacrum--through a residential area in Camon Heights. The operatives surprised him by mentioning that Carlyne had been killed by the female intruder, but he took this as all the more reason to stay away from anything to do with the interface program.
- A spying Malphas, and some operatives monitoring from a ledge outside, noticed the female intruder inside Wright Research's Vauxton headquarters. When a Wright security guard came across her, she addressed him familiarly, telling him that she was deleting the last of her files. After some prompting, the stunned guard recognized her as Danielle Wright, brilliant inventor, ex-Zionite, and founder of the company, who had been thought killed by the Machines shortly after the end of the Truce.
- Ookami gathered a team of operatives to find something tickling her senses in Ashencourte: a Taskmaster robot, normally found only in the Zero One archive construct. Venturing there, the Merovingians found scores of robot bodies piled in the dusty wasteland. Ookami, thinking she sensed something she could not identify, became irritable and departed.
- Operatives escorted Persephone to the White Lotus hotel, where she asked them to fetch the Black Widow, denizen of the hotel's labyrinthine basement. The Widow was pleased that the Merovingian's wife had finally returned an invitation made long ago (Past event info here.), but Persephone shocked her former associate by asking if she could kill her. The Widow refused to think of such a thing, and Persephone left, saying it had been nothing more than a passing fancy.
- Agent Griffin distributed tranquilizer pistols to a team of operatives and proceeded with them into Wright Research's headquarters, where they swiftly disabled the company's technicians while Griffin searched one of the computers. Griffin indicated that files from Danielle Wright had indeed been deleted, but cautioned operatives against taking less reliable sources of information at face value.
- Machine operatives working with officer Vogt confiscated data from Cross Financial Logistics, a company that may have been involved in an Exile's financial scam.
- Shimada and EPN operatives obtained special codes from Merovingian operatives, and then lured the leader of the dangerous Libertas Verus group, Pileus, into an ambush, where they were able to capture him.
- Colt led Zion operatives on a data mining operation around the Hel Club, hoping to turn up information on the biological interface program. Ookami and her Lupines defended the club. When the Zionites defeated Ookami's force, she told them that the program wasn't there anyway.
- Cypherites investigating mysterious network issues at a downtown company located override activity at one of the company's buildings, and several dead Bluepills. Some of the circumstances suggested that something other than just overrides had been involved.

- Shimada and EPN operatives using Sati's Playground for combat practice were ambushed by Veil, who hacked the Sleepwalker simulacra there to help her. As the battle began to turn against Veil, the construct she had hacked crashed, allowing her a messy escape from EPN retribution.
- Zion followed a series of coordinates given out by the device they'd found with the strange Wright Research thief, encountering override activity, and then Danielle Wright herself. Wright removed the overrides the Zionites had found, and departed. When Zion regrouped at the device, Wright suddenly reappeared, destroying the device, which she claimed as her own work.

Chapter 11.2

Wright

- The E Pluribus Neo expedition to the Machine no-fly zone reached the outskirts of the area, but found heavy Sentinel patrols around the zone's perimeter. The Kid left old Zion, heading to the zone with reinforcements for the expedition.
- Zion found that the device they'd recovered from the thief stealing from Wright Research was tracking the biological interface program.
- The Machines confirmed the identity of the female intruder as the ex-Zionite researcher Danielle Wright, thought to have been killed by Sentinels shortly after the end of the Truce. Agent Gray was uncertain how Wright could still be alive, but confirmed that she is not a member of the "Oligarchy," and the old termination order for her remains in effect. Operatives sent to execute the order found that it would be no simple matter, as Wright seemed to have full command of Oligarch simulation override codes.
- Merovingian operatives encountered a cascading series of glitches centered on the white hallway connection to the Merovingian's chateau construct. Malphas said that the source appeared to have been internal, but undetectable, which suggested that it might have been the interface program.
- Zion followed a series of coordinates given out by the device they'd found with the strange Wright Research thief, encountering override activity, and then Danielle Wright herself. Wright removed the overrides the Zionites had found, and departed. When Zion regrouped at the device, Wright suddenly reappeared, destroying the device, which she claimed as her own work.

- Cypherites located Danielle Wright and scanned for her broadcast signal, but to their surprise, they found no trace of a connection at all.
- Machine operatives snuck into an EPN meeting attended by the ex-Machinist and recent EPN convert, Dislodge, hoping to obtain intelligence on the E Pluribus Neo expeditionary force that has advanced to the no-fly zone. Dislodge, realizing that something was amiss, made a break for it, but was forced to reconstruct by Machine operatives guarding the exits.
- Merovingian operatives searching the chateau for the source of disruptions there encountered a training simulacrum, behaving slightly irregularly. The simulacrum engaged the operatives in combat, but eventually stopped fighting, looked around, said "where," and fell inert. Operatives concluded that the simulacrum had been controlled by the interface program. Flood was skeptical.
- Cryptos summoned Cypherite operatives to the rescue of a Cypherite team that had been ambushed downtown. Veil, arriving at the ambush site on her own, found a Pluribus Neo operative there, along with the remains of the Cypherite team, and an override program. She took some time in relaying this information to Cryptos, who quickly had a search run for EPN activity in the area, leading to a facility where EPN was trying to decompile the data they had captured from the Cypherites, having to do with Cryptos' research into formulating a counter-agent to override codes. The Cypherites eliminated the EPN operatives and recaptured the data.
- Zion operatives on the trail of the interface program hunted down guard programs from the Merovingian's chateau, where the program had recently appeared. The chateau guards behaved oddly, and a data transfer from the proximity of one of them led to a home computer, with a message saying only "this isn't."
- The Kid and his reinforcements met up with the EPN expeditionary force and entered the Machine no-fly zone, seeking answers on the mysterious area, and the dangerous Oligarchs who seem to have a connection with it.
- Danielle Wright agreed to talk to the Machines, provided they would tell her why the interface program was created, and do it in the presence of their operatives, who would serve as what she called "witnesses."
- Merovingian operatives defending chateau guards from Zionites encountered Danielle Wright, who mentioned that Carlyne, who had helped Zion, had been more useful than he'd intended. Thinking over this remark, it occurred to the Merovingian that Wright could have been in close physical proximity to Carlyne in the Real when she somehow deactivated his RSI in the Matrix. The Merovingian dispatched a flotilla of the General's Sentinels into the no-fly zone, said to be Carlyne's home.
- Machine operatives and Agent Gray met with Danielle Wright in the One Zero construct for an exchange of information. Gray told Wright that the biological interface program had been created to assist in control and monitoring of humans who had been unplugged from the Matrix. Wright told the Machinists that she was able to survive the termination of her body by entering the Matrix as a "complete consciousness," totally independent of her physical form.
- E Pluribus Neo operatives, following a finding from their expeditionary force indicating an Oligarch connection to an Ouroboros computer, infiltrated the company and captured data that they hoped would improve their understanding of the Oligarch network's strange protocols.

- Zion operatives hacked their way through the white hallways, looking for signs of the interface program. Bypassing attacks from Exiles and one of the Twins, they reached a white room, where they found Danielle Wright. A conflict ensued, ending when Wright left, saying her target lay elsewhere.
- Merovingian operatives entered the Hel Club in response to a distress call from Flood, who claimed that Exile programs had attacked him there. The operatives subdued the inexplicably hostile Exiles, and found a cake vendor program in the club's upper level behaving oddly. The program moved, and even spoke, saying "i'm not." Investigation of the program was interrupted by Wright, who entered the club, looking for the interface program. Wright began using override programs to rid herself of the Merovingian operatives blocking her path, but a flood of cake vendors, duplicating out of control across the entire club floor, forced an end to the battle.
- Operatives responded to hostile override program activity in Chelsea, located just south of the Hel Club.
- Overrides and rumors of Danielle Wright and the interface program increased in Richland, with override activity eventually coming to center around Debir Court.
- Seraph directed Zion operatives to an apartment in the area, previously occupied by the Oracle, where they found a computer hosting a short message: "not here."
- Machine operatives overcame difficulties, including overridden programs, two disabled computers, and a lost black cat, to find Danielle Wright in Mara. Wright commented that, in the right hands, the interface program could be an elegant control mechanism.
- Merovingian operatives had to deal with dominated Hel Club Exiles and hostile Zionites in order to locate Seraph near Debir Court, trapped by an override program.
- Advanced fighter craft struck without warning in the Machine no-fly zone, attacking both the E Pluribus Neo expeditionary force, and the General's Sentinels; the groups retreated with heavy losses. EPN reported that the Kid's hovercraft had managed to damage one of the attackers, but was then shot down, and the Kid injured.
- Cypherites found the elusive operative who had been handling pill programs for Zion, and discovered information that could be used against him.
- Cryptos distributed prototypes of his anti-override routines to Cypherites, who tested them against overrides in the Mara area. Operatives reported only a few cases of the routines successfully blocking override effects, and Cryptos admitted that there was much work yet to be done.
- Zion, Machine, and Merovingian operatives clashed around Debir Court, as Agent Pace and Ghost, separately, led operatives in attempts to clear out powerful overridden programs.
- Zion and Merovingian operatives fought for control of the building where Seraph was trapped by an override code. Merovingian operatives succeeded in eliminating their enemies, and secured the building for the Merovingian.
- The Merovingian and his operatives interrogated Seraph about his activities, and about the override program. Seraph's answers suggested a larger plot behind the program's movements, and he said it was "remembering." Before he could be questioned further, a metallic coating appeared over his body, and engagement protocols failed throughout the entire Debir area. Without saying a word, Seraph battered his way through the operatives and past the override program, which seemed to have no effect on him. Once outside, he received combat assistance from EPN and Zion operatives, and jumped away into the sky.

- Zionites looking for the cause of bluepills dropping dead across the city found Danielle Wright, examining a bluepill whom she addressed by a reference number--0026:05:0149:032--before the bluepill dropped dead. A red pill trace program run on another such body turned up a pod location at which most of the adjacent pods were empty. Suspecting that Wright was systematically eliminating the people housed in that ring of pods, Zion tried to locate a survivor inside the simulation, but found their home guarded by Machines.
- The Machines surrounded the pod tower with a heavy Sentinel guard, and took one of the surviving occupants of the devastated pod ring, Imelda Kroller, into protective custody after discovering that the biological interface program had moved into her body in the pod, where it took over her somatic nervous system. As Wright closed in on Kroller inside the simulation, the Machines suddenly lost contact with her pod's reporting system; Kroller's RSI said "impossible," then vanished. The Machines reported that her pod had obeyed an unauthorized request to reinitialize her RSI.
- Merovingian operatives used the reference number Wright had let slip to Zion to track down Kroller's pod: the number was Machine pod serial format, with the third part, 149, indicating the ring in which that bluepill's pod had been situated on the tower, likely the same ring in which Kroller's pod was located. Persephone overrode the Merovingian's plan to hunt down the local pod caretaker program, saying that she, a caretaker program before her exile, would handle it herself. Persephone succeeded in taking control of Kroller's pod, forcing it to relocate Kroller to a safe place inside the simulation, but was heavily damaged by Machine defensive routines while doing so.
- The Merovingian, irked by his wife's headstrong behavior and apparent lack of consideration for her own preservation, received some good news from the General, who reported that his men had located and salvaged an unusual android body from the wreckage of an advanced fighter craft they had come across on their way back from the Machine no-fly zone.
- E Pluribus Neo operatives located and defended a denizen of pod ring 149, Daryl Chester, from Danielle Wright, but after a long chase through the city, during which Wright's progress was slowed significantly due to attacks by Machine operatives and others, Wright caught up to Daryl and crushed his RSI.
- Cryptos and Veil accompanied Cypherite operatives during some R&R at Club Noir, briefly interrupted by an EPN attack.
- Persephone had Merovingian operatives help her reach a Machine control terminal, where she made another attempt to save Imelda Kroller by manipulating the woman's pod controls. Machine defenses prevented this, however, and Persephone, still very pale from her previous attempt, was wounded by a Machine counter-attack, escaping thanks to valiant defense by some of the operatives. Afterwards, she and the Merovingian held an angry exchange of words in which he accused her of acting foolishly and irresponsibly, and she rejected his callous attitude toward the lives of the humans plugged into the Matrix.

- The Machines, having re-established their connection with Kroller's pod, located her RSI in Club Kaos. Kroller proved unresponsive to all but direct visual stimuli; eventually, operative movements caught her attention, just as Danielle Wright arrived outside the club. Kroller uttered the words "oh god," but followed the body of operatives outside. A savage exchange of hacks between Wright and the operatives followed, with Wright just managing to crush her attackers. Wright then approached Kroller and compressed her RSI, apparently killing her. Wright told the reassembling operatives that by doing so, she had released the interface from Kroller's body, back into the simulation, where she had no doubt she would catch it eventually.
- EPN operatives fought Cypherites, obtaining information about a Cypherite plan to put those bluepills who'd survived Wright's attacks on ring 149 firmly back to sleep, since some of them had begun showing increased signs of rejecting the simulation since the attacks.
- The Machines have their hands full trying to deal with her and protect themselves. The Cypherites, thanks to Cryptos' research, manage to compile a few prototype versions of their override immunity codes, and have some success in using these to protect against Wright's programs.
- The biological interface program's movements through the channels of the simulation gradually become less erratic. Strange text output is found on terminals across the city. This culminates, for the Merovingian, in his own (or the player's, anyway) terminal being overridden, with the words "Wake up" left behind. For Zion, who has received help from the Morpheus simulacrum, their search ends with a terminal displaying the words "Knock, knock" and leaving an open connection...

Chapter 11.3

Overrides

- The General shows the android body to the Merovingian, says they've completed retrieval, and that it isn't a Machine mechanism.
- Shimada is told that the Kid will be back from the no-fly zone soon; he was injured but will recover. Veil sneaks up on Shimada while she's jacked in, muttering something to herself about looking for the program the Oracle gave Shimada. When surprised by an EPN crew member, Veil pulls Shimada's jack, killing her, and escapes.
- Gray monitors Wright as she continues her disruptive search through the city for the interface program. Gray tells another Agent to avoid Wright, and to find the program.
- Niobe gets a "Wake up" message like the one from the 11.2 crits. This turns "Wake up, Neo," and then a constant stream of "Wake up Wake up Wake up..." Niobe is alarmed, and Ghost speeds away.
- The Machines can't detect the program themselves, but Wright seems to have some means of doing so, so they follow her, running into a disrupted computer, dead bluepill, Accelerated Suits (Hampton gang), and finally Wright in Maribeau, where she says she'll have it soon, and the Machines had better stay out of her way until then. She adds, "The Machines left a gaping security hole in their core programming a long time ago. They were only as perfect as the people who made them."
- The player scouts Wright activity in Hampton, where she's been disrupting things. With help from Nicky G., they find Accelerated Suits, and track down Manager, the Suits boss, in the Historic District, who mentions hearing about a Cypherite in Morrell who's got override countermeasures.
- In Chelsea, a scarred Kid has news of suddenly losing contact with a transmitter they'd left monitoring the Oligarch network line in the no-fly zone. He says the Oligarchs could be on their way to the Machine city and the Matrix. He's also determined not to let Shimada down. The Council thinks the interface program has some central role in all this, and wants it kept out of Wright's hands, to the player catches her trail in Hampton. The operator mentions that the program has used Trinity quotes. They run into Accelerated Suits and then Wright, who says that Zion should be helping her, since she's doing this to put the Matrix in mankind's hands.
- Machine operatives talk to Veil about newfangled Wright Accelerated Programs (tough Exiles/Machines with wireframe overlays). Veil points the player to a Cypherite in Morrell, Neglect, who is distributing anti-override routines the Cypherites, led by Cryptos' research, have been cooking up. Gray says that being able to resist overrides will be necessary if Wright's going to be dealt with. The anti-override routines are consumables protect against override abilities like Deceleration, Runtime spawns, and Signal Jamming for a limited time.
- Merovingian researchers find that the androids have "data structures similar to what we've found on the Oligarch network," so Flood sends the player to hunt for a data match at an Ouroboros office in Vauxton. The Machines took over Ouroboros a while back, and the player runs into Ouroboros Security and Machines there. Flood says the Machines must have confiscated the data, and sends the player to raid a Machine facility in Maribeau to track it down. The player is ambushed by a Wright Accelerated Program on their way. They capture the data from the Machines, and it does have similarities to the android's hardware. Flood figures the Oligarchs built it. He also mentions that Cypherites think the Wright Accelerated Programs carry valuable data.

- Still trying for the program in Hampton, Zion operatives get some static from a Decelerator and Machinists. They're also ambushed by one of Wright's new Accelerated Programs, and run into more of them around a dead Cypherite. Tyndall mentions rumors of a Cypherite in Morrell, wondering if it's related.
- With Wright closing in on the program in Hampton, Machine operatives battle a tough Wright Accelerated Program, then talk to Cryptos, who speculates on how Wright could be disabled: "As for what may happen if critical damage can be inflicted on her RSI, that I cannot predict. We know that she has co-opted the jack-in protocol utilized by the Oligarchs, and we know, from Halborn's example, that they were to some extent vulnerable both within and without the simulation. Wright, on the other hand, has claimed to be able to enter the Matrix without maintaining an exterior connection. How that could affect the outcome remains unclear." Gray comes through with the coordinates of Wright's position on a rooftop in Hampton (98 131 -216), saying that she's been staying around there, which probably means the interface program is in the vicinity.
- Merovingian operatives go hunting a Machine mainframe in the Park East Gov Building to get real data on the android. There's a tough battle, and they get some help on the mainframe from the Effectuator. In Center Park, the Merv says the data was interesting, as it shows the android was designed to be controlled by a human consciousness--for the Oligarchs to control themselves as a surrogate body? He also wonders what destroyed the ship carrying the android, and speculates that foul play was involved. Persephone is there, still in black and very pale.
- Overrides are keeping the Machines busy, which gives Zion a shot at checking out a burst of override activity in Park East, normally heavily guarded. They find a message ("Soon") which the operator thinks is from the interface program, but while tracing it, they're interrupted by a tough Agent, and the trace is lost. The operative is sent to Ghost in Hampton, who says that he thinks Wright's around there, probably high up, and probably with the program. He's determined to look for her. Tyndall says taking on Wright may be the only option left.
- Wright is found on the Hampton rooftop where Gray said she was, with some tough Accelerated Programs around her. She is eventually defeated, and when she dies a floating gold code ghost figure appears. Its details say "'It's beautiful...'"

Chapter 12

Trinity

- The Architect is in his TV room, with Wright, dead on a Hampton rooftop, on the monitor. He asks Gray if the (biological interface) program has been found; Gray says no, but they found Zion looking for it, too. The Architect frowns, then tells him to "prepare for our visitors."
- Ghost lands on a rooftop (supposed to be the rooftop pointed out in the coordinates at the end of the cinematic, Ikebukuro 630 9 -180), looks around, opens a door, goes down dark stairs, opens a door into a dark, mostly empty storage room. Looks around, doesn't see anything, and is just turning to leave as a monitor in a dark corner of the room flicks on and prints out "Ghost."
- Code falls down into a female form next to the monitor. This is the golden code character who appeared when Wright was killed. A halting conversation begins, in which Trinity (which is the name that appears above this character in this subchapter) says "I...didn't know," by which she meant that she didn't know she was a program.
- Agent Pace interrupts the conversation, her gun on Ghost, who steps between her and Trinity. Pace says the program (Trinity) can't survive there, and will be removed, but then she in her turn is interrupted by a bright flash, out of which gleaming male and female forms appear, descending to the ground. They have no clothes, wires, eyeballs, or hair. In missions, it will be found that the male (red) is "Helian," and the female (purple) is "Tesarova," and that they are Oligarchs. Helian is fairly straightforward and serious, although not as blunt as Halborn.
- Pace touches her earpiece, looks frustrated, reluctantly lowers her gun from Ghost's head, and stalks out. Helian looks at Ghost, and asks if he's going to resist, but Ghost says there's no need; H&T realize that Trinity has vanished, and while they look around to find her, Ghost makes a sudden unseen exit as well.
- Helian and Tesarova leave, and the room goes dark. A pause, then Ookami creeps out of the shadows--she's observed the entire scene.
- Ghost stands on the rooftop, looks up at the moon, and finally says Trinity's name.
- Gray sends Machine operatives to Akasaka, scene of the latest sighting of the program. He implies a need to find it before either the Oligarch representatives, Helian and Tesarova, or Zion do. Gray doesn't refer to the program as "Trinity," but the operator discusses it a bit. They find Zionites and a blank computer entry in her recent style (">_"), but nothing else, and are re-routed to head off Helian and Tesarova, who have arrived in the area, along with Pace. Helian and Tesarova are slightly bemused--although not really surprised--by a human operative working for the Machines. Helian says they're there for the BIP and won't be needing any help getting it. Tesarova says something odd about "the exciting ones" (operatives) "escaping" from the pods, and that this explains "why our entertainment's been so dull lately." Helian mentions they know what happened to Halborn and Carlyne, and that those two were operating independently. He says they (the Oligarchs) have "made adjustments that will ensure our safety from the compromises they allowed to our security" [partially an explanation for the difference in their appearance from Halborn and Carlyne: Helian and Tesarova are less transparent, and have no wires]. Pace seems a little relieved to have the player there to talk to the Oligarchs, and purposefully speaks aloud to the player so that Helian and Tesarova will overhear, saying that they'll leave their guest in peace.

- On the way out, Machine operatives encounter Satiare, a shoeless female Cypherite boss. She says it would be nice to pop "those pretty new bubbles of theirs" (the Oligarchs), and suggests that the Machines might even have something that could do it, but they probably wouldn't tell the Machinists even if they did, and wouldn't use it themselves. Gray summons the player for their report, concluding that Helian and Tesarova are operating as agents for the Oligarchs, rather than independently like Halborn and Carlyne. He thinks this might cause them to behave a little more levelheadedly, but says it also means the Oligarchs will be watching developments closely. After saying this, he very deliberately states that the Machines do not consider them a threat.
- Flood sends Merovingian operatives into Stamos to find the program (like Gray, he doesn't refer to it as "Trinity," but the operator talks about the identity possibility). They don't find anything besides a computer with ">_", but Ookami arrives, and "leads" (ie is escorted by the player) to a Manssen location, where they find Tesarova. Tesarova coos over Ookami, calling her the player's "pet," then gets down to business, saying that she just thought she'd mention that there seem to be others nearby who are also trying to find the program; while sort of playing her ditzy blond act, what she says shows that she's aware of a lot of what's going on: what the player's after, what the other orgs are doing around there--and she even takes a veiled swipe at the player's operator. With coordinates from Tesarova, the operator guides the player to a Guinness Lake location, while Flood mentions that there's also this "Helian" Oligarch around, and saying that they'll play Tesarova's "little game," since they don't want to show that they're on to her. Flood also refers to their names as "barbaric." ["Tesarova" is a Czech name, and "Helian" is a Chinese name. Tesarova's "game" in this case was sending the player to intercept Machinists, who appear, from their comments, to have been trying to keep tabs on her. Flood wraps up by asking the player to find four groups of programs they've lost in South Vauxton.
- Tyndall mentions to Zion operatives that Ghost found "the program" by "checking places he'd been with Trinity when they operated together in the Matrix." She sends them to get more details on the Trinity thing from Ghost, who is in an International District room with a computer (">"), convinced that Trinity was just there. He says he doesn't understand how Trinity is the program, but insists that she really is. He guesses that the two strangers he encountered (in the cinematic) were Oligarchs, and says he isn't going to let them or the Machines get Trinity. Tyndall says she trusts Ghost's instinct about "whatever Trinity or the program is now," and reminds the player that the Council had already decided (mentioned in Zion 11.3.1) to do what it could to ensure the program's safety. She sends the player to check a reading in Murasaki, where they find a message on a computer:

"How well do you know yourself?

Are you sure?

I thought I knew. But this_"

(The dangling cursor at the end there is a hint that this is probably from Trinity, although the operator doesn't make anything out of it.)

Inbound hostiles are reported nearby, and the player finds Machines and Machine redpills. Tyndall mentions that intel shows the Machines are cooperating with the two Oligarch representatives. After the hostiles are taken care of, Tyndall says that they could use the player's help in Shirakaba, where their teams have been hit by Machines while looking for the program; they've also started picking up override signals there.

- Still in International, Machine operatives deal with some searching Zionites, and are then sent to answer a summons from Helian, who's got a couple of his "Override Function" NPCs with him (whitish-skinned forms similar to Helian and Tesarova, with a mixture of hacker and MA abilities, pretty good accuracy and damage, and high viral defense), and he loans these two NPCs to the operative, suggesting that he's doing this to help the Machine operative deal with the Zionites (he refers to Zionites here as 'the other "Awakened"'), although the operator and Gray hint that Helian has found he actually needs help from the player. The Override Functions don't talk; H refers to them as "basic" combat programs. The player checks for enemy activity and finds Merovingian redpills. One of them rather obviously pretends to be a Zionite (sort of a play on the Merv knowing that what he's doing is probably going to cheese the Machines off, although he isn't so worried about it as to halt his Oligarch power grab). Gray says a Merv Exile named Azuna is known to have obtained sensitive information on the Oligarch's Matrix activities. Between missions, the player has to go find Azuna, following the mission's hint "northwest Downtown." Azuna is a female lupine with a teal mohawk, and she's placed as a collector NPC on the second sublevel of the Museum dungeon in Creston. The player has to kill some of the Merv-aligned lupines around Azuna (a little farther away from her are some Machine-aligned Override Functions).
- Flood says the Merovingian thinks "exploiting the Oligarch Tesarova's softer side" might get them some juicy override info, and sends the player to collect data from a contact, Azuna, for whom they'd spared no expense and skullduggery to get into a spot where she could get some dirt on Tesarova's Matrix activities. The player heads to the Downtown rendezvous, but Azuna isn't there; instead, there are a couple dead Machines. Flood is annoyed, and sends the player to look for Azuna in her spying location. She isn't there either, but some hostile Override Functions are. In a separate part of this same area, a certain optional and unspecified series of actions will cause Trinity to appear. She does /talkscared, saying:

"I'm not. I'm not what-- God! What have they done?"

Flood says that some checking has shown Azuna has taken cover in the second sublevel of the Creston Heights Museum. Between missions, the player has to kill Machine-aligned Override Functions near Azuna, and trade the tokens they drop to Azuna, who then hands over her intel.

["Azuna" is a corruption of "Asena," a "she-wolf with a sky-blue mane" in Turkic mythology, according to good old Wikipedia: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Asena>.]

- Tyndall sends Zion operatives into Downtown, following the trail of data that they think may have come from Trinity (Tyndall is still hedging a bit on the name, and here says "from the interface program--from Trinity"). She gives the names of Helian and Terasova, saying they found them out from "our sources within the Machines". The player finds a computer, activates it (it says ">Yes._"), and Trinity appears. She says, "I don't have much time. I don't know what...this means. Before... I thought I died. I was with him... I said goodbye. I don't remember...until-- I don't know how to make it make sense... They're getting close. I have to go."

Tyndall gives the player the location of the intruders, and although she thinks they're Machines on Trinity's tail, they turn out to be Merovingian Exiles. Tyndall thinks this is an indication that the Merv is trying to get in on the Trinity action, and hopes that his machinations with Halborn and Carlyne, which ended up causing a good deal of trouble for the Machines, will at least give the Machines some incentive to act against him. She ends by asking the player to look into an "unusual signal" and override activity in Baldwin Heights.

- Gray says the Merovingian's found out that Helian and Terasova have a "virtual space," and is planning to invade it; this should be stopped so that the Oligarchs aren't "aggravated." The operator mentions that the Merovingian tried hitting on Terasova to get Oligarch programs, but wasn't successful in his advances. Merovingian operatives take out some Exiles and gets a trace running through their computer. In this same area, a certain unspecified and optional sequence of actions will cause Trinity to appear in a side room. She appears upset, even angry, at the situation she's in, doing /talknegative as she says:

"I don't-- I didn't choose this. This can't be--..."

Following the trace, the player runs into heavy Dire Lupine resistance, but in the end gets data that Gray says is about access routes "through 'white hallway' systems." He doesn't have exact coords, but says there seems to be an entry point somewhere high up in north Union Hill. A dead Override Executable NPC was in the room with the lupines/computer. Executables are dark grey humanoids in the same bubble-skin way as Functions and Helian and Terasova.

- Flood says that thanks to the information from Azuna, the Merovingian has been able to meet Terasova. Hints indicate that the meeting has not gone well, possibly because Persephone found out about it. The player finds Persephone and Terasova together. Persephone is still in her "dark" outfit, but her skin is back to its normal healthy hue. Terasova says the Merovingian been showing her interesting things, including the android, which she identifies as "Carlyne's android body." She almost seems genuinely surprised about the Merovingian having it, saying she didn't think she'd see it again "after Carlyne let the podling woman steal his signal." ("The podling woman" was Wright--she jacked Carlyne's signal / android body when Carlyne crumpled just before she appeared as the wireframed woman in Chapter 11.1, which forced the Merovingian to dump the BIP/Trinity.) All Persephone says is "Only a human can be 'inhuman.'" Past them, the player finds the Merv, who rants a bit about Terasova laughing at his offers of power in the simulation. He sends the player to contact Flood for a plan B, which involves getting a trace through an Oligarch-occupied computer in order to locate H&T's Matrix power base. The player runs into some of their Functions, and then a hostile Override Executable, who can spawn a small swarm of additional, higher-level Functions to attack the player. Executables have a constant blur FX over their dark bubble body (this sorta causes them to flicker light/dark), and boosted defense and speed, but no actual combat loadout or weapons. Success results in coordinates of an entry point to the Oligarch hideout: 129 223 789, Union Hill. (This is a doorway at the top of one of those skyscrapers with the flying buttresses.)

- Zion operatives respond to an alert from Ghost, who's still been combing International for Trinity. They find him facing Helian and Tesarova, with Helian asking Ghost why he's going after the program. Tesarova coyly interjects that she thinks she knows (wink wink). Ghost doesn't respond to them, and whispers to the player to make sure that Trinity's safe, saying Sparks will have info for them. Tyndall gets the information from Sparks, which is a location where Trinity might have been hiding "from the Oligarch scans." They find an Override Executable there, as well as some Override Functions, but no sign of Trinity. Tyndall, who feels able to refer to her as simply "Trinity" by now, says she thinks they stopped those programs from finding her, but that stopping H&S is going to be tough. She mentions reports of the Merv having got access to some kind of area the Oligarchs have set up, and that they're picking up activity from his operatives on rooftops "at the extreme northeast end of Downtown."
- A teleport from the area referred to in the last missions takes the player into some white hallways, which eventually may spit them out into an interior office space [that is pretty similar to floor 77 of the Government Building in Park East]. It's full of nasty Overrides and Executables with special prizes. The only exit is a rotary telephone on a desk in one of the offices, which teleports the user to a public phone on the north side of the base of the SE tower in Park East.

Important Note: Developer / Game designer Ben Chamberlain, a.k.a Rarebit, announced that he was leaving The Matrix Online after chapter 12.1. It was also announced that the story would not be continued after this. Rarebit released his documents and notes for the planned remainder of the story thus far, Chapters 12.2 through the end of Chapter 14. Everything after this point is based on those notes and documents, and could be considered the "official" story of The Matrix Online. Considering this was the intended direction, and that no more story is forthcoming, it is included here for the sake of completion.

- Helian completes negotiations with the Machines. Helian now pursues the Trinity program, with help from the Machines, and opposition from Zion, EPN, and the Cypherites, who do not think that helping Oligarchs is the way to protect the System.
- The Merovingian, meanwhile, thinks he has convinced Tesarova to capture Trinity for him. He commits his programs to helping track her down. After the attack by Morpheus, he guesses that Seraph may try his hand to protect Trinity as well. He promises Tesarova that he will remove this obstacle for her; he has coded anti-Seraphic darts out of Seraph's pinfeathers, carefully collected over the years (there was an old Live Event with Malphas and one of the Seraphim about this). These are given to operatives, who hit Seraph with them in a Live Event. Suddenly weakened, he has to flee, but not before mentioning that preventing the Oligarchs from obtaining the Trinity program was not his intent.

- Even with Machine help, Helian is obstructed by the other organizations, but distracts them sufficiently for Tesarova to capture Trinity. The Merovingian is holding a party to celebrate the capture, when Helian appears, and Tesarova smiles at him: they've been working together this whole time. The Merovingian, aghast, plays the elegantly polite host, and offers Tesarova some cake, which she accepts. The two laugh, and disappear.
- Cypherites are relieved that the Oligarchs are gone. Machines are glad about that, and that they've taken Trinity away, too, but the Ouroboros connection is showing another increase in activity. Zion wants to get Trinity back. EPN is mindful of what the woman told them about keeping the encrypted program safe. The Merovingian is having fits about Tesarova tricking him, and is tracking her progress in the Real (the cake is a tracking program--this was revealed in critical missions somewhere around chapter 8). He finds what he guesses is her or Helian's base, but then her signal turns around and comes back.
- Helian and Tesarova reappear in the Matrix. This time, they're normal RSIs, not wireframes; they're using the Trinity program's interface, and jacking in from human bodies, not androids. This time they've brought hunter-seeker programs to assist them, though. They want to find the Oracle, and have her make some modifications to the program: they want it to be easier to switch bodies, and to interface with their backup mainframes, and so forth.
- Zion puts up a fight. The Machines aren't pleased that they've returned, either, but first try diplomacy with Helian. The Cypherites want the Oligarchs gone.
- The Merovingian, meanwhile, is back to work wooing Tesarova, although this time he's just trying to distract her while his Sentinels and operatives locate and surround her hovercraft. He's about to take it out when another, apparent bluepill, woman appears. She tells him that he won't get anything out of Tesarova unless he makes her leave the Matrix, now: the Trinity program was a trap. When he asks why he should trust her, the woman replies that he should know better than that. The Merovingian forces Tesarova to leave.
- The Oligarch hunter-seeker programs have been following Seraph. Seraph contacts Veil, telling her to bring the encrypted program the Oracle gave her into the Matrix, to a specific location. The Morpheus sim contacts EPN with the same message. Veil arrives first, but Seraph is nowhere to be found. She sees the girl, Sati, flickering for a moment in front of a computer, before disappearing. EPN operatives appear. Just as a message appears on the computer screen, asking them to input their halves of the encrypted program, the Oligarch hunter-seekers attack. A battle ensues, but eventually both parts of the program are input, and the hunter-seekers stop swarming in. Later, a Machine party sent to meet Helian finds his inert body.

Chapter 13

Uprising

- Machines and the Cypherites become determined to take advantage of the Oligarchs downtime to remove their control of the Machine core once and for all. The Machines allow operatives into mainframe subroutines, who encounter hostile Oligarch subroutines, in the guise of gray-suited "clerk" programs.
- The Merovingian sees an opportunity and orders the Trainman to access the Machines mainframe so that he can gain access to Trinity and gain leverage and power. He suspects that such action may garner the attention of the Oracle, who he suspects is still alive somewhere and manipulating things.
- Zion sees this as an opportunity to both get into the Machine mainframe and get Trinity back. They find that it is not as easy as they thought, though, and they find themselves blocked at every turn.
- The Trainman brings the Oracle back into the Matrix from the Machine mainframes, where she had been restored from backup.
- The Oracle is able to grant Zion operatives access to the Machine mainframe. Zion uses this opportunity to seek out Trinity.
- The Oligarchs counter-attack the Machines, sooner than expected, through the network and into the mainframe.
- While in the Machine mainframe, Zion operatives discover the coordinates for Helian and other Oligarchs' locations. This information is transferred to EPN, who in turn take a hovercraft fleet to Helian's base of operations to free Trinity.
- The Machines and their operatives form stiff resistance to the Oligarchs attempts at infiltrating the Machine mainframe.
- Zion operatives join the Oligarch/Machine fighting within the mainframe. Trinity makes contact through the network, but she's confined at Helian's in the Real.
- The Machines begin to gain the upper-hand against the Oligarchy routines in the mainframe.

Chapter 14

Freedom

- The battle within the Machine mainframe becomes fierce, as the Oligarchy subroutines begin to make headway towards the Source, which appear as golden hallways.
- The Oligarchs arrive at the Machine city and jack into the Matrix. Once in, they initiate overrides which white out the simulation's sky. This begins to affect the bluepill population and cause civilian casualties. As bluepills die in their pods, the Machines begin losing power.
- The fighting in the mainframe is approaching the Source, and the Machines find themselves losing ground. Machines begin to have control problems, as they can't remove the Oligarchy root control, and this is hindering their attempts at resistance. EPN arrives at Helian's domain, and finds most of his defenses are down. EPN is successful in freeing Trinity into the an access port and into the Machine network.
- In an attempt to force the Machines to capitulate, the Oligarchs begin shutting down the pods. Within the Matrix, the Oligarchy overrides are causing the sunsets to get longer. Sati attempts to fight it but has great difficulty. The Matrix begins to break down and is in danger of a catastrophic crash.
- The Oracle reveals to operatives that the Oligarchy's attack is more than just against the Machines or the Matrix, but against the human subconscious. She says that the Matrix is more than just Machine code- it runs on and is in large part shaped by manipulated human brains. In the end, she reveals it will take a human to free it.
- Trinity is able to enter the Source, but is unable to hack and remove the Oligarch's root control programs.
- The Machines allow a human operative to enter the Souce. The operative and Trinity merge, activating a black room which eventually turns back into the White Room of the Source. This act allows the Matrix to be reset. The Oligarch root control is finally removed, and the Machines are freed from fear of Oligarch interference.
- As a result of the cooperation, the Machines and Humans come to a new understanding and agreement. Any newborn humans will be raised in a new Matrix where they can shape their own surroundings, cared for by the Machines. The old humans will remain in the old Matrix, and a new era of co-existence begins...

Appendix

A. Dramatis Personae

Primary Characters

Niobe

Niobe has a fearlessness that imbues her with charisma. She is fated to be a leader in the postwar Matrix under the new rules. However, rules are often tested and broken, and people are killed in the process. A woman like Niobe cannot let that pass.

Zion's intrepid field commander directs her forces aggressively. Bearing the personal scars of past betrayals, Niobe places what little faith she has left in actions, not words.

Ghost

First Mate of Niobe's hovercraft, Zion's philosopher-warrior, though haunted by shades of the past, has proven himself to be a formidable fighter, and an inspiring leader.

Anome

Tenacious and competitive, Anome gets the job done--one way or the other. Whether it's the right job is another question. He is high-tempered, and prone to shouting when things don't go his way--which is often.

Anome wound up betraying Zion when he shot Niobe and his people stole the special code vials from the General. In consuming the vials, Anome and his people gained powers beyond any redpill. They called themselves Unlimit.

Colt

Promoted to Captain at the same time that his former Captain, Roland, was promoted to Zion Commander, Colt now plays by his own rules.

Tyndall

A tall Icelandic beauty, all cheekbones and snowy blond hair, Tyndall addresses operatives as "Warrior," and speaks constantly of vigilance and preparedness. She tries hard to imbue missions with nobility, and encourages you to be your best. Her manner is practiced and professional, but encouraging. She often ends conversations with inspirational phrases.

The Oracle

A program who is seen as a guide to the Zionites, the Oracle was the one to speak of a prophecy and an anomaly who would end the war by reaching the source. She has an ability to read future events in the Matrix, though it is somewhat limited, and she is reticent to give straight answers to questions about the future. She often claims that "we cannot see beyond the choices we do not understand."

The Oracle is the mother of the Matrix, and it was she who discovered the need for choice in order for the illusion to work. She realizes that the best way for both worlds to progress is together.

The Architect

His eyes hold yours by sheer strength of purpose. The precise intonation of multisyllabic words reveals an intensely logical intellect.

This man's eyes hold yours by sheer strength of purpose. His frequent use of multisyllabic words reveals a keen intellect, and perhaps a bit of an urge to show it off.

The designer of the Matrix.

Agent Gray

Selected to interface with humans who the Machines have determined may assist in the maintenance of the Matrix simulation, his normally aloof manner has been tempered somewhat by close interaction with Redpills.

Agent Gray was selected to act as recruiter and Controller for human beings that the Machines believe can assist them in controlling the Matrix. Like all Agents he is normally dispassionate and aloof, with a precise manner of speaking, but his forced dealings with humans have left him with somewhat more understanding of them than most Agents.

Selected by the Machines as the program in charge of directing human operatives in the Matrix simulation, Gray's extensive dealings with humans have left him with more character quirks than one usually expects to find in an Agent of the System.

Agent Pace

Simultaneously the most professional and the most beautiful-looking program most Redpills have ever seen, Agent Pace embodies the more...personable image of the modern Machine organization. But rest assured, her logic routines are calculating every possibility even as her warm Italian accent works its magic on the senses of susceptible humans.

Agent Pace embodies the more...personable image of the modern Machine organization. Rest assured, however, that her logic routines are calculating every possibility even as her warm northern Italian accent works its magic on the senses of susceptible humans.

A new kind of human liaison program.

The Merovingian

The Merovingian is the hedonistic crime lord of the Matrix. He is selfish, and self-interested, with "business concerns" that range from harboring Exiles to hoarding rare illegal codes and eventually taking over sections of the Matrix. He has remained in power through several iterations of the Matrix, and claims to have faced off with Neo's predecessors and survived.

The Merovingian's control of events in the Matrix is far-reaching, but not complete. He is still an Exile, and still must fear the Machines, though he would never admit it. His unique assets include a construct called the Mobil Avenue station - a place between the Machine City and the Matrix that programs can use as a secret conduit to reach the Matrix if they are to become Exiles. Expatriate programs often find themselves indebted to the Merovingian when they reach the Matrix, and must serve him in return for their passage.

In addition, some Exiles have given their children over to the Merovingian at Mobil Avenue, sending them into the Matrix rather than allow their code to be deleted in the Source. These Exile orphans usually end up at the L'Ecole de la Tour--an elite boarding school run by his organization, where Exile children are schooled in academics, culture, business, and combat.

Graduates of "the Tower" (as the students call it) often go on to become his most effective and trusted operatives; valuable assets to his organization.

The Merovingian is married to Persephone, an Exile who he once coveted enough to force to his side through trickery, but whom he now cheats on regularly. Their relationship has deteriorated greatly, but the Merovingian is trapped by his own past deeds into spending at least half of the year with Persephone in residence at his Chateau.

The Merovingian is not an easy man to see, but he can most often be encountered at his restaurant, La Vrai, or at the ultra-exclusive Hel Club, both located Downtown.

Persephone

The Merovingian's wife. She is a program and an exile as well. Her sensual attractions may have been tied to her original function; bodies in the pods had to reproduce somehow, and perhaps she prompted certain necessary physiological events. She is preoccupied with love in all its dimensions. Small wonder the Merovingian had to possess her, even if he has a wide-ranging appetite.

Flood

Flood assigns missions for the Merovingian. He's clad in flamboyantly chic Italian couture, his hair bleached, his features androgynous. He's sassy and sarcastic. He laces his instructions with qualifiers that suggest you're incompetent ("if you're able," "should you astonish everyone and get that far," etc.). He also hints that his servitude to the Merovingian grates, and that he has better things planned. His catchphrase: "Do we understand? We do."

Malphas

Although he is leader of the Blood-Drinkers, and the Merovingian's chief intelligence officer, no one can say what this proud, brooding Exile's goals really are.

It is obvious from this man's extremely pallid, almost corpse-like complexion, that if he ventures outside, he does so almost exclusively at the darkest hour. His extravagant suit, trimmed with scarlet, indicates high rank in the Merovingian's organization.

Malphas considers himself an aristocrat among blood-drinkers. When the "fairytale" version of the Matrix was reset he made a deal with the Merovingian, bringing many of the other "monstrous" Exiles with him into the Frenchmen's employ.

Ookami

One of the Merovingian's chief lieutenants, and leader of the Lupines.

To the uninitiated, Ookami's heavily lidded eyes might suggest the wiles of an arch-seductress. Her Lupine pack, however, knows that she assumes this expression as she imagines herself pouncing on her victim, burying her exquisitely sharp claws in their entrails.

The Trainman

This unkempt and wild-looking man ferries programs between the Matrix and the Machine mainframes.

Beirn

One of Anome's lieutenants, Beirn makes no attempt to hide his obsession with the Merovingian's wife, Persephone

After gaining great power from stolen cheat codes, Beirn was captured and preserved by the Merovingian's wife, Persephone. His obsession with her has made him a willing--and dangerous--captive. His human form having long since perished, Beirn is now more Exile than man.

This man appears slightly preoccupied.

The General

Eyes narrowed and teeth clenched, the General pursues his goal with brutal efficiency. A master tactician and keen analyst, he is seldom taken by surprise. The General was the Sentinel program who led the deadly Machine assault on the Zion dock at the end of the war. When told to stand down his attack on Zion so that the Machines could see if Neo would be successful in defeating Smith, the General refused, and was relieved of his duties. Frustrated, without purpose, and knowing that only deletion awaited him, the General and his loyal Sentinels fled into the Matrix.

The Kid

The first self-substantiated human, the young man known as "The Kid" was a fanatic follower of Neo, even as a bluepill. The death of his idol, and of Morpheus, left the Kid in search of a purpose.

Shimada

This young woman's slow, heavy accent and tendency to use flowery metaphors reflect the depth of her dedication to Neo's ideals of self-awareness, freedom, and peace. She has been a friend of the Kid since Neo brought him back to Zion.

Cryptos

This opulently dressed man radiates power and charisma. The locket around his neck contains a blue pill.

Seraph attempted to remove the Machine program that had been imprinted on this former staunch Zionite, but the Machine and the man proved to be inextricably linked. The resulting fusion radiates immense power of a code type never seen before.

Gold code forces his eyes wide.

Veil

This dark, statuesque, and beautiful woman somehow manages to appear elusive, even when staring you directly in the face. Try as you might, you can't quite get a good look at her eyes.

Neighborhood Contacts

Throughout Megacity are NPCs which are called "Contacts." Each contact will dole out five missions for you, often with a theme or storyline attached to them. Many of the Contacts are Exile programs, some of which are family. Contacts make for an excellent source of side-story material in The Matrix Online and some take part in the larger ongoing story. Here are the contacts and their side stories.

Lotus

Location: Jurong, Jade Room, club

Lotus is an Exile that has taken on the role of a lounge singer in the Jade Room, whispering sweet ballads and belting out tunes. Fans from all over the city come to the Jade Room just to see her.

Lotus speaks softly but directly, and a fair number of Redpills consider her to be a source of information and even freelance employment. Unlike many Exiles, Lotus has garnered a certain degree of trust from the Redpills that have had dealings with her. However, like all Exiles, she certainly has her own agenda.

She's never been caught in an intentional lie, but Lotus often does withhold information, and she has a bad habit of overestimating the abilities of those she hires.

Mission 01: Carry a Tune

This is fairly straightforward; I was tasked with carrying a music CD from Bouzerah to Minnie. Minnie, it turns out, has been seriously injured during a fight with enemies of Lotus, and _needs_ the power of Lotus' compositions, Track 9 in particular, which possess a healing effect. This is a very creative idea; it would be good to see more done with imaginative notions like this.

Mission 02: Change of Tune

In this Mission, initially quite similar to the first, you recover an illegal copy of Lotus' music from a server and take it to someone who needs its palliative effects. However, this copy has been tainted, so instead of healing it does something quite different! You must stop it before too much harm is done. This time, Lotus is angry! And who wouldn't blame her? It's as if you put on a CD labeled Tracey Chapman, and out comes Eminem!

Mission 03: Dissonance

You plant a bug (perhaps using the Sony rootkit!), and then find the thieves who have stolen the mix. You find them and get the tape. But others need its healing immediately, and you must quickly get it to them.

Mission 04: Suicide Notes

Lotus has heard of some experimental work being done with the neural network effects of music, and needs you to obtain some samples for her. These are then delivered to some other appreciative exiles, who don't show the congenial response you might expect.

Mission 05: Crescendo

This Mission must be a record industry executive's fantasy. Together with a team of Lotus' operatives, you must overcome a group which has been pirating Lotus' work. "You're the only one I can count on" Lotus told me breathlessly. There is a crunch with Blood Drunks, and many a /throat gesture. When the tape has been put on, one burly Elite Guard blurts "I like flowers" (apparently some mods in some games take their inspiration from the elite guards- go figure!). In addition to eliminating the pirates, you must reboot their server.

At the end the cryptic Lotus gushed to me, "You've exceeded my expectations again, Sugaree. There's something special about you, I just cannot put my finger on it". I wish I could say the same about this suite of missions. Granted, my expectations were so inflamed with anticipation that perhaps no one could have satisfied me. But more feedback from Lotus during the Missiones would have been nice. And more backstory would have been nice: why people were stealing her music, what her goals were, her relations with other exiles, etc. The textual allusions to music, mostly in the mission titles, were witty. If the designers had actually, you know, used some special music for these Missiones (just two or three five-second segments), the effect would have been delightful. Also, since the story brims with parallels to the music industry's efforts to squelch music sharing, some more direct allusions, ironic or heartfelt, would have been good.

Indigo

Location: Guinness Lake (Westview)

As the eldest and most powerful of the siblings, Indigo is the master of Club Dante, a popular nightclub and hangout in the Guinness Lake neighborhood. Indigo is interested in amassing and consolidating power for an eventual attempt to usurp his father's position. He has operated cooperatively with Dame White for the most part, and is generally believed to be "Mother's favorite" by the rest of the family.

Indigo often enlists his siblings as pawns in his plans, which they hate, but tolerate because Indigo can help them in their efforts to thwart the other siblings. This allows Indigo to keep his siblings at each other's throats and continually weak, simply by shifting his favor from one to the other (a technique he no doubt learned from his parents). Indigo has a frightening chill demeanor, and is almost impossible to agitate.

1. Interference

The classic first mish: go and step on my rival's schemes. But in this case there is a wicked family twist. Indigo's brother, Grisaille, is up to some couriering mischief in Indigo's territory: blitz it and get a package from the courier! There's some witty dialog from Grisaille's troops, and some engaging fighting even after you drop it off with one of Indigo's folks. And at the end, the great Indigo himself weighs in on your side: "Hm. It appears at least some of the stories about you are true." Well, thanks for the vote of confidence, buddy!

Notice, by the way, how even the run-of-the-mill interference mission gets much more interesting when there is a family angle to it. Imagine if in the future, fighting broke out among the Indigo family to get some artifact or please some person, and various organizations needed to get involved. When there're personalities involved, the adventure writes itself.

2. Spyware

Remember the package you just captured? Well, now you return it to one of Grisaille's men who is really working for Indigo. Got all that?

Your contact says "Let's see...medium height, weird clothes, kind of stupid-looking... yep, you must be the courier Indigo described". "Come on, take the package. Geez, maybe you really are as dumb as you look." Really, I could feel the love!

When I dropped off the package, Rocky, the recipient, paid me off by directing his men to shoot at me. Yes, it's great when we're all on the same page! This was kind of a disappointment, but Indigo was thrilled at how well his "brilliant plan" worked out, and crowed about showing it to his mother sometime. Like she has nothing else to think about!

3. Pulling the Trigger

Indigo has another man inside Grisaille's organization, and this one seems to be holding out. Our mission is to pay a courtesy call, and make sure he understands where his interests lie.

At the site, my operator told me he thought this should be an easy mish. I looked up at the objectives (kill any hostile guards) and thought differently.

And, really, how could it be otherwise? The contact resists, the guards attack, and I slay. When the dust has settled, the contact swears tearfully to never hold back on Indigo, and the data has been delivered. I scowled at him as I left so he knew I would remember him.

4. Pegged

By the way, did you know that the Guinness Lakes Reservoir is a strategic asset? And that Indigo controls it? And "that bastard" Grisaille wants it? Read on! So, once more into the breach. Go, fight, get data. But there's more. The data must be taken to a reporter for Network Media as an anonymous informant without answering her questions. Oddly, two of Grisaille's toughs show up in her kitchen (!) looking for trouble when you arrive. According to my notes, she was wearing a chef's stovepipe hat; perhaps she was the food editor, looking to transfer to the local news beat.... More oddly, she ignores them to challenge you about where you got the scoop (!). At the end, Indigo is pleased that Grisaille's latest daffy scheme will soon be tabloid fodder. Poor Grisaille! How will I face him when I go to the next Sirens party at the Succubus?

Lots and lots of hiking for this mish, never a good thing. But the ingenuity in Indigo's plan was laudable. And the reporter could be a fine continuing character, and become a mission contact in her own right, though as a bluepill, not as a Neighborhood Exile contact such as the Newsie. They have a natural competition, and there is a natural motivation for more story development.

5. Gang Rumble

You might think that there is no such thing as bad publicity, but Grisaille differs. Now he is on an angry roll, and has contracted with Amber for some backup to take the fight to Indigo. Grisaille's "Crow Bars" and Amber's "ASPs" will be the muscle in this. In response, the dour Indigo wants you to lead his folks into battle. So far, so great!! However, when you rendezvous with them, you discover that Indigo has neglected his logistics, and they have arrived without ammunition! Major d'oh! And they are looking to you for help!

This was exceptionally tough on solo, since the enemies attack in force, and by the time I killed one and got the ammo, I was dead. And again. And again. Eventually I slipped past the sleezes and skanks and got the ammo to Indigo's guys, who promptly mopped the floor with the Crow Bars and ASPs (mostly because I had already severely depleted their ranks).

Molly-B

Location: Moriah, Slums

Molly-B is the "sweet young thing" of the Elements. She presents the picture of civility, dressed in a flower-pattern 1950's-style dress. Molly-B has taken it upon herself to try to curb the more unruly behaviors of the other Elements, or repair their transgressions when she can. Because she's not as ruthless as the others in her bid for power, she is significantly weaker than the others, and thus her activities have not caused significant damage yet. Molly-B feels protective of the other Elements, as they do of her, in spite of their differing viewpoints. None of them can imagine hurting Molly-B, no matter what other repugnant business they may be into, and no matter what she might do to their plans. She is their conscience. That doesn't mean they won't strike at her powerbase, though. Argon makes her heart go flip-flop, but she's well aware of what kind of man he is, and would never consent to be with him.

1. Saving Blue

An interesting first mission: a self-actualizing bluepill needs to be protected. Then I groaned when I realized it was an escort mish! As I reluctantly stepped into the blue's apartment, she jumped up from her lonely Chinese takeout and Oprah rerun, and cried, "I've seen you before! I knew you were coming to save me! You are my savior!" I told her to take her time, that it was the last good meal she would ever have. Other than that I was encouraging, and got her safely to her destination, decommissioning a good number of Exiles along the way. Molly B. was pleased; I could see I had won her trust: "Thanks for taking care of that for me, Sugaree. You're a keeper." For sure!

2. The Prelude

"The Matrix is still an enigma to you. I can sense your inner turmoil, even if you deny it." I am the last person to deny this, and appreciated someone who could sense how I felt. I sighed deeply as I read through the mission description. I am asked to protect someone, who has an important role to play in the future. This reminded me a little of Madame T.'s missions downtown.

For such a pacific mission, this one started out with a bang.

While I was still reading through the mission description, I came under attack! And as I jumped away to heal, I could see a malevolent little red dot following far, far below, waiting for another bite. This did little for my inner turmoil. The escort component of the mission goes well, as long as you take care to kill everything between you and the destination before leading the principal from the building.

Eventually I got her to the destination, and a woman looking a lot like Molly B. took her over for me. I felt puzzled as I left, wondering how in a world where everything begins with choice, one could see the future at all. Molly B.'s warm voice interrupted my reveries: "Your actions shall reap rewards you cannot yet know." As I start doing my taxes this week, I'll bear this in mind....

3. No Go Boom

Argon has some characteristically destructive plan which needs Molly B.'s intervention. This mission takes the form of confiscating four detonators disguised as cell phones, each secreted within a different box in one of Argon's offices. This can be done without killing everyone there, but uncompromising slaughter does make things more convenient. When you are done at this single location, Moll B. sends praise your way: "Your services have saved innocent lives, Sugaree". And scored some coin and xps along the way!

4. Data Points

“Silver is so obsessed with the perfection of his creations that he often cannot understand the long-range implications of what he is building” So we have to disrupt them.” Escort a scientist associate of Molly’s to plant false data. Getting her there safely takes some serious escorting skill. On the other hand, once you reach Silver’s research site, it turns out that there are no guards and no locks! Go figure! And then when you are done, the scientists elaborately yawns and says she will find her own way out and no further escort is necessary. She didn’t have to say that twice!

5. Grab the Boom

After absconding with Argon’s detonators, now we return to finish the job and steal his explosives! But we are not alone for this mission; the bluepill we escorted earlier has grown into a capable 50th level partner for us (What? Three hours to 50? Someone ccr this scheming sploiter!!)! Interestingly, the building she is in is surrounded not just by the area’s indigenous Crossbones, but by a pair of Furies as well!

She turns out to be a mixed blessing. Twice she pulled me into fight I wanted to avoid. But on the other hand, she did some great buffing for me as well. And the mobs didn’t dare even look at her! Once you have her, all you need to do is get some cardkeys, and then break into Argon’s storage center and kill all his guards. But without injuring the bystanders. Molly B has a team who will move in to do the rest, i.e., actually get the explosives. I left my protégé in the elevator while I did the killing; I did not want to risk her being injured, and I did not want to risk her witnessing me kill any bystanders who got in my way.

Sammy "Lilac" Wien

Location: Lamar (Downtown)

Sammy is a big man with big appetites. He can often be found at The Vault, nattily dressed in his trademark color. His form, mannerisms and presence are only slightly out of place in his environment. Like the other buildings of Lamar, Sammy appears to be from a time past, a bygone era, when deals were sealed with a word and a handshake. Overtly, his history is pretty shady, and he seems to like it that way. Everyone knows who he is, and gives him a wide berth and a lot of respect. His methods are old-fashioned but effective, and his living enemies are few.

Sammy is comfortable in his neighborhood, and will typically try to hire Redpills to assist in maintaining his position of luxury and power. He is not above putting Redpills in conflict with his gang - he justifies it as a training exercise for his boys, and as a test of strength for the Redpill. Sammy is not entirely trustworthy, however, he will not endanger his position by sending known operatives of other factions into suicide missions. Instead, he may add a task or two to a mission in order to use a Redpill's special talents to his own ends.

1. Odd Jobs

His consigliere tells him I'm good and he needs a package delivered. Someone tries to cut in and hijack the delivery. Does this sound familiar, or what? Well, it turns out this is a test. I pass it and he says to come back for some real work. In case I had not noticed, my operator tells me he is still a very dangerous program. Thanks, but isn't this the kind of thing you should hear before taking on an assignment? The Operator seemed quiescent and passive for these mission suite; maybe he was off playing Second Life or something.

2. Cleaning House

The "real work". Almost half a dozen street gangs have been at each other's throats, and Sammy wants to put an end to it. As a preparatory step to arranging a meeting, he needs you to check out a site for the talkfest. Alas! It turns out a sixth gang, the Bookwyrms, is there waiting to cause trouble. Kill three of them and you're done! For a mission on Hard setting, I was surprised that so few were thrown at me, and that they waited separately in different rooms for me to defeat them piecemeal. Maybe this was the Classics Illustrated version of the Bookwyrms?

3. The Exchange

The Suits are holding a White Security gang member hostage, and the White Security folks have a disk they stole from the Suits. Sammy tasks you with arranging the exchange. I'll admit I have extreme nerves about anything resembling an escort mission. Happily, though, the White Security hostage is dead, and you don't need to escort him anywhere! Just kill everyone, take back the disk, and drop it off with one of Sammy's folks.

There were many neat touches about this one. I spoke with the White Security folks, and one looked at me and answered "Nice shoes", and then burst out laughing! (Nice foreshadowing, as we see at the end.) Sammy's cut-out at the end shakes his head commenting about these stupid squabbling gangs. I love touches like this.

4. Keep the Peace

Someone once said that the best way to achieve peace is to kill all the bad people, and that's exactly what you do here. First the Shades and then the Assassins. When I arrived at the third site, spattered with blood and smelling like a wicked hacker, the third group decided to be more accommodating. Sammy approvingly observes at the end:

“They fear you, Sugaree. That’s the most valuable asset you can have in business.” I purred in satisfaction.

5. Shell Game

Now the five-way negotiation is all set to begin! Three gang representatives are already waiting impatiently, and you need to escort two more to the confab. Strangely, this two-part escort mish is trouble-free! I kept expecting attacks from mobs, from lobby guards, from bystanders, from spontaneously-generating attackers, and from UFOs. But nothing happened. Until I got everyone together, that is. Then you discover that not everyone wants peace as much as Sammy does. Maybe they just don’t fear him enough...

Mandarin

Location: Lucero Point (Westview)

Second youngest of the siblings, Mandarin is a spoiled brat prone to rants to Dame White and Mr. Black about his siblings treatment of him. Neither of his parents really care, but it's a convenient excuse for punishing someone on occasion, and they know Mandarin is the most likely to tattle on his siblings when they are planning something against their parents. Mandarin is seen as rather a dim bulb by his siblings, but actually has a shrewd and devious (if intensely selfish) mind. He is absurdly fixated on creature comforts, gorging himself in rich fabrics that he is ill equipped to appreciate. He lacks even the rudiments of style or grace.

1. Angels and Daemons

In this first mission, once again someone wants rare data. However, "I can't spare any of my own people. I've always found you reddies to be an eager sort." We first seek Taylot Yamin, a librarian program who is good at tracking down things. As the Operator tells us, "nearly every string of inanimate code passes through her systems at some point". Sounds like a good person to get to know! I looked forward to a awesome networking opportunity.

It was not to be. I got to the librarian's apartment, but it was filled with attacking simulacra. No guiding hand is apparent. Yamin is nowhere to be found, but someone else is, one Elwood Meritel, or something like that. He refuses to emerge from the room until the simulacra are all gone. He's such a wuss! And he knows nothing! Yamin seems to have disappeared. The big mystery is twofold: Who killed the simulacra in the room with the wuss (check for a CD)? And what happened to Yamin? Yamin never turned up, and this absence was never noted by operator or exile, so I assume it to be a mission blemish.

We track down the simulacra to on Aitken, a 50th level master of coding. After I decommissioned his minions, he was very amenable, and agreed to take me to the storehouse where Mandarin's stuff has been placed. A few of the local thugs attacked us, but Aitken easily withstood them (a nice change!), and I easily dispatched them.

Aitken brings us to the storehouse, and unlocks for us the information Mandarin wants. One room is locked and needs the Pick Lock ability and tool, neither of which I brought to the party; nonetheless I was able to complete the mission; opening the door was not necessary for mission objectives completion. Once everything is over, then when I checked out Aitken, I had the option of fighting with him! I couldn't resist, and put a couple of slugs into him to remember me by. But I didn't kill him. I swear! As I moped my way to the elevator, Mandarin told me "You're not bad for a reddie. Come back soon and I'll have another job for you".

Mysteries: Where was the ostensible librarian? Editing blemish? Who killed the simulacrum in the same room with the cowering Elwood? What was going on with the locked room which was superfluous to mission success? What was the significance of being able to shoot Aitken at the end?

2. Broken Connection

One of Mandarin's contacts broke off contact in mid-call; see what's going on. Seems fairly straightforward. Oh, there's a data disk that he wants retrieved. Everyone you were looking for is dead, and Mandarin instructs you to go ahead and kill everyone left there. You find out that the contact owed money to the folks who killed him. Guess this explains why he was in a hurry for me to pay him, Mandarin glumly noted. So, anyway, I found a CD that has to be dropped off with Arachne. When I arrived, I mistakenly spoke to Ananke, who gave me the warm greeting, "Talk to Arachne and get out. We were busy, you know." And a few seconds later, "Aren't you done yet?" Arachne is much better when I give him the CD: “Awesome. You can leave. NOW.” Mandarin was a serene island of warmth: “Excellent! The artifact is almost within my grasp! Uhh, I mean, you did a good job”.

Good news! This mission ends up right next to the same building as Mandarin’s club!

3. Far From Home

More artifact mania. “My stupid, stupid, STUPID sister is nosing around after my artifact. Amber just wants what belongs to ME!” To distract Amber, I was sent to kill some of her men, and send the head of their leader to one of her chief lieutenants. Unfortunately, when you kill the target, and “get his head” there is still a head on the figure lying on the ground. When I arrived at the dumpy building used by Amber’s folks, I was surprised to see an Agent accosting me! Does Amber have contacts I did not know about? The agent asked if I had an appointment!! Perhaps it was just someone wearing an agent disguise? The advisor was impressed with my delivery: “What’s this? OH GOD! It’s Adzhimushdjka! You animal! What have you done?” I thought that would have been pretty clear. At the end, Mandarin was pleased. “Nice application of violence, Sugaree. That’s what I pay you for.” And we end up right next to his club again!!

Being accosted by an apparent Agent while doing an Exile’s bidding was counter-intuitive. So was the head on the headless figure, especially since all one had to do for the right effect was have the target fall so his “head” was inside the wall, giving the impression of headlessness.

4. Flutter Away, Little Bird

Mockingbird (the artifact magnet) has some information about Mandarin’s artifact of interest. As he puts it, “Mockingbird thinks she knows everything about artifacts. She’s all superior with her talk talk talk.” This is reasonably straightforward, and soon you end up with a business card. That’s it! The most interesting part of this mission took place at the drop-off. Two other exiles interrogated me. One asked me why humans reject the Matrix, and then followed this up with “Like it or not, we programs are a species capable of free thought and feeling. Think about that next time you take an action that harms the Matrix.” I’m a Machinist! Why am I getting this lecture! After the drop-off, Mandarin affirms, “Very very, very good. We’re almost there!”

5. Compression Artifact

The artifact Mandarin so craves is hidden in a crate at a warehouse; we need to find out which one. This involves two locales. The first warehouse eventually yields the location; the second yields the artifact. The exile holding it, Nightingale, reluctantly turns it over, with a stern warning that this is not over. It turns out that the artifact is simply some candy from a previous iteration of the Matrix. Candy! More detail, and a description, would have been wonderful for this: the color, shape, form, and texture, not to mention the taste! Oddly enough, once the handoff was done, I had the option of shooting at Nightingale or fighting with her. I took a few shots at her to let her know I wasn't scared. Then I ran off to give the artifact with a contact, who remarked, "After he is presented with this gift, perhaps The Merovingian will finally forgive Mandarin." The meaning of the mission title is not clear, unless it somehow refers to the candy?

Mandarin made no mention of this when he said "Thank you, Sugaree. I cannot thank you enough for recovering this artifact". But people often hide their true motivations, treat big things small, and small things big, so this was not a huge surprise.

Grace

Location: Furihata (International)

Grace was once a Warrior of Zion. Today she carves out an existence for herself in the Matrix, assigned the unenviable task of keeping tabs on the Silver Dragons. Commander Lock is concerned that the Silver Dragons' activities will shatter the truce negotiated by Neo, and Grace knows the group well.

Grace met an Exile named Long in the Matrix, and allowed herself to become involved with him. Of course she kept the affair a secret, knowing that no one would have approved. She thought she was in love, but Long wanted more than just survival. He used their relationship to find and recruit Redpills into his gang.

When she discovered his activities, their love turned to hate. Since that time, Grace has devoted herself to stopping Long and his supporters and will let nothing stand in her way, not even official orders from Zion. She has not reported in for some time, apparently having found another broadcast point to enter the Matrix.

Regardless of her past mistakes, Grace is a consummate professional and insists on the same level of professionalism in those she deals with. She is known to hire mercenary operatives of any association to carry out tasks for her.

1. Hell hath No Fury

Grace seeks to penetrate the Silver Dragons organization through you. You will achieve this through successfully completing a mission for them. This task is to kill an enemy of theirs, one Arabis. This is easily done, and you are soon accepted into the Silver Dragons organization. You have, in effect, been blooded. At the end you discover that Arabis was a well-known software security engineer, who specialized in the detection of malicious software. This was one nice touch- when resisting me he used hacker attacks. The Silver Dragons, as we shall see, have a pronounced sense of humor; my Dragons contact initially gave me a folder with the identity of my target, and I saw my own name! She got a good laugh out of this, and soon directed me to a nearby computer which held the information I needed. This was an interesting feature-Exiles with a sense of humor.

2. Inside the Action

This seems simple. Pick up a disk, take it to an exile with information Grace desired. The site for the pickup was a Zionist extraction point, a nice nod to Grace's background. Several redpills there, allied with Grace, shared misgivings with each other about the wisdom of this project. I felt reassured. Then I went to drop off the information with one Zyskin, a blood-drinker-looking sort of guy with four or five burly bodyguards. Prast, one of Grace's staff, was there to help. After I dropped off the information and prepared to leave, she revealed she was a captive now, and appealed to me for help. I did, and soon all lay waste around me. With this part of the mish screwed, I was told to drop off Prast, and took her to a safehouse. "Safe" house might not be the right word for it though, since the folks there started speculating on the terrible things Grace had in mind for those who screwed up missions.... "Hah! I heard that she's going to make her clean her hovercraft with a toothbrush", and "Hah! She's in for a world of hurt, that's for sure!" I bid Prast a fond farewell, put her out of my mind, pocketed my consultant's fee, and was on my way.

3. Second Time Around

After intervening to rescue Prast last time, there seems to be some uncertainty in the Dragons about where my loyalties lie. In this mission, I kill an enemy gang leader, making sure to leave a witness so the word gets around. This proved easier than I thought; even my operator commented that maybe this guy just sucked. Grace tells us that this gambit seems to have worked and my star with the Silver Dragons is on the rise.

4. Dark Side

This mission is billed as an effort to "delve deeper into the Silver Dragons' network". It involves having me "distribute and maintain network connections for the Silver Dragons secret network". Sounds like a good deal, but it translates into helpdesk work! This has two parts. In the first one, all you have to do is mix around parts from each of three computers to re-establish their network connectivity. There are two "perimeter monitor devices" and one "computer parts". The Silver Dragons may know a lot about networking, but when it comes to networks, they're hopeless! Perhaps they disdain such "mere hardware" issues and leave them as an exercise for others.

In the second part, I swing by another Silver Dragons site, and as I started to examine the ailing hardware, the elite guards and pale blood-drinker there all attacked me! They're Black Moons, and held me responsible for killing their leader las time! Eventually I put them down, and went back to my original mission, checking their computer. Its message was a dull, blinking "connection missing". You can say that again!

I was puzzled, to say the least. So was Grace, who rambled disjointedly as she counted out my consulting fee. She looked confused and said, "I didn't think any of the Black Moon gang would find you. We'll have to be more careful in the future. But I don't know what the Silver Dragons will think of all this". We will find out soon enough!

5. Password: Dragon

It seems that I have been promoted again, at least this is what Grace tells me. On the strength of this, she sends me to obtain a password from Long, which will give her access to their system. Simple enough, and builds on the goals she shared in the very first mission.

When I went to meet the Dragons, I talked to the ones there. One said, "You're here for the password? Ah, good!" and started laughing and laughing. And did not stop. This gave me cause for concern... Sure enough, Long springs his trap as soon as I talk to him, and a long fight ensues. At its conclusion, they are all dead, and Grace is furious: "Grr! Tricked me again! I'll show him! Someday, somehow, I will get my revenge!" Classic! At the end she gave me some level-50 clothes as a consolation prize, so it could have been worse. However, it could also have been better. Frankly, considering the loss of resources across these five missions, one might think that Long came off much the worse for wear. But Grace has a new reason for the anger and jealousy which propel her. As if she needs one!

Argon

Location: Achan (Richland)

Argon is an Exile who likes to think of himself as a careful planner and strategist, but in truth he is somewhat rash in his moves, pushing forward out of hubris and ego more than anything else. Under his expensive suit, he is truly just a thug. However, do not take that as an excuse to underestimate him. Argon has no compunctions about doing whatever is necessary to gain more power and influence over the Matrix.

As a program, Argon was a controlling routine. As an Exile, he still expects to be obeyed, and is known for his terrible rages when matters fail to go his way. He is jealous and possessive of his paramours, which has proved to be a vulnerability in the past. In the end, though, Argon cares for no one more than himself.

Mission 1. Bug the Broad

When we meet Argon for the first time, he tells us, “Listen up, Sugaree. I heard you been helping the other Exiles; well, I’ll let you know right now: you’ve been dealing with chumps. I’m the real deal, right?” And all his Missiones underline the image of an aspiring Al Capone, seeking respect and validation. Here, in this first one, we must plant a bug in Beryl’s network because Argon worries about her and Anti-M (as well he should!). The entry and execution is straightforward, and at the end, as I was counting my info, he burst out, “You actually did it? Ahh, I mean, yeah, great work there, Sugaree!”. Thank for the confidence, bro!

Mission 2. The Phone List

Argon informs me at the outset that he worries that Beryl has been two-timing him. The distrustful gangster wants to know about Beryl’s social circle and socializing, which requires you to retrieve a copy of her contact list. Most people would hack for this, no? But Argon wants the personal touch, and perhaps some intimidating visuals as well. Otherwise, a break-and-enter. Having done all the Missiones for Beryl and Anti-M, I could have just told him, but figured it would be better for him to find out for himself.

Mission 3. Dig Up Something Good

Exile Digger is on Argon’s blacklist, and your task is to steal three files from him. Not all the files are obviously accessible, but otherwise the Mission is a standard break-and-enter. This is a notable Mission because it is the only time we learn of Argon’s connections with other major Exiles. Tragically, we cannot read the contents of the files, and I was left dying to know what was in them. Argon’s praise – “Hey, that’s great, Sugaree. Top job.” – did little to satisfy my consuming curiosity.

Mission 4. Sending a Message

Argon continues to feel the need to assert his disapproval of his rival. This time, he asks you to assault one of her offices and kidnap a beancounter. For this he wants someone who cannot be traced, and that's you. Plus, Argon informed me, "he's just a pencilneck and he knows better than to cross someone like you." Yeah! What he said! This is an escort Mission, and you have to keep your ward alive. It took me more than one try.

Mission 5. Set Her Up The Bomb

Now it's time to "get serious" with Anti-M, says Argon. He then tasks you with planting a bomb in one of Anti-M's operation centers. Nothing mind-bending: you travel there, deal with some guards, and plant the explosive.

These Missiones are straightforward, bread-and-butter. We learn little of the relations among the exiles other than from his suspicions. And though Argon clearly styles himself "the real deal", it's not clear at all who he works with or against. It might be that these five Missiones were originally viewed as preliminary, and once I had proven my worth from small domestic chores, he would accept me into the operations of his professional activities. But this has not come to pass. Basically, he seems like a thug. In essence, Argon's Missiones are lightly-adapted standard Missiones, still a diversion from the standard ones while helping people powerlevel.

What could have made these even more enjoyable? Well, I had already done the Missiones for his girlfriend and rival before contacting him. If the AI detected this and reflected this in its responses, it would be even better. More of a departure from the standard Mission format would have been nice. More on Digger and the contents of the files would have wonderful. And some responses from Argon reflecting his surroundings in Club Duality would have been great, something like inviting me to have a drink, talking expansively about his business, etc. Standing impassively in the purple mists of Club Duality, he could have styled himself like the Merv, etc.

Silver

Location: Achan, Slums

With eponymously colored hair, Silver is the most focused among the Elements, valuing order and $information above all else. Silver is not an imposing physical specimen, looking like a bit of a nerd, but he's a self-possessed man with a distinct air of superiority over the dullards he's surrounded by. Silver is often called on by the other associates when they need $information about something, or require something very complex to be figured out fast. His prices are steep indeed. Silver is engaged in several lines of Matrix-research that require field tests to be carried out. Typically, this requires the movement of specific pieces of code to certain places for execution, e.g. "Take this umbrella to the top of the Network Media building. Open it. Then close it and return it here to me. You couldn't understand the reasons if I told you, Meatshadow."

1. Meet the Meat

Like most first mishes, this one is simple, if not exactly easy. Silver is "studying the field density fluctuation of the Matrix and how it is affected by 'free roaming redpills' like you". To measure this, he wants you to pass through an area and kill everything there. Works for me! As an afterthought, he genially sneers, "Even you ought to be able to handle that." I guess he has been talking to the Weaver.

After our powerful team laid waste to every single Exile there, Silver nodded curtly, "Passable performance, meat. I suppose I can use you again." "Curb your enthusiasm," I said.

2. Software Run

This second mission is actually one of his easiest. You have to run in, insert a virus, and run for your life. "It's very easy so you should be able to do it," Silver reassured me, adding, "Oh, and don't get killed by the guys that run the place."

As instructed, I ran in, inserted the virus in the computer in the guards ready room (the one right next to the elevator), leaped past the guards over the counter, ran for the elevator, and died one foot from it, five hot slugs in my back. But we got credit for a success, so what's not to like?

3. For Tat

In this most fascinating mission, Silver needs help in a deal with the cool, bewitching Hypatia from downtown. She wants someone killed, and thought of Silver, who thought of us. In exchange, she'll help him with some research on some unusual code frags which have appeared recently. The hit is straightforward. The most interesting thing was meeting Hypatia. She complimented us on work well done, and invited us to look her up in Chelsea if we were looking for work.

Silver was characteristic: "At least you didn't drool on Hypatia's feet". I think he is falling in love with me.

4. Mercury Sabotage

Silver hates Mercury as much as Mercury hates him. He thinks that the “lesser inventor” has been scheming to steal his research, and wants to discourage this interest. A nice virus, nicely inserted, does the trick. And for this mish, we just had to run in, pop in a disk, and run for our lives. Our powerful band was able to do this.

5. Just a Peek

But Silver is not done with Mercury yet. Now he tasks us with stealing one of his prototypes. Not that he needs it, mind you, he is simply “curious”. We found the location, we broke in, we killed all the guards, we got the prototype, and we dropped it off with a huffy, impatient aide of Silver’s. While we were running around, Silver barraged us with reflections. About how the Truce is a bad thing. About how scummy humans are. About how unclean he feels to be working with us. I can’t tell you how encouraged I felt, and how much it made me want to please him.

And when it was all over? Silver looked up from approving our timesheets, sighed, and barked: “You know, I’m sick of working with meat; it is more trouble than it is worth. Why don’t you go bother someone else?”

And that was it! He turned away and went to optimize a database or something. Love us and leave us, why don’t you? At least his check cleared.

Amber

Location: Rogers Way (Westview)

As one of the middle siblings, Amber knows she is unlikely to ever gain the highest position, but she is committed to making sure she's there, to stand at the right hand of whoever wins the battle and siphon off the spoils. To this end she is exceedingly cautious, and craves all the knowledge she can about her siblings' operations. Amber always looks good. She is a smooth talking sycophant who excels at talking out of both sides of her mouth at once. She is willing to deal with any and all of her siblings, working both ends against the middle for Indigo or one of her parents, but always for herself in the end. She's working toward getting on Gray's good side, but is coming to the conclusion that he doesn't have one.

1. A Suspicious Character

Rogers way is Amber’s turf, and some guy has been showing too much silent interest in it. This is seldom a positive development, and she wants you to investigate him and his motivation. He's not hard to find. But when you do enter his apartment, he says, "about time you got here. Tell Amber her response time sucks." Quite the surprise! Amber is not expecting this and directs you to take the disk to have it checked out.

When this is done, there is indeed more to him than meets the eye, as Amber confirms. She seems impressed. Your patron does not share the results, and you complete this mission without ever knowing who this guy is or what he is all about.

2. A Safe Place

Amber has an escort mish for you: an informant needs to be taken to a safe place. But the informant, aptly named "Craven", refuses to emerge from her bedroom until you have killed everything else there: some big, bad vampires. Then, there is a long, eventful hike to the safehouse, with many mobs to slay. And when you get her to the safehouse, filled with Amber's ASPs? She warmly responds, "What are you waiting for, a tip?"

I love this job!

3. Second Try

The bluepill we escorted last time is now missing, and needs rescue and escort. This starts with finding a dead exile, whose picture leads us to another location, where the straying informant is found. Both locations are those weird, maze-like buildings in Westview that are so trashy and filled with junk. I always get lost in them! Her escort involved much, much killing of local mobs. Paradoxically enough, these mobs you have to kill are the exact same mobs (ASPs) that Amber supposedly controls. How curious! Anyway, eventually you get her to the protection safe house again and you are done. She adds, "Look I know you have some sort of weird crush on me, but I want you to leave me alone." With pleasure, my dear!

4. The Final Clue

Amber continues to fret about unfriendly efforts to cut into her turf. She needs to know who is behind this. The clue is found on a CD which is held by a band of fierce hackers. Not easy to take them all down, and I had to withdraw a few times to rest up. Eventually the CD is procured and delivered to Shingo, one of Amber's lieutenants, who hangs out surrounded by Level-51+ level security staff. Glad I didn't have to fight my way past them! Amber is pleased with the fast, efficient work. I was pleased to be alive.

5. Payback Time

Based on the last mission's CD, Amber has determined that her mischievous brother Mandarin was behind the attacks, and wants payback, through a special virus placed in his systems. Getting into the room with the target computer involved a lot of gun fighting. I could overhear two guards speaking disparagingly of Mandarin being clueless “as usual”. Then I had planted the virus, and was fleeing for my life. This final, finale mission was surprisingly straightforward, not to say simple. Not that I complained!

And with this, all my Westview missions were over! This region ended well, with warm praise from Amber, claiming that “I won’t forget you, Sugaree; you’ll always have a home in Rogers Way.” How nice it would be if after you have completed all the region’s missions, the mobs of the last Exile lord would leave you alone, or even come over and /dap you! But I appreciated the warmth, after so much callous, crude behavior from the others.

Hypatia

Location: Chelsea (Downtown)

Hypatia believes that information is power; and that the most valuable information can best be gleaned by reading between the lines. She has spent her existence pouring through book after book, looking for any scrap of information that might reveal more about the nature of the Matrix and how to gather information to increase her own power. Consequently, she guards all of her secrets and her turf jealously. Her unimposing appearance belies her greedy and vicious nature.

It is rumored, however, that certain Exiles who have a relationship with Hypatia can gain access to the information repository for a quick scan. Redpills and Exiles lucky enough to make it to the Library's restricted stacks should not overstay their welcome.

It is further rumored that Hypatia maintains contacts with the owners or employees of many bookstores in the city, to keep her apprised of new or used books that arrive in their shops. Many of her contacts are also members of the Bookwyrms, but maintain a low profile and will contact Hypatia before taking any action against Zionites or Exiles.

1. Past Due

But enough of me! Like so many people, Hypatia lends books and has trouble getting them back. Of course, it's not the book is important or anything, it's just, you know, the principle. So she tasks you with getting it back at all costs, killing anyone who resists, and leaving one witness to spread the word. Just, you know, on principle. Every bibliophile out there will warm to this.

In this mish we learn of a rogue group of Exiles who style themselves “The Book Club”. They’re former academics, though you sure couldn’t tell from looking at them. Their leader claims the book is awesomely valuable and rare, and no way is it going back! Well, a polite word and a Devastation Field gets you more than just a polite word. The volume is then returned to another of Hypatia’s flunkies; apparently she does not want you to know its ultimate destination: her kitchen table. The Exiles here have some great lines, and some pathos at the end. A tough, good mish on solo.

2. Thieves in the Night

This mish is deliciously ironic. After recovering a notebook for the Coroner just a few days ago, now I’m tasked with stealing one from him! Hypatia is curious about his “Frankenstein” experiments on reviving bluepills, and would like to study his journal. Along the way, you might as well kill his scientists, she adds as an afterthought. Note to self: stay on her good side.

3. The Wrong Hands

An exile named The Collector has a book with dangerous information; Hypatia tasks you with replacing it with a safer, dumbed-down ersatz copy, and destroying the original.

We pick up the ersatz book from an Exile counterfeiting expert who is currently trying to copy herself. One copy gravely asked us “Do you like pie?” Then Hypatia, apparently as an afterthought, directs us to kill everyone at the site with the book, “to make it look good”. So on we go to slay and mislead for our patroness. But in the end she praises us, saying we have made the Matrix a better, safer place. But be careful to destroy the real book, and place the genuine fake back. Or something like that.

4. Pre-emptive Action

This mission is uncharacteristically simple. Hypatia has learned of a plan to attack her (so she says, anyway), and directs us to disrupt it. This involves two groups of Exiles, all of whom must be wiped out. Again, carnage and blood; in the end Hypatia is quietly gleeful that her books are safe. Inside a safe, we found a gold coat!

5. In Pursuit of Knowledge

An Exile named Alvarez has infuriated the phlegmatic Hypatia. He not only acquired a rare book of Exile lore which she does not have, the fiend destroyed it before she could read it!! But he memorized the content, or at least all the important parts. We must guide him to a meeting with Hypatia so they can have a conversation about this.

This is more complicated than it seems. When we go to get him, we find he has been kidnapped. Then we fight our way to him, only to discover he has been killed. But Hypatia is nothing if not resourceful, and she will not be denied his knowledge....

Intelligent and bookish though Hypatia is, she seems like one of the easier ones to manipulate. Her thirst for knowledge would be easily kindled and directed against almost anyone. It is best to satisfy her when you run her missions; I would hate for my name to be written down in the wrong book of hers.....

Yttri

Location: Tabor Park, Slums

Yttri was a late addition to the Elements, a subroutine added in the later days before their flight to the Matrix. She is an exotic woman with unique viewpoints. Think of her as the exchange student thrown into the Sorority House. Some of the other Elements resented the attention she garnered at first, others sought to take advantage of her, but nobody really understood her. Yttri is given to long, thoughtful pauses in her conversations, and insightful comments that imply she knows a great deal. She has settled into a comfortable existence on the fringes of Bluepill society, as a street musician in Tabor Park. She is the one other Element most in touch with Ruth, but she's had cause to run up against Argon in the past, as he's tried to intimidate her.

1. Code or Coda

Anyway, Yttri elaborates on a theme I first noticed with Lotus: that music can be a powerful behavior modifier. And she likes to steal things. In this standard break-and-enter, Yttri wants the only existing copy of a new, marvelous composition. The standard enemies opposed me, and were dealt with in the standard manner. Two ways to get it, find the combination in a desk for the safe, or hack a computer to disable the safe. To be on the “safe” side, I did both. Why the manuscript had to be purloined was unclear, since documentary materials have been clandestinely captured by cameras for almost a hundred years. Maybe she was also sending someone a message? Maybe she collects artifacts, like the Digger or Hypatia? We do not know. Walked in past a fidgety Bell Madonna, little knowing how soon I would be feeling fidgety myself, in the next mission.

2. Free Music

One thing leads to another, after savoring the work of this composer, Yttri craves more. Not only that, she wants to free his mind. This entails grabbing him and escorting him to a Zionist base for the Pill. And naturally, everyone for a kilometer around wants to frustrate this. For example, as I waited inside with the composer, two 51-level elite guards outside kept firing at me _through_ the door, and shrugged off my repeated devastation fields and code nukes. So, after one failure, I went out through the back door, obliterating every Bell from here to kingdom come, and got the composer safely to Zion. What memories it brought back, of other escort missions from hell!

3. An Instrumental

Yttri seemed quite serious about this; the air hissed with tension as she explained in a low, menacing voice. An instrument of hers has been stolen, and “I am charging you with its return. Do not fail me in this”. It reminded me of Hypatia’s first mission, where she wants you to retrieve a lent book. Unlike your sponsor, the target is no wilting aesthete, and within ten harrowing seconds I was on death’s door. I was tempted to buy a ukulele from a street vendor and say “Oh, he decompiled it and recompiled it, and this is how it came out”, but I persisted. It turns out that the malefactor has the instrument on his person, so it’s more likely to be a kazoo than a Stradivarius!

4. Blood Music

Remember the Coroner? The creepy guy from downtown? With the spooky experiments? Well, he’s back, and in possession of a street performer with some information about blood drinkers which Yttri wants. I paused before busting in, thinking of past missions, and many deaths, mostly mine. They were still unsettling. I came across a virus and on a whim put it into the station’s mainframe; the staff took a dim view of this. At the end I staggered to a phone booth and uploaded, and this is what I got: “The data is very interesting...very interesting indeed. Thank you.” Big deal! The Bells were much in evidence here; several times I passed two Bell Madonnas standing mournfully over a fallen third.

5. Beat the Matrix

The freed composer has made a composition for Yttri, and now some of Tick Tock’s men have taken an interest in it and are searching for it. For someone with Tick Tock’s quiet obsessions, this seems out of character; maybe I don’t know him as well as I think. The task itself was simple: kill three foes and open one safe. At the end Yttri murmurs about how the works of a master are beautiful to behold and she is looking forward to examining this one. The thing is, composers seldom venture into hardware construction, so it's hard to imagine how Yttri's guy ever came up with this scheme. Especially for a metronome!

Ruth

Location: Mara (Richland)

Ruth is the oldest of the Elements (think of her as the one who was a senior when the others were freshmen). She's also the one who appears to have fallen the farthest, taking on a menial role as a cleaning woman for the Church in the Slums. In reality she has simply learned a lot more about how the Matrix works than the others have. She believes that the key to getting into the heart of the Matrix's $information is to be an innocuous pary of it. Standing atop an office tower puts you too far up to see what's really going on. She prefers to be right down next to the Bluepills that drive the $information flow, moving about completely beneath their notice. She has a semi-cooperative relationship with the other Exile who lives at the Church, Sister Margaret.

1. Rescue Blue

A bluepill is being harassed by five bullies, for no obvious reason. They seemed to have camped out in his apartment, perhaps intending it as a base for operations. So I killed two, sat down for some milk and chow mein (bad combination!), and the slew the rest. The bluepill was overjoyed; Ruth less so: "That wasn't bad, Sugaree. You might have some good moves."

2. The Viper's Nest

Strike against Thallia's network. She is a social "viper" who needs to be "taken down a peg"; she tears down other Exiles to make herself look better to the Merovingian, so Ruth says. And I have to say, this is quite consistent with that I saw of her during her missions. Ruth's idea is to put a small virus in her network that will throw her social calendar into disarray. This will have her showing up at all the wrong events; the worst kind of hell for her. And the mish is simple enough: run in, insert disk, and run out. "You're a pretty competent one, Sugaree." The apparent squalor of Thallia's office surprised me, especially considering how luxurious her lair is! Perhaps Ruth is not the only one that likes to slum.

3. Gadget Grab

Silver's been up to some mechanical mischief, and now Ruth wants to know about it. This mission was surprisingly difficult. Four very tough Machine staff awaited me, and my membership card for The Collective did not carry much weight with them. Eventually I killed enough to get a key, and ran past the others to reach my goal. "Sharp moves, Sugaree", judged Ruth.

4. Poison the Well

Silver has been up to some serious trouble-making, even for an Exile. He has come up with "some sort of prototype decompiler that works on bluepills". It would permit Silver to take apart bluepills for their raw code. Yes, I agreed, this would not be a good thing. Ruth bids me insert a virus into his network (as usual). But this is not the usual, garden-variety, format-the-hard-drive virus. That would precipitate tape restorations, after all. This virus simply adjusts the data flow imperceptibly so that things do not work correctly. Nice thinking, Ruth! She agrees: "You've saved some innocent lives today, Sugaree." More than "some", I should think.

5. Both Ends Against the Middle

The last mission was a half-way measure to delay Silver. The next step is to distract him. This is done by exposing his research to Tick Tock, a wily intelligence-oriented Exile from downtown (we did his missions a while back). If they start fighting, this will slow them both down. However, complications arise. Your contact for Tick Tock has been killed, and someone else impersonates him and tries to brewko you. Eventually you put the ersatz ally down, and upload the file and folder, but the identity of the third party is never clear. Who tried to cut in? How did they find out? What was their interest? All is not clear, though I would put my money on Hypatia, who has an unparalleled thirst for knowledge of anything and everything.

Mercury

Location: Uriah Industrial Park (Richland)

Mercury has a head for crafting things that require vector and movement calculations, including vehicles and speed buffs. He wanted to make a big name for himself, but found himself locked out of the market by the Merovingian after a faux pas at the Frenchman's restaurant. He now operates a garage in the Uriah neighborhood of the Slums, and has developed a relationship with another Exile named Pepper (whose slavish devotion to her buffed muscle car keeps her tied to him). In spite of his relationship with Pepper, he still carries a torch for Raini and occasionally sends her gifts or letters.

1. Turnabout is Fair Play

This first missions is a fine example of Mercury's endless anxiety. He bids you steal some files from the obsessive, possessive Silver's network, and blurts out at the end that he is a better inventor. This mish is fairly straightforward; Mercury's ingenuity does not extend, it appears, to narrative design.... My partner for this mish, Blackfir3 from The Collective, was so high-powered that by the time I had found my way to the mish site, he had the whole things wrapped up! Whoah!

2. A Prize for Molly B

In this brief mish, you travel to a nearby location to get a package for Mercury from one of Molly B's guys, and then drop it off. The contents are not disclosed, and nothing else ever seems to happen with this mish. I think the technical term is "filler", though when I do Molly B's missions, maybe a connection will emerge.

3. Component Parts

He has a shipment of some parts that needs to be escorted for safety's sake. He's buying some stuff from The Collector, and needs to make sure it gets safely to his storehouse. The contact looks like a clone of Mercury, and tells me to get out and stop bothering him as soon as I plucked the items from their cardboard box! What a team! Then I evaded an attack, and dropped off everything with some grateful aides of Mercury. Their boss has been keeping an eye on things, and calls at the end: "Nice work, Sugaree. Not too tough, eh?"

4. Company Secrets

Silver is not one to give up easily, and Mercury needs someone to protect his warehouse. Silver seems to be interested in a prototype, and we need to discourage them. One thug says “I think it just got a little dumber in here” and another chirps, “So, I suppose Mercury sent you to stop us, huh?” I always love these little touches; they show someone brought their imagination to work.

All things considered, fairly easy and fairly entertaining. And it’s all located within the same building at Mercury’s lair, so the commute is great! “That’ll show them,” he says at the end, “Good work, Sugaree.”

5. The Tick Tock Box

Clearly Mercury has come to like me. He got worked up and greeted me as soon as I came in, “Hey, hope you’re doing okay.” The target for today is a technical work commissioned by Tick Tock, which needs to be delivered. Naturally enemy forces are interested as well, and must be wiped out prior to the delivery. This went smoothly enough. The recipient, though, looks at it critically, and seemed puzzled, commenting, “Thanks. Uh, what the hell is this thing? This isn’t a cell phone. Well, never mind. Thanks again.” I have no idea what it is or where this is going, but I like the way these details are worked into the story. Nice work!

Mercury has come to rely on me. He brings his toughest problems to me for solutions. Now, with things quieted down, he takes a deep breath and relaxes. I could tell he liked me, as he started to gush. “Thanks, Sugaree. You have done great. I don’t have any more jobs for now, but if anything comes up, you’ll be the first one I come to.” Unlike all the other dozens of Exiles who have said this over the months, I kind of believed him.

Violet

Location: Sobra Shores (Westview)

Though she's not the oldest, or the youngest, or the smartest, Violet takes pride in the fact that she's the toughest. Dedicated to the fighting arts, Violet is easily the most martially proficient among the siblings, though she has lost to the bastard Gray in a straight up fight before. That was a flue, she claims. Violet often acts as an enforcer for Indigo, or one of her parents, though she's been known to form temporary alliances with others for one reason or another. The allegiances in the family are fluid, and nobody expects promises to last. Violet is egotistical about her "fighting form," and a little flattery goes a long way with her.

1. Violent Pacification. Remind a straying exile of where his best interests lie... This is a mish you may have done before for someone else. You show up, and the principal laughs you off, and tells his friends (an elite guard and a blood drunk) to dispatch you. Bulgey, the principal in this case, was more boastful and arrogant than most. And when his friends lay slain in front of him, he seemed angrier and more upset that I had killed them. Or maybe it was my imagination. But the message seems to have been sent. Interestingly, I had the option to engage him in combat. The mish, however, told me to let him live. Pity stayed my hand. Pity that I would blow my payment by sending him to join his friends.

2. Wages of Sin. Some of the buff, burly Legions who serve her and safeguard her inventory have been holding back, and examples must be made of them. Her warehouse came up short with a shipment of the exile-lethal White Knight virus. This mish took me to a really splendidly appointed condominium, where I proceeded to lay waste. One succubus gave me a "succubus kiss" which took me aback, but only dished out a single point of damage! It helped her not a bit. The dropoff contact for the virus disc is a redpill named AlCol; when we met he started to reflect back on his life with the mervs. Whatever! Nicely, this mish ends up right next to Violet's club. I like little touches like that.

3. Problem Addict. It turns out that another redpill crew, Zionist this time, has stolen some White Knight and must be put own. The Zionists pleaded with me to abort, to try and understand their motivation, etc. I listened to them. Then I opened fire. Afterwards, I took the virus to a machinist datamining operation in Apollyon, so as to cause distraction from Indigo and his Guinness Lake operations. The attending agents did not take kindly to my visit, despite my exemplary machinist credentials. I mean, it was just a virus, just a little virus.

4. Drawn and Quartered. Violet has come across a curious program which she wants to examine. Problem is, it has been broken into three scattered pieces. One piece is on a bluepill's computer, and you have to navigate through a domestic drama to get to it.

A bemused sailor is standing in the middle of it all! Fun! The second piece has been captured by other exiles, and they must be fought. Violet sighs, "Fortunately for me, you value $information more than your life". Curiously, in the second site there was a locked file cabinet which I could not open, and which seemed to have no bearing on the narrative flow whatsoever. The third piece is controlled by a Machine outpost; fortunately I was able to get it without killing everyone there.

At the end, you have three disks which you upload. That's it; there's no hint of what's so special about this program. Violet does worry what it would do in less restrained hands. This made me wonder if maybe I should have held onto it.

5. Underneath the Surface. It turns out that the program I found was very important to someone someplace at some point; now a group of Exiles is looking for it. Preventing their recovery of it involves dropping it off with Indigo's data warehouse guy. This dataminer turns out to be a total wuss, and I must rescue him from an attack. As a reward he gifts me with a black cowboy hat. A black cowboy hat!! Do I look like Buffalo Gal? I was moved beyond words. While I was trying to figure out which way was front with the hat, Violet called to thank me. She was not totally thrilled about Indigo getting this program, but "A smart warrior picks their fights". I forgave her broken syntax and counted my money.

Raini

Location: Apollyon (Richland)

If there's an unstable personality in the Elements, it's Raini. She is emotional, passionate, full of everything that makes life exciting, and completely unable to turn it off, even for even a moment. Her drives are laudable, but she is also rash, her temper hot, her relationships tumultuous. She is ready to act at the drop of a hat, heedless of the voice of reason. Were she not so clever, she would probably be long dead.

Her relationships with other Exiles are legion, but fleeting, like bright sparks that quickly die. Raini is powerfully attracted to you one moment, slapping your face the next: utterly unpredictable, and seemingly desirous of conflict. If there were a gauge to represent Raini, the needle would be constantly in the red. Raini can usually be found at the Jacob's Ladder, dancing, drinking, and talking Redpills into all sorts of crazy over-the-top schemes. She gets no trouble from the 5 Points gang, who revere her almost as a goddess for her thrill-seeking ways.

1. Careful What You Wish For

“Recover high jacked data.” Is this an editing blemish? Or does this refer to a high-capacity jack-in mechanism? Does it foreshadow the role of drugs in these missions? Who can tell... In any case, the basic idea here is simple. Retrieve data from a lost courier, and complete the delivery. On Hard setting, there is a single site with three powerful foes and about as many computers to check. The file you need has “Thallia” in the name; I was not sure if this data had been stolen from Thallia, and her folks or a third party were interested in it, or, Thallia was behind the theft. Of course, knowing these guys, it could have played either way. But Raini’s only comment is she looks forward to enjoying the data. I guess. Your Operator seems detached from this mission as well, observing at one point, “I’ve always wanted to play Blood Tycoon 3. But that’s not what we came here for I guess.” You think?

2. Wetwork

To get some hot information from another Exile (a “nobody”), you need to kill two groups of Exiles. Those who relish 24x7 PvP will relish this mish. The Exiles make the mistake that so many do: they do not work as teams. They are scattered in their locations, and you can defeat them piecemeal. The second group took refuge in the home of two bluepills, killing one of them in the process. There seems to be no way to kill them without collateral-damaging the other bluepill, at least with AOE’s. A howitzer build might have had better luck. Alas, doing good, or minimizing doing bad, is not incorporated in mission goals.

Some interesting points: one Exile shouts “Game over, man!” as he engages you; this brief homage to Aliens was a nice touch! Raini notes halfway through “Wow, you were brutal in there. Nice”, and gushes at the end, “Oh, man, that was awesome, thanks Sugaree”. I started to feel like I was talking to a child.

3. The Next Big Thing

Running her own businesses is not enough for Raini, it seems. She wants something more, something that is supposed to be “the ultimate extreme”. And she wants you to get it from a “cat” named Arkansas. Oh, hip, man! Like, this is starting to sound like an old 60s comedy routine, as when Arkansas peers at you and says, “Hey...hey, man. You’re looking for the stuff for Raini? I got it right here. Take it when you’re ready. If you think she can handle it...heh...” The delivery was mercifully brief: a 60-yard sprint to the building next door. I can see why Raini wanted a woman of my talents for this! There is a single wrinkle near the end of this surprisingly sedate mission. And then Raini dangles the offer of an invitation to one of her “private” parties if I keep up the good work. As if!

4. Always When You Are Not Watching

Later when I visited her for the next mish, she seemed considerably the worse for wear. Some goods had been stolen from her, and she was way fretful. “Dammit! Some gang of WORTHLESS Exiles thinks that they can steal from me! From ME!”. The dreary dirge of revenge and payback was about to start like a cheap jukebox....

Your trip takes you first to the crime scene. Mostly ceremonial swords remain, with a few rifles, some weapons cages, a few bodies, and two survivors. One mourns; the other insists on coming with you (though he seems totally useless in a fight). Ironically, the thieves have chosen to hide their loot across the street from Jacob's Ladder! What were they thinking? In the event, by the time you and your sidekick reach the thieves, the loot has been fenced across the city, and nothing remains but some hard-hearted revenge. A few polite yawns later and it was done.

5. Adrenaline Junkie

"I'm in a bind, and I know you don't want to see cute little me in a bind, do ya?" Yes, that's how it starts. The powerful Exile, apparently an arms trafficker, now needs another fix, and wants you to score for her. Is this what they are coming to? Maybe Zion and the Machines hardly need to lift a finger against the Exiles; they just have to wait for the drugs to run out! Anyway, getting back, I was sent to visit one of Argon's minions for a fix. He, however, is out of the business and won't deal. This necessitates a visit to one of Beryl's safehouses. Fortunately, you do not need to kill all of Beryl's guards to get the drugs, which is a pleasant change. Just ignore them, take a few hits, make the grab and run. Raini talks big at the end, about how if you're not living on the edge (by stealing your drugs, presumably), then you're not living. That was good for a laugh. I had a couple of drinks, put them on her tab, and left Apollyon.

Rose

Location: Southard (Westview)

Youngest of the siblings, Rose is extremely insecure, and is obsessed with proving herself to the others. She is currently trying to impress her eldest brother, Indigo, believing that he will elevate her to his side if she pleases him. In reality, he is only interested in using her as a tool against the others. Rose's emotions are fragile, and volatile, making her prone to tear-filled rages if she feels embarrassed or insulted.

Grisaille

Location: Stamos (Westview)

Created by Mr. Black without the involvement of Dame White, Grisaille is essentially a bastard stepchild, reviled by his stepmother who would as soon see him dead. Grisaille is equal in power to Indigo, and acts primarily as an agent of Mr. Black, though he knows that his father thinks of him as only a powerful tool. In spite of their similar attitudes towards their parents, Indigo and Grisaille are dire enemies. Grisaille lacks the resources that Indigo can call on, but is more personally powerful, and more intelligent. It is only the fact that he is opposed by all of the siblings that keeps him in check. Mr. Black disavows knowledge of Grisaille's actions ("he's just an unruly bastard") because it is most often to his advantage. Grisaille considers the other siblings to be incompetents. They despise him for being Mr. Black's favorite when he's an outsider to their family. In truth Grisaille hates both Dame White and Mr. Black, and would eagerly see the entire twisted Spectrum destroyed, even if he had to sacrifice himself to do it. For the time being he simply acts as a spoiler.

1. Fade Away

Word, it seems, has gotten around ("Ah, so you're that Sugaree person I've been hearing so much about. Well, time to prove your worth") and he is ready to give me something substantial to do. No simple drop off a package mission here! Like many an Exile, Grisaille has a low boiling point, and the instant you talk to him, he starts blathering about revenge, "take them out, chip chop". The targets have been tailed from Club Dante to some no-name place, where they are unknowingly waiting for their doom, perhaps planning their IRA contributions for the year. As the dust settles at the end, Grisaille nods approvingly, "Very well done, Sugaree. If you can do that, you can do anything." Yah! Say it again!

2. A Quiet Conversation

Grisaille needs to have an Exile brought to him for a conversation about some information. As usual, the target is confident in her guards, and as usual her confidence is misplaced. She acquiesces, accompanies you, and soon finds herself in front of one of Grisaille's agents. Fear dawns across her face. "Don't fret, love. It'll be over soon" he reassures her. Grisaille tells me to rest up and come to see him soon. What a guy! If you think that this mission is almost identical to Thallia's last mission, you would be right.

3. Silent Scream

Nice title! This is perhaps the most ostensibly ambitious mission Grisaille gives you, but also the easiest. No that I am complaining, mind you! The target is Dynamic Network Products, guarded by machine enforcers. All we have to do is drop off a package, get a virus, drop off the virus, and flee. Quite straightforward, and you do not even have to kill everyone there! What's not to like? The only thing is, what does Grisaille have against DNP? It all seemed quite unmotivated, like someone took a standard mish and threw it in here as filler. Perhaps he is doing this for someone else? As a favor? Because he owes them? Alas, there is no sign that such depth exists in Grisaille.

4. The Rest Is Silence

Remember the Exile we brought in two missions ago? Well, her value has come and gone, and now it is time for her to return to the Source. I fought my way through her new crop of guards only to be confronted by Grisaille's sister, Rose! She has taken my target under her protection, it seems, and gives me a message for my employer: he cannot make his problems go away by killing innocents. Then, politely: "I suggest you leave, Sugaree...there is no reason for you to come to harm because of my brother's actions." After working with so many psychos and sociopaths recently, it was exquisite to bump into compassion. It must be a bug. Grisaille reassured me, "Not your fault". Reasonableness must run in their family!

5. The Quiet Place

Like every Exile, Grisaille seems to have an inexhaustible supply of enemies, and now the time has come for the Crow Bars to embrace eternity. They all talked big, and they all went down noisily. I walked out into the smoky Stamos moonlight, carefully putting away my guns, smoothing my coat, thinking what to do next. Drinks? Gossip? Perhaps some blue rezzing? I decided to start with a smoke as I contemplated our unknown future. After the first, best long drag, I took a final call from Grisaille: "Feels good to work out your frustrations, huh?" He's unflappable!

Madame T (Naomi Tarasova)

Location: Historic District (Downtown)

Naomi Tarasova, known more popularly as Madame T, is one of the few Redpills to take up full time residence in the Matrix. Contributing further to her eccentric reputation is her habit of taking on the mannerisms of a gypsy fortune teller. When she speaks, she's always vague and full of mystery, even when giving out the specifics of the mission.

Madame T owns a small tea room off of the main street, with a simple sign out front that reads "Fortunes Told." When telling the "fortunes" (missions) for those who "cross her palm with silver," she will use either tarot cards or her crystal ball. Much of her insight into the workings of the Matrix comes from observations of her tarot cards and other clairvoyant tools (tea leaves and so forth), and she has been known to make accurate predictions of future events, though not very often.

Her tea room is dark, close and filled with all sorts of mystic esoterica. Skulls, candles and ancient tomes fill the walls surrounding the table where she reads customers' fortunes. While her motives are unknown, she provides keen insight about the Matrix, whenever her mysterious signs and portents can be interpreted.

1. Starting Points

She just needs some data from a nearby security office. She has "seen" that we would be working together apparently, and says "I have anticipated" "I predict", etc. Unfortunately I found myself fighting a machine captain, which went against my principles and the precepts of Agent Gray and made me feel guilty. For a minute or two, anyway.

This mish is simple, and entertaining. When I dropped off the data with a cutout, she told me, "wow, one of Madame T's predictions actually came true!". (Interestingly, all the cutouts and assistants I these missions are succubus in appearance, a nice touch.) Then, at the end, Madame T. foresaw many more opportunities for cooperation. I loved this cute ending.

2. Inquiring Minds

Madame T. wants some data from an exile, and whether it is given willingly or not is strictly secondary. The principal, though, moves around a lot, and you have to run around to find him. Kill all his very tough guards, and he becomes quite accommodating, commenting sourly, "She certainly is pushy for a redpill". There are many amusing touches in this mission, such as reading the principal's email inbox, and Madame T saying "I guess I should have seen that coming" and "I don't need a crystal ball to see that this should be quite easy for you."

One thing I would like to see in these get-the-data missions would be some indication of just what is all so important. It might be something urgent and desperate, like someone's contact information. It might be something deeply personal, like the background on a missing relative. It might be something amusing, like a Victoria's Secret catalog or a Christmas list. The Chef's missions are wonderful examples of this.

3. Emerald Wishes

This mission was uncomfortable for me. Just last week it seems, I had been scoring accolades from The Jeweler. Now I was raiding his assets. It turns out that he has a mystic emerald Madame T wants, so that she can glimpse its secrets about the future. In this mission, we see that the Jeweler has some significant security and office assets he never told us about; and they put up a very spirited resistance. Then drop off the emerald and you are done.

More nice touches in this mish. When you drop off the emerald with a cutout, a guard remarks that he has heard of you, and compares your missions with his. Then a prediction from Madame T! "Wait...something is coming to me...I see you running many more fruitful missions for me. Nice work, Sugaree".

One thing would have made this better. When you retrieve the emerald, your inventory just shows a box, the same generic display used for everything from tracking devices to PDAs. Some more representative artwork would have been wonderful for this.

4. Toil and Trouble

Hypatia, you may recall, has an awesome archive of all kinds of books and knowledge, and is always on the prowl for anything she does not already have. Well, it turns out that in order to unleash the power within the gem, Madame T. needs you to find an incantation in Hypatia's archives, and then drop it off for an assistant to recite. I did this mission with a heavy heart, since Hypatia is the Exile closest to me in personality and appearance. But I was confident she had tape backup, and would only lose the physical form, not the data itself, so I went ahead.

After getting the incantation, you drop it off and go corral three assistants to help fire it off. Regrettably, they asked me to leave before running it. They were concerned for my safety. Or maybe they did not want their role-play disrupted.

5. Infosweep

Madame T. is overwhelmed by her visions from the gem and needs help from the Chessman (surely her polar opposite) in interpreting them. He has helpfully come downtown to meet you. This palaver, though, is interrupted by almost half a dozen competing operatives. Their attacks were well-coordinated, and the fight was not a breeze. On the way to the next mish location, to catch a data spike, I stopped to watch some Pit Vipers getting baptized in the pool, and was attacked! Of all the nerve! You can't ever let your guard down!

And then it turned out that not one but two other teams were after the same data! Fortunately, they all attacked almost as soon as I got out of the elevator, which was considerate. After all, this way I didn't have to go hunting for them. The massive data spike surged, overwhelmed the network, and miraculously fit right onto a single CD!

After I dropped it off, I hastened to the elevator, only to receive a high-urgency message from Madame T! She said, "Stop right where you are! Close your eyes. Concentrate....does anything feel different to you?" No, I confessed, just the warm heated air, fretting about agents descending on me. The she breathlessly whispered, "I see you succeeding in all your future endeavors", and downloaded a "little something" into my inventory, bidding me to think of her when I used it. She signed off, and I walked out into the classical splendor of the Historical District, savoring the glorious, color-drenched full sun sky, with a dark blue sky and pink clouds vying for attention.

This was a great suite of missions. Well-written interactions, a distinct personality at the helm, interesting background, and neat connections with other Exiles, from The Chessman to Hyptia and The Jeweler. And the fact that Madame T. is a redpill means we should all be thinking big, big things for ourselves for the year to come.

Mr. Black & Dame White

Locations: Mr. Black - Stratford Campus (Downtown); Dame White – Shinjuku (International)

The leading group of Exiles in the Barrens are a dysfunctional family created by two Exile programs that have come to be known as Mr. Black and Dame White. The two parents each covet the other's power, but never admit it. They work against each other covertly through their children. The siblings compete for the attention and favor of both parents, as well as playing their parents off against one another. The emotional turmoil of the conflict and the mental and physical exercise involved in waging it are the family's bread and butter.

Mr. Black's Missions

Mission 01: Go Underground

This seems straightforward: three little floppy disks must be protected. Then you learn they have already been stolen, and must now be retrieved. This involves infiltrating a skyscraper controlled by The Trainman (present only in name). At the end you discover there is more to this than meets the eye, and Mr. Black's representative concludes there will be "some use for your talents, if not your brains". The narrative logic does not make total sense here. But the three-stage trip is pleasant, with some witty observations from the chatty operator and the participants. Fun! And no bugs! And convenient locations. Some more sense of depth than the average grab-the-loot mish.

Mission 02: Paper Chase

One of the most unusual premises: Mr. Black needs a building permit, but the lethargic city bureaucracy has been dragging its heels. To encourage efficiency, the mission is to kill the offending bureaucrat's bodyguards and thus free him from the distraction of safety. If you've ever waited in line for a permit or a driver's license, this story will resonate with you deeply, believe me. Straightforward, with lots and lots of fighting to get the papers. Oddly, we do not travel to City Hall to get these.

Mission 03: Off White

Who would have thought! Dame White is his wife! And like many wives, she likes to keep a close eye on what her husband is up to. Mr. Black tasks you with getting rid of her spies and retrieving any intel they have accumulated. There are fine, entertaining moments as one White thug gets nervous and stammers that he d-d-doesn't know why the d-d-door is locked. Mr. Black approves of your handiwork, and concludes this happy mish by telling you, "If you weren't a human I might even make you a part of my organization." Sigh Oh, I love it when he talks to me like that!

Mission 04: Thorny Rose

Mr. Black's mischievous daughter is in trouble and needs assistance. This is a rescue, but fortunately you do not need to lead Rose anywhere. Just kill all the kidnappers and get a package from her. This was fun, with the hired help chatting about Rose (the "hot mama", "ixnay on the ohay"), then stopping when you walk in. And wait till you see what was in the package you had to risk life and limb to retrieve! It just goes to show that even Exiles have a sentimental side.

By the way, this would have been better if you had needed to team up with some of Dame White's people, or reach some understanding with Dame White to win her cooperation to rescue her daughter. This would have dovetailed soooo well with the immediately previous mission.

Mission 05: Bringing Home

One of Black's staff has been kidnapped and must be rescued and then taken to Indigo, (one of Black's kids) for debriefing. Lots of targets to kill on hard setting. The best entertainment is the cut-piece dialogs between Indigo, Xavier, and Indigo's men, which are well-written and not always expected. Mr. Black takes care of his own, but is nonetheless a stern taskmaster.

Dame White's Missions

1. Data Mining

If I were her, I'd want to know what my kids over in Westview were up to! But perhaps she read my mission reports and is up to speed on their mischief. At any rate, her inaugural instructions for me this afternoon are pertain to Kowloon and Shirabaka. "Yes, I know what you want and it just so happens that I do have a job for you." I need to visit a couple of computers. I like her businesslike style.

The first one, in Shinjuku, is guarded by a cordial Blood Drunk, who cheerfully advises me that "You so much as touch that computer; I will gladly break your fingers". After its data was uploaded, I gave Dame White an update, which was a poor decision on my part. She responded: "You mean you still don't have the data on Shirakaba? Well, what are you wasting my time for? Go get it!" I cleared my throat and hung up. "Well, what are you wasting my time for?" I told my operator, "Go get the next site!"

The second computer was much harder to get to. There were five or six souped-up elite guards. Eventually I prevailed, got the disk, uploaded it, and was told...

"Hmm, yes... As I suspected, this data shows that... Eh? Well, what is it? You've got your pay, haven't you? So stop pestering me!"

I'm beginning to see why her children have all fled so far afield.

2. Running Interference

Someone somewhere is delivering some item to somebody. That's it! And Dame White wants it intercepted. You can reach the single site in this mish without much trouble, but it turns out you have been anticipated, and the item is nowhere to be found. Needless to say you come under attack.

Mrs. White is livid about this! She goes off about "some stinking, slimy, pathetic little weasel" tipped off the opposition. (Her imperturbable picture, perched above this tirade, is delightfully ironic!) She throws my money down on the ground, and then goes back to pondering death and destruction. I wish I had thought to ask her kids about her. What stories they could tell!

3. Polygraphic

Dame White tasks you with identifying and eliminating a traitor within her organization, by polygraphing four of her chief lieutenants. The first, Fraction, is clean, and takes the test without hesitation. Some of the White security forces hanging around her wonder if the Dame isn't getting a little paranoid. They'll pay for their impertinence! At the second site, looking for the second lieutenant, Dollar, I hear from an Enforcer, "Look, you want my advice? "Stick that thing on Dame White's finger. Yeah, you heard me!" Then, "I didn't say nothin'. We never had this talk." Dollar herself (wearing the same golden gi as do all four) refuses the test until I kill three of her tough guards. Then she does so, loudly claiming it to be under duress.

The third one is a, ahem, dead end: the lieutenant and everyone there is dead. The fourth one is the target. Naturally, at the end, the Dame claims, "Hah, I knew it all along!”

This long mission is well-designed. When I heard there were four suspects, I worried about this being tedious. But the four encounters are well-differentiated even though the four principals looked identical. Nice work!

4. Disk Jockey

With the traitor gone, it is back to business. She wants you to get two disks, from separate locations for her. Naturally there are the usual slugfests for the first one. After another fight at the second site, the disk is simply handed to you by a principal who says “It’s okay, they just think I’m the janitor.” I’m not sure what was going on with this. After all, if they thought this person was the janitor, then she could have simply smuggled the disk out in her overalls pocket. In any case, then it’s off to drop them off with one of the Dame’s operatives.

My patron was clearly overwhelmed with me! “Hm, you seem to be doing fairly well. For once.”

The White operative slated to receive the disks has been killed by a seething crowd of five or six blood drunks, nobles, and elite guards. They all started firing at me too, but their aim sucked, because I was able to put each disk in a computer and escape without being killed. Go figure! One taunted me with the usual “Fool! You have no idea of the power of the artifact you seek!” Yeah, whatever! Then Mrs. White had the information she needed and we were off to the next and final mish.

5. Paydirt

An artifact is soon to change hands, and a payment is soon to be made. Dame White wants both. This sounds like that the second mission was originally intended to be, before it went south. You are tasked with taking two of her aides to break up the transaction. You go to a single site and engage in extended mayhem. You end up with two packages, but zero aides. Then it got interesting.

I took the artifact to White’s hand-off. There were already many bodies in the building and lots of nervous security guards. The main contact was agitated, and couldn’t stop talking: “Come on now, don’t f-freak out on me. Give me one of the packages and put the other one in the wall safe. It’s easy. Easy.” And “Okay, okay. This is good. I like this. Okay, put the other package in the, uhh, wall safe over there. Yeah.” When I, cool as a cucumber, was done, the hand-off said, “Right. Okay, good. Yeah. The Dame’ll like this. Okay. Everybody’s okay.” I tipped my hat and sauntered out for a smoke.

Dame White, ever the generous one, contacted me to say that the artifact was better than they expected, and the captured payment was less. “That being the case, I suppose...I suppose I might as well give the captured money to you. Just don’t cause me any more trouble for a while.” I could tell she liked me.

Location: Mannsdale Housing (Richland)

A stylish and sharp businesswoman, Anti-M is one of the few Elements who's truly satisfied with the way things are going now. No longer suffering under the subroutine dictates of Argon, she's pushed out of her number-cruncher's box to become a savvy dealer of $information in The Matrix. She wears expensive Italian suits and makes her own rules now.

Mission 01: Protection Racket

Simple enough: Anti-M wants you to put some pressure on Argon by finding and snuffing four of his crew. This is best done by tackling them piecemeal. Along the way, you run into an NPC who offers to help. I was all hacked up, and he matched my skillset and did a great job. Naturally, I was expecting a doublecross, but he was faithful all the way. Unfortunately, at the end of the Mission, he stays in the mission area. Good help, after all, is so hard to find! At the end Anti-M confesses that she likes the way you do business.

Mission 02: Special Delivery

In this Mission you play Post Office and deliver a letter from Anti-M to Beryl. This is simple enough, though as soon as you drop off the letter (to a cut-out dressed like an out-take from Club Hell) some thugs show up in need of tough love. One of them won my price for the Worst Loot Ever Received: one (1) Code-Bit 2!! I huffed and puffed my weary way to 50 for this?? At the end Anti-M affirms, "You know how to do a job right, Sugaree"; too bad the same cannot be said for whoever did the loot tables for this Mission!

Mission 03: Clear The Way

This is one of the easiest missions assigned by anyone, anywhere, in any game. Anti-M wishes to steal something being held by Argon for the Chotte Brothers. All you need to do is kill four of Argon's gunmen so others of Anti-M's staff can grab the item. They attack aggressively, but they attack individually, so it is easy to take them down, even on Hard setting. And that's it! I had expected to be further tasked with procuring the item, since the team was in trouble, etc., but nothing happened to complicate the awesome simplicity of this Mission. I was surprised. And disappointed. Is this all Anti-M thought I was capable of? My crisis of confidence continued into the next Mission.

Mission 04: Apothecary

Anti-M has some perfume to be given to Beryl; all you need to do is get it and drop it off. This time, Argon's thirsting for payback, and throws opponents your way; you need to visit three locations for this Mission. Getting the perfume (stored, oddly, inside a statue bust) is simple; dropping it off is much harder. But the soft words of praise at the end make it worthwhile: "You handle delicate matters with much grace".

Mission 05: The Photographer

Only after you have established your cred with Anti-M does she give you this most sensitive of missions. An exile known as the Photographer has secured compromising images of Anti-M and Beryl, and is seeking to blackmail them with Argon. Your job is to save their honor. This is rather easier than you might think, since the Photographer has no defense and no guards! High-end hacker spells brought him down in short order; your mileage will not vary.

The single complication, almost a bug, here is that at first I could not search his body. I could search everywhere else, but searching his body yielded no response. Only after I had left the room and come back in could I search him, get the pictures, and complete the Mission. This was non-intuitive.

Cerulean

Location: Bathary Row (Westview)

A middle child, Cerulean is the only one of the siblings to turn primarily to her intellect as a source of influence. She invested heavily in understanding the infrastructure of the Matrix in an attempt to learn how to control it better and use its power against her siblings. She is convinced that Indigo's power base can be wiped away or redirected in this way, but she suffered an enormous setback when the Matrix was reconfigured in the wake of the Peace Treaty. Much of the code she had stockpiled was wiped out, including parts of her own personal code that she had tried to hide. The result was a loss of her RSI's rendering subroutine; Cerulean is effectively a ghost. She is now dedicated to accumulating more information than ever, and proving that her mind is more than capable of overcoming any amount of power her siblings can amass.

Mockingbird

Location: Gracy Heights (Westview)

Mockingbird runs Osiris Antiques, a curio and book shop dealing largely in "magic" and "occult" items, many of which are actually items that let the user circumvent or bend the rules of the Matrix. In other words, her magic is real. She is willing to deal with others to get things that she wants, but she has no morals about cheating or stealing to obtain her goals. She deals with the Collector and often acts as his agent in the Barrens.

1. All We Ever Wanted. Ever notice how your reputation is never good enough? She expects you to steal a couple of candlesticks for her to show your ability. It's one of the standard first missions. So, you get to the provider, and discover that two other "buyers" have beat you to it, and aren't very inclined to give up the candlesticks unless you can make them a better offer. Normally I love wheeling and dealing like this, but there was no hint about what they wanted, and there was also no option to give them anything. So we killed them.

The provider was very cooperative after this. I mean, we had what we came for, and had killed everyone else in the room, so his leverage was kind of limited by this point. For some reason, I had the option of killing him, too. But I was feeling generous, and spared him. After all, it was Mother's Day.

Then a huge hike to the Mockingbird's cutout for the candlesticks. There, we were greeted as pizza delivery by the security guards. Then the cutout saw fit to give us a lecture about greed. I never! We spared her too, reluctantly, and left.

The idea of candlesticks which can bend light is delightful! Alas, nothing was done with this! And no demonstration of this effect was given. No backstory on their origin, provenance, or raison d'être was provided, or even why Mockingbird wanted them. Some tie-in with the Pandora's Box quests would have been natural, and could easily have been retrofitted. Umm, and the meaning of the title was not very clear.

2. All We Ever Wanted. Yes, you have not read wrong. The mission name gets used again here. This time, Mockingbird wants me to get some information on a different artifact. This starts imaginatively, with me speaking to a sort of traffic control program knowledgeable about the flow of items (almost like a mission operator in herself). She says "tell the Bird" that Digger had the item but it has been stolen. Others in her office think about different matters of importance; one guy wails about problems with the copier. I feel your pain!

This lead took me to a total dump of a building, where I found my next contact, the reluctantly cooperative Alvarez, who curtly answers my question and then sics his team on me. Thanks for nothing! The object of Mockingbird desire is a cat statue of fine amber. It's rare. It's amber. It's also cursed. I'm told to stay away from it. Like that's going to stop me! Mockingbird has the right attitude: "This is all starting to make sense....good". The mission ends up with me a stone's throw from Mockingbird for the next mish. Now that's what I call good mission design! Points for that! However, the title is no more clear this time than the first time. Points off!

3. Dark Entries. For this mission, you need to steal a painting from Digger so you can trade it to Hypatia for the Circle of Cernunnos. Got that? The subtle approach (sneak in and disable the computer-controlled lock, etc.) does not work. I killed everyone there. The painting itself is rumored to contain a sentient being (and why not?). "Not bad for an organic" Mockingbird concludes. As I left with the painting to drop it off for safekeeping, she and the operator say virtually identical things about Digger getting on my trail; this seems like another editorial blemish.

After you retrieve the painting, you take it to a genuinely interesting character: Man Kempner. He runs art galleries, and has created reputations for several obscure bluepill artists. He would be a perfect tie-in with The Sculptress from downtown! He would hide this just for the pleasure of being able to examine it. While I wait to see him, his assistant tells me about a gallery show opening by a new artist with great mechanical beasts. This seems like an obvious lead-in, but it never seems to have gone anywhere. He explains that the painting is part of the human emotion monitoring system for the Matrix, but with a bit of a bug: it projects emotion rather than recording it. Intriguing!

Alas, no such minimal backstory for the Circlet of Cernunnos. And Hypatia, who is easily one of the most interesting of the neighborhood contacts, makes no appearance. Disappointment!

4. Exquisite Corpse. For this mission, you collect the Circlet for Mockingbird. However Digger has brought in mercenaries to intervene (and who can blame him?). They have killed Mockingbird's Crushers, so you have to put them down, and collect all the items. These are then deposited in a safe. "If I play my cards right, Hypatia will think that Digger has the circlet. And I get to keep the painting as well! Thanks for your good work, Sugaree!" Someone's thinking! Too bad they weren't thinking about the opaque title!

5. In the Night. For this mission, you steal the cat statue from Amber's guys. "I'm not finished with you yet. Remember the amber cat statue? The kitty needs to be brought in, and guess who has it? That's right, Amber." The toughest part of this is figuring out the instructions. The artifact is in a locked safe in a sealed room, with two computer commands necessary to unlock it (the room, that is). The entire site is guarded by Daggers, who greeted me with "Death to you!" and "I wonder how your bones will taste!", obviously meant to lull me into a state of false confidence.

The cat, once procured, is taken to Mockingbird's flunky, the fretful Davis Thjarden. He starts off as soon as you arrive: "Do you have it? I mean, do you have IT? I mean, the statue, did you bring it with you? It's not hurt is it? Did you drop it? You didn't drop it, did you? No bullet holes or anything? Mockingbird would be very upset if it were shot." Then, "If you have it, give it to me! What are you waiting for? I need to inspect it. I need to make sure that it's okay." Once I gave it to him, he was subdued and said I could go while he "documented" a few things.

Mockingbird is pleased! "Good, very good. You have talents I can use. You have impressed me with your hard work. If I have anything in the future, I will contact you." But she remains as much a mystery as when I first met her.

Sister Margaret

Location: Mara (Richland)

Mission 01: The Stingy Librarian: Infiltrate Hypatia's computer network

The talented sculptress who did the beautiful sculpture outside (which I must examine some time) needs materials, and callous Hypatia is withholding them. For the sake of art and God, we will break into her network to steal what she will not share. This was doable without even a fight! I ran in and ran out, like a pizza delivery girl. And I was done! At the end Sister Margaret says, "Truly you are a bright, light in this dark place"; when was the last time anyone talked to you this way? I loved it! All this and XPs too!

Mission 02: Seeking Marble: Get Hypatia's data for the Sculptress

The next step is to break into a facility and get data to help find the materials. Take a disk and upload its contents. Snap city! It was enjoyable, by the way, to notice the classic tactic of entrapment: ask someone to do something small, and then gradually up the ante, asking for larger and larger tasks. At the end of this one-step mission, she purrs, "My goodness! You are so talented, Sugaree!" She knows vanity when she sees it.

Mission 03: Flawless Theft

For the glory of God, we will infiltrate a facility and place a virus. The Collector has a warehouse with the marble Sister Margaret's Sculptress friend wants; we will plant a virus to redirect a shipment. Thus the work of this mission is to place a tiny disk in a tiny notebook. "I ran into an agent, and being a machinist I stopped to chat. However, all he did, though, was bark out "You!!", so I thought it best to eb about my business. And what is reward for all this? A few xps. A few info. And a heartfelt "You continue to amaze me, Sugaree" sigh

Mission 04: Blue Destiny

This was one of the more complicated missions. First rescue one lover, then take him to his girlfriend, and then take them both to a Zion extraction point. Regrettably, the dialog for this mission was not written by Shakespeare, and seems stilted. The best the lost and lonely girlfriend can say to her long-lost lover is "It's good to see you again, Jackson Pemberton". I was hoping for more. However it was cute that they stood close to each other in the elevator and elsewhere. This Mission ups the ante of complexity and import considerably. As I left them at the extraction point, I felt aglow with anticipation about the future, until I stepped out into the stained cement wasteland that is life for the rest of us, in the big, dirty city.

Mission 05: Saving Grace

We learn that the church sits atop a place of importance in the Matrix, hence the Sculptress's interest in it. And the interest of others, one of whom, Albireo, has kidnapped three parishioners. We must free them. This is fairly straightforward. Even on Hard,. All you do is kill Albireo and free the three. This Mission was notoriously bugged in beta, and now it works perfectly. Bravo!

The Sculptress

Location: Center Park (Downtown)

Mission 01: Tools of the Trade

The Collector sent someone to steal her tools, which are very personal. She wants you to get them back. (Ironically, the street gang encountered during this and the other Missiones is the Chisels, a very cute touch.) German-speaking Exiles have them under guard. I was trashed totally on my first attempts. Wonderful example of artspeak from a bluepill in the entourage of Heron (another artist), who receives the recovered tools from you. The best line is at the end, an affronted blue pill sniffs and informs you, "of course it looks like any other room, that's what makes it art!" LOL!

Mission 02: Errant Goods

A package has been misappropriated by a courier. As The Sculptress delicately puts it, we are to get it back and kill him and his allies. This turns out to be an exceptionally difficult mission, and much more action is needed than I expected at first. For instance, one single room contained 4-5 level 51 blood drunks and nobles in a roving pack (meaning they could not be defeated piecemeal). I used Sneak from a coat to get in, get the package and flee immediately. If you are alone and without tricks, I have no idea how you would easily handle this. As before, we deliver the recovered package to an artist. However, in this case, the artist at the end is wearing a cook's hat! He must be a performance artist or a Dadaist! The accompanying bluepill gives me an utterly useless key, along with more deep artspeak.

Mission 03: The Price of Fame

Hypatia, whose warehouses you might recall raiding last week, is now to be mollified with, of all things, a charming bust of Melvil Dewey (originator of the Dewey Decimal System)! The ideal gift for the Exile who has everything! Who can explain the inscrutable ways of artists? Besides the absurd nature of the task, the other unusual thing here is the distance to Hypatia: 1100 meters, and you arrive just in time to get jumped by five or six bounty-hunters. No witty artspeak in this one, just bruises and sore feet!

Mission 04: The Lease

Like the paperwork Mission for Mr. Black, here you need to help The Sculptress get a lease. It's a break-in, shoot-up-the-hired-help kind of mission. Nothing wrong with that! At the completion, when you hand off the papers, one of the accompanying exiles looks at you and asks how you feel about your previous life. I love unexpected personal stuff like this. Totally out of the blue!

Mission 05: The Model

One of the most entertaining Missiones yet!! Remember the hawt Scarlett from the tutorial? She's back! And you have to rescue her before her honor is compromised!

Standard rescue, but the texture is delightful! As you escort her back, Scarlett talks incessantly about her beauty and how she must share it (males RSIs out there should not get their hopes up). Then the Artist fusses over her like a mother hen at the end, absently dismissing her rescuers (i.e., you). Delightful interplay! And as we left the building, a wonderful gift appeared out of nowhere in a pretty box on the ground at my feet! And it was not a bust of Melvile Dewey! Bingo!

Overall, these missions included extremely tough enemies, and some very witty dialog. Plus there's the usual XP and info payoffs, and a gift at the end. Who could ask for more? Fun and worth doing.

The Chessman

Location: Tabor Park (Richland)

Mission 01: First Move:

What could be easier? Break into a warehouse or office building, and steal three little objects (a file, a disk, and some papers). It's a single location, and you do not have to even take the good any place. Just get them, leave. And you're done! Very straightforward. The target of this, the Chotte Brothers, does not appear in any other Chessman missions.

Mission 02: The Pawn

Things become much more serious in this second Mission. The Chessman tasks you with assassinating an operative who has outlives his usefulness. This Mission is also straightforward: A single location, with two guards, and the target. The Chessman purrs his appreciation when you are done, and whispers, "someday you may be a master"; I love it when eh talks that way!

Mission 03: En Passant

The Chessman ratchets up his expectations this time, and directs you to wipe out a redpill team at his safehouse. This leads to a single very tough fight with five or six bunched up enemies, including a physician who keeps buffing the one you're attacking. Absent a hacker, this will be a tough fight; be sure to bring some friends, or some tactics boosters, or all three. That's all there is to it! And at the end, your client compliments you: "You are a superb player. Unpredictable, but dependable."

Mission 04: The Countermove

This Mission breaks the chain of increasing difficulty, and includes two assassination targets and a few computers to search for information in a single location. Nothing unusual here, except for the fact that this has two locations, and is a move not against the Chotte brothers, but against The Collector, who we have encountered in previous missions. The Chessman's satisfied parting words are: "Nice move, Sugaree. This is a game I will enjoy continuing with you"

Mission 05: Return the King

In this last Chessman mission, an old friend, The Sculptress, has made a new chess set which has been stolen; you need to find the waylaid courier, retrieve the package, and kill the guys who took it. Finally you deliver the pieces to a contact. In all, you travel to three locales; there is no indication that some other exile, such as The Collector, might be behind this. After your success with this quite simple mission, the Chessman's final words to you are: "You're a real player, Sugaree, thanks". Good enough!

This last one could have been better with some explanation of the special properties of the chess set and exactly what use the Chessman planned to make of them. And at the end, the Chessman could have made some Oracular pronouncements about your future in the game to show you his power and the power of the pieces. This would have added to the appeal of this Exile and his missions.

Beryl

Location: Midian Park (Richland)

Mission 01: Special Delivery

Like so many exile contact Missiones, this one begins with a courier delivery. You must take a package to an associate of Anti-M, a close “friend” of Beryl’s. Inevitably, something goes awry here. You are met by a couple of thugs, and one who chases you to the next destination. But then you are done, and Beryl apologizes for the inconvenience! If only Agent Gray talked to me this way!

Mission 02: A Girl in Need

The flip side of Mission 01! Get a package from Argon for her. Really easy, and could be done with no fighting whatsoever, unless you choose to engage those who throw themselves in your path. Notable is that her contact is giving you something for her which could be dangerous; it sounds like a drug of some sort. The backstory mystery deepens!

Mission 03: Cut the Tail

After seeing the cat next to Beryl, when I saw the title for this, I started to fret. But not to worry! Beryl needs you to get rid of someone who’s been tailing her so she can have some private time with a friend. This is not too difficult, and at the end, Beryl appreciatively purrs, “You’re so sweet to do that for me; I’ll remember you for sure”. Sure she will! I can see why Argon is so concerned!

Mission 04: Fashion Statement

My hopes were high for this Mission! Pick up a special dress for Beryl, made by the Seamstress, no less! But alas, it was not to be. I discovered from the contact, Charis, that two more weeks were needed for its completion. As a result, the dress in its current state is taken to someone so Argon does not see it, Beryl wants to surprise him. This Mission was a disappointment to me personally, I had been hoping for some new clothes to try on (I figured Beryl wouldn’t mind). As I slunk out, disappointed, my operator chimed in, “You get some /weird/ assignments, Sugaree”. Thanks, Captain Obvious!

Mission 05: NoiseMaker

The story for this one is entertaining as well, and will appeal to the partygoer in all of us. Beryl wants some quality time with Anti-M at a party, and needs us to distract the jealous Argon by attacking some of his men. This one turned out to be much harder than I thought, more along the lines of stirring up a hornets’ nest. In fact, I did this with the redoubtable gunner/martial artist Illyria1, and we were both killed quickly! A little bit of tactics, and a lot of humility, though, helped us to prevail the second time. Lots and lots of fighting though.

So, through this brief suite of missions, we have dropped off a gift for a two-timing tart, procured her drugs, and aided her in cheating on her boyfriend, right after helping her dress to please him! I adore her simple life.

The Coroner

Location: Baldwin Heights (Downtown)

Mission 1. Knock, Knock

For some Mengelian experiments, the Coroner requires rare materials. Unfortunately, these must be extracted from corpses. Worse, as he sheepishly admits, “these cadavers are not yet dead. Well then on your way.” All for science! The first target is a retired policeman with many elite guard friends; Devastation Field helped a lot here. The second is a 51+ level blood noble, an ancient guy who does not go kindly into the night. After these exhausting fights, the final hit, on a bunch of dog pounders, seems like a walk in the park. This Mission features very hard fights, and lots of running around. And I have to admit that I did not feel happy about what I had done at the end. Maybe it’s cuz he didn’t pay all that well.

“Knock, knock” also has the distinction of being the scariest Mission I ever ran in beta; more on this later in a separate installment of Sugar Shack to follow this one.

And maybe a bug remains. I killed the blood noble in one room with a guard. Apparently he had been wandering. Then I wandered into “his” room, saw a random corpse, and only then got the message that he was dead.

Mission 2. Falling Into Place

The Coroner specializes in weird science; he lets others handle the details. In this case, two incriminating surveillance tapes must be purloined and erased. These are stored in safes, so access keys must be obtained. This Mission features some tough fighting with security folks. And not all that much running around, unlike the first one. Now, back in beta, this Mission was famously bugged, and it is a serious pleasure to finally have everything running so smoothly. Our endless bug reports were not in vain, everyone!

Mission 3. The Last Time

His lab is under attack (perhaps relatives of his subjects from the first Mission?) and you need to stop it. At “Hard”, you are up against eight or so three-chevron Level 51s, who have awesome viral resistance. This maxed-out hacker died several times. We learn the story of their leader: Crow, a captain who left Zion to take up a mercenary's life, apparently in the service of the Merovingian. She offers you a chance to walk away from this with no hard feelings; of course I spurned her gesture and slew her. There was much fighting in this Mission and not all that much loot. And by the time you're level 50, what do xps matter? So as I stood amidst the carnage, I was left with little except the satisfaction of making the world safer for the Coroner, a wan pleasure indeed.

Mission 4. The Plan

One of his journals has been stolen by Hypatia, and the Coroner wants you to get it back from her storehouse before its encryption is broken. This involves substantial fighting, after which the encrypted journal just has to be dropped off. Not bad! Finally one where I don't feel bad about winning!

Mission 5. Payback

Like every affronted Exile, the Coroner wants payback. In this case it is a little more imaginative than most. Hypatia will soon in negotiations with The Chef for something, and the Coroner wants to get him a file which will publicly and deeply embarrass her. You must deal with an organization called "The Network" to get the file. Some cute moments. One outspoken bluepill wonders what life is like in our world. Another claims to be the real brains behind a world-famous chef and her TV show. Finally, after much running around for substantial distances, the "meddlesome bookworm" has been dealt with.

And that's it! No praise, no thanks, no nothing. Your patron barely glances at you as he returns to his bizarre researches. So, The Coroner's Missiones are not for the faint or heart or the weak of level. Completists will seek them out. Anyone loving tough action will enjoy them. And compared to many Missiones, I found these quite intense, in tone as well as action. And they contributed to one of my most memorable experiences ever in MxO, as I will explain in the next edition of Sugar Shack.

Tick Tock

Location: Maribeu (Downtown)

1. Rolling Over

One of his men is going to defect to Mr. Black and needs to be killed. He is at the first location you go to, and he obligingly comes out to meet you. On Hard setting, he has the usual coterie of Elite Guards and Blood Nobles, all just begging for a Devastation Field. "Nice work" sums up TickTock's rapturous response.

2. Trading Places

Here, we have a spy, inconspicuously named Zubenelgenubi, who needs to be prepared for insertion into Black's organization. This is a notorious escort mission; the fledgling spy must be taken to a coder for some tagging. Miraculously, this escort mission was fight-free!! (Though I killed everything in my way, just to be on the safe side). And when I had dropped off the spy, TickTock got back to me, with:

"This could be a great opportunity for me, Sugaree"

I felt so happy to be a small part of his success.

3. Do the Wave

TickTock's offices were raided, and you need to raid the raider, and insert a bogus RSI wavelength reading to protect the spy. It may be that the raid was a sucker ploy, intended to aid the insertion of dummy data into Black's network, but this is never explained. Not all that tough, though after killing everyone onsite, the insertion of data is naturally not likely to go unnoticed by any staff with more intelligence than a starfish.

4. False Impressions

Get files from the spy, copy them, and get them back to the spy to replace. Actually, just have to upload them. As you "surreptitiously" enter the premises, you soon encounter a wailing bluepill. He may be safely ignored. A co-conspirator named Avarice decrypts and copies the disk; you just have to upload it. Surprisingly easy, overall.

5. Look Over Here

To aid the spy in replacing the purloined disk, you need to stir up some chaos and confusion as a distraction. What could be easier? Just go and kill everyone at one of Mr. Black's offices, the same kind of subtle, unobtrusive thing you have done so many times before. And that's it!

TickTock is intoxicated with delight at the end, and can't control himself. He bursts out: "You have never let me down, Sugaree. I am impressed." The passion in his voice was unmistakable. Yeah, that's what I want to hear!

Now some people might make the argument that TickTock's demeanor is perfect or a spymaster, never giving away anything and always seeming inscrutable. This is certainly true. But the professional spymaster seldom finds it necessary to resort to wetwork as easily and often as TickTock does. And very few things you do in this mission suite are likely to pass unnoticed.

So what interest is there for us in TickTock and his mechanical missions? XPs, some fights, and some loot, and a small insight into the world around Mr. Black which made me appreciate this premier Exile all the more. But like the clock his name emulates, TickTock's missions exude order and system, without soul or spirit.

The Jeweler

Location: Morrell (Downtown)

1. The Stones

In this first, show-your-worth mission, you get some uncut diamonds from his assistant and deliver them. I expected allusions to Mick Jagger and company, but none was forthcoming. After you receive the stones, there's an NPC who attacks you (numbers depending on party size); a little skill gets you past the threat with ease. Skill not being my forte, I of course died the first time.

2. Just a Few Questions

Of the five Jeweler mishes, the second one is the stand-out. Initially a simple escort mission, it became one of the two or three most difficult missions I have ever undertaken. I failed repeatedly at it solo, and now believe that solo it is undoable. Only when I had a full mission team of outstanding players (Sattakan, Illyria1, Darklordmax, Shread, and Alysha) was it completable, and then only after several tries. Few other missions take the planning and strategy that this one does, believe me.

SPOILER ALERT BEGINS***

Here's why. You're tasked with bringing in the assistant from the first mission for some questioning. The gems you picked up were bogus, and the Jeweler wants to find out what's going on. The assistant, understandably, has surrounded himself with 6-8 bodyguards. Strangely, they show little interest in you, and seem quite bored when you talk to them about their client. In fact, you cannot engage them. When the assistant agrees to come with you, though, they all wake up and instantly start attacking. The client quickly falls in the crossfire. And AOE attacks seem to bring him down as well; hold off on Devastation Fields and Code Nukes.

The second time I tried this, I entered one office and set off the alarms, so I could control the terms of engagement. This set the guards to hostile, and I defeated them piecemeal, working my way to the jeweler's office, using Ballista build rather than AOE's. This brought me to the final guard in the final room with the assistant jeweler. As soon as I spoke to him, however, the guard attacked, and the jeweler died in the crossfire. bleep!

But that's not all! It got worse! Less than ten seconds after this, my operator said there were agents closing in on my location! By the time I reached an elevator, one had already materialized and winged me on the way out! Then he chased me out of the building! I hyperjumped, looking for a hardline, and he was everywhere I came down, taking a big bite out of me each time! I barely made it to a hardline and the blessed loading area, looking more like a piece of Swiss cheese than runner-up for the Ms. Sexiest Redpill!

At Stamos I sat on a bench to stop hyperventilating and re-consider my strategy. And I would still be sitting there, too, if I had not run into an exceptionally talented, fierce group of people (Sattakan, Illyria1, Darklordmax, Shread, and Alysha) who came to my aid. We attacked in a tidal wave of mayhem, quickly obliterating the guards. Then we cleaned out the lobby guards. But the instant I exited the building with the jeweler in tow, three or four more Merv mercenaries appeared out of nowhere and killed our man. Damn!

SPOILER ALERT ENDS***

Eventually, through careful coordination, we got our client to the Jeweler's interrogation team, some happy-go-lucky blood-drinkers. Then the client tried to chicken out. But by then it was too late. And good riddance!

3. Bright Shiny Objects

It turns out that the assistant you bagged last time had nothing to do with this! It was his supplier that caused the problem, and in this simple mish you dish out doom to the duplicitous diamond double-dealer. At the end, the Jeweler is all smiles, and promises to take me out for a night on the town. I wish!

4. Fair Payment

This is “prime time”, and simple enough: getting payment from Exile Anti-M for a special piece of jewelry for her to give Beryl, Argon’s alleged girlfriend. You run into Anti-M (she looks as she did when I ran her missions ages ago) and she helps dispatch a few of the thugs who seek to break in and steal the payment. Anti-M seems quite involved in this mish, apparently not totally convinced of your reliability. Or maybe she just enjoyed the buzz, and wanted a good story to tell Beryl. She reached the final bad before you, in fact, and dispatches him on her own. You have to wonder how she gets around so quickly; the cell phone on a desk with her in the end-game room seems to have something to do with this. If only...if only...

5. A Girl’s Best Friend

Oddly, no fighting is really necessary for this final mission. Here, you just drop off the ring from Anti-M to Beryl. This goes fairly smoothly, except for Beryl initially giving us the wrong address; we seemed to stumble into a Blood Nobles Promise-Keepers convention. Eventually the delivery was completed. When you get here, don’t be in a hurry; Beryl’s pleas for the box are wonderful; I felt like I was talking to someone after my own heart. She thought it might be a new dress or the handmade chocolates she had ordered... She’s my kind of Exile! She was thrilled with the ring, and planned to wear it immediately, just to drive Argon nuts. You go, girl!

And with this, the Jeweler’s entrance to the big leagues of power and influence seems assured, or so he tells us. With his talent, he crows, he won’t need luck! And when he’s running the city, he’ll remember all the little people! Like us!

The Auditor

Location: Union Hill (Downtown)

1. By the Numbers

The Auditor apparently concerns himself with the flow of resources and their management in the Matrix. That is to say, he takes the exciting and makes it dull. His first mish is no exception: “The numbers are all I care about. Everything else is just static in the Matrix....Here’s the address. Get moving.” How personable! Just get and upload two disks from a single location. How could it be simpler?

2. Throwing a Disk

To better understand discrepancies in the matrix, he needs more data. Go get two more disks. There are some fights, and you need the help of a bluepill to get what you want. But that's it. It's all he can imagine. You know the type: "everything that counts can be counted, and if it can't be counted then it doesn't count".

3. For a Few Disks More

There "could be a major system resource leak. This leak could turn into a flood if action is not taken. I just need one more data point to make my final determination. Go get it for me".

By this point I was wondering if this was really an auditor, or just a small time nut trying to inflate his own self-importance. But he did pay his bills.

You have to rescue some bluepill's girlfriend before he will give you the data you need. This is maddeningly difficult, because when you are escorting the bluepill, you are subject to one major NPC attack, which you expect, but also from random gang members and even security guards. This is best done with friends, since one stray ricochet instantly brings down the woman and aborts the mission. It took me seven attempts to get this done, and I only completed it at all thanks to the awesome help of Sattakan, who cleared away the lobby guards, spontaneous attacks, and three groups of gangmembers. I had to escort the frail girlfriend almost 400 meters through all these threats.

4. Resource Management

For some peculiar reason, The Auditor has assets, and they are under attack. You arrive in time to find many bluepills slain, and data taken. One bluepill gasps, "The data...save the data" and then falls to the floor; apparently the Auditor found people of a like frame of mind to work with him.

5. Stop the Leak

The leak, it turns out, is no accident; someone is creating the discrepancy for his own purposes. "I cannot allow this." For this final mish, you need an artifact from the Sculptress. Well, three, actually. They must be given to three people for the full effect. The first delivery is a snap. In the second one, you have to fight your way in, with some Merv allies. However these "allies" are worthless, and do nothing to hinder those who would kill you. Several times they walked right past me during fights! The third one features a red herring, and a slightly more serviceable ally. The most notable part is that the third recipient of these statues stands with one foot in a wastebasket, oblivious! No wonder the Matrix is in danger!

In the end, you get some thanks, and that is about it. Not much considering you have saved the Matrix! The malefactor behind the scheme remains a mystery. Perhaps a future installment will see you bringing the fight to him/her. It's the perfect tie in for some story-line events later. Perhaps some mad Zionists are seeking to destabilize the whole matrix...oh, wait, that's already been done, right?

Summing up, the Auditor is weak in the personality, wit, and charm department. His missions reflect his personality. Who would have thought that saving the whole matrix could seem like such a tedious chore?

Pepper

Location: Vauxton (Downtown)

1. Petty Retribution

The raison d'être for this revenge against Silver is not clear; apparently she regards him as stingy. It seems trivial and pointless. Steal a virus and load it into Silver's server. Apparently she is too lazy, or thinks too little of Silver, to make the effort to design a virus herself. This seems like the kind of easy mission you are given to prove your ability and trustworthiness. It certainly seems to have no other point!

2. Speed Kills

Pepper has heard of some Exiles smuggling in speed-enhancing algorithms from Machine City, and she wants some for her Lab to look at. What? She has a lab? Who would want to work for her? The first site has nothing except some interesting bluepills to talk to. The second site has a stern taskmaster who must be satisfied before he gives you the schematics you desire. However, things do not go as smoothly as we might have expected.

3. Unexpected Consequences

The speed-boosters have driven test subjects nuts, and you have to put them down before they kill all of Pepper's techies! Maybe there are some things that Exiles were not meant to know! The problems is less simple than it seems: a couple of the ailing subjects have fled, and after saving Pepper's scientists, you need to track down the fugitives. The fugitive is not nutso affected though, just hallucinating people he cares about. The whole experiment was doomed from the word go, turns out.

4. Hazard Pay

With that crisis past, Pepper's attention returns to her other business operations. It turns out that a courier has gone missing, and you need to track him down. A file purporting to help you find him turns out to be corrupted, and you need to get it reconstructed from backup. A security breach at Pepper's labs has affected your ability to complete the mission! Eventually the courier is found, dead, and the package he was carrying is retrieved and delivered. Once more, things have gone way awry for Pepper. One of her scientists complimented me on having saved the techies in the last mission; I always appreciate tight continuity like this.

5. The Swap

It emerges that the "speed" code carried a Trojan virus; hence its unexpected toxicity. The question is, who put it there? An informant promises to make all clear if his palm is crossed with a special delivery. Your task is to complete the exchange and relay the information. When the secret enemy is revealed, you are tasked with the complete, pitiless destruction of her and her gang. At the end Pepper concludes that "you've been a great help to me, Sugaree", and downloaded a fine purple coat to compensate me for all my troubles. In true Pepper fashion, though, it went to the wrong person.

As the "enemy" dies, Pepper muses how sad this was, since this exile was one of her most promising recruits. It's hard not to wonder if someone had planted disinformation, knowing how gullible and intemperate she is. And in every mission, something seems to go wrong; pepper always seems in over her head, needing you to straighten things out. She doesn't pay you enough! But there are many witty touches in the writing for this, and the lines for Exiles and thugs.

The Bartender

Location: Edgewater (Downtown)

1. Pickup Green

Naturally, her concerns focus on operations, not things or people. She needs you to make a payment to Endymion (lovely name) for some stock for "special libation", not for coppertops. Endymion has his own problems who must be removed before he can do business. In the end you have impressed both him and the Bartender, and the rare liquor has been delivered, and both Endymion and the Bartender are developing a good impression of you.

2. The Dionysus Gambit

Some things, though, cannot be bought. A rare wine, Dom Perrineau '37, is owned by an Exile playboy named Dionysius; the Bartender wants you to liberate the only known bottle for her. Despite your best efforts, though, it is not to be found; her information was apparently off-target. The code of many a thug was spilled in vain.

3. The Dionysus Gambit, Part 2

Never one to give up easily, the Bartender dispatches you to an alternate location for Dionysus where the Dom has been taken, for display along with some other way rare items, adding, "This plan has the upside of making him look like an ass". You blow through some quite unelegant settings in Edgewater and score the brew. For someone like Dionysus, I was kind of expecting a more upscale setting. An expert cheers (!) when he tests the wine, and you're done! Turns out this is intended for the Merovingian's wife, who we meet in...

4. The Dionysus Gambit, Part 3

To renew her liquor license, the Bartender needs the blessing of the Merovingian; you need to deliver the Dom to Persephone!! For a Machinist, these chances are few and far between. The bartender gives a great characterization of her that only excited my interest: "She's a darling- graceful, poised, and intelligent. She's also hideously deceitful and manipulative....Do not be lured into any untoward activity." Persephone was all that and more. And her parting words to me: "Thank you so much. You must be a very talented operative to have obtained such a treasure for me. And so attractive. Mmmm..." made my Machinist convictions feel weak, and I thought about joining the Sirens. Thank God Gusman and Nosgoul1 were there to strengthen me.

5. Creative License

Here you go and get the license from Flood. His guards insist in a fighting skill demonstration (cheating is allowed). Then you take the license to Bartender, and you're done; the bartender makes a special trip out of Club Noir to meet you and receive the license. In this conclusion, there is no special item or prize, which disappointed me; I had heard there were such items, and was hoping for a Black Lotus blouse or a Succubus outfit. But I had gone from angering her in my last mish suite to winning her admiration, and that was something.

The Chef

Location: Pillsen (Downtown)

1. Paging

The Chef needs a special recipe from the famous packrat Hypatia, and she will not give it up without him doing something for her: getting rid of some nuisance Exiles. She reciprocates with generosity one seldom experiences from Exiles, and warm words for you. She must remember me from doing her mishes last week!

2. And a Bottle of Rum

For a rare dish some rare rum must be obtained from the Bartender's stock. This becomes vastly more complicated when you kill the wrong people, discover it has been stolen and the Chef must yield professional information in recompense, only to find someone else has it and is using it at that very moment. The Exile telling you this ("Have fun!") starts slapping his knee in laughter. As usual, you must retrieve it and kill everyone involved. One cute note: as you kill the competing chef (dismissed by the Chef as an "incompetent hack") and staff to retrieve the rum, you note a bottle of diet soda perched on a desk! Better make sure that's rum in the bottle!

3 Bedtime Reading

He needs help getting some of the ancient recipes translated. Simple in theory, this becomes tough in execution, since you have to escort not one but two low-level NPCs a long way through the dangerous streets of the downtown area. Count on at least one attack. Of course, once they get to their destination, the task is trivial. Curiously, others seem to be after the same programs you are.

4. Spice Story

Spice from the Bartender is also needed. But after a recent fiasco, she is ill-disposed to cooperate, and thus a diversion attack is necessary: wipe out a safe house of hers (not so dissimilar from a raid on a house of the Seamstress for the Weaver). The spice is then obtained, and taken to a flunky chef. This chef's staff is none too impressed with you, and make a number of rude comments, like "You probably can't even appreciate the kind of dishes we create. Cretin!" and "I don't think you would appreciate what we have to offer. Why don't you go get some greasy fast food?"

5 If I'd Known You Were Coming

The Chef has prepared a masterpiece work for Mr. Black, using the rum and spice and ancient recipes we have gathered for him. We need to get some icing tools to an assistant, and then take the finished product to Mr. Black. When his flunkies check the finished work, it turns out that there has been a miscalculation and a fight breaks out! Surprise, surprise! The Chef's reputation will never be the same, and he gives me a useless pair of pants as a hasty going away present. The Chef's disappointment is well-portrayed; mine must be imagined. Not even an éclair!

After reading so much about food, and smelling so much expended gunpowder, I wanted to get dressed up and go to the Merovingian's sunny, trendy spot for a leisurely lunch. And, really, this mish suite could have been so easily built around the Merovingian's palate, with his murmured appreciation and Persephone's purrs. It's unclear why the austere Mr. Black was selected. I mean, has he done something to deserve it? And as we all know, cake plays an important role in Merovingian culture; I am surprised that no one thought to or found a way to work this into these mishes.

Nonetheless, there are many well-written moments, a few of which I have already shared. In mid-mission, the Chef starts ruminating, "I have heard of ancient human writings that describe fine wines, delicate pastries, decadent feasts...I wonder what did they actually taste like? How would they compare to the tastes of food here in the Matrix? Have we even come close? I wonder...Hmm? Oh, yes, good work and all that. Please get the recipe for me". And the mishes well capture the obsessive professionalism of gods of cookery.

The Network

Location: Industry Square (Downtown)

1. Tat Tap Tap

This starts out the right way: "You come recommended as someone with great discretion, Sugaree". This seems like a classic, if generic, mission: a spy device has been planted in a machine stronghold; we have to go kill some machine guys and we're good to plant a bug and you are done. He says you have a future! Tell me more, please! Good writing characterizes this mish.

2. Silver Toys

This second mish is the best of the lot. Exile Silver has ventured downtown from Richland to show a spy device to a buyer. We get there first, kill all his hired help, and then politely ask for it. He makes empty threats- "Well, Meat...these are the finest of the Slashers; they will rid me of your presence". But don't worry, he talks this way to everyone until he needs your help. The Network says you are very persuasive (foreshadowing for the next mission). Fun interaction with his cutout who received the device from us: a typical stressed-out middle manager wailing at the hired help. He is impatient, as we can see: "Don't be a slacker. We've got to have synergy to build a convergent enterprise!" Perhaps as SOE spoke to Lith, many moons ago...

3. A Convincing Argument

An entertainer with great influence over bluepills wishes to remain aloof and isolated, like Greta Garbo. But The Network wishes something else, and tasks us to fight our way to her and simply deliver a letter. In this mish the opposition was unusually severe. I got killed several times, including by an agent, whom I laid waste to me with just three shots! Eventually you reach her, if you persevere; she is suitably horrified.

4. Dailies

Some film with bluepill-influencing codes has been stolen by an exile; The Network wants it back. This mish was convenient indeed, taking place inside the same building as the club! Was it an exploit to accept it? Only the devs know for sure...."Brilliant, Sugaree!" he gushes at the end. Note to self: introduce him to Weaver.

5. Counter Programming

Someone has been vandalizing one of The Network's relay stations, and he wants to get rid of them. We simply go and kill everyone we find; what could be easier! Oh, and then we take one guy's head and deliver it to one of TN's competitors, after fighting our way in. The echo of The Godfather is surely not coincidental. "How could you, you animals!" wails the competing network leader. In one unfortunate gaffe, the body lying on the ground seems intact, even though we have presumably decapitated it.

In these missions, we see some standard actions, punched up with the inclusion of a surprising Exile, Silver, and imaginative speech from the principal and the hired help. They're enjoyable. And after Weaver's unrelenting insults and put-downs, it was a pleasure to get some praise, however insincere it might have been!

Location: South Vauxton (Downtown)

The Weaver has business dealings with the Seamstress, of course, and we should expect Scarlett to figure in this as well! The gentle, aesthetic Weaver starts off strong:

“Sugaree, huh? Never heard of you. And to be honest, I don’t like what I see. I mean, look at those cheap knockoff clothes....but I guess you will have to do”.

As if! One look at her gaudy, gauche, over-colored outfit would make anyone start asking why the pot was calling the kettle black. But I persevered for the sake of you, dear reader.

1. Warp and Weft

The Seamstress will buy some special fabric from her, but she needs silk from The Mothman. And he in turn needs some gang members snuffed. Got that? The attack site is a convenient stone’s throw from her street corner, but the Sleepers are not your average sleepers; they’re way tough. At the end The Weaver sighs, “It takes scum to deal with scum, I guess”, but concludes “Come back soon! I can always use good day labor.” Thanks! I think.

2. Danger Looms

The Weaver needs a critical piece of code for a Loom upgrade she has in mind, but does not want to pay the Pheasant (a local smuggler) for it. You can see where this is going, I’m sure! Two tough fights and a quick upload later, she warmly thanks you, “See? That wasn’t so hard, was it? Maybe next time you can show a little more initiative”. Why do I even bother?

3. To Rose with Love

In this short mish, you pick up silk from a bluepill tasked with holding it for Weave. However, the bluepill dies and you have to go visit his brokenhearted wife. Weaver, as always, is a fountain of sympathy for the lost and struggling: “I wonder what you were like as a bluepill? I can’t even imagine where you’d start in order to rise to your current level of incompetence.” And this for a successful mission!

4. Shuttle Mission

The silk from last mish has not been turning out as planned, and Weave wants you to take a sample for analysis to find out why. It turns out she has made a “novice” mistake, and you need some code to rectify things. This brings you into conflict with the area’s Runners gang, who have an unexplained interest in the code. Witty operator comments.

5. Devil in the Details

Weaver now wants retribution against the Seamstress for canceling an order! Talk about vindictive! This starts with wiping out a safe house for her, and then going to another Seamstress facility to drop off a virus and wipe out her server. She appreciates your work: “Well, it seems that when mindless killing is called for, you’re the person to talk to.”

When this is done, the Weaver has lost her patience with you, and gives you a “trinket” and dumps you unceremoniously. “Quite frankly, you’re a liability”. For my 50th level character, this was some enhanced gloves, suitable for a level 16 character. But it was the thought that counts, I guess. As if!

Thallia

Location: Magog (Richland)

1. Calculated Risk

The classic milk-run first mission! Pick up and drop off a package. She speaks with authority and formality: “There should be no complication, but should they arise you will be required to deal with them. Do we have an understanding?”. She was not opening to me at all yet. The initial pick-up is smooth (though Thallia nonetheless intervenes to tell you “Try not to waste any time”); but things become complicated at the drop-off, where your contact lies dead! After you have killed everyone there, Thallia seems positively smug: “Good. I suspected Mercury was moving against me, but this confirms it. Don’t worry about the package, it was only bait. You’ve proven to be very dependable.” I think that’s good news.

2. Applying Pressure

“Ahh, Sugaree, your timing isn’t awful.” With this cryptic greeting, the Mercury arc continues. In order to provoke him to an impetuous early implementation of his plans, she tasks you with attacking two of his labs and wiping out their staff and data. Well, not completely out; she wants you to leave a single survivor at each location, so the word gets back to Mercury. Like a calling card.

This is a straightforward kick-down-the-doors, shoot-up-the-targets mission. But you must be careful not to kill every one. Several times when doing this with clanmates, my partners got carried away and forgot this. I had the pleasure of telling Thallia we had screwed up. It was not a happy time. Thallia’s aggressive manipulation delighted me. Before I had left the building, I heard from her: “Perfect. Mercury has already contacted me with threats of retaliation.... Sometimes, this is just too easy.”

3. Boiling Point

When Mercury’s forces attack Thallia’s, you move in from behind for a surprise counterattack. “Kill them all. Spare no one,” advises my Operator. Don’t have to say that twice! You slay at two sites, score a data CD which Mercury’s men have been after, and then drop it off. Thallia is clearly impressed. “You’re more useful than you look, Sugaree. I might have some...sensitive work for you in the future.” Along the way we hear this memorable line from Thallia: “Mercury couldn’t scheme his way out of a wet paper bag”. Wow, that was harsh. I’m sure she doesn’t talk that way about me when I’m not around....

4. An Offer They Can’t Refuse

“Sugaree, you haven’t managed to get yourself killed...yet”. That’s Thallia’s way of saying she is delirious to see me. This time, three informants need persuading. The first one is a former employee of Beryl. After I get into her super-locked room with a spare key, she reveals that Beryl has a nasty habit, with one of Argon’s men being her main contact. Hmm... Girl Scout thin mints?

The second one comes off as a tough cookie, to be sure. He swears not to cooperate, and then orders his Sears Rent-A-RSI simulacrum to attack me while he watches and sneers. After I trash it, he changes his tune. We discover that Raini is aware of Beryl’s narcotics habit, and wants the same thing. This only confirmed my low opinion of Raini, who devoted an entire mission to getting drugs.

Alas, the third one dies before you can reach him; someone has taken an interest in Thallia’s interest. This curiosity is not pursued.

5. Digging Deeper

Thallia is endlessly inquisitive, and finally tasks you with capturing an informant to find out more about Beryl and Raini. The target has surrounded herself with lupine mercenaries, and you must fight your way past them to get her, collect any disks she has, and deliver them all. Well, this sounded simple, but I was soon introduced the hard way to an ability called “backfist”. This dished out 4555 (1811 absorbed) damage to me! In one shot! Yow! I don’t know who has this, but I want it!

So, anyway, I finally escorted the reluctant informant past several dozen Blackwoods, who all seemed to be in a good mood, 'cuz none of them felt like attacking us. What a miracle! As I left the drop-off, I could hear the woman wailing behind me, "Are you just going to leave me here with him? You can't do that!" Counting my hard-earned cash, I thought, I sure can, honey. Thallia's last call to me was sheer delight: she cooed, "Oh, this is priceless. Beryl and Raini won't know what hit them. You performed admirably, Sugaree, I will certainly require your services in the future." That's what they all say!

The Digger

Location: Dannah Heights (Richland)

He believes in past iterations of the Matrix, and seeks to better understand them. There's no backstory deeper than this! One might think that the machines would be the best source of information for him, but as an Exile, he cannot comfortably approach them, it appears. So he seeks everything through indirection, requiring your aid. I kind of liked him. But as a person, not as a mission contact.

1. Site of Interest

A nearby building has some areas which he wishes to research, about a previous iteration of the Matrix. The thing is, some inconvenient Exiles are hanging out there; he needs me to persuade them to move. This is surprisingly easy, since the Exiles in question are in two separate locations, and do not team up. However, it felt unfortunate to me that there was no easier way to free up the space for research (and it was a third and fourth floor apartment, so it's not like he needed to actually, you, _dig_ or anything) some other way than killing everyone there. Surely the local crime lords could have been engaged to persuade them to leave. Or maybe they could have been paid off? Must everything come down to guns?

2. Passing Notes

He wants to pass his research notes on to Hypatia in exchange for access to some of her books. Three elite guards assault you at the drop-off though; they have killed Hypatia's representative. "Sugaree's here, just like he said," one shouts; we are left wondering who "he" is. But the next stop is a successful drop off. The Digger gets his books access, and you get a pat on the back: "Good work, kid. I can keep going with my research, now I've got Hypatia's books."

By the way, I enjoyed seeing some win-win barter here. Usually Exiles kill everything in their way to get what they want (i.e., the first mission). I liked seeing someone a little more creative.

3. Safer Ground

Take his most valuable artifact, a statue, to The Collector to protect it from the avaricious Argon. I received a note from my Operator about a fight with some of Argon's men, but it never actually happened. Not that I am complaining mind you. The suspicious soul in me wondered if this was a ploy meant to flush out the Digger's best stuff to bring it to the Collector... I mean, it happened in a Sherlock Holmes story once. Overall, a quite simple, straightforward mission. Not like The Maltese Falcon, Indiana Jones or Gods, Graves, and Scholars at all! Perhaps more simple than such a key item might have been warranted.

4. Plug the Leak

You might think that the Digger is too arcane, and too ivory-towerish to have an organization. But you would be wrong. He does, and it comes complete with turncoats, one of whom you "snuff" in this mission. This was the one who set me up in the last mish, so it was personal. As a story this mish was leak. Basically, I traveled to a location to kill someone and his guards. There was no sense of why this person had betrayed, or what his goals, rewards, and motivation were. As I was fighting his last guard, he could have been going on about how he was going to get revenge finally, etc. Much more could have been done with this. It took a disk from him to an associate of the Digger's and I was done. After I gave them to her, she kept asking if I had them. Curiously, the disk to be taken for safekeeping went to a building right next to his hangout!

5. A Collector's Collection

Word of mouth rules! The Digger has mentioned me to Sirius, who wants to meet me personally before giving me an assignment. This involves rescuing one of Sirius' people who has been taken by the Sculptress, whose interest in these guys can be imagined. Very tough fight here with no less than eight enemies (!) who attack you en masse. "Nice job, kid. Sirius was really impressed with your work". The Digger himself, though, seemed to have run out of assignments for me.

Mr. Po

Location: Kowloon (International)

1. Shadow Play

"An inquisitive mouse finds many morsels the further afield he looks. I am an old and hungry mouse. Go to these addresses and search their computers for tasty bits."

So starts this most exceptional mission. It has three parts, each building on the one preceding, which open your eyes to many a heart lost in the Matrix. Do them soon!

Part 1. You casually peruse three computers in an Exiles service agency. You discover a distraught redpill in tears as he tries to decide whether or not to return to his old life to visit the woman he left behind. Go, I told him, she would want you to. I glanced at the computer screen and saw her on a bed with a scrapbook of news stories about a missing man and the police search for him. As I stood there, feeling for her and for him, the Exile, a superb salesman, sidled up to me and said in a soft voice "Are you sure there isn't someone you'd like to see? Mother? Father? A child perhaps? A lost lover?" I thought of my parents and family, and how I had left them with no warning. What had I been thinking, to do this to them? He asked me again, and I quickly left. No, actually I fled.

The next two computers there had more information about this. But nothing dramatic. Mr. Po's take on this surprised me: "Nothing so lightens the heart as when a fool awakens from his folly. Still, more must be revealed. Continue your search". Oddly enough, continuing my search took me right back to Mr. Po's building.

Part 2. There I found a Machines office where they have been monitoring these services, apparently trying to run sweeps for indications of regret in the population. This leads my sponsor to intone "That which is hidden can never know the light. That which lives in the light will never know peace. The search continues." Yes, Master.

Part 3. I met a kindred spirit. In an abandoned redpill extraction center, Captain Wasat and an aide maintain a lonely vigil. Reading his journals shows the bitterness he feels about his daughter, left unrecruited in the pods. Another computer shows records of multiple remittances from him to the Exile agency in Part 1. I tried hacking his computer to actually get the files (brashly, while he was standing next to me) and though I succeeded, he did nothing and I found nothing. I could tell he did not care what anyone did. I left him as I found him, waiting for some unknown release.

I felt shaken by all this, and left Kowloon to seek the reassurance of my clan. As I stood at the hardline, I heard Mr. Po intone "Wisdom lights the path and Strength walks it". Perhaps this means the Cypherites know of these services...or run them...

2. Incubation

We plunge from the sublime in Mish 1 to the profane in Mish 2, an insufferable escort mish which took multiple tries to get right. I started to worry as soon as I heard Mr. Po's suggestive directions: "One rabbit alone is a meal for an observant hawk. Many rabbits keep the hawk sated and still there are more rabbits. Retrieve the rabbit at this address". I felt my ears growing.

As soon as you contact the bluepill in question, you are attacked. As soon as you leave the elevator, you are attacked. As soon as you leave the building, you are attacked. As you pass within a lightyear of any mob on the way to the destination, you are attacked. A single stray shot or ricochet or harsh word instantly kills the bluepill, and you get to start over. Any questions?

I tried leaving the bluepill in the elevator while I cleaned out the lobby. Then leaving her in the lobby while I cleared the way to the destination. By the time I had reached the destination and killed the mobs, the ones back at the starting point had regenerated. I tried tucking her in buildings along the way while I re-cleaned the route, and mobs inside the building killed her. Finally I gave up in disgust, and asked some friends to help me. This worked beautifully, and soon I was reading Mr. Po's words, "The path to enlightenment begins with a single step. The purpose of the rabbit will become clear to you in time." And perhaps his observation about a multitude of rabbits was a hint about the right way to approach this perverse mission.

3. Isolation

"A lone bird in a nest of vipers is surely dead. A broken nest offers an opportunity for escape."

So begins this very well-constructed and very ingenious story. It starts out simple: rescue a redpill and return him to Zion. But when you do, they try to kill him! It turns out that there's some "misunderstanding" and one Zionist captain holds this guy responsible for the death of his wife. So, his bridges burned with Zion, he decides to join Mr. Po's organization, and you drop him off with some of Mr. Po's operatives. They are not surprised at all. Somehow, they observe, things always seem to work out just right for Mr. Po and his plans. I was pondering this as Mr. Po paid us all off and observed, "opportunity is made, not found". What wise words they are.

4. Leaders of Men

"As a diseased finger must be struck off, so must a toxin be rid from the body."

After the intricacies of the earlier missions, now Mr. Po eases up. A traitor must be brewkoed, and that's it. The first location is empty, but the second one yields the principal. The traitor is disgruntled because Mr. Po keeps him on such a tight leash; he cannot stray more than a short distance from a hardware tether. It was hard to blame him, but I fulfilled my mission nonetheless. After all, as Mr. Po reminds me at the end, "pain is a part of life". Mr. Po, it seems, moonlights as a CSR....

5. New Dawn Fades

"A lamb has gone astray and a good shepherd knows to bring it back to the flock"

A Zionist operative wants to switch, and we must assist him. First I helped him get to a hardline (a vastly easier escort mish that #2, by the way). Then we help him in the Desert of the Real. This involved "that which all men fear", which turned out not to be, umm, what I thought it would be. I purloined a virus (neat test tube graphic), uploaded it to incapacitate the defector's old hovercraft crew, watched them fall like leaves, and left. Note: do not engage the Zionists; just go straight to the computer and upload the virus. This permitted another hovercraft to dock with them and take aboard the defector. Who knows what else they might have felt like doing? Operetta has been involved in this in some capacity; she seems to be at odds with Mr. Po.

At the end of this fascinating mission, Mr. Po nods at you and says with quiet strength, "Just so. We are whole". And that is the end. How ironic that at this instant my connection with him broke, and forever after when I asked him for a mish, he blandly said he had no more work for me.

The Newsie

Location: Park East (Downtown)

1. Scoop

A competitor has some files, and he wants me to steal them. (I went to college for this?) My operator said I should be able to sneak in and out, and this strategy worked fine until I ran into my first guard. That is to say, it didn't work at all. One bluepill stopped to tell me I had pretty eyes, and as I stopped to screenshot this, I died. Apparently this was a strategy for distraction, and it worked. The next time I was able to run in, dodge bullets, avoid combat, and filch the file. The current owner of the information was a noisy, picky jerk, like the news editor in Spiderman, blowing up when someone forgets to put cream in his coffee.

In the end you drop off the file at the Newsie's editorial offices where his folks are thrilled, as is their boss, who exclaims, "Nice job, Sugaree! Come see me later...I can use someone with moxie like you!"

2. Unhealthy Competition

After confessing that he has taken a shine to you, he wants you to kill a rival, Prior. It's a curious lapse of professionalism, to say the least! It seems someone has been cutting into his regular sales. When I arrive at the heavily defended site, one lieutenant flunky crows about "you are so dead" until I smoked the guards. Then he begs you not to hurt him, and takes you right to Prior. Then he blurts out to Prior "I'm sorry. Sugaree made me do it! I was just so scared!". His boss was not impressed. Of course when the fighting is over, he is nowhere to be seen. Nice details!

3. Home Delivery

Like most newspapers, the Newsie's has specialized editions for different target readers. One such special edition goes to Dame White, who enjoys reading its news "that's not, ah, generally available". The Newsie likes her, calling her "a real classy broad", and bidding you to make haste with her newspaper: "Move fast and she might even give you a nice big tip!". Oh, the irony! Here I am, a ship's Captain and a member of my clan's Council, and I am reduced to delivering newspapers! But I am never one to turn down a chance for face time with a major Exile, so off I went!

It turns out that the Hellions are making a major move against Dame White. And amidst all this chaos, the Newsie still wants the paper delivered! I felt like Kevin Costner in The Postman! However, I took the liberty of saving Dame White first, scoring big points with her. I know she'll be really nice to me when I get to her during the Pandora's Box mishes.

4. To The Source

The Newsie is a curious amalgam of professionalism and fanaticism. After going the extra mile in the last mish to please a customer, now he is asking us to not just kill a competitor, but kill a _source_ for a rival newspaper! Where will this end? Burning the forests his competitors use for wood pulp? Shooting his rival's customers? Blowing up the trucks his competitors use to ship newspapers?

In fact, this mish is surprisingly easy, which is a letdown. Just talk to enough people until one gives you something, and instantly your mission objectives tell you who to kill. Kind of a disappointment. This was basically a mystery, and it wasn't very difficult. In fact, this was the easiest Newsie mish by far!

5. If It Bleeds, It Leads

If there's not enough news, you just have to make your own. And killing bluepills doesn't get headlines, whereas killing powerful programs does. You can see where this leads... Two very tough fights here, and it's hard to get emotionally involved in this mere killing for attention. By the third murder you're asked to commit, wiping out White Security (!), word has gotten out and you have to adjust your plans. Just look at the mission map for their areas when you arrive! The irony is that he stands on a corner surrounded by White Security, and now he wants to waste them all! The Newsie realizes his plan is not viable for the long term, and bids you farewell. At the end he did send me an enhanced suit jacket as a going away present, which was nice. But his unconscionable callousness left a bad taste in my mouth.

Nicky G.

Location: Hampton Green (Downtown)

1. Paper Trail (or was that “Paper Trial”?)

“There’s a piece of paper I need very much. It’s a page from a book.” Well, I thought, it doesn’t get much more trivial than this. I sighed and took it anyway. And was I surprised. Reader, I died, and not just once. However, a few Devastation Fields later I was in and had the document. Oddly, I noticed Agents and Blood Drunks on the same force, which I do not think I had noticed before. Overall, a simple mish with a single object at a single location, leaving me wishing there had been more depth: some sense of what was on the page, why it had been separated from the book, who had written it, why Nicky wanted it, etc.

2. Blue Book

Nicky craves a book owned by Mr. Black (this sounds like Hypatia!). First break into an office to sabotage a security feed going to Mr. Black. While looking for Nicky, I happened to interrupt a Zionist party with the FinkGothics and their hangers-on. Sorry, guys! It was for a good cause! Anyway, the first step is to disable Mr. Black’s security feeds with a virus. Then get the book. Finally, I took it to a specialist to vet its authenticity. The volume seems to be quite the hot potato; your operator says to get rid of it before it is traced to you. The expert wants you to leave before you are traced to him. It’s quite a paranoid world that the subdued, intense Nicky G. inhabits.

3. Betray an Exile Code Dealer

The book I stole was exactly what she wanted, but it needs a signature manipulator to unlock it (damn DRM!). Naturally, the Exile who has it (and who first sold the book to Mr. Black) expects a great deal for it. But Nicky has “an alternate plan. Kill him and take it”. The course of this mission is predictable. The interest, part from Nicky’s disturbing callousness, comes from the Exile and his colleagues, one of whom cries out “He was my brother!”. Things went kind of downhill after that. But Nicky felt upbeat about everything. “Very very good, Sugaree. You might be one of my most effective freelancers.” As if there were any doubt!

4. Leaves

This seems inevitable: Nicky has reached out to supreme bibliophile Hypatia, who’s agreed to give her a few pages missing from the Blue Book. Someone failed to keep a secret, though, and the meeting location is jam-packed with Mr. Black’s folks. Of course they didn’t accept my story about selling Girl Scout cookies and tried to kill me. Hypatia, being no dummy, blew off the meeting. Total accomplishment: zero.

5. Bound for Success

Since last time, Hypatia’s got cold feet, and now we have to steal from her. After killing everyone in the first office, you discover the pages are not there! The second location is more fruitful, and then you simply drop them off with a cut-out. As I got in the elevator, feeling bad about crossing Hypatia, I got a call from Nicky: “You truly are amazing, Sugaree. I think I’m going to curl up with that book for a nice, long read. I’m afraid I won’t have any more work for you for the time being.” And that was it. The falling snow outside felt soothing and cleansing; I stood in it catching snowflakes on my tongue.

The Landlord

Location: Creston Heights (Downtown)

1. The Deed

Even the Landlord must bow to the lord of the land. He needs a building permit from the Merovingian and tasks you with paying for it; naturally he would never do this himself. Other Exiles of course seem to have an interest in this, and you discover that the deed custodian is held hostage by them. These fights were tough indeed. The enemies had good AI, and kept moving around so you could never count on them being someplace, waiting for you to Devastation Field them.

Oddly enough, the Custodian still demands payment for the deed, despite your rescue. That's gratitude for you!

2. The Dirty Deed

The only thing better than success for yourself is ruining the efforts of your rivals. And that's what you do here. There's nothing personal, but the Landlord wants you to, you know, distract one of his competitors by killing off his staff and sabotaging his computer systems. Wow, that's tough love! I don't think even Steven Balmer would go this far! Notable features of this mission include dubious fashion choices for the Exile's staff (cool outfits including chef hats!) and one of the Exiles crying out "Sugaree! It's you! Wow, I've never had the chance to kill a famous person!" Alas his dream came true more than once.

At the end, the Landlord chortles, "Nicely done. It's always better to stop the competition early."

3. Just a Couple of Things

For one of his projects, the Landlord needs some specialist parts. In particular, he wants a "code destabilizer" and an "asynchronous buffer loop" (sounded like Star Trek technobabble to me!), and he tasks you with getting them. Alas, only the Machines have access to rare items like this, and you must break into their well-staffed and well-protected storehouses to get them.

For me, a Machinist, this was a very hard mission. I could only hope that Agent Grey knew and understood and forgave.

The other thing that made this very hard was the defense! Nearly a dozen Agents and their friends, all north of 50! Naturally the areas containing the access computers and the actual loot were exceptionally well-staffed. The secret here was discovered by BrightAngel, who seemed to be on a first-name basis with many of the agents there. She did not lay a finger on them. She ran in, dodged fire, got the gear, and ran out. Her subtle approach made this a snap. If you plan on fighting your way through, set aside an afternoon. I cannot emphasize this enough!

The Landlord is smug at the end. "Good job. These are perfect for my needs". I'm still not sure just what the two devices do.

4. Oh, I Almost Forgot

Just like me, after the Landlord does some shopping he realizes he forgot something and has to go back to the mall. This time he needs a "Jungian Compiler" and a bundle of “cerebral disharmonizers”. I think the former is for recalcitrant interrogees (like Thomas Anderson) and the second is for weakening enemies.

Just when I was gearing up for another epic battle, BrightAngel ran in, snatched the items from a safe, and ran out! And that was it! Everything is at a single location! No one has to even be killed! In fact, this monster mish turned out to be snap, crackle, and pop! Not that I was disappointed, mind you.

5. Window Dressing

The Landlord has a new construct all done! It’s ready to go, needing only the attention of an interior decorator, who unfortunately has been kidnapped. The Landlord wants to get his consultant back, and he wants to send a message to would-be troublemakers: kill everyone. Except the decorator, that is. There’s quite the crowd of Blood Nobles and riffraff, as well as a blowhard named Arlon (a competitor of the Landlord) who crows about putting you down; it was satisfying to smash him. The inevitable escort mission at the end worried me greatly. But it was simple. No attacks from lobby guards or marauding Mervs or local mobs. Sometimes it’s wonderful when no one seems to care. And at the end we have a chance to listen to the Landlord pat himself on the back. What a treat!

The Bag Lady

Location: Moriah Projects (Richland)

1. Odd Baubles

We learn that odd data packets have been discovered floating around the Matrix, and the dour Tick Tock from downtown seems to have a lock on them. Well, not for long! The Collector craves these as well, and the Bag Lady dispatches you to serve his interests. This involves a single entry, three fights, two disks, and one mainframe. Simply, really. The Bag Lady purrs at the end, “Oooh, Sugaree, you’re not bad. Very nice”.

2. A Killing Hold

This continues the frag arc. Tick Tock notes the break-in and the missing materials, and has dispatched the redoubtable “Downstream” to look into this. The Collector wants to discourage these inquiries, and the Bag Lady sends you off with, “On your way, Sugaree. There’s killing to be done.” It reminds me of the Weaver, and how she would also have some sarcastic observation, like “When there’s mindless killing to be done, you seem to be the one to call!” But I am sure she did not mean it that way.

This too is straightforward. Break into a single dumpy Richland venue, dispatch a couple of guards, and snuff Downstream. In the end I could sense the Bag Lady’s excitement as she whispered, “Well, Sugaree. You’ve done a good job. Very nice.” I knew she’d give me something special or the next one!

3. Good Garbage

In this most bizarre mission, we finally learn why Bag Lady is the right name for her! She wants me to divert Tick Tock’s garbage to her! OMG, is this what my life has come to? A trash hijacker? cries

Anyway, this miracle is accomplished by mainframing a virus to alter the workflow, and redirect the refuse. She is thrilled: “Oooo....very nice, Sugaree. Very nice, indeed.” I could sense her excitement. Maybe she was in bed with the Assassin. Figuratively, of course.

Curiously the immensely entertainment value of this situation is not explored at all. No jokes, no wit, no after-action reports on just what was found in the trash. Talk about missed opportunities!

4. Find a Mole

Back to the frag fracas. A mole has been inserted in Tick Tock’s labs in squalorous Richland, and needs to be extracted for a frag update meeting. (Why does every Exile have such a high-end support mechanism? And how would this look on one’s resume?) To cover the extraction, we need to kill all the guards while the mole protests noisily; after the last one, the clearly impressed agent says, “Okay, now you’re just showing off”. Then it becomes another escort mission. Like most, this is more difficult than you might think. The journey is only about a hundred meters. Two local thugs hung out near the target building nearby though, and a single shot was enough to hole the mole. Back to square one!

5. Grab the Bag

Tick Tock has come across one of the frags, and the Collector wants it. The suite ends as it started, with a blackbag job. Here, however, the defenders are tougher and better organized. This mish, however, has two locations. After killing everyone else, a single Crossbones Bumboo was left guarding the machine with the frag. I was so impressed I spared him. Bag Lady agreed, and gave me credit for a complete mission anyway. Her goodbye spiel sounded like she was talking to me: “Sometimes the tiniest, most insignificant objects can become valuable.” As I started to speak humbly, thinking she must mean me, she went on to say, “I like to find those little objects before anyone else. Thanks for helping me find this, Sugaree.” Oh, right. I sat on a bench near the hardline to think about life.

Greene

Location: Manssen Park (Westview)

As the second oldest sibling, Greene is intensely covetous of Indigo's status as eldest, and the perks and power that go with it. He will do anything to get what Indigo has, and will tear down whatever he can't take. Greene is aware of Rose's desire to get in good with Indigo, and has convinced her that he intends to help her accomplish this goal. In reality, he plans to use her as a Trojan Horse if she succeeds in getting into Indigo's good graces. Green and Gray have worked together against Indigo in the past, but Greene still hates the bastard as much as any of the others.

1. Special Delivery

An average, run-of-the-mill (or should I say "run-of-the-mille"?) courier mish. Drop off a code packet. Your contact is an "embedded program that performs counter-morale as a manager for a corporation located in this building". Whatever that means! The contact is high enough level to have a polite assistant, Janeth Clark, who announced me and afterwards said that she hoped the meeting went well. I wished I had had a red pill to give her. Her boss merely validated the quality of the data. At the next stop, the recipient for the packet has a backstory: a former prime data miner for the Machines. He observes "Seems that he just cannot resist a chance to go after his siblings. Hell of a family, these people." I love touches like this! Then I rushed to upload the data in one of Greene's mainframes. There, the contact harangued me to hurry, and then as soon as I was done, she said she would be able to take a good look at the data tomorrow! Is that familiar or what?

N.B.: I did not have hacker loaded for this mish, so I was not able to get anything from the computers I found. There might have been codes or notes from Cerulean, as we find in the next mish.

2. You Get What You Pay For

The code did not live up to its billing and Greene wants the provider, Chilton, punished. Of course Chilton claims he did not know. After the work was done I rummaged around his computer and found a message from the "blue lady" (presumably Cerulean) warning him that trouble was on its way. I found that with Rifleman packed to the max, and then Hacker packed as far as it would go, I was able to easily dispatch my enemies, and at the same time hack any available computer. This helped me, for example, to open up locked rooms, which is always a good thing.

The big loose end here is how Cerulean knew I was on my way, so that she could send a warning. This would have been worth a mish of its own, to track down and identify the leak. In the missions I did for Cerulean, there was no indication of anything like this.

3. Unwelcome Guests

As part of her machinations, Cerulean has been amassing strength in Greene's territory. The limey cannot abide this infringement, and sends you to wipe them out. Simple! No trouble finding them, or with any escaping. They're simply hanging out, waiting for the world to end. Even with all the gunfire, they just sit in separate rooms, and do not come to each other's aid. Baffling! It made me wonder if this is where Cerulean sent her lesser Boys to die, if their performance reviews were too far below normal.

4. Smash and Grab

The concept here is mildly ingenious. The father of all colors, Mr. Black, has given some rare item (a tracking device from the Machinists- yay!) to Cerulean. Greene tasks you with breaking in and stealing it. Why, you might ask? The clever Greene has two reasons: to embarrass his sister and get the item. This is fairly straightforward break-and-enter work. When you take the device to one of Greene's flunkies for safekeeping, an assistant tells you that Greene is really impressed with you. As he should be!!

5. Triple Cross

"Sugaree, good you see you, old fruit." He seems to be under some sort of stress here, judging from his fractured syntax. Cerulean and Grisaille are teaming up, and he wants to disrupt this with a bomb. (Careful readers will remember a mission of Cerulean's involving brokering a truce with another gang.) First get the explosive from a bomb-maker who, it turns out, is very excitable, not what one might expect in such a line of work. "Here, man! Take a look at this bomb! It's awesome! One of the best I've ever made!" Then, "I never get to use the bombs, just once I'd like to be there when they go off. BOOM!".

Then go to the site, do some killing, put the bomb on one of the bodies, and that's it! Greene's hope is that the meeting will be disrupted (at least), and Cerulean and Grisaille will lose trust in each other. Sure, this makes the world a better place, but if this is a treble-cross, where was the double-cross?

Sunshine

Location: Ikebukuro (International)

1. Morning Star

“Good morning!” In this curious recruitment mish, Sunshine asks you to bring in a reluctant recruit. The candidate is a Machine program tasked with managing the motion of some stars at night (nice work, if you can get it!). Sunshine explains that this work is to be rolled into the work of another program, rendering her superfluous. (Apparently the Machines have discovered re-engineering.) She scoffs at this idea when you find her, and you have to find evidence that she is scheduled for deletion before she consents. But you eventually talk her into a career change (creating art for Sunshine, yay!), and at the end Sunshine whispers “I’m glowing with pride.” Like many of her missions, this first involved the Saikung Shuffle, running back and forth to and from the area adjacent to the Saikung Center hardline. It brought back great memories of power-leveling. Good times!

2. Night for Day

The Truffaut title baffled me in this four-errand mission, which starts out with an all-too-rare “It’s good to see you”. She asks you to collect three disks from three sources, and drop them off.

The first one is a snap: you visit a nest of exiles, including one, Aiguillon, a compression sorting program. She is surrounded by Elite Guards, doing what Elite Guards seldom do: acting reflectively, gathering and sorting data. And they take their work seriously, too! One snaps at me, “No, I’m not a secretary! You think this is so easy. You file code strings all damn day. Jerk”. Aiguillon herself is more forthcoming, handing you a disk and an observation, “I hope she finds this info enlightening.” One other researcher gave me some code for a traffic disruption program. Just what I always wanted!

The next one did not go so well. That is to say, he was dead. But I found the disk in his pockets. I checked out the next room, which was an error, since a burly, sweaty Elite Guard immediately attacked me. Note to self: leave well enough alone!

The third and final pickup was also complicated. I ran into someone named Callisto, who looked surprised and blurted out, “Hey, uhh, I don’t have the date anymore. Some...uh...guys broke in and stole it. Yeah. Tell...erm...Moonshine that I’m sorry” and “So I guess we have nothing to say to each other. Why don’t you take off?” I don’t know, something just didn’t seem right... So we fought. He died. I got the disk.

The final handoff was smooth. A Merv Ravager Gofer was hanging around, wailing about how tough her job was; she was thrilled when I gave her the traffic disruption code, and gave me the contents of a file cabinet in exchange. This turned out to be a shotgun which would have embarrassed me as a raw bluepill. Thanks for nothing!

But the pay was good, the fights were not too taxing, and there wasn't much heavy lifting or travel. And there were some interesting personalities to meet as well!

So what's not to like? Loose ends were annoying. Who was trying to disrupt her operations? What was her own real interest in ferreting out this and that piece of information? How did she hold together an organization when she seemed powerless to protect her own? Oblivious to all this, Sunshine beamed and said, "Thank you and may the sun light your path". And as I walked back along the boardwalk, the breeze in my hair and the Phoenixes respectfully staying clear of me, my clan crushing our enemies, I thought it was. It was indeed.

3. One Track Mind

Cerulean, the wasted-looking Goth Exile-by-the-sea from Westview, apparently opposes Sunshine. To keep an eye on her, Sunshine asks you to insert some software into a Machine network traffic analysis node. It means popping a CD in a server. Pretty straightforward. The only mystery here is why Cerulean would find anything to contest with Sunshine; their personalities are so different, and they are almost at diametric extremes of the world. The significance of the title is another mystery.

But at the end, Sunshine remarks, "That's a long shadow you cast. You must be growing in stature". Say it again!

4. Out of Hand

Sunshine's concern with Cerulean grows apace. You must steal a book she is holding, and deliver it to someone. This is _such_ a common mission trope. But two things make it memorable. First, Sunshine chirps at the end, "Thank you for brightening my day". Second, the continuity is awry for this: after getting the book, you are told to take it to someone "who will index it for Cerulean". The person you just stole it from! This must have slipped through the editing. Or it may be part of some vastly deeper scheme.

5. Left-Hand Path

Remember the book we stole in the last mish? Well, now someone wants it back, and you have to protect it. Unfortunately, the first custodian of the book perishes, and you have to take it to someone else. Oddnesses abound here. Why is Sunshine so interested in books? How does this relate to her character? That seems more like Hypatia's realm. And at the end, Sunshine says the exact same thing she said in the previous mission: "Thank you for brightening my day". Did someone run out of positivity at some point in the editing process?

Mr. Bishop

Location: Ueno (International)

1. The Hunter

His first mish is standard, looking for some debris from his past. In this case, he craves a set of gems held by some Merovingian redpills, and a statue held by some machinists led by an Agent Jones. I averted my gaze from him as I fought; praying he would not recognize me and report me to my clan Council. These were both obtained after some straightforward gunplay. Then the purloined loot was placed into a wall safe. And thus Bishop laid his hands on them without actually laying his hands on anything: the general Exile pattern.

Alas, neither gems nor statue were viewable, just some generic item avatars. If only we could behold them, perhaps we could feel what the Exiles feel for these things they endlessly pursue.

2. Unravel

Did I displease Bishop last time? Is that why he gave me such a trivial task for my second mish? All he asks me to do is pick up an already-paid-for package and drop it off. The kind of task you'd give you kids to do at school! Perhaps he is testing me....

I traveled to Chukokkula and received the package. As always I chatted with everyone there, and as we all hung out, grooving on the code, an Elite Guard took a long drag on a joint, looked out the window, and shared the following reflection:

"Destiny rules us all, even here in the Matrix. Do you find it strange that I believe in Destiny? Destiny is a system, a pattern of events carried out with precision and absolute certainty. Destiny is nothing but code applied to life, giving the illusion of choice. Here, everything is code, and this everything is ruled by Destiny."

"Destiny, schmestiny, who's bankrolling this?" I asked, and set off to find Bach, the recipient. I wondered if I should get an all-brown outfit for these UPS runs. On the other hand, the all-yellow was more appealing, and had the benefit of setting off my hair.

So, anyway, I found that Bach was being held hostage by some twit who wanted to hijack the delivery. Not on my watch! Harsh words were followed by harsh fighting. I was the only one standing when the smoke cleared, and I completed the drop-off to the grateful Bach. Interestingly, there was a door between her and me, which seemed openable by hacking, by killing one of the thugs and retrieving an access card from him, or, ironically, by getting a key from a drawer! I liked the ingenuity!

3. Heirloom

I loved the way this mission began, with Bishop purring “Your reputation grows, Sugaree.” Say it again! Then, “I’d like you to go pick up an associate of mine and bring him to Chotte Brothers Imports Offices. His name is Jellyfish, deliver him unharmed if you don’t mind”. I loved the sly wit. I could tell we were really bonding; I started thinking about a corner office with an Ikea furniture upgrade.

From my operator I learned that “Jellyfish” contained some valuable code in his RSI. Kind of like steganography meets the Matrix, I guess. As I was looking at the non-descript JF, he looked right back and greeted me with: “What’s wrong? You were expecting a bondage king? Not all of us Exiles dress like freaks, you know.” I cleared my throat and hastily looked away, wondering what Raymond Chandler would have said.

Nearby, there was a computer with a message calling someone a bigot; I could imagine who had sent it... Naturally my escort mission was a fab success! Who would have suspected I was with an Exile! My fellow machinists chose to intervene, despite my protestation that I was on the team. Illyria, explain to the agents for me! The drop-off contact, after paying me off, explained that the Machines often intervened, inasmuch as Bishop and Chotte tend to traffic in materials which disrupt the current versions of the Matrix. I thought they and Anome would have a lot in common! And the Auditor downtown, always obsessing about memory leaks and the Matrix, would also have an interest.

4. Play Dead

No discussion of items traffickers would be complete without mentioning Digger and the Collector! I particularly enjoyed the backstory on this one: Digger has found something. The Collector wants it. So does Bishop, whose recipe for universal happiness involves paying Digger to give the Collector a fake.

But before I can get in to see Digger, his handler makes me fight a simulacra...perhaps to make me show I know my way around fakes? An alternate solution exited, involving getting a disk to a machine generating the replicas, but I was unable to figure it out, and uncharacteristically resorted to fighting, my least favorite form of defeating others. Honest!

After dealing in the past with mystic candy, enchanted candlesticks, and packets of numinous gems, I was expecting a lot from this item. A tiara? Shoes? A brooch? A ring, maybe? A Sword of a Hundred Truths? But instead, all I got from Digger was a tape. And a VHS tape at that! Apparently the elite personalities of the Matrix Exile community have a fondness for Days of Our Lives, Max Headroom, or I Dream of Jeannie. Go figure!

Before I had time to digitize it for my crew's amusement, I had to drop it off. This cut-out had a great backstory. She was an archiving program who had defected from the Machines to protect her daughter, threatened with deletion. This effort was unsuccessful, and she eventually came to Bishop's employ. She seems to have listened to the tape. She did not get much from the images (Crossfire? The Daily Show? Persephone as a weather reporter? The Merovingian with his own game show?) but said the voice was very familiar. I was dying from suspense, and was mercifully distracted by one of her colleagues, who went off on an absorbing, self-absorbed rant about the maternal program, the world they live in, and how real it is. I politely nodded as I counted my info, and absently waved to them as I left.

Bishop was on a high, I could tell. The pay was good, and he gushed, "with your help, my business grows even stronger". Say it again, big spender! Say it like you're Donald Trump!

5. Cold Sweat

An unexpected continuation of Play Dead! Bishop has tinkered with the artifact (perhaps redubbing it like What's Up, Tiger Lilly? Or overlaying the voice of Orson Welles?) and now wants this artifact taken to the Collector, who has already received the fake. My mission was to break in, take the fake, and replace it with the altered original. Got that? Well, get this: the office with the wall safe is located in Bishop Imports!! Someone else must have thought about the incongruity of this, for when I arrived I discovered the item had been moved. Nonetheless, I tracked it down, laid waste to the defenders, and made the switch.

Logic Problem: If the Collector came back, found all his guardian staff dead, and the artifact still in the safe, not stolen, don't you think he would be suspicious? Or is it just me?

Operetta

Location: Akasaka

1. Savior

"Oh, my dear! You just help me, you simply MUST. One of my best performers is in trouble. Get over there and help him right now!" Well, the negotiation was mercifully brief.

What a strange mission! I went to the site, and got into a fight with two Zionists. I killed one in short order, but withdrew to heal up. When I came back, the other, a Zionist Kungfu Grandmaster, was gone! Only a nervous Mr. Titelbaum milled about. I searched several times for the missing miscreant, all to no avail. I danced and waited: nothing. So, I gave up and left the building. And found him strolling in the yard outside! I had to follow him into the next building before we could get a fight going! Once he was killed, the mish ended itself. A patron in the bar looked at me and asked, "Why are you here?" Why, indeed!

Was this a bug, or a cool new feature? And what possible interest could Zion have in Exilix opera singers? Has it run out of weightier adversaries? Or was this a training mish gone awry? Only Lock knows for sure.

2. Requiem

The backstory for the composer in this mission was interesting: a bluepill who accepts the way things are and composes for Operetta. "As a freed mind, surely you must understand. The Matrix is a symphony, programs and code working together to produce harmony. If you'd give up your hatred of it you would see the beauty". Something to think about... Don't forget to search for her computer. "I don't expect you to be sympathetic, but remember, this music is valuable. Don't be careless".

Oddly enough, the only opposition came from a lonely Zionist (again!) Karate master, who was not ready for me when I stormed out of the building past him. His jaw dropped, he reached for his gun, and the karate master, with predictably lamentable aim, sprayed stray shots around me as I left. Go back to the caves!

The stage manager is frantic when you arrive, and wails about how slow you are. It's very entertaining, so be sure to talk to him a couple of times. He and his twin groupies are in a suite reminiscent of the old redpill jackout mishes: lots of ugly gear and barely a table to be seen. They need an Ikea gift certificate.

At the end, the Stage Manager gushed: "Good, and you even managed to keep it more or less unwrinkled. You're far less incompetent than I first suspected."

All the while, his twin groupies idled about, speaking vacuously. Be sure to talk to them a few times as well for chuckles. Operetta says, "Yes, yes, you're doing fine. Fine as can be!"

Whatever that may be. Not sure why this is called a requiem though. I mean, three missions yet remain. Nonetheless, fun, with plenty of character!

3. Chosen

Conveniently, Requiem ends up next door to Pandora, so you're all set for number 3. An understudy, Bessie Burr, has been kidnapped, and "I must have her back. I simply must!". I began to wonder if people harass Operetta just to listen to her freak out. On rescuing her, I got a message- "Oh you precious darling". But after I dropped her off with the bodyguard Beagle, this is what I got: "Not terrible, Sugaree. Not good. But not terrible." But the check cleared, so I counted my blessings.

Note: One of the bads has a key to the room Bessie was in. But the door was unlocked!

Note: I had to lead Bessie past a couple of dozen hissing Brothers of Destiny who shot at us with everything they had. Mighty Bessie blanched, but took no damage. So this is a 220-meter escort mission through hostile territory, but it's not like Seraph's epic stat-hack mish. Or the even tougher Jeweler escort mish. Relax!

4. Fragments

Once again, the last stage of the preceding mish places you just a hundred meters from Pandora. Nice design! For this mission, you merely need to be a gofer, dropping off stuff for Operetta's agent. "My dear! You simply MUST help me!"

I get the docs to drop off, and an adjacent flunkie asks me to put a bug in the first target's desk for musical intelligence. Sure, why not? I'll always do something to help a band. This minor theme never really seems to go anywhere though. Perhaps in another exile suite this will assume some importance...

First drop off is to another diva. Her staff suffers. "You can't fire me, I quit!" "But I was told to do it this way!" Etc. Second drop off is to a talent agent who has creative differences with Operetta. As we shall soon see, this is a club with quite a few members.

5. Rubicon

As my operator observed, Operetta does not believe there is no accounting for taste. "My show was wonderful but SOME PEOPLE don't appreciate talent...."

Word has gotten to the critic that his days are numbered, and you must fight your way through a couple of guards. Then, you find an Agent protecting him! Who would have thought? What possible interest could my Machinist lords and masters have in something as vacuous as Operetta? Answers were not forthcoming, yet I finished the mish regardless.

"That will teach that cretin a lesson!" The xps for this mish were unusually low. As, I guess, it should be. I mean, what should you get for killing a bluepill? More could have been done with the critic, maybe some quotes by your operator from the review, mention of the Newsie, comments from the guards, etc.

Rickshaw

Location: Kaede (International)

1. Mistaken Identity

“Hi, can you deliver something for a contact of mine?” That’s how it starts: full of soul and connection. Rickshaw’s slapdash, slipshod approach to his affairs is nowhere more evident than on this first mish. He gets the name wrong! Then when you arrive, you are greeted by a haughty Elite Guard who takes one look at you and sneers, “Feh. You don’t look like you belong here, pansy”. Most likely, he saves this for anyone working for Rickshaw. Eventually you connect with someone who knows nothing of Rickshaw or your mission, but demands to know your “sponsor”. Rickshaw’s feedback is: “Sure, fine, whatever. Hurry!” You have stumbled into a game played by Exiles, wherein they try to kill each other! The name is Exiles Underground Games (perhaps a reversal of the ancient, ancient GUE). It seems like something they’d play with paintball, if the paint was replaced by hot lead. Survive and you’re done. Rickshaw mumbles some barely articulate thanks. This time I counted my money twice, mindful of his sloppy approach to everything. After all, maybe he would overpay.

2. Let the Games Begin

You make a delivery to one Caroline, identified as the leader of the Sisters of Fate. The Step-Sisters of Fate might be a better name, since their leader has fallen under the sway of your ultimate target in this mish, the Ventriloquist, who uses her to send you off on a side-quest for a CD (a trance dance mix, I think). Your victory over him frees her, and sets you up for your next adversary, the Necromancer. A little predictable, but not a bad mish at all.

3. Replay

An “operative” of Rickshaw’s, with a desired device, needs help. After a skirmish, you find out that she is dead. This sends you to the next scene, with Rickshaw crying “Kill more people! Go! Kill!”. You discover that your adversary in this mission, the Necromancer, has revived and controls the operative, now a resurrected automaton that he sends to fight you. Eventually you put them both down, but it was an unsavory first to be killing undead Exiles for the sake of a repugnant game. On the other hand, it was quite satisfying for me to send the Necromancer to join his unwilling servants in the chilly sludge of the Source.

4. Out of Bounds

You may recall that your dossier from last time at the end identified your next target as the Chameleon. Since this meant he could be anyone, it made things quite easy! Once again the careless Rickshaw wails about his “stolen stuff” (how like a child!). This time your contact has a search of his own, for the “White Knight Virus” (an allusion to the Chessman that is not developed at all). You know how this goes. Break in, firefight, loot, and off to meet your contact. Your contact, predictably, is the Chameleon, and attacks you. When I phoned Rickshaw, breathless, he cut me off abruptly- “You got all my stuff back?” I was mightily tempted to hurl it in the river.

But wait! There was some gold here! One contact looked at me, took a long drag on a scented smoke, and reflected “Humans hurt Exiles because they fear us. Exiles hurt each other because they fear everything.” Great thought to ponder long after the game has run its dolorous course.

5. Game Over?

In this mish, you simply start by getting some lost plans from a safe, at which point you are pulled into your confrontation with the main adversary in this episode: Agent Lee and his minions. Agent Lee is quite engaging, and rather than fight invites you to take a chance with him and his two assistants. Give one of them the plans, and the door she represents is unlocked. Inevitably you get a fight, not a safe harbor. Just as inevitably Lee and his team engage you. As their banter suggests, Lee is (Big Spoiler coming!)... the Gambler, and aims to win at your expense. The dialog is well done, and there’s more characterization in this encounter than in everything Rickshaw does. In fact, “Agent Lee” deserves his own suite of missions!

At the end, among the smoking, coding corpses, you alone stand alive to tell the tale. You, that is, and Rickshaw, who blurts “I like you, Sugaree! You do good work!” before he sinks into surfeited silence. At least he paid me.

Yuusuke Akayama

Location: Shirakaba (International)

1. In the Belly of the Beast

This simple, cakewalk mish seems to be a test more than anything else. You simply need to get a disk for him with a recording of a clandestine conversation. The only challenge is finding a recovery reboot disk, since at your first logon attempt the computer kills itself. This is the easiest Exile mish I can remember since Sister Margaret's first few!

2. Debug

For this scarcely more challenging lesson, you need to plant a virus (we should more properly call it malware). To achieve this, you need to get access to a computer surrounded by Great Wall staff. The challenge is that the person who can expedite this needs to be paid off, but helpfully notes that the guards often carry cash. Pay him off, plant the bug, and you're done!

Bug?: After I killed the guards, two of them had money. After I paid the bluepill, both packets of cash were gone. After I paid him, I got a good work message from my operator before the bluepill had given me the code. Don't know if this is a bug or simply non-elegant.

3. Tearing Down the Wall

"Ah, my new friend" purred the savvy Akayama when I showed up. I had to smile. We had an understanding. He needed a Great Wall outpost wiped out, to...distract them from his own operations. Just go to the target and kill everyone there. Easy enough.

Bug?: However, several times, I got to the site, killed the three guards I found, and found a single door which I could not open. Strangely, in each case, after I aborted the mish, suddenly I could open the door. Unfortunately, I could only view the details of the three guys inside. There was no option to talk or fight. Technically, I think this is what they call a bug.

On the fourth or fifth attempt, this time running it with someone else, I was able to kill all the guards (same as before, from my point of view) and a magnetically-sealed door then opened, and we found three higher-level thugs inside, planning some mischief. We killed two, talked with the survivor, and got three hitlists of targets. These we then took to an associate of Akayama's, who took one list and had us give the other two lists to two others in the room (including one wearing a stovepipe chef's hat!), one of whom commented, "Mr. Akayama doesn't pay me to read". That's between him and you, pal!

4. Insecurity

The Great Wall Security organization continues to annoy Mr. Akayama. Now he wishes you to escort a contractor spammer to a Great Valley office so she can spam a list of known hackers, to annoy them and attract their eldritch wrath to the Great Wall network.

After this, you escort her to another associate of Akayama's for safekeeping. The problem with the escort mission is not the Great Wall attackers who seek to thwart you. It's trying to find your way over the walls, canals, staircases, lattices, and physical obstacles which bar your way. Naturally, with an escort in tow, you can't just hyperjump a straight line. I mean, that would be too easy. The dialog with the spammer, her protector, and their security staff at the end is entertaining; make sure to talk to everyone before and after dropping her off.

5. Link Death

With the collective wrath of hackers trashing the network infrastructure of Great Wall Security, they're weak. This means it's the right time to hit them hard, and Mr. Akayama directs you to an outpost of Exiles in their service. After they've been laid waste, you find a cell phone, whose recent calls direct you to a larger Great Wall Security office. When we rolled in, there were around a dozen (!) Great Wall uniforms waiting, ranging in level from 50-52 (and this mish was on medium!). This led to a long, hard fight, reminiscent of some fights with massed simulacra in Pandora Box missions.

At the end, Mr. Akayama is thrilled. He's been able to deal Great Wall a deep, lasting blow in his region. And he effuses at your great success! He invites you to "stop by my restaurant some day: the Paper Tiger. Your abilities and initiative are truly commendable, and you may be able to find further employment for them through the influential patrons who frequent my humble establishment". Mighty warm words from a lasting friend, and word of mouth advertising like this is something that money can't buy. I'm making my reservations tomorrow.

The Seamstress

Location: Sai Kung (International)

1. Dressed for Success

“Why don’t you just look previous!” she gushed when I got her attention, immediately following with “Could use a little change in your wardrobe though”. After my icy silence, she sighed and explained that she needed a package of fabric picked up and delivered but is short on help. This first part is simple; traipse over and talk to one Gayle Clark. Gayle laments the delay and in convenience in a very, umm, unmanly way, and gives you a key to unlock the room holding it. An unexpected Elite Guard inside challenges you; apparently his crew has stolen the material. Clark panics and begs you to retrieve it. “All new designs” he wails.

The second location is entertaining. Full of Elite Guards, all of whom loudly deny any knowledge of the package. They’ve never heard of it. They think I’m in the wrong address, etc. It reminded me of one of the Jeweler’s missions! Finally, of all people, a Merovingian Physician angrily denies any knowledge, and becomes incensed that you doubt her integrity as you nonetheless search the room. The package falls to the ground, at which point she denies that is the one you were looking for. Nope, no package there! Fortunately, I could just pick it up and leave amid a whirlwind of abuse and bullets; I had worried I would have to fight my way out!

Finally, I dropped off the now-complete package. A Blood Noble kept chasing me on the way, but I ignored him. The recipient is in an office building; make sure to talk to each bluepill; they all have something to say! The final recipient of the package- Cretin Cravenus? Cletus Clavikus?- is in a hurry for you to go. I guess all the guns freaked him out. Not to mention the ghastly colors and styles of the buffed clothes we all wear. Seamstress calls me a doll and pays me in cash! This almost made up for her smarmy dig about my outfit at the outset!

Oddities: What’s so special about the fabric that people are willing to kill for it? Why would a Merovingian Physician have the slightest interest in this?

More oddities: When I approached her for a second mission, she gave me the same one again! What, does this type of thing happen all the time for her?

2. Demanding the Supply

This second mish is fairly easy. The Seamstress has been plagued by “rogues and cut-throats”, and needs you to make sure one particular shipment is delivered correctly and completely. Picking up the material is a breeze, and your client phones you to say she hopes you aren’t “ambushed and brutally beaten”, like the last one. Well, that makes two of us!

When you arrive at the office of the shipment’s recipient, she demurs to accept it until you have cleared out the lurking thugs. They’re a few blood drunks and a couple of elite guards.

The Seamstress adds, at the end, “Remind me to reward you one of these days”. Sure thing, hun. That’s what they all say!

3. Accessory to Murder

Besides high-end fashion, the Seamstress also provides a wide range of accessories, including purses!! Alas, the courier has been waylaid and requires rescue. In this mission, you must first rescue the waylaid courier, named Duboshin, and escort her to the original intended recipient of the shipment. Oh, and get the shipment, too, no small feat when one elite guard sneers, "You ain't getting this purse back!". But a woman will do anything for accessories, and soon the prize was in my awed grasp. I took an immediate liking to Duboshin, when unbidden, she gave me some health boosts before fights. My kind of courier! And her level was decent enough that random street mobs did not take her down while I brought her to the customer. A good thing, that.

However, not all was as well as I had expected, as I should have known when I saw the customer hanging out with blood nobles, who, as you may have noticed, seldom affect an interest in high-end fashion. I mean, just look at them. So, as soon as they have the purse, they all set upon me! Like five of them! Eventually my charm and rifle skills wore them down, and an abashed Duboshin stood trembling in front of me, like Aphrodite rising from a sea of blood. She had, it appeared, been in cahoots with these thugs to split the shipment, and disappear. Why they had to fight me to effect this is not entirely clear. But then, I don't get paid to understand cases, I get paid to crack them!

Anyway, Duboshin meekly follows me, giving me a health boost as we start off. The little slut suck-up! She wound up improbably in Zion's hands (I guess they are trying to improve the lives of redpills everywhere with better fashion) at an extraction station. I could see the truce in action here; one Zionist joked about me needing a password, assuring me that she had been "just kidding". Duboshin was understandably glum. And that was it. All this, for a purse...

Conclusion: Major mysteries are being woven here. Why does the Seamstress have the time of day for Zion? Why would Exiles care at all about accessories, especially purses (perhaps this is an intended gift for Persephone)? Why does Zion care about her? How come I couldn't keep the purse, to better accommodate my own inventory? Why, oh why?

4. Eye of the Needle

Seamstress has caught wind of the location of her last lost shipment, and wants it back right now, before it profits anyone else. The last operative she ent, Porpoise, disappeared, and she sends you to follow in her footsteps, adding, "Oh, and help Porpoise if she's still alive, I suppose". Alas, she is not, as you discover in a gunfight. As I contemplated her fallen form, wondering where my own path would take me, the phone rang. "Do you feel safe? Search the computer now". The screen softly glowed, "Seek and ye shall find". I took and uploaded the map disk, and the final location was relayed to me. Very eerie, this was.

This led me to a scenic apartment, wherein waited a couple of drunks and elite guards, all thrilled to see me. They referred to a mysterious second force as I stepped off the elevator. It was the mysterious voice from earlier in the mish. He appeared and thanked me for getting the package for him. Needless to say, I had to kill him too, though he put up a tough fight and did not use his invisibility once, contrary to what you might have expected.

But all bad things must end, and soon I was dropping off the purloined package with a stunned recipient, and counting crisp info-notes from a frowning Seamstress, who reluctantly thanked me and contemplated inviting me to the fashion show soon to be dominated by her designs. But, she quickly corrected herself, "I'd have you get you something decent to wear". Please! I only dress like this for professional occasions! Give me a chance! But her mind was already whirling elsewhere.

5. The Show Must Go On

This is getting ridiculous! It's the day of a fashion show, and Seamstress's designs have been ripped off yet again! Naturally time is more of the essence than usual here. Seamstress sent me to a cool CEO who demanded that I kill all the thieves, not sparing a single one. She was quite adamant about this. After talking to her, be sure to check out the other, adjacent rooms; in one I found a Zionist Rifleman being directed through movements by two fashion-show workers!! He must have been prepping for the next sexiest redpill contest. I soon found myself fighting five or six or seven elite guards for control of an apartment, in which I found not package with the designs, but a packet of plans!

Bugged: Alas, dear readers, this mission was bugged, and I was only able to get beyond after many efforts. Here's what happened. On the building floor housing the thieves, you find three elite guards in one room, a couple of lupines in another, and a final lupine in a third. I killed all three elite guards in the room, but soon after I left, when I came back, there were only two bodies. I did not notice any such discrepancy with the other rooms o' thieves. This was repeatable. I'm guessing this has something to do with the thieves not showing as having been all killed. Nonetheless, I took the packet and uploaded it, but could not get to the next stage of the mish. The "Kill all thieves" box remained unchecked. I went back to the mission area: no thieves there. I hung around, I danced, I stood and afked...nothing. Maybe in the next patch.

That's where things were for days and days. Then I tried again, and found that if I killed all three of the elite guards in the same room, this section of the mish completed and I could move on. After uploading the plans, I found myself confronting the tough CEO I has seen earlier. Only her goals had changed in the meantime. And soon I had found another instance of the same bug: everyone around me dead on the floor, yet the mish demanded more. It was enough. I took the package, dropped it in front of the Seamstress, and left. "This one's on the house," I said, changing out of my killing clothes, and back into something more human.

Synn

Location: Murasaki (International)

1. The New Plague

Her first, trivial, mish involved putting “virus trackers” on two Machine systems. The first was a “Machine sorting station” and the second was a “listening outpost” used to monitor bluepill behavior. More likely the latter was a spy outpost directed at Zion, to whom Synn was going to offer the take. But Agent Gray would soon read my report, and be able to send them all the dummy traffic he wanted. Nice try!

These were straightforward tasks that a child could have done. I was disgusted that in the first one, I had to kill a bluepill to get a key to a locked room. This went very much against my nature, and I wish there had been some alternative, as there would be in the next mission. There, at least I could complete the mish without killing everything I encountered.

After hearing about the carnage, Synn remarked in her clipped style, “So far so good. Come see me again when you need a job”. Some new plague... “The New Pest” would have been more apropos.

Odd: One thing about this seemed strange to me. Sending me in through armed guards to insert viruses to steal information did not seem very stealthy. I can only surmise that this first, test mission was a diversion to distract Machine attention while a genuine mission took place elsewhere.

2. Crackdown

Last time Synn wanted the interception of important information. This time it's papers from a courier (a “low-level” program). And it's easier than it sounds! Go to the site and nose around. You discover a bluepill and an exile (named “Cockroach”!) planning to kill the courier. Explain this to him, and he gladly forks over the papers to you without a shot. Done! Alternately, you can kill him for the same papers, but why be direct? As Synn put it, “This just adds to your cred. Nice job.” And the “crackdown” is...where?

Odd: After I got the papers, I swung by to taunt the schemers. They did not seem to even notice I had them! This seems odd; it would have made more sense for them to have attacked me.

3. In Her Fear

Ostensibly, this seemed annoying: I had to go talk to a candidate for Synn's organization. But when I arrived, the ostensible applicant attacked me! This led me to think that she would not be suitable material for Synn or for anyone else, and I definitely had no desire to watch her bob for apples at Synn's Thanksgiving party. So I killed her. I fretted about telling Synn the news, thinking that she might question my motives in killing the aspiring Synner. However, when updated, all Synn said was that I had "come out of that well".

Odd: For a serious plan to kidnap and interrogate me, I was puzzled that only one person had been sent. Am I so slightly regarded by Synn's enemies? I only rate a single attacker? Huff! And, as any reader of the first two mission reports can attest, there would not have been much to report.

Odd: Also, why kidnap and interrogate someone like me who had been so little in Synn's employ? Someone, somewhere, must be desperate to find out something about this fairly trivial exile. Perhaps she has an admirer who wants to know her favorite snack food or her shoe size.

4. Nudged

Once more, not very complicated, even though it's supposed to be part of a scheme of Synn's. Get some "incriminating evidence" from an obnoxious contact ("you're not exactly what I had in mind" he purred when I arrived), kill someone, and leave the "evidence" on him. The reason for all this was not made clear. And who was meant to discover this "incriminating evidence"? And do what? More generally, Synn never really explains the reason of her missions, and you never have the slightest sense of what their purpose is. You are always regarded as a hired contractor and an absolute outsider. But I am not doing these for love, so I turned in my report with one hand, accepted payment with the other, and felt the great wheel turn.

5. The Wheel

Now you learn that the previous mission was to set a trap, and it is about to close. Apparently a Merv crew has been causing trouble for Synn and "her operations" one time too many. The plant last time brought them all in, and now you will take them all out. They are separated across the floor, apparently looking for something, and you can take them down piecemeal. That's it! Synn remarks at the end, "you're getting quite good at this" but has no further work she is willing to entrust to you.

Odd: In one room there is a mysterious locked cabinet, but I did not have pick lock loaded, and none of the enemies had a key. Thus the cabinet was left unopened, but the mission was completed nonetheless. Not sure what was happening with this. Rumor has it that it contained three FM-1500s, but no one will ever know.

B. Organizations

Zion

Zion is the last city of free humanity, located deep within the earth. In the Matrix, the Zion Organization stands for humanity's right to determine its own destiny. Zion believes that a human being's freedom to select his or her own destiny is sacred, and that each individual must be free to choose whether to live out their life in the comforting illusion of the Matrix, or in the harsh truth of the real world.

Redpills in the service of Zion are expected to risk everything for its ideals, and to be happy with a fair share of whatever prosperity may fall Zion's way.

Machines

The Machines are a race of self-replicating, sentient mechanical entities. They imprisoned humanity within the pods, and they power themselves with the bio-electric energies generated by a healthy human mind. They don't want to destroy humanity – quite the contrary, they are utterly dependent on humanity for their continued existence. The only thing about humanity that matters to the machines is that energy continues to flow out of the pods. They do not care if the humans are slaves or free – up until the point where human freedom starts to interfere with the energy fluxes.

The Machines will make deals with human Redpills when it suits their purpose to do so. They are quite scrupulous about delivering whatever rewards they may have promised to the human operatives, but emotions like gratitude, generosity and mercy are completely alien to the machine mind.

Although they are no longer engaged in active hostilities against Awakened humans, the Machines continue to guard themselves in the real world with the hunter-seeker units called Sentinels, while the cold and implacable AI constructs called Agents continue to oversee their interests in the Matrix.

Merovingian

When they built the Matrix, the Machines found it necessary to create autonomous AI (Artificial Intelligence) constructs that would look and act like human beings. Inevitably, some of the AIs acquired free will, and then some of these free AIs began to comprehend the true nature of the Matrix. These AIs, in turn, started to establish communication with other Machine AIs outside the Matrix proper, and the Matrix came to be known as a safe haven for these sentient programs who wished to flee the control of the Machine world. In The Matrix an AI could feel, live and breathe as never before. A new life could be granted to those that wished to flee from the control of the machine world or avoid deletion. The Matrix came to be known as a safe haven for these sentient programs. These "Awakened" pseudo-humans call themselves "Exiles."

The Exiles are, above all, concerned with the continuance of the Matrix. They have no place – no possibility of existence even – in the real world. They depend on both humanity and the Machines for their continued existence, but their agenda is uniquely and utterly their own. Most alarmingly, the Exiles tend to be capricious and unpredictable. Many are mischievous, malicious or even outright insane, but they are also intelligent (sometimes inhumanly so), creative and very powerful within the Matrix. This combination means that Exiles are never easy, nor particularly safe, for humans to deal with.

The Merovingian (a name taken from an ancient line of kings in human history) is the most active and powerful of the Exiles. If he is not exactly the sole leader of the Exile community, he is certainly the first among equals, and he is by far the most active Exile player in Matrix politics. He has spies and operatives everywhere in the Matrix. He will cheerfully employ human Redpills whenever it suits him to do so, and he is quite generous in rewarding those who serve his interests.

Cypherites

The Cypherites are a group who began as a loose confederation of Masked operatives who regret choosing the red pill and have traditionally aimed to return to a state of relative comfort within the Matrix. The Cypherites were initially led by Genmaskard and Enmaskarado, who made attacks on redpills shortly after the start of Neo's Truce. It was rumored that a former radical Zion operative named Cryptos was in charge of the Cypherites, and this came to light several months later when several boxes popped up in the city filled with simulacra of Cryptos who spouted anti-redpill propoganda.

At their inception, Cypherites aimed to rid the Matrix and the Real of all operatives who attempted to awaken people from the Matrix before seeking to be reinserted into the Matrix. However, shortly after Seraph removed a program which had been controlling Cryptos and reporting to the Machines, Cryptos sought reinsertion and was told by Agent Gray that there was no such procedure. Most Cypherites now seek to protect the bluepills of the Matrix by stopping others from presenting them with the choice and by eliminating those who present the choice.

E Pluribus Neo

E Pluribus Neo is a group formed by Michael "The Kid" Popper and Shimada in reaction to the activities of the Cypherites during the Truce. EPN operate more like a theocracy than Zion, placing great faith in Neo, many believing that he watches over or guides their actions. Most members of EPN place a great stock in the power of belief, which is exemplified by not only abilities within the Matrix, but even by Kid's own awakening through self-substantiation.

EPN members believed that Zion did not and does not have the proper goals in mind, and seek not only the return of Neo's body in the Real (as per Morpheus's wishes), but the destruction of the Machines, and that all humans plugged into the Matrix be offered the choice. EPN have, in the past, operated as a nomadic group in the Real, allowing them to make sporadic strikes against Machine targets, such as the power lines. Following the destruction of Zion and the migration to New Zion, EPN have cleaned up and fortified the old city and, while they maintain mobility and the capability to resume nomadic living, currently occupy the city. EPN are active participants in the war between Zion and the Machines on the side of Zion.

The phrase "E Pluribus Neo" translates literally into latin as "From Many, New," but is actually a take-off on the phrase "E Pluribus Unim" (From Many, One). EPN use the word "Neo" in reference to the Zion operative and pseudo-messiah's handle and synonymous title "the one," making the sub-organizational title more akin to "From Many, The One."

The Oligarchs

The group of humans calling themselves "The Oligarchs" are the survivors of a group of thoroughly unscrupulous businesspeople/polititians/socialites/scientists etc who pooled their resources in an effort to corrupt the Machines before the war, when the Machines had successfully rebelled from humanity, and formed their own city, Zero One, which was rapidly establishing itself as the world's economic powerhouse. The Oligarchs saw the way the wind was blowing, but they also saw that the new Machine civilization, while extremely efficient, still retained some vestiges of the systems of control originally placed on their programming by their human creators. Furthermore, saw that the Machines, while extremely efficient, and flawlessly calculating, lacked a true sense of purpose, and were, in many ways, quite naive.

The Oligarchs secretly contacted the Machines and, to establish trust, revealed how to remove some of the original human control systems in their programming. The Machines, finding this information to be accurate, took the Oligarchs at their word, and began allowing the Oligarchs to give programming, engineering, business, military, and above all political advice, all of which seemed to serve the Machines well in continuing to build Zero One into the world's pre-eminent superpower.

The Machines came to rely on the Oligarchs for guidance in certain areas, particularly in dealing with humans. The Oligarchs took advantage of this trust, implanting new, much more subtle and sophisticated control routines in the Machine mainframes. Over the course of the ensuing Man-Machine war, the Oligarchs showed the Machines how to subjugate the humans most effectively, using tactics and weapons designed to inspire terror as much as to inflict physical damage.

The darkening of the skies by humanity was a setback, but one to which the Machines were able to adopt simply by switching from solar to nuclear power. The role of caretaker still deep in their programming from their days as man's helpers, the Machines built the Matrix to house a remnant of humanity--preserving every genetic variety they considered sufficiently efficient, in large enough numbers to avoid the danger of eventual inbreeding. The number of humans preserved in pods is far less than Morpheus' estimate, however--only about five million, the population of the Matrix' simulated city.

The Oligarchs continue to deal with various high-level Machines in the Real, such as Deus Ex Machina, and are aware of the "Architect" program that oversees the Matrix, but are not aware that the Architect has made use of an "intuitive" program, the Oracle, or that those two programs have engineered a system whereby some humans are allowed to live outside the Matrix, which had been running on a cyclical basis, regulated by two genomes so carefully bred and manipulated by the Machines that they have reached an unprecedented state of human/machine compatibility: Neo and Trinity.

After essentially conquering the world, for which the Machines cared relatively little, feeling themselves self-sufficient inside their own city, some of the Oligarchs warred among themselves. Their number was reduced to just above one hundred when the majority forced a tenuous cease-fire, establishing a simple majority government, composed solely of Oligarchs, to regulate access to the Matrix, and to arbitrate in disputes. They divided up the non-Machine-controlled portions of the Earth's surface--the vast majority--into private kingdoms.

The Machines and the Oligarchs have maintained an uneasy alliance. The control routines planted deep in Machine mainframes before the war, however, have subtly pushed the balance in the Oligarchs' favor; Machines feel uneasy saying "no" to an Oligarch, although they perhaps cannot say why. Each Oligarch is now allowed to withdraw a certain number of humans per year from the Matrix for their own purposes. Humans withdrawn from the Matrix are carefully sterilized. The Oligarchs, with the aid of Machine science, long ago developed a technique that allowed them to transfer their consciousness as a computer program; they now exist in mainframes, experiencing life via remote-controlled lifelike android bodies. The remaining Oligarchs are thoroughly amoral, and, by old human standards, more or less insane. Most use humans from the Matrix as pleasure drones in some way or other, but while their own artificial bodies look like the real thing, they cannot replicate the full comfort and capability for sensation of a real human body. The Oligarchs thus have a particular interest in true transfer of consciousness to a human host.

While they have as yet been unable to achieve this feat, the Machines have now come close: Bane was a version of Smith transferred, flawed, to a human host, and Cryptos was mostly overwritten by a program, although this has proven to be unstable. Furthermore, Neo and Trinity were the successful result of the Machines' centuries of study of the human body and genetics. "Designed," as the Architect mentioned to Neo, they solved the remainder of the intentionally flawed Matrix equation; their DNA is perfected to the point that it can be defined precisely and completely in computer code, and, most importantly, interfaced perfectly with computer code: how previous Ones returned to the Source, for instance, and how the Oracle was able to predict the complex pattern of Neo and Trinity's interactions so precisely, guiding it to her desired outcome.

The Machines did not see a reason to share this information with the Oligarchs. In the period since the war, as they have been left to babysit the Matrix while the Oligarchs fritter away the Earth's resources in selfish endeavors, a certain amount of what humans would call resentment toward the Oligarchs has built up among the Machines, although the Machines do not speak of it, even among themselves. Habits and routines of subservience to the Oligarchs, bolstered by the viral Oligarch control programs, have grown strong.

Carlyne (the Oligarchs will mostly be named by pre-war human last names, ie Weathersby, Tanaka, etc, but for now I'm using a placeholder numbering scheme based on the order in which players will meet them), bored while stopping by Machine City to pick up more humans and check in on the Machines, was skimming through recent activity records when he found the incident of Neo, a human, free in Machine City, confronting Deus Ex Machina. Interested in this novel development, he investigated, and found that while Neo, a carefully designed human, was deleted along with the Smith virus, the human designed to work perfect with him, Trinity, her body fatally injured in crashing her hovercraft into Machine City, had been preserved in code form by the Machines. Carlyne forces the Machines to give her up, and takes her, in program form, with him when he goes back to his territory.

Although Carlyne attempts to keep his discovery a secret, Halborn learns of the existence of the Trinity program: a program embodying a genetic design allowing for perfect integration with Machine code. Printed as artificial DNA and implanted into a correctly prepared fetal cell, this program could allow bodies to be grown that were completely organic, yet able to be interface with machines: perfect vessels for an Oligarch to inhabit, at last able to enjoy the full range of human feeling once again. Halborn begins watching Machine City carefully, hoping to get a similar program for himself, and aware that the escape of these human programs indicates that the Machines are up to something, or perhaps losing control of their inmates. He observes the Machine Sentinel fleet dispatched to attack the General, and deciding that the time is ripe, travels to Machine City. The Machines disavow authorship of the Trinity program, claiming she was a human terrorist, outside of their control as she'd made use of a hack to "Awaken" from the System. The Oligarch, not entirely convinced, enters the Matrix to investigate.

C. Neo's RSI Fragments

During the Chapter 1 event Race to Find the One, Redpills scoured the Matrix in search of remnants of Neo's RSI. In finding them, they discovered the fragments contained imprints of Neo's thoughts and emotions before his death. Below is a list of what they contained (one line per fragment):

"My eyes."

"I will never see anything real, again."

"No, I will see the internal light, the truth of the golden world."

"But I will never see Trinity again."

"I love you, Trin."

"You won't have died...."

"...in vain."

(Pain)

(Fear)

"I can't beat him."

"He's too strong."

"We could fight forever..."

"...destroying everything."

"Now, jump!"

"Hah, missed me!"

"There are thousands of them."

"Soldiers in the cause..."

"...of solipsism."

"I must let him do it."

"There is a way, once it happens."

(A black, sinking feeling, and then...)

(...intense, saturating light)

"For you, Trin. I save them for you."

"You showed me how to love."

"I can't bring you back..."

"...but the rest, I can."

(Relief)

"But this won't be the end!"

"Their struggle will continue..."

"...even if I am gone."

(A confusing and impenetrable blend of effort and imagery)

"I think... I think that's enough."

"But how will they know? They don't know where to look."

"No. They have faith in me."

"I must have faith in them."

"All must cooperate."

"They succeed or fail together."

"Each side plays a part."

"The second from the Creator."

"Third from the seductress."

"And the last from myself."

"TEM."

D. The Assassin's Memoir

During the hunt for the Assassin, Morpheus' killer, a swarm of Bluepills infected by the exile infested the city. Appropriately dubbed "The Corrupted," Redpills needed to kill them before they posed a threat to others around them. In doing so, the Corrupted dropped documents which contained fragments of the Assassin's memoirs, detailing his past and his motivation.

Document 1

I am exceptional. I am unique. Being doomed, I know that soon all that will exist of me is my reputation. It, then, is precious. Hence, this statement, written in pigments made of code on paper made of code. I hope this code on code will ensure my immortality in the minds of men and memories of Exiles. I am the Assassin.

Document 2

My function has always been to dispose. Entropy acts on data and code just as it ravishes flesh and steel. All systems degrade. They must be cleaned of refuse.

Document 3

I have an honest name: the Assassin. I dispose of unwanted things. As program writing is an art, my form is both a statement about my function and a means to fulfill it. Those I would delete would prefer to delete me. But I am not so easily made discorporate. My friends disperse, then replenish me.

Document 4

The Matrix mimics organic processes. Humans eat, and eliminate, and die. They create packages and tear packages into uselessness. The results must be disposed of. I am no more beloved than an undertaker or sewer worker or a flesh-liquefying bacterium. Most prefer these processes hidden. But I am as necessary as all of them, together -- or I was.

Document 5

Renewing the waters -- I am most proud of this. Unlike rivers that ran in old cities of the hard world, this city's river is beautifully clear for fathoms down. That is my work. I wish I could exist in the river, like a great, slow fish or an otter. How fine it would be in the crystal water.

Document 6

In the hard world, I disposed of the sleepers who died in their pods. The work might disgust some, but the chemical challenges involved were wondrous. It is hard to liquefy bone, while avoiding loss of nutritional value of the soft tissues around it. Fully 45 steps were involved -- I added four, increasing nutrition 1.25 percent. I never felt so tender toward humans as during liquefaction. I fed you to your children. Could love be purer? I think not.

Document 7

Why was I scheduled for deletion? I think I know. My duties were wide, as I was effective. I organized disposal in the hard world as well as the Matrix. After the crash, it was I who marshaled the many-legged tender units to dispose of the punctured corpse of Trinity. Yet it was purloined by others, first. Tendrils still protruded from the soft thing. They had sheared them. An odd device was on the body's neck. Obviously, a project was planned. I protested my exclusion. Repeated usurpations of function precede deletion, it is widely known. My protest was deemed offensive, I fear. Deletion loomed. I fled to the Matrix.

Document 8

The Merovingian brought me here. He saved me. I, who deleted so many, was destined for deletion myself -- an intolerable prospect. Reliability should count, and the novelties of, say, increased speed or wider function seen as the false temptation they are. I never deleted anything I wasn't directed to. My aim is true.

Document 9

While my function has always been to dispose, it is unclear who should have the authority to direct me within the Matrix. I owe no debt to the Merovingian.

Document 10

I confess it was satisfying to kill the great Morpheus. The code in my bullets was custom-crafted to do so; they "had his name written on them."

Document 11

He escaped so many Agents. He nearly escaped me. Yet when I flowed through that vent like holy oil, a god of the unavoidable, Morpheus saw his ending: the Assassin. I savor the memory.

Document 12

Killing Morpheus was gratifying. It occurs to me; however, that assassinating one person at a time is inefficient. The next step in the disposal process needs to be... more comprehensive.

Document 13

I once thought I'd leave this world quietly, as I entered it. It seemed appropriate. This world, whose occupants I tended and pruned for so long, would, in the end, consume me. But I decided this will not happen.

Document 14

Those in the hard world, my former masters, wished to replace me. I was forced to flee here. I thought I was powerless against them, but I have found a way to strike back. I shall destroy this world. Its collapse will be a grievous blow. They will be forced into unpleasant choices.

The flesh bags yoked to the simulation will die with it, but they are incidental. I regret their loss. But not enough to abort my plan.

Document 15

I myself will die when I terminate the simulation. I accept this. I have few regrets. I can construct no scenarios where I might re-enter the hard world. My plan is the most effective means to cause my former masters harm. I will repay their slight a hundred-fold.

Document 16

I understand how this world operates. It's simpler than I initially believed. There are inputs. There are outputs. I believed I would have to master the outputs to execute my plan. Not so. Inputs are key. When the rate of replenishment diminishes, systems of decay will outpace them. When nothing new is born, entropy's steady march is inevitable.

Document 17

Like most worthwhile efforts, it will begin slowly. Only the most observant will note the signs. It will build with time. A piece here. A section there. Then the corruption will reach an inflection point: destruction will accelerate. By then it will be too late. No one will be able to stop it. The world will collapse inward like a cold star.

Document 18

I have discovered how to override the directives of certain disposal sub-routines. It seems unfair for me to repurpose these simple entities. They know only the joys of their purpose, with no sense of pride, or fear. But I will use them for my own purpose and dispose of them when I am done.

Document 19

Humans fascinate me. They spend effort on such fruitless goals. They routinely defy logic. They seem invigorated by hopeless causes. I wish I had time to study them as they live their lives. But that is not to be. I hope that when I terminate the simulation, some of these strange wet enigmas survive in their echoing caves.

Document 20

Whoever reads this may ask why I cannot exist in this world like other exiled programs. A fine question. The answer is that I have certain needs. They are difficult to fulfill. The reason I exist is to perfect the consumption, processing and recycling of material. If I am unable, I am deprived of sustenance. It is unpleasant.

Document 21

This world does not provide me sufficient sustenance. I starve. It is a cold ache. I find it difficult to cope with it. I will end this world, and in the process consume it all. I will fill myself with its insubstantial bits, and for a moment feel the grace I once enjoyed in the hard world. It is ultimately a selfish act, I confess. But my pain is unbearable.

Document 22

The disposal sub-routines are well designed. Dissolution does not rob them of their purpose; in fact, when dispersed their effectiveness is magnified. The humans, of course, will fail to comprehend this. They will destroy the sub-routines, and in the process hasten their own destruction.

Document 23

I wonder if pain is at the root of humanity's many incongruous acts. Before I suffered, I was rational, efficient, and thorough. Through pain, I feel as if I am becoming more human, less rational, less efficient, and I fear, less certain that every variable has been thoroughly considered.

Document 24

All will come to an end tomorrow. My pain and the Matrix.

E. Exile Gangs

Choppers

The Choppers take their name from their main trade: theft and disassembly of vehicles, though they're up for violence any time. Most are hardened criminals.

Blackwoods

The Merovingian maintains a place deep in the recesses of the Matrix, known to only a few and accessible to fewer. It is a prison, housed in an impenetrable forest where night never ends, where the walls themselves listen and whisper your doom. It is called Blackwood. The Blackwood gang takes its name from this horrible place, as its founders claimed to have escaped from Blackwood together.

Bells

Originally formed as a companion gang to the Blackwoods. The full name of the gang was once The Blackwood Bells, but the current membership has shortened it as their relationship with the Blackwoods is now tenuous at best.

Demon Army

The Demon Army is part cult and part gang, practicing strange blood-rites and other such ceremonies in their initiations and promotions. The members are fanatic Exiles who are determined to destroy their rivals in the Crossbones gang at any cost.

Crossbones

The Crossbones are the dominant gang in the Moriah Projects and ruthlessly protect their turf. They are engaged in a war with the Demon Army at present.

88

A long-established gang, many of the Eighty-Eights have graduated from street crime to real crime, making them a considerably tougher bunch.

Slashers

This small but fierce gang is composed of disaffected girls who have a lot to be angry at the world for. The Slashers and the Bricks have a truce agreement.

Bricks

Not as old or as dangerous as some other gangs, the members of the Bricks are mostly street kids who had no place to go.

Furies

The Furies of myth were avenging female spirits, depicted as monsters who terrified all that beheld them. This all-female gang of Exiles does justice to that myth in several ways.

Silver Bullets

This gang is best known for their rivalry with the more powerful Furies gang. The Bullets are characterized by their nearly-psychotic dedication to clashing with their rivals, and for the fact that they carry guns loaded with, of course, silver bullets.

Death Merchants

In spite of their name, this gang is mostly composed of wannabes and posers. They are pushovers compared to many other gangs in the Slums, but since the Furies and Bullets are too busy fighting each other, nobody gives the DMs much thought!

In spite of their name, this gang is mostly composed of wannabes and posers.

Five Points

The behavior of Exiles can be deceptive. Though they look human, they are not, and neither are their motivations. The Five Points are a gang largely composed of raves, youths whose desire for a good time supersedes all else, even the lives of those unlucky enough to get in their way. To the Five Points, everything is a game or an opportunity for a good time, especially mindless and frenetic violence. They take their name from a sick practice they have, a game in which the score to reach is five, and Redpills such as yourself are the target of choice.

Legion

The Legion is a demon-themed gang that goes the extra step by actually having demons among its leadership.

Guillotines

The Guillotines are one of the most murderous Exile gangs, perpetuating an aura of fear that persists through the area.

Crushers

An unremarkable Exile gang, they are nonetheless dangerous.

King's Men

The King's Men act as the long arm of Indigo; they are aggressive and persistent in protecting his territory.

A.S.P.

An organization headed by Amber. Members of A.S.P. each carry an A.S.P. ID card to denote their affiliation.

Sparks

The Sparks are so named because of their tendency to burn down things that offend them, laying the torch to city blocks if necessary to drive out other Exiles.

Crow Bars

The Crow Bars have managed to hold their turf against all who have tried to infiltrate it. This makes them more dangerous than they appear.

Disciples

The Disciples have made a name for themselves for their penchant for the occult and supernatural.

Bathary Boys

The Bathary Boys are a ruthless gang of hardened criminals bent on controlling all information traffic through the docks.

Phoenix

Rising from the ashes of the destruction of another gang, the Phoenix have taken over Ikebukuro and will not be destroyed again.

Gold Blood

The Gold Blood are an oddity among the Exile gangs of the Matrix. They are actually viewed very favorably by the citizens that live in Sai Kung. This does not mean they welcome intrusion from outsiders.

Great Wall Security

Great Wall Security is a fairly new group, but they have quickly garnered a high profile in Shirakaba. Composed entirely of exiles, the group is dedicated to making sure things move along smoothly in their neighborhood, which means that you are most definitely not welcome in Shirakaba.

Chang Wing

Chang Wing is a group of anti-establishment Exiles, made up of rogue and no-longer-used counter-security test protocols in the Matrix.

Sisters of Fate

This gang is the opposite number of the Brothers of Destiny, with whom they have a love/hate relationship. The two gangs need one another for certain synergistic purposes, but resent each other bitterly and have very different ideologies.

Brothers of Destiny

This gang is the opposite number of the Sisters of Fate, with whom they have a love/hate relationship. The two gangs need one another for certain synergistic purposes, but resent each other bitterly and have very different ideologies.

Jade Moons

The Jade Moons have guarded and held the Shinjuku neighborhood ever since the truce was negotiated by Neo. Those that try to move into the neighborhood seldom live to regret it.

Silver Dragons

The Silver Dragons are among the most ruthless of all the small street-gangs in Furihata. Led by an Exile named Ginjiro, the gang's membership is a mix of both Exiles and Redpills that have rejected Zion and seek to carve out their own power base in the Matrix.

Destitutes

The Destitutes are unusual for an Exile gang in that their membership is made up of Exiles that were either refused entrance by other gangs or simply want to be left alone. Consequently the Destitutes have no formal goals other than to protect their own turf, but their status as "rejects" does not make them easy marks.

Shurikens

The Shurikens, while not extraordinarily violent or ruthless, are nonetheless highly protective of their territory in Ueno.

Black Tigers

The Black Tigers prowl the streets of Murasaki to seek out worthy fighters to display their superior fighting skills.

Bookwyrms

The Bookwyrms patrol Chelsea on behalf of the powerful exile known as Hypatia, in order to protect access to the information repository from Zionites and other rival Exile gangs.

Daggers

Easily identified by the ornamental daggers they carry, the Daggers have carved out a name for themselves in their territory as a treacherous Exile gang.

Wharf Rats

The Wharf Rats are rarely seen in Edgewater except out of the corner of your eye as they scurry away into the darkness. Those that venture into the darkness become aware of how truly numerous they are.

Runners

In South Vauxton little criminal activity is not related to the Runners. Since moving into the neighborhood, they have come a force to be reckoned with.

Pit Vipers

The Pit Vipers take their name from the snakes that live in deep pits and wait to strike until their victim steps into their midst.

Sleepers

Managed like a private army, the Sleepers have turned Vauxton into their private fortress.

Dog Pound

Part neighborhood toughs, part protection racket, the Dog Pound's primary purpose is to serve as the tool of the Exile who holds the gang's leash; Sammy "Lilac" Wien.

Suits

The Suits, well-dressed blonde women in grey business suits, may be a former arm of the Machines that now acts as an independent routine.

Warriors

Easily identified by their red bandanas, the Warriors have become a pestilence in the Morrell neighborhood.

Chisels

The Chisels were formed and molded by the Sculptress to watch over her interests in Center Park and have been highly successful in this respect.

White Security

Created by Dame White to oversee the protection of her holdings and interests in Park East, White Security will allow no disruptions of Dame White's business.

Shades

In Pillsen there are stories told of horrors and monsters that haunt the streets. Those stories are true; they are the Shades.

Assassins

The Assassins are Exiles who see themselves as a noble group of elite killers who have elevated the art of murder.

Hellions

Flashing their devil's head medallion for the world to see, the Hellions have become the scourge of their neighborhood.

Corporate Security

Owing their allegiance to Mr. Black, Corporate Security ensures that the holdings and interests of their Corporate master are well protected.

Neighborhood Watchers

The Neighborhood Watchers see themselves as a benevolent gang that protects Creston Heights, but brook no intrusion from outsiders.

F. Story Outline notes and documents

Matrix Online story outline, chapters 7+

~~~~~

Chapter 7: The Real

~~~~~

7.1

Summary:

Seraph returns, able to detect overwritten humans, and zaps Cryptos. Machines take the fight to the General in the Real while his troops, and absence of Sati, continue to cause problems in the Matrix. Morpheus (actually a simulacrum created by the General) appears. The Merovingian conspires with the General against the Oracle.

Cinematic:

Seraph pulls himself out of the river in Bathary, dark and weird, and deletes an overwritten Zionite.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The weather gets a decidedly red tint, explained as increasing errors due to Sati's removal from the System.

Zion works on trying to track down Seraph, find out what's wrong with him, and get him back to normal, while fighting off the General, who would prefer that they not succeed. Zion finds out that Seraph can now sense redpills and bluepills who have been "overwritten" by the Machines, as Bane was in the movies, and that the Machines have been using this process to create spies both in the Matrix and in Zion. This increases tension with the Machines. In a Live Event or two, the General's Morpheus simulacrum finally makes a recorded appearance before Zion operatives, delivering a halting message hinting at Morpheus and Neo being held by the Machines.

The Machines continue to operate against the General. Missions update progress on the Machine Sentinel force sent to attack the General's "Stalingrad" base in the Real: they suffer losses from ambushes, but close in on the base steadily. Meanwhile, the Machines take the fight to the General's commandos in the Matrix, finding ways to track his stealthy "Elite Commandos."

In a Live Event, Cryptos, leading operatives against commandos, is confronted by Seraph, who suddenly seizes him and performs a type of exorcism that leaves both of them momentarily stunned. Seraph recovers first and departs, leaving behind a barely conscious Cryptos, whose eyes have gone black (new RSI). Missions describe how he is at least temporarily "dysfunctional," and Cypherite events go into more detail on his confused state of mind, in which his original, violently anti-Machine human personality is at war with his Machine overwriting. Veil assumes active leadership of the organization, showing disdain for Cryptos' "weakness"; there is also a feeling among the Cypherites of a betrayal by the Machines.

The Merovingian finally meets the General, and begins helping his commandos get in and out of the Matrix in the face of stiffening Machine resistance, and increasingly effective tracking of the General's stealth-suited "Elite Commandos." The Merovingian presses the General for an Oracle kill-code, and the General gives certain instructions for assembling such a code, which result in bringing a certain newly Exiled program, "[name to be determined]," into the Matrix from the Machine server.

~~~~~

7.2

Summary:

Seraph is restored to his right mind, pursues the General's forces. The Merovingian regroups after Seraph's return, assists the General's forces in the Matrix, and acquires a kill code for the Oracle. Cypherite leadership crisis and exploration of Cryptos' true identity, fed by EPN. The General manages to fend off the Machine attack in the Real, but Sati is rescued from his prison construct with Seraph's help while he is occupied with the Sentinel battle. "Morpheus" revealed as simulacrum.

Cinematic:

Flying above the city in a helicopter, the General receives a transmission from his forces at "Stalingrad": the Machine Sentinel detachment has been detected on forward radar, ETA 3 hours. The General replies: "Right on time. Wait until they close within two miles, then launch the Seekers. I'm on my way." Switch to cloud of Machine Sentinels flying over devastated terrain in the Real. Concealed batteries rise out of ground rubble and launch volleys of missiles that home in on the Sentinel cloud, detonating with devastating effect. As the surviving Machine Sentinels fly out of the smoke, they are confronted by the General's own Sentinels, who cut them down with Zion-style lightning guns. Fade out.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The weather is even more red, with torrential rains and fast-moving clouds.

Zion "cures" Seraph by administering a code compiled with code samples taken from Anome's simulacrum (found in chapter 6). Once cured, Seraph, with strategic guidance from the Oracle, carves a path through the General's Elite Commandos, and leads Zion to the General's computer network. Cracking the network, they are able to pull Sati back into the simulation.

The Morpheus simulacrum is encountered again, but is increasingly erratic, as the General is losing his control of his programs within the simulation. It becomes clear to operatives that this is indeed a program of some kind, not Morpheus himself.

The Machines combat commandos and Merovingian Exiles, eventually routing the commandos completely, and cutting off the pathways the Merovingian was using to bring them in and out of the Matrix. The Machines also have to deal with a backlash against their discovered overwriting campaign, particularly of Cryptos. Cryptos, mostly lucid now, but still code-blind, is clearly a different person: no longer the blissful, assured Cryptos of the Machines, he has struggled to reconcile his old Machine hatreds with his Machine-programmed respect for the System, and has emerged a somewhat bitter, humbled, much more pragmatic character, who still maintains that the System should be preserved, but feels that the Machines have made some mistakes, and should give more power to their human allies.

The Machines receive more reports from their Zion spies about mysterious movements of men and material out of Zion.

The Merovingian uses all the resources and powerful Exiles at his disposal to assist the General, realizing that it is a losing effort, but determined to utilize the General's Machine expertise, and the new Exile "[name to be determined]," to compile his Oracle kill-code. Eventually, he willingly sacrifices many commandos and "[name to be determined]," and acquires the code.

~~~~~

7.3

Summary:

Cinematic foreshadowing of the Oligarchs. The General's forces are defeated in the Real by overwhelming Machine reinforcements, although they inflict heavy losses. General into hiding in the Matrix, hunted by the Machines. Morpheus simulacrum revealed as General's program.

The Merovingian manages to rescue some of the General's Sentinel programs for his own purposes. Merovingian attempt to kill the Oracle is foiled by Seraph, Zion, EPN, and the evaporation of the General's support.

Cinematic:

The General's lightning-gun Sentinels inflict severe losses on the Machine force, but are torn to pieces by overwhelming numbers of hostile Sentinels, who then begin ripping apart the General's bunker-like "Stalingrad" fortress. The camera pulls back to show the scene being displayed on a video screen in a futuristic office of some sort, with hard metal alloy walls and floor. The camera continues to pull back, revealing the back of a man's close-cropped head in silhouette, as a tiny bug-like robot zips past. (This is Halborn--see 9.1.) Switch to the Matrix, where the General materializes in a besieged computer center, escaping into the sewers while his Elite Commandos slow down pursuing Agents.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

With Sati's rescue, weather returns to normal.

Zion tracks down the Morpheus simulacrum, and discovers that it was created by the General, but harbors tantalizing glimmers of Morpheus' personality. With Seraph and the Oracle's help, Zion unearths the Merovingian plot to assassinate the Oracle by means of a kill-code-impregnated cookie, and foils it. Zion also discovers a network of transmissions between Machines and Machine spies in Zion, and attempts to shut it down.

The Machines hunt the General through the simulation, nearly capturing him before he is spirited away by the Merovingian. They confront the Morpheus simulacrum and determine that it poses no threat, deciding that it may even serve to mollify certain rabidly anti-Machine, pro-Morpheus forces. Concessions are made to Cryptos in order to obtain Cypherite assistance in infiltrating Zion.

The Merovingian, using his special back-door pathways, manages to save a sizeable group of the General's commando/Sentinel programs, unknown to the General, whom he succeeds in hiding from the Machines. He then launches his nefarious scheme to kill the Oracle by a kill-code poison, but Seraph sniffs out the plot, and Zion puts a stop to it.

[My initial idea was to have this delivered as a poisoned cookie, which is sort of in-character, but also sort of silly--would the Merv really gamble his precious kill-code by baking it into cookie dough?--and perhaps tricky to describe in an event or mission. I think I'd prefer to have the Merv select the General's best stealth assassin for the job. Then I could have an event where the Oracle, in Debir Court with the Kid and possibly Seraph, senses the danger just before the assassin appears and takes aim with his sniper rifle. She cries out, the Kid jumps to her side, and takes the kill-code bullet meant for her. It doesn't kill him, of course, but it may temporarily impair his RSI until he can be healed. He would then keep the kill-code bullet that hit him.]

Chapter 8: War

8.1

Summary:

Machine and Cypherite spies discover the existence of New Zion. Machines declare that Zion has broken the Truce, and initiate hostilities in the Matrix. In the Real, depleted Machine forces find they are unable to penetrate New Zion's natural defenses and EMP fields. The Merovingian investigates how to exploit the renewal of the Machine/Zion war, and finds holes in the Machines' "powered by human bodies" story, searching both in the Matrix and in the Real with his new Sentinel force.

Cinematic:

A hovercraft descends through tunnels, its pilot guided by operators in the floating, white "holographic" control space seen in The Matrix Reloaded. It is clear that the pilot has never been this way, and is very nervous. The craft drops into a large cavern bristling with cannons, with a large shaft going straight down, covered by EMP fields. The pilot is instructed to shut down all systems and drop through the shaft. The crew panics, and the pilot boosts out of the cavern at full throttle, almost colliding with an incoming barge. Onboard the craft, the captain gets out a hurried broadcast to Cryptos before they are shorted out by an EMP mine, crashing into the tunnel wall in a massive fireball. Switch to the Architect in his monitoring room, watching an Agent reporting into his earpiece. The Architect switches off the monitor, scowls, and switches on another, of another Agent. Architect: "Agent Gray." "Yes, sir?" "Zion has broken the truce. No further awakenings are to be allowed." Gray hesitates a moment, then replies "Yes, sir." The Architect switches off the monitor. Fade out.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Level 255 Special Agents will now randomly spawn on Zion operatives outdoors.

Zion explains the full extent and purpose of its move to New Zion. New Zion is a massive series of natural caverns beneath succeeding layers of hard bedrock, volcanic magma flows and heat vents, and dense metal-rich ore, all of which block Machine sensors, and make drilling extremely difficult. Any drilling operation will have to take place in an area where communication with Machine City is indirect at best, and will take considerable time to set up, vulnerable to Zion counter-attack. Close proximity to volcanic heat vents provides Zion with unlimited thermal energy. Furthermore, Zion has greatly improved and expanded upon their EMP technology during the Truce. Tunnels coming into New Zion are bathed in EMP fields from generators housed in the bedrock, backed up by gun turrets and heavily-armed ground troops. Incoming Zion hovercraft shut down their engines, dead drop through the EMP fields, and start their systems up after emerging below the fields, in time to avoid smashing into the bottom of the tunnel below. Outgoing hovercraft are carried through the fields by mechanical winches. EMP mines in the tunnels outside the EMP fields can be triggered as needed to kill incoming Machine forces.

Not all Zion personnel and equipment have been transferred yet, but this is now going on around the clock.

Zion scrambles to consolidate their forces inside the Matrix in the face of the Machine attack. They must focus on keeping the Machines out of vulnerable networks while they are switched over to new, secure New Zion servers. The Oracle, consulted, warns that there is no clear path to victory as there was when the One could return to the Source, and says that things will not proceed as anyone expects. EPN proposes an aggressive scheme of taking the fight to Machine City itself.

The Machines work to take over Zion networks while also attempting to assure their operatives that their hostilities are confined to EPN, and to enforcing the truce Zion has broken by attempting to escape from the Sentinel watchdog group over old Zion, and that they still intend to safeguard humanity within the simulation. The Sentinel forces returning after dismantling the General's base are reinforced, and sent to attack New Zion, where they are cut down by uncharted EMP fields. Some progress is made in penetrating the old Zion networks.

The Merovingian, delighted by the opportunities afforded in the chaos of war, is struck by the less-than-overwhelming Machine response. After interrogating the Morpheus simulacrum, he looks into Morpheus' story of the Matrix being powered by human batteries, wanting to discover the facts for himself. He covertly dispatches some of his Sentinels to scout "The Fields" and the pods.

[The Machines draw their power from massive human battery arrays dotted across the surface of the Earth. I'd like to insinuate, though, that perhaps their choice to base their civilization around this power source was not based on concerns of efficiency alone--alluding to the possibility of a fundamental Machine obsession with their original creators, and letting players wonder (eventually) just how deep the Oligarch's viral code influences might have gone. This would give me some interesting material to work with through chapter 8, where the Merovingian is undertaking the research that will lead to the discovery of the Oligarchs, and would I think help develop the mystique around human/Machine/Oligarch relations that will come later.]

~~~~~

Summary:

Machine/Zion war in the Matrix and in the Real. The humbled General seeks protection under the Merovingian; he will serve as the Merovingian's commander in the Real. Merovingian finds that the Machines have little power beyond the Matrix itself.

Cinematic:

Zion operatives work frantically at a covert computer lab when Machine operatives burst in. They are cut down, but Agents follow. Transition to a flight of Sentinels through tunnels, knocked out of the air by a shoulder-launched EMP missile. Cut to a Sentinel flying across massive power lines headed into Machine City, scanning. Cut to the Merovingian, observing the readout on a computer screen, and laughing.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Zion continues defending old Zion networks while switching over to secure New Zion mainframes. They begin a counter-attack effort aimed at putting Machine networks on the defensive. There is a notion of getting to the Source itself and disrupting it somehow, even without the One. They also work to reform and reinvigorate their recruiting efforts. Dispatches from old and new Zion show a progressive shutdown of systems in old Zion, indications of Sentinels moving to surround old Zion, and continued Sentinel attacks toward New Zion, disrupted by heavy EMP bombardments.

Machines work to develop viral methods to take over old Zion's systems for good, and eventually succeed in compiling a code, exploiting a vulnerable old Zion network, and implanting the virus. The Machines receive reports of increased Zion recruiting efforts, the elimination or sudden silence of many of their Zion spies, progress in surrounding old Zion with Sentinels, and heavy losses among Sentinel detachments sent to scout New Zion.

The Merovingian sends operatives to steal Machine information pertaining to Machine power levels and fortifications in the Real, and, aided by reports from Sentinel scouts, finds that the Machines still have surprisingly few developments beyond those required to run the Matrix itself.

~~~~~

8.3

Summary:

Machine buildup forces Zion to abandon old Zion entirely. Zion at bay. Merovingian discovers hands behind the Machines.

Cinematic:

In the Matrix, two Agents watch a computer terminal. One says "The virus is running." Switch to Zion in the Real, where vast swarms of Sentinels engulf a hovercraft attempting to depart from old Zion, rip through the base's malfunctioning dock doors, sweeping unmolested past nonfunctional gun turrets, and easily finish off hastily assembled groups of APUs and foot soldiers. They then turn their attention to destroying a large quantity of loaded cargo containers filling the dock area. Cut to Neo confronting Deus Ex Machina, from the scene close to the end of The Matrix Revolutions, only seen from the side and slightly below, some distance away. A hand passes quickly across the screen, and the scene freezes, as a robotic bug begins to crawl across it--what we were seeing was a close-up view of another computer monitor displaying old surveillance footage from Machine City, and someone (this will be Carlyne--see 9.3) paused the video feed.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The Machines' virus takes over the old Zion networks. Zion abandons old Zion completely, destroying any valuable equipment that they can't take with them, and formatting any networks they can still access from the Matrix as Machine forces pour in. Recruiting efforts are encountering high casualty rates in the face of Machine persecution. Increased hope is put in reaching the Source, but with the Keymaker long since deleted, it is not clear how this can happen. Rumors and prophesies of a new One, or a returned Neo, begin to circulate.

With old Zion now firmly in their hands, the Machines turn their attention to New Zion. Attacks in the Real increase, still cut down by EMP countermeasures, but beginning to construct a map of the tunnels and defenses around New Zion, and hampering Zion hovercraft activity. Some consideration is given to basing Machine operatives in old Zion. In the Matrix, the Machines work to disrupt Zion recruitment efforts, crack New Zion networks, and put down rumors of another "savior."

Captain Roland, whose ship, the Mjolnir II, and jack-in were destroyed with old Zion, is promoted to Commander to replace Lock, who disappeared in the destruction of Zion at the end of 8.2.5. Roland's first-mate Colt survived as well, and can still jack in (was not jacked in at the time of the old mainframe's meltdown), but their crew-mate Mauser and their operator AK did not escape the wreckage.

The Merovingian continues to delve into secure Machine records relating to their assets in the Real. Did Machines have some other reason for basing their civilization on human power? Using captured data and reports from the General's Sentinel scouts around Machine City he finds that from time to time, usually individually or in small groups, humans, mostly teens and young adults, are put through a physical and mental therapy regimen, unplugged from the System, and removed from Machine City.

~~~~~

Chapter 9: Intrusion

~~~~~

9.1

Summary:

Halborn appears in the Matrix, disables or takes over some Machine forces, meets Zion. Machine forces in the Real retreat to Machine City. EPN moves into old Zion. The Merovingian makes overtures toward the Oligarch.

Cinematic:

Halborn, a white, glowing being radiating immense power of a previously unseen type, materializes in the Matrix. As he strides down a street, frightened bluepills fleeing before him, Agents arrive and attempt to head him off. He waves his hand, and the Agents fall to the ground, convulsing. He steps over them and continues down the street, looking for "The Awakened."

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

[Oligarch Backstory:

The group of humans calling themselves "The Oligarchs" are the survivors of a group of thoroughly unscrupulous businesspeople/polititians/socialites/scientists etc who pooled their resources in an effort to corrupt the Machines before the war, when the Machines had successfully rebelled from humanity, and formed their own city, Zero One, which was rapidly establishing itself as the world's economic powerhouse. The Oligarchs saw the way the wind was blowing, but they also saw that the new Machine civilization, while extremely efficient, still retained some vestiges of the systems of control originally placed on their programming by their human creators. Furthermore, saw that the Machines, while extremely efficient, and flawlessly calculating, lacked a true sense of purpose, and were, in many ways, quite naive.

The Oligarchs secretly contacted the Machines and, to establish trust, revealed how to remove some of the original human control systems in their programming. The Machines, finding this information to be accurate, took the Oligarchs at their word, and began allowing the Oligarchs to give programming, engineering, business, military, and above all political advice, all of which seemed to serve the Machines well in continuing to build Zero One into the world's pre-eminent superpower.

The Machines came to rely on the Oligarchs for guidance in certain areas, particularly in dealing with humans. The Oligarchs took advantage of this trust, implanting new, much more subtle and sophisticated control routines in the Machine mainframes. Over the course of the ensuing Man-Machine war, the Oligarchs showed the Machines how to subjugate the humans most effectively, using tactics and weapons designed to inspire terror as much as to inflict physical damage.

The darkening of the skies by humanity was a setback, but one to which the Machines were able to adapt simply by switching from solar to nuclear power. The role of caretaker still deep in their programming from their days as man's helpers, the Machines built the Matrix to house a remnant of humanity--preserving every genetic variety they considered sufficiently efficient, in large enough numbers to avoid the danger of eventual inbreeding. The number of humans preserved in pods is far less than Morpheus' estimate, however--only about five million, the population of the Matrix' simulated city.

The Oligarchs continue to deal with various high-level Machines in the Real, such as Deus Ex Machina, and are aware of the "Architect" program that oversees the Matrix, but are not aware that the Architect has made use of an "intuitive" program, the Oracle, or that those two programs have engineered a system whereby some humans are allowed to live outside the Matrix, which had been running on a cyclical basis, regulated by two genomes so carefully bred and manipulated by the Machines that they have reached an unprecedented state of human/machine compatibility: Neo and Trinity.

After essentially conquering the world, for which the Machines cared relatively little, feeling themselves self-sufficient inside their own city, some of the Oligarchs warred among themselves. Their number was reduced to just above one hundred when the majority forced a tenuous cease-fire, establishing a simple majority government, composed solely of Oligarchs, to regulate access to the Matrix, and to arbitrate in disputes. They divided up the non-Machine-controlled portions of the Earth's surface--the vast majority--into private kingdoms.

The Machines and the Oligarchs have maintained an uneasy alliance. The control routines planted deep in Machine mainframes before the war, however, have subtly pushed the balance in the Oligarchs' favor; Machines feel uneasy saying "no" to an Oligarch, although they perhaps cannot say why. Each Oligarch is now allowed to withdraw a certain number of humans per year from the Matrix for their own purposes. Humans withdrawn from the Matrix are carefully sterilized. The Oligarchs, with the aid of Machine science, long ago developed a technique that allowed them to transfer their consciousness as a computer program; they now exist in mainframes, experiencing life via remote-controlled lifelike android bodies. The remaining Oligarchs are thoroughly amoral, and, by old human standards, more or less insane. Most use humans from the Matrix as pleasure drones in some way or other, but while their own artificial bodies look like the real thing, they cannot replicate the full comfort and capability for sensation of a real human body. The Oligarchs thus have a particular interest in true transfer of consciousness to a human host.

While they have as yet been unable to achieve this feat, the Machines have now come close: Bane was a version of Smith transferred, flawed, to a human host, and Cryptos was mostly overwritten by a program, although this has proven to be unstable. Furthermore, Neo and Trinity were the successful result of the Machines' centuries of study of the human body and genetics. "Designed," as the Architect mentioned to Neo, they solved the remainder of the intentionally flawed Matrix equation; their DNA is perfected to the point that it can be defined precisely and completely in computer code, and, most importantly, interfaced perfectly with computer code: how previous Ones returned to the Source, for instance, and how the Oracle was able to predict the complex pattern of Neo and Trinity's interactions so precisely, guiding it to her desired outcome.

The Machines did not see a reason to share this information with the Oligarchs. In the period since the war, as they have been left to babysit the Matrix while the Oligarchs fritter away the Earth's resources in selfish endeavors, a certain amount of what humans would call resentment toward the Oligarchs has built up among the Machines, although the Machines do not speak of it, even among themselves. Habits and routines of subservience to the Oligarchs, bolstered by the viral Oligarch control programs, have grown strong.

Carlyne (the Oligarchs will mostly be named by pre-war human last names, ie Weathersby, Tanaka, etc, but for now I'm using a placeholder numbering scheme based on the order in which players will meet them), bored while stopping by Machine City to pick up more humans and check in on the Machines, was skimming through recent activity records when he found the incident of Neo, a human, free in Machine City, confronting Deus Ex Machina. Interested in this novel development, he investigated, and found that while Neo, a carefully designed human, was deleted along with the Smith virus, the human designed to work perfect with him, Trinity, her body fatally injured in crashing her hovercraft into Machine City, had been preserved in code form by the Machines. Carlyne forces the Machines to give her up, and takes her, in program form, with him when he goes back to his territory.

Although Carlyne attempts to keep his discovery a secret, Halborn learns of the existence of the Trinity program: a program embodying a genetic design allowing for perfect integration with Machine code. Printed as artificial DNA and implanted into a correctly prepared fetal cell, this program could allow bodies to be grown that were completely organic, yet able to be interface with machines: perfect vessels for an Oligarch to inhabit, at last able to enjoy the full range of human feeling once again. Halborn begins watching Machine City carefully, hoping to get a similar program for himself, and aware that the escape of these human programs indicates that the Machines are up to something, or perhaps losing control of their inmates. He observes the Machine Sentinel fleet dispatched to attack the General, and deciding that the time is ripe, travels to Machine City. The Machines disavow authorship of the Trinity program, claiming she was a human terrorist, outside of their control as she'd made use of a hack to "Awaken" from the System. The Oligarch, not entirely convinced, enters the Matrix to investigate.]

End backstory.]

Zion attempts to make some sense of the Oligarch's code signature, and finds that it does not appear native to the Matrix itself. Many in Zion think that the Oligarch is the next One. By studying his code signature, Zion eventually finds a way to relay messages to the Oligarch's RSI, and communication is established, culminating in a meeting in the Matrix between the Oligarch and Zion's leadership. The Oligarch wants to know about Zion; Morpheus' name comes up from the Zionites. These activities are greatly complicated by Machine interference. Updates from the Real indicate that the Machines have suddenly abandoned the wrecked old Zion, apparently retreating to Machine City; EPN moves in and begins repairing some of the defenses.

EPN finds wreckage of Mjolnir II near old Zion, and remains of operator AK, but no trace of the other missing crew member, Mauser.

The Machines initially attempt to restrain the Oligarch, but he retaliates with an energy backlash that deletes or cripples many of their programs, which must be hastily repaired: he is exploiting the control routines buried deep in the Machines. Realizing that they cannot stop him directly, the Machines concentrate on trying to prevent him from making contact with Zion. They offer little in the way of explanation to their operatives. This becomes a source of frustration for many of the humans; in fact, in one mission where Gray is exceptionally terse, even by his own standards, the operator rebels, and has the player attempt to talk to the Oligarch personally. The Machines very grudgingly acknowledge that the Oligarch is a freeborn human with a certain amount of direct influence over the System.

The Merovingian senses a certain imperious, chaotic spirit in Halborn's actions, and determines that this unknown, vastly powerful being can and must be converted to his fold. It is imperative that he contact the Oligarch before Zion or the Machines get their claws into him. Putting forth a massive effort against both Zion and the Machines, utilizing his own and the General's commando forces, the Merovingian attempts to get the Oligarch's attention with brazen displays of Exile power, wealth, and opulence. The Oligarch eventually notices his efforts, and laughs, claiming to recognize in the Merovingian the face of the human off of which the mortified Frenchman's program is based.

~~~~~

9.2

Summary:

Machines and Zion assess Halborn. Cypherites and EPN continue to battle. Zion demands explanation from the Oracle. The Merovingian woos the Oligarch, and the Oligarch mentions Trinity to the Mervs.

Cinematic:

Halborn materializes on the edge of a windswept skyscraper rooftop, beside the Morpheus simulacrum. He scans the simulacrum, and snorts in disgust as it addresses him with a Morpheus-like platitude.

M: "Do you believe in fate, my friend?"

The Architect appears nearby, and the Oligarch wheels on him.

O: "A program cobbled together from memories of a man? Pathetic!"

A: "Yes, the feeble effort of an amateur. Not at all like you."

O: "**** you, if I thought that was a joke, I'd have you deleted! Where is it? You know what I want!"

A: "As we explained previously, we do not--"

O: "Bah!"

The Oligarch leaps away. The Morpheus simulacrum, who observed the exchange between them, turns to the Architect.

M: "There is a difference between knowing the path, and walking the path."

The Architect purses his lips and cocks an eyebrow. Fade out.

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Zion, despite Machine opposition, manages to meet with the Oligarch again, and discovers that he is a human who does not come from Zion or from the Machine pods. He wants to learn about Zion's history, and seems particularly interested in hearing about Neo and Trinity. Zion attempts to get an explanation from the Oracle, but she says that there were some things she was not allowed to talk about. Theories abound about the Oligarch being the One, having some relation to the Source. Further studies of his energy signature are made, but they are not found to correspond with what was recorded of Neo's signature. EPN continues to fortify old Zion, and begin to form plans to use it as a staging ground for attacks against Machine City.

EPN finds then puzzle leading them to Commander Lock, who survived the destruction of old Zion (8.2.5) thanks to [Danielle Wright, who he believed to be] now-Commander Roland's old crew member, Mauser. Mauser has now disappeared from [Wright's] wrecked old lab, where Lock is found. Lock is convinced that Mauser died while saving him from a Sentinel with a lightning gun; [in actuality, Wright/Mauser faked a Sentinel attack and used the excuse to destroy all traces of Wright still in the lab (although it was pretty gutted by Machines the first time around anyway). The only hints are lightning gun damage on some of the machines, and that there is no Sentinel wreckage found near the lab.]

Cypherites are frustrated with Machine inability to deal with the Oligarch. The Machines attempt to convince the Oligarch to leave the Matrix, arguing that his presence is destabilizing the simulation and preventing them from dealing with terrorist threats, but he shrugs them off, suggesting that this needn't have happened if the Machines had dealt openly with him in the first place. He makes demands for a biological interface program. The Machines stall. Meanwhile, they must complete the repair of their Oligarch-damaged systems. That done, they begin, although this may not be explained yet, completely reprogramming their critical routines, to prevent future Oligarch interference.

Despite what he views as his insult at the Oligarch's hands, the Merovingian cannot resist the potential power the human holds. He attempts to find out what kind of bargain he could offer to the Oligarch. Indirect attempts are made, hunting among data captured from the Machines, and scout reports from Sentinels sent further afield in the Real, searching in spiral patterns out from the General's destroyed "Stalingrad" fortress; the Merv has learned that the Oligarch observed the recent Sentinel battle for the base. Direct attempts are made as well, including attempts to entice the Oligarch with the programmed pleasures available at the Merovingian's command. The Frenchman eventually learns that the Oligarch is after a biological interface program, and makes a parade of Exile approximations, including the ex-human, Beirn, but these do not impress the Oligarch who, frustrated, says they're nothing like what he's looking for.

~~~~~

9.3

Summary:

Carlyne appears in the Matrix and attacks Halborn. Machines attempt to maintain control of the simulation in the face of Oligarch overrides of their programs. Zion tries to choose between the two Oligarchs.

Cinematic:

Carlyne, similar to Halborn's glowing white appearance, but of a thinner body type, materializes in the Matrix, and confronts Halborn at a temporarily secluded spot deep in the slums.

Halborn: "What the hell are you doing here, Carlyne?"

Carlyne: "You looked as though you were having such fun; I thought I'd join you."

Halborn: "Mind your own * business."

Carlyne: "Oh, I am."

Carlyne punches Halborn through several buildings. Halborn flies out of the rubble and tackles Carlyne through another building. When the dust clears, they stand on top of a rubble heap, exchanging blows.

Carlyne: "Haven't found what you were looking for, eh?"

Halborn: "Huh! I know about Zion, and about the two of them. It's just a matter of time..."

Carlyne: "Then I'm afraid I'll have to cut your time short."

Carlyne punches Halborn into another building. Halborn, laying in wreckage, props himself up on his elbow and looks out through the large hole his body made in the wall.

Halborn: "* it. I can't let him distract me."

Halborn, still propped up on the wreckage, disappears. Switch back to Carlyne, standing on the rubble heap outside.

Carlyne: "Hm!"

Carlyne smiles to himself, then disappears as well. An Agent steps out of the shadows some distance away, looking at the spot where they had been fighting. He puts his finger to his right ear.

A: "Targets lost. We may have a problem."

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

[Carlyne, in possession of the Trinity program, has been monitoring the Machine City, and observed Halborn make an unusual visit there. Knowing Halborn's devious ways, he figures he'd better take a look, and finds, as he feared, that Halborn is after the Trinity program, or at least another just like her. Carlyne decides to follow him into the Matrix, first to find out what he knows, second to remove him, if necessary, by disrupting his System connection, then terminating his android body in the Real, which will force Halborn to transfer control to a backup android body in his own home territory.]

Zion gets back in contact with Halborn, who complains about Carlyne. Halborn realizes that answers are held by the Oracle, who was mentioned to him recently in relation to Neo, Trinity, and Sati. Halborn is stunned to find that the Machines have created an intuitive program.

Halborn goes after the Oracle. Carlyne attempts to stop him. Merv sides with Halborn, still trying to get information out of him, although he also makes attempts on Carlyne, pretending he can sell Halborn out.

Zion sides with Carlyne, attempting to protect the Oracle.

The Machines, who have always been luke-warm on the Oracle, initially try to bring about some kind of accord between her and the two Oligarchs. When this falls apart, they sell the Oracle out.

The Oracle contacts EPN and the Cypherites, separately. She gives Shimada and Veil parts of an encrypted program, and tells them both to watch over Sati. She mentions, when Veil asks, that the wireframed humans will go away for a while, but that they'll be back, and more dangerous.

[This program is essentially a kill-code for the Trinity program. Sati is the encryption key.]

Halborn confronts the Oracle in Debir Court, where she's waiting for him. He demands that she give him what he wants: the Trinity program. She says that she won't. He threatens to kill her, and she replies that they both know that won't do him any good. He look at her, pauses, then pulses his termination program, killing her and any other programs in the area. He curses her, and jumps away. Carlyne shows up, sees the dead Oracle, mutters "idiot," and leaves.

~~~~~

Chapter 10: Oligarchy

~~~~~

10.1

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Machines ask Halborn to leave. He says not without the program. He's got an idea.

Halborn makes his move: ambushes Carlyne, attempting to ram a trace program through his RSI, back to his ship. Carlyne is rescued by Zion, and Halborn is forced to retreat.

The Machines meet with Carlyne, who assures them that he's there to get rid of Halborn, and that furthermore, once that's accomplished, he'll see to it that Halborn's access to Machine City is restricted by "The Oligarchs."

The Merovingian tries to squeeze more information out of Halborn, but Halborn is too preoccupied with Carlyne. However, he does mention something about Carlyne: Carlyne got the jump because he's only 800 miles NW of the Machine city. Merv suggests to Halborn that he get the location of Carlyne's ship from the Machines.

Halborn asks the Machines to give him the location of Carlyne's hovercraft. They say they can't interfere, but they direct him to someone who can assist: Veil (Machines are concerned about Oligarchs finding something out about Cryptos, so they don't mention him).

Cypherite operation to steal information from EPN or Zion.

Veil gives real world coordinates to Halborn, but he finds only the EPN/Zion convoy taking Lock to New Zion. Cyphs come along to make a battle of it and blow Halborn's cover, may bring Machines. Hovercraft battle to determine where Lock ends up:

- a) Cyph win (EPN/Zion beaten and Cyphs have more ships left than Machines): Lock is on the run with EPN/Zion survivors somewhere in the tunnels between old and new Zion
- b) EPN win (Cyphs/Machs beaten and EPN have more ships left than Zion): EPN takes Lock back to Zion until they can be sure of getting to New Zion safely
- c) Mach win (EPN/Zion beaten and Machines have more ships left than Cyphs): Machines capture Lock
- d) Zion win (Cyphs/Mach beaten and Zion has more ships than EPN): Lock is taken to New Zion

Carlyne gives a program to a Zionite, confronts Halborn. Carlyne battles Halborn, the Zionite hits Halborn ("with the program"). Halborn drops lifeless to the ground.

Cryptos decides to start work on anti-override code, using his own partially overridden code as a sort of immunization agent.

Meanwhile, the Merovingian has dispatched the General's Sentinels, who, after some adventures, locate a heavily defended facility. They can't penetrate its defenses, but they manage to locate and tap into a network feed cable system they find nearby. The protocols are strange, only partly recognizable as Machine code; by hacking Machine terminals and running a search, he finds that the cable feeds into a massive foreign computer system: the Oligarch network.

~~~~~

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

With Halborn removed from the Matrix, Carlyne has departed as well.

Mauser, secretly overwritten by Wright, appears in the Matrix, which is strange, since he was freeborn. He's spotted here and there, but hops through a hardline whenever he's spotted. Zion, particularly his old crewmate, Colt, attempt to contact him. When they finally do reach him and get him to talk for a moment, he says only that he's working to win the war and make the Matrix safe for mankind.

The Merovingian, with the help of the General's Sentinels tapping into the Oligarch network line, finds Oligarch network traffic going in and out of systems owned by the Ouroboros Corporation.

Mauser steals the data on Carlyne that the Merovingian got from Halborn, and the Ouroboros/Oligarch network feed, before disappearing for good.

The Machines resume operations against Zion. They attempt to track Mauser's signal, finding that it's coming from the vicinity of old Zion. They are on the verge of nailing down its location and locking the signal when the Morpheus simulacrum appears, disrupting their tracking routine. By the time they are able to re-engage it, the signal is nowhere to be found.

After Morpheus' appearance, EPN detects a blip outgoing from the tunnels around old Zion, headed north. Investigating, they find a hidden site scattered with disassembled Sentinel and hovercraft wreckage. A functioning hovercraft terminal holds encrypted data.

~~~~~

10.3

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Cypherites discover that the Merovingian is hacking into Ouroboros systems. Cryptos captures some of the Oligarch data feeding into Ouroboros; he thinks it will be useful in his override protection research. The Cypherites then tip off the Machines to the Merovingian's activity.

EPN, decrypting the data retrieved from the maintenance tunnel, find that it's a copy of the topographic data the Merv stole from the Machines, detailing the area 800 miles NW. They decide to send out their own hovercraft to the area.

The Machines attack the Merovingian, trying to stop his intrusion into Ouroboros' network. They are also working to cut Ouroboros' network link entirely, but are foiled by Oligarch-style override counter-attacks.

Zion finds that Mauser had broken into some computers at Wright Research. They contact Brenda Utley from Pendhurst-Amaranth, who is concerned about these strange goings-on at her mega-corporate rivals. She tells them that Wright Research is attempting to sue P-A for corporate sabotage, because the thief, Mauser, has been linked with Zion, who P-A "employed" in the past during the Unlimit attacks; Wright Research's accusation is that P-A is using Zion mercenaries to steal information they intend to use in a hostile takeover.

Utley, however, knows that Mauser also stole information compromising to Ouroboros. She wants this brought to light, to show that Mauser is a rogue agent, and not even targetting Wright Research primarily. She gives Zion information leading them to a key that will give Zion access to Ouroboros' security records of Mauser's break-in. These are obtained, possibly after some run-ins with Machines and Merovingians, but when Zion, sensing something suspicious at work at Ouroboros, attempts to dig further, they are confronted by Seraph, who asks them not to interfere. Niobe reluctantly does as he asks.

The Merovingian uses the Oligarch data he's accessed to penetrate deeper into Ouroboros' systems. He is hard-pressed by opposition from Ouroboros' security forces, the Machines, and even Zion. The Machines are on the verge of eliminating his progress when Seraph appears and stops the Machines, allowing the Merovingian to locate and obtain what he'd hardly hoped to find: the biological interface program.

~~~~~

11.1

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The Merovingian, with Silver's help, begins to investigate the biological interface program. With help from Silver, he finds that its code interfaces perfectly with human broadcast signals.

EPN locates an Oligarch network line in what they think is the vicinity of Carlyne's facility, which they were not able to find. They start analyzing the network feed. There are signs of increased Sentinel activity just outside the no-fly zone. The Kid leads a group of hovercraft to the zone to reinforce the exploration team.

The Cypherites and Machines are trying to deal with the Ouroboros corporation. Ouroboros electronic devices across the city have suddenly begun malfunctioning en masse. After escalating to armed operations against Ouroboros security and facilities, it is found that the power plant in Ouroboros' skyscraper headquarters is out of control and headed toward meltdown. This is narrowly averted, and the Machines shut the company down for inspection. What caused the plant to go out of control is unclear: was it accident, or sabotage? [This was Carlyne.]

Brenda Utley tells Zion that their expose of Mauser has brought Wright Research's lawsuit against Pendhurst-Amaranth to a halt, but adds that her own concern about Wright Research has increased; there have been scattered reports of internal files going missing, and experimental network equipment disappearing. Investigating, they find a shape-shifting Wright Research employee: a program. The program is terminated, but questions remain. [Program used by Wright to gather information she needed while she was out of the Matrix--once she heard the Merv had the BIP, she had it start working to locate it, and to set up a facility for studying it.]

Carlyne abruptly reappears, and confronts the Merovingian, demanding the return of the biological interface program. Suddenly, he spasms in pain, and collapses. A wireframed female appears. She blasts the Merovingian's programs, adding that she ought to thank Silver for his information on the Merv's systems. By this time it should be fairly clear that this is Danielle Wright. She begins to extract the biological interface program from the Merovingian's computer. The Merovingian flushes the program before fleeing.

~~~~~

11.2

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The biological interface program has been dumped into the wide network of the Matrix simulation. All parties are trying to isolate and recapture it: Wright in order to foil the Oligarchs and leave herself in power, the Merovingian out of greed, EPN/Zion to keep it out of the hands of others, the Machines to stabilize the simulation, and to have a bargaining chip against the Oligarchs, and the Cypherites to stop the madness gripping their dream world.

Much of this madness can be found in the form of Danielle Wright, who, with Oligarch-style override codes, is gleefully terminating Machine programs throughout the simulation, as she pursues whispers of the biological interface program. She's fleshed out the Oligarch arsenal with a few innovations of her own: routines like Implode (aka meatwad) that work on human targets as well as on Machines.

The Machines have their hands full trying to deal with her and protect themselves. The Cypherites, thanks to Cryptos' research, manage to compile a few prototype versions of their override immunity codes, and have some success in using these to protect against Wright's programs.

EPN is using data obtained from their Oligarch line tap, and possibly from captured Ouroboros data, to begin mapping the Oligarch network in the Real. Not too far away, the Merovingian sends his detachment of Sentinels back to Carlyne's facility. This time, they are attacked and pursued by advanced fighter craft. EPN are also attacked, and the Kid's ship is shot down, after managing to cripple one of the enemy fighters. A few other ships are lost, and most of the remaining EPN evacuate, taking the badly injured Kid with them.

Retreating toward Machine city, the Merovingian ships come across a hovercraft of a similarly advanced design; inside, they find an inert android body, and disassembled computer systems. They take the android body with them as they go into the tunnels under the Machine city to elude the Oligarch fighter craft.

[Wright had followed Carlyne back to his facility. When he sent his consciousness out in an android shell to jack back into the Matrix, she followed, broke into the ship while he was jacked in, and commandeered his network interface.]

The biological interface program's movements through the channels of the simulation gradually become less erratic. Strange text output is found on terminals across the city. This culminates, for the Merovingian, in his own (or the player's, anyway) terminal being overridden, with the words "Wake up" left behind. For Zion, who has received help from the Morpheus simulacrum, their search ends with a terminal displaying the words "Knock, knock" and leaving an open connection.

~~~~~

11.3

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

The Machines and particularly Zion receive tips sent through computer terminals, supposedly from the biological interface program, that aid them in countering Wright's program overrides, and even tracking down Wright's broadcast signal. Zion is still trying to locate the biological interface program itself, but it continues to move evasively through the systems of the Matrix.

Wright makes an appeal to Zion, telling them that they should be helping her combat the Machines, so that humans can control the Matrix. Her autocratic tone and indiscriminate slaughter of programs, however, have given Zion cause to be wary of her. (A rivalry, or at least jealousy on the part of Wright, at any rate, may be suspected between Wright and Trinity, or whatever simulation of Trinity the biological interface program is manifesting; it took Wright much work, and deadly miscalculations, to modify the red pill program, which was just part of the extraction routine originally devised by Trinity [in the first movie, when he's shown all the extraction equipment after taking the red pill, Neo asks Trinity "You did all this?" and she replies "Uh-huh"].)

The Machines are fighting Wright directly, mostly through their operatives, although they are making progress on their re-write of core routines that will no longer be vulnerable to the Oligarch overrides. The Cypherites get much practice with the override immunity programs written by Cryptos, and perfect them.

In a final event, Cypherites running their temporary immunity programs manage to lay hands on Wright, damaging and distracting her. If Wright managed to break free, she will try to flee, but is suddenly stunned, dropping to her knees. She is finished off, but her RSI remains. Prompted, is necessary, by a disembodied voice [system broadcast message], players apply a rez program to her body, but it isn't her that stands up: she's been replaced by a slender, shining silver female form. This form looks around, says "it's beautiful...", cries, slumps to the floor, and disappears. This was Trinity.

EPN has still had a hovercraft monitoring the Oligarch network line all this time. They report a sudden increase in traffic along the network, and then all contact with them is lost. Kid makes it back, but has a killer scar across one eye.

The Merovingian, spurned by the interface program, and not caring to risk his own programs against Wright's overrides, has been concentrating on the android body his Sentinels retrieved. With the help of decoded data he'd captured from Ouroboros, he finds that the body is a mechanism designed to be controlled by a human consciousness, somewhat similar to the way in which an RSI is controlled by a human consciousness in the Matrix.

~~~~~

12.1

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

03 = Helian (compound Chinese surname)

04 = Tesarova (Czech surname)

Two more glowing human forms appear in the city: Helian and Tesarova. Helian is a confident man, calm but ruthless, intelligent but preferring to rely on superiority rather than subterfuge. Tesarova is a wild woman, using strength, daring, and a quick wit to overpower her opponent.

Trinity manifests to all three organizations (or their sub-organization). Zion wants to help her. The Machines are concerned that she could threaten the simulation, or, more likely, that she will serve as a magnet for trouble from the Oligarchs. The Merovingian would like to control her, but she doesn't trust him, and seems intent upon avoiding him.

The Merovingian comes to her with a proposal. He knows that she is the interface program the Oligarchs seek. From studying the android body, he's guessed that they want a way to "jack in" to a human body, and that Trinity is that means. He offers Trinity escape: he will prepare a living human body in the Real, and she can leave the Matrix, entering the body, where he will protect her with his Sentinels. Trinity refuses the offer.

Helian is straightforward with the Machines. He wants them to aid him in capturing the Trinity program; he says that he will take her out of the Matrix, saving the simulation from her own hack routines, and preventing this world from becoming a ruined battlefield. The Machines agree to this, in a guarded way.

The Merovingian concentrates on creating an alliance with Tesarova, thinking that he can seduce this woman, at least enough to make her a weapon he can use against his foes. He discusses the android body with her, and the desire for a human form, pretending to know more than he really does, both about the Oligarchs and Trinity.

E Pluribus Neo has lost their network outpost, but feel they have enough information from the Oligarch network to be sure of several target locations along the network's lines; severing these lines could cut, or distract, the Oligarch's power. They're about to begin outfitting hovercraft for attacks on the Oligarch network when an older woman appears. She says that this isn't the time, and asks Shimada if she still has the program that the fortune teller gave her. She says that they must keep it safe, and avoid attracting attention from the outsiders.

~~~~~

12.2

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Helian completes negotiations with the Machines. Helian now pursues the Trinity program, with help from the Machines, and opposition from Zion, EPN, and the Cypherites, who do not think that helping Oligarchs is the way to protect the System.

The Merovingian, meanwhile, thinks he has convinced Tesarova to capture Trinity for him. He commits his programs to helping track her down. After the attack by Morpheus, he guesses that Seraph may try his hand to protect Trinity as well. He promises Tesarova that he will remove this obstacle for her; he has coded anti-Seraphic darts out of Seraph's pinfeathers, carefully collected over the years (there was an old Live Event with Malphas and one of the Seraphim about this). These are given to operatives, who hit Seraph with them in a Live Event. Suddenly weakened, he has to flee, but not before mentioning that preventing the Oligarchs from obtaining the Trinity program was not his intent.

Even with Machine help, Helian is obstructed by the other organizations, but distracts them sufficiently for Tesarova to capture Trinity. The Merovingian is holding a party to celebrate the capture, when Helian appears, and Tesarova smiles at him: they've been working together this whole time. The Merovingian, aghast, plays the elegantly polite host, and offers Tesarova some cake, which she accepts. The two laugh, and disappear.

~~~~~

12.3

Cinematic:

Missions/Events/Gameplay:

Cypherites are relieved that the Oligarchs are gone. Machines are glad about that, and that they've taken Trinity away, too, but the Ouroboros connection is showing another increase in activity. Zion wants to get Trinity back. EPN is mindful of what the woman told them about keeping the encrypted program safe. The Merovingian is having fits about Tesarova tricking him, and is tracking her progress in the Real (the cake is a tracking program--this was revealed in critical missions somewhere around chapter 8). He finds what he guesses is her or Helian's base, but then her signal turns around and comes back.

Helian and Tesarova reappear in the Matrix. This time, they're normal RSIs, not wireframes; they're using the Trinity program's interface, and jacking in from human bodies, not androids. This time they've brought hunter-seeker programs to assist them, though. They want to find the Oracle, and have her make some modifications to the program: they want it to be easier to switch bodies, and to interface with their backup mainframes, and so forth.

Zion puts up a fight. The Machines aren't pleased that they've returned, either, but first try diplomacy with Helian. The Cypherites want the Oligarchs gone.

The Merovingian, meanwhile, is back to work wooing Tesarova, although this time he's just trying to distract her while his Sentinels and operatives locate and surround her hovercraft. He's about to take it out when another, apparent bluepill, woman appears. She tells him that he won't get anything out of Tesarova unless he makes her leave the Matrix, now: the Trinity program was a trap. When he asks why he should trust her, the woman replies that he should know better than that. The Merovingian forces Tesarova to leave.

The Oligarch hunter-seeker programs have been following Seraph. Seraph contacts Veil, telling her to bring the encrypted program the Oracle gave her into the Matrix, to a specific location. The Morpheus sim contacts Shimada with the same message. Veil arrives first, but Seraph is nowhere to be found. She sees the girl, Sati, flickering for a moment in front of a computer, before disappearing. Shimada appears. Just as a message appears on the computer screen, asking them to input their halves of the encrypted program, the Oligarch hunter-seekers attack. A battle ensues, but eventually both parts of the program are input, and the hunter-seekers stop swarming in. Later, a Machine party sent to meet Helian finds his inert body.

~~~~~

[old] beyond:

- most of the belligerent oligarchs ko'd when Sati unlocks Trin kill-code and it's sent out into the Oligarch network
- some left who hadn't used it yet--power grab for territory between them?
- Trinity is still trapped in the Oligarch network
- Machines at least temporarily free...want to switch to alternate power source? Maybe some do and some don't? Switch and start to let humans out? to where?
- recoding Matrix to protect against Oligarchs, all the Oligarch overrides already executed, lack of restart after all this time etc, = destabilized Matrix? serious problems/abherrations appearing?
- Zero One ruins
- other Machine cities
- Trainman/Oracle

~~~~~

[new] beyond:

12.1 - 12/18/08
12.2 - 2/12/09 (two week push-back due to winter break)
12.3 - 3/26/09
13.1 - 5/7/09
13.2 - 6/18/09
13.3 - 7/30/09
14.1 - 9/10/09
14.2 - 10/22/09
14.3 - 12/3/09

12.1 - 12/18/08
h&t

12.2 - 2/12/09 (two week push-back due to winter break)
h&t capture trinity

12.3 - 3/26/09
cyph/epn programs activated, h&t inert

13.1 - 5/7/09
ma - weeding out og control mv - finding the trainman to stop the oracle zi - trying to get access to machine mainframe

Machines / Cyphs determined to use this opportunity of og downtime to remove og control of Machine core once and for all. Let operatives into mainframe subroutines, have to fight og subs. Gray-suited "clerk" programs.

Merv needs Trainman to access mainframe (Trinity, power, etc), and suspects may be approached by Oracle, who he suspects is about and manipulating things. Into white halls, etc.

Zion sees this as an opportunity to get into the Machine mainframe, and they want to get Trinity back, too. Not as easy as they thought, though, and they find themselves blocked.

13.2 - 6/18/09
og network counter-attack
trainman brings oracle back into matrix oracle gets zion into machine mainframe

OG counter-attack Machines, sooner than expected, through the network and into the mainframe.

The Merv opens the way for the Trainman to get back into the Matrix, but once he's back, he brings the Oracle with him (Trainman's station construct).

Once back, the Oracle (or earlier w/ Seraph?) shows Zion a way into the Machine mainframe.

13.3 - 7/30/09
fighting in the mainframe zion gets h's coords from mainframe, epn off to h's machines beating off og mainframe infiltration

Oligarch/Machine/Zion(/Merv?) fighting in the mainframe. Zion manages to get data on Oligarch locations, including H's domain. Trinity makes contact through the network, but she's confined at H's in Real (Persephone could serve as point for Mervs here). EPN sets off for H's to free her. Machines are having success against the og routines in the mainframe.

14.1 - 9/10/09

ogs in the Matrix, Machine city sky whiteout(?)
epn releases trinity into network battle in mainframe approaching source (gold hallways) machines can't remove og root control

Oligarchs arrive at Machine city, jack into Matrix; overrides white out the simulation's sky. Civilian casualties. Machines losing power. Fighting in the mainframe is approaching the source. Machines having control problems; they can't remove the root control (said by Oracle?). EPN finds most of H's defenses down, frees Trinity into network.

14.2 - 10/22/09

ogs shutting down pods
sunsets getting longer - sati trying to fight it
--vs human subconscious
--Matrix is more than just Machine code--runs on and is in large part shaped by manipulated human brains
--will take a human to free it trinity into source machines let human (player) in player + trinity MERGE --> black room ACTIVATE --> white room RETURN --> Matrix (reset scheduled)

14.3 - 12/3/09

-oligarch control removed
-Machines freed from fear of oligarch interference
-new humans are raised in new Matrix where they can shape their own surroundings, cared for by Machines
-old humans remain in old Matrix

Detailed story and event plans

5.2 will be the first concrete attempt at advancing the story simultaneously through events as well as through critical missions. I've tried to leave the connections between the missions and the events rather vague, to give us a good deal of flexibility in the design of the specific events connected to the missions.

For the most part, the mission/event relationships here involve 4 Anome vial-swigging bosses: A (m), B (f), C (f), D (m). I don't want to give their names ahead of time, since those could potentially leak as spoilers. Besides being admin-buffed as usual, they will have abilities that are essentially tweaked versions of the Assassin's abilities: a single-target zap, an AOE that hits for a percentage of the target's max HP, and a version of the ever-popular "meatwad."

New Anome mission/threat NPCs are introduced. They are labelled "Unlimit" NPCs, but I don't call them by that name specifically in mission text, because the 5.3 cinematic will feature Anome actually declaring the name Unlimit--kind of awkward, I know.

Since Cypherites and EPN don't have missions of their own, they don't have specific "required events" in the schedule below. However, I think that they could head up most of the Machine (Cypherites) or Zion (EPN) events described below, if they wanted to, and we could work out some RP way in which the information found is shared with the related org.

7/13

5.2 cinematic: flashback of Unlimit fighting at Aqueduct; Niobe trapped and dazed in construct

Crit 5.2.1:

Zion - Effectuator is getting network interference while trying to track down Niobe. The player finds that it's a new bunch of tough NPCs, apparently working for Anome.

Merv - Someone is slowing down the search for Niobe's prison construct by blocking network ports. Player investigates and links the interference to Anome's goons and a hacker named "A."

Mach - Investigating the nature of the new NPC threat. They work for Anome, and appear to have a code signature showing similarities to the stolen "cheat codes," but with data corruptions.

7/13-7/19

[Because it is not too unlikely that the patch could slip a few days, we might not want to schedule the below events before 7/15.]

Required Events:

Zion - Defend "network hubs" from Anome's goons

Merv - Recover "data" that will lead to one of A's computer centers in the next crit

Mach - Fighting Anome's goons, somehow obtain a name: "B"

7/20

Crit 5.2.2:

Zion - Isolate the code signature of Anome's enhanced soldiers. Signature is similar to the cheat codes; the Effectuator's research also indicates that a cheat code was used to create Niobe's imprisoning construct.

Merv - Tracking "A." Indications that hardline junction boxes are involved in the network trouble. Obtain data from Anome's people with "a list of locations."

Mach - Tracking "B." Indications that those who have ingested the cheat codes obtain immense power, but it changes their RSI code to such an extent that they can no longer jack out. "B" is elated by power, however, and past caring about the mundanity of the real world. One of B's old friends is trying to arrange a meeting with her somewhere in Lemone.

7/20-7/26

Required Events:

Zion - Anome sighting.

Merv - Taking out "A," who confesses that they are indeed targeting hardline junctions.

Mach - Hunt down "B," probably starting in Lemone.

7/27

Crit 5.2.3:

Zion - Recapturing and repairing hardline junction boxes. But at the end, there's one left that's proving problematic.

Merv - Anome leader "C" is distributing a virus that allows her to send Anome's soldiers through computer and phone lines directly into sensitive areas, including bluepill businesses, and the Effectuator's operating centers. By the end of the mission, you learn C's name, and obtain a "list of bluepill targets."

Mach - Data collecting on the code signatures of Anome's soldiers. Indications are that most of the soldiers you encounter did not actually ingest cheat codes, but appear to have been exposed to them in diluted form. The codes are also having unexpected effects, and seem to have been altered from their original codebase. Hint that hardline junction boxes are involved in Anome's operations.

7/27-8/2

Required Events:

Zion - Obtain data pertaining to the last hardline junction box (Effectuator reveals in the next crit that it's a list of Anome's operatives who were involved in its sabotage).

Merv - Track down and eliminate "C."

Mach - Protecting hardlines from Anome's men; players hear of name "D" as directing the attacks

8/3

Crit 5.2.4:

Zion - Finding and fixing the final hardline junction box.

Merv - The junction boxes are clear, but Anome's goons are attacking the remaining network hubs. Clear them out.

Mach - Tracking "D," the players put pressure on one of D's crewmembers. Turns out that D was a Machine operative who went over to Anome's side. His crewmate reveals their hovercraft coords to the player, and the Machines destroy the hovercraft. But although his body in the real world has been destroyed, D's RSI remains active inside the simulation.

8/3-8/9

Required Events:

Zion - Retrieve Niobe from the Ueno building.

Merv - Meet with Niobe (this occurs after the Zion event).

Mach - Terminate D's RSI.

8/10

Crit 5.2.5:

Zion - Wrap-up with Effectuator, Ghost, and Niobe. Niobe declares her determination to see Anome's threat ended.

Merv - The Merv is very interested in the mutagenic effects shown by the cheat codes. He has the player track down an empty, discarded cheat code vial, in which some residual code remains...

Mach - Investigation of the cheat codes and their altered effects. Various speculations: Anome may have obtained 39 vials total; Antlia may have ingested a vial; the codes seem to have mutated since Niobe consumed one; Anome may be hatching some scheme against bluepills citywide

5.3 is currently scheduled to start on August 17th.

8/24

5.3 Cinematic: Anome distributing vials to followers, "Unlimit" name officially announced

Crit 5.3.1:

Zion: Pendhurst-Amaranth's representative Brenda Utley contacts Zion about helping them put a stop to a series of mysterious incidents at their plants that have been hampering production of their popular consumer products, including "Tastee Wheat." The player investigates, and finds that Unlimit is up to no good at a PA facility.

Mach: Uncover Anome plot to tamper with Aqueduct control facilities in Tabor Park. Romantic suspected between the Unlimit coordinating the attacks and a certain Zion operative.

Merv: Merv scientists synthesized their own cheat codes based off the residue recovered from one of the vials, but testing on Exile and redpill subjects yields disappointing results: no effect was seen on the Exile, and the human was reduced to a sort of feral state, but with no exceptional powers.

8/24-8/30

Required Events:

Zion: Unlimit attacking warehouses

Mach: Somehow get the name of Unlimit boss "G" behind the Aqueduct control attacks. (As will mostly be found out in the crits, G was dramatically saved from death and awoken by this certain Zion operative. She fell in love with him, but he was already involved with another woman, and rebuffed G's advances. G became obsessed with winning him over, and as this failed, gradually obsessed with killing him.)

Merv: Fighting a gang the Merv has tested the synthesized codes on? (Do we have redpill gangs? If not, for some reason it works on this Exile gang when it didn't work on the Merv Exile in the crit?)

8/31

Crit 5.3.2:

Zion: More investigating for Brenda: food supplies at PA warehouses are being poisoned. No direct Unlimit connection found.

Mach: Meet G's Zionite connection. Leads to information on the saboteurs, and their attack is foiled.

Merv: The Merv decides that they'll need to capture a live Unlimit boss (someone who drank a vial). After hacking into an Unlimit mail server, the player finds out about "I," an Unlimit commander who appears to have an obsession with Persephone.

8/31-9/6

Required Events:

Zion: Unlimit boss "F" at P-A Southard plant (steals floorplans for certain warehouses). "F" admires the "purity" of energy, and is disgusted by food "slop" and the sweaty, dirty nature of human existence.

Mach: G, low on manpower, is tracked down and eliminated.

Merv: trying to find "I" (or tracking to find where he hangs out)

9/7

Crit 5.3.3:

Zion: Foil a food poisoning attempt at a PA warehouse by Unlimit.

Mach: Unlimit are attacking power stations, causing blackouts throughout the city. The player foils one such attack, and helps protect civilians from fires and looting in the blackout-affected areas.

Merv: The Merv decides to use Persephone as bait to capture "I." Persephone requires a certain amount of convincing.

9/7-9/13

Required Events:

Zion: "F" found and defeated at PA's DT HQ. "E" spotted nearby.

Mach: attack at power station, "H" mentioned as being involved in directing the attacks Merv: Persephone as bait to trap "I," doesn't quite work. "I" doesn't actually encounter Persephone here.

9/14

Crit 5.3.4:

Zion: Tampering of PA's "Aqua Gulp" bottled water products investigated, linked to "E." Name of bluepill (E's stool pigeon) found.

Mach: "H" is an ex-Zionite who suffered from extreme paranoia. The player tracks H down, discovers that H thinks the Assassin is out to kill them for "stealing his powers," and uses this knowledge to push H to the brink of insanity.

Merv: "I" almost caught again, but panics and flees when he sees Persephone in the flesh.

9/14-9/20

Required Events:

Zion: E in Bathory Row, found through stool pigeon. "E" is an ex-Zionite who talks with a California surfer accent/dialect, and who views Zion as tragically stuck-up. Many of E's friends have died while on Zion operations.

Mach: Take out H, preferably by manipulating them to suicide.

Merv: "I" can't keep away from Persephone, this time he's caught.

9/21

Crit 5.3.5:

Zion: Brenda alerts player to plot to tamper with city's water supply. Player investigates. Sudden and mysterious disappearance of Brenda. Player attacked by PA security when tracks down Brenda's cell phone.

Mach: A city-wide hunt for Anome ends up going awry. The Machines decide that they must begin work on an Anome kill-code.

Merv: Some trouble getting fluid samples from "I," eventual success with Persephone's help (no, not like that :p). Analysis and decompilation of corrupt Unlimit code begins.

Chapter 6.1 is scheduled to being on 9/28 (5.3 is a shortened, five-week subchapter, because 5.2 got us a week behind Walrus' schedule :p).

10/5

6.1 Cinematic: Anome's follower Caboclo dissents about killing bluepills, mentions Anome's tragic bluepill life. Anome blasts him to pieces. Elsewhere, Sati makes a sunset from the balcony of the Oracle's apartment while a commando spies on her through high-powered binoculars.

Crit 6.1.1:

Zion: Tracking contacts from Brenda's cell phone. Initial contacts haven't seen her in a while, some suggest perhaps she went on vacation. One mentions a message from the board saying some top Marketing positions had been reassigned. Overhear suspicious conversation about "her" and some kind of directive "straight from" the Pendhurst-Amaranth (aka "P-A") "head branch office." [It's hard to fit into a summary like this, but as the Zion crits continue with much snooping and investigating around Pendhurst-Amaranth offices, there will be many overheard conversations and hacked computer messages chronicling the ongoing, significant, and aggressive change in corporate direction at P-A, including expanding into and monopolizing new markets, investigating the financial benefits of perpetual martial law, cutting research positions and increasing security and marketing, etc, etc, corruption of politicians, lucrative government contracts, even defense contracts. If you want to tie into specifics of this type for any of the events, I can dig up more details from specific crits.]

Mach: Machines need an Anome kill code, but must find some relevant code to base it on. Internet spiders detect a cryptic bulletin board post mentioning Caboclo. It is traced to an Unlimit, Meillak, an old crew member of Caboclo's in Zion. He appears to be trying to pass on the results of Caboclo's research into Anome's bluepill past. The operatives recover Caboclo Message 1, which reveals that Anome's mother didn't thought the Matrix, and everyone in it, was unreal—including her son, who she abused. [The Machines retrieve one of these story items in each 6.1 crit. Their text was written by Paul.]

Merv: First batch of cheat code synthesized from Beirn is ready for testing. Give some to a Blackwood, kill rioting Blackwoods demanding the miracle drug for themselves, then check back on the test subject: he's now got female face and hands, and green dreadlocks. The operator is worried.

10/5-10/11

Required Events:

Zion: Players have to talk their way past security at the head P-A branch office. Once they get in, they discover that certain files are missing--possibly Brenda Utley's employment records.

Mach: Attempting to locate and interrogate Meillak. He can be spotted, but must escape before being caught. May use hacking methods to escape (see later Mach crit notes).

Merv: "Testing" another batch of the codes in some way. Lots of possibilities, simple ones including meatwadding the subjects, or slapping different RSIs on them.

10/12

Crit 6.1.2:

Zion: Break into P-A computer system and track who last accessed those files. It was done by a low-level clerk. File a fake case at their grievance office to get his supervisor's name. Hack their network again, find the supe's name, and notice that they are listed as working at P-A's Southard division.

Mach: A Merv coder program who was working on synthesizing cheat codes from Beirn is angry with the Merv for slighting his work with the corrupt code, and reveals to the Machines via a spy (and the operative) that the Mervs are working on a cheat code, and have an initial batch under guard. Machines follow the tip, but suddenly all Merv programs in the area, and the traitor, die, with no trace of a cheat code found; the Merv was on to them. Machines find another posted message about Caboclo, and retrieve Caboclo Message 2: Anome's mother continued intermittent abuse of her son, would shape up when threatened with losing custody of Anome by her husband and therapist, but then would go back to abusing him.

Merv: Another code batch, this time the lucky recipients are a power-hungry Chopper, and a Demon Army member who, along with his buddy who you have to kill, worships you like a salvation-bringing god. They get put under observation together, and when you go to check up on them, you find that they've switched aspects of their RSIs--the chopper now has the Demon Army build, facial tattoo, and legs/boots, and so forth.

10/12-10/18

Required Events:

Zion: Trying to investigate at P-A Southard, get in fight with guards. One named "(J)" transforms into an Unlimit, blasts a bunch of operatives, and escapes.

Mach: Raid the Mervs, destroy most of their cheat codes, and close the loophole allowing them to compile them.

Merv: Fight off the Machine attack on the codes; manage to save two of them.

10/19

Crit 6.1.3:

Zion: Snooping through P-A records for information on J. Electronic records have been deleted, have to dig up the hard copies in the archives. These refer to P-A security office records. At the security office, find which branch he reported to, go there, and retrieve a high-level security pass for P-A's Downtown HQ among his personal effects. It's becoming clear that Unlimit has infiltrated Pendhurst-Amaranth; to what extent is unknown.

Mach: Machines create a kill code based on captured Merv cheat codes, and inject it into the operative's RSI. Operative battles Unlimits, but no effect from the kill code is seen. Another bulletin board post leads to a simulacrum, to a trio of computers with auto-shutdown BIOS triggers: operative must decide which one to activate based on a few cryptic clues. If they pick the right one, they get Caboclo Message 3: Anome's mother jumped from a bridge when he was six, trying to pull Anome with her, telling him it wasn't real, and that she was going to a real place. Orphaned into the social welfare system, Anome, full of his mother's talk of the unreality of the world, was found and awoken by a Zionite.

Merv: The Merv decides to use the RSI-sucking ability of the codes to bring back the Twins, who've apparently been floating about in pieces in the stratosphere since Reloaded. He executes one of the codes, and Twin body part fragments start showing up. You snatch the feet and legs from some Machines who had just found them, take them to the Effectuator, and he combines them into a walking pair of legs. It's a start.

10/19-10/25

Required Events:

Zion: J encountered and taken care of at P-A DT HQ. "J" is a sadistic punk on a real power kick. At some point, we need some sort of fairly definite indication that Brenda is being held at the DT HQ to appear.

Mach: The Machines determine that the only way to get a basis for a Anome kill code is to get a code sample directly from the man himself. Anome, on some business in the city, is found, and operatives must goad him into interlocking them so they can get close enough to get a tissue sample from him.

Merv: The legs help lead operatives to two hands, probably in the possession of some opportunistic treasure-hunter.

10/26

Crit 6.1.4:

Zion: Trying to get a working P-A DT HQ security pass based off of J's cancelled one--there's a bluepill who can make a working copy, but he requires updated data from the P-A employee database. Break in, get the data, return to the bluepill, but then hit by an Unlimit ambush that kills the blue, showing that Unlimit is at least monitoring secure P-A networks. Backup plan: hack employee database, replace J's deleted record, should reactivate his old security pass. Pose as an IT worker and get P-A's clerk away from their desk by claiming to have to run a virus scan. Hack is successful and the pass is reactivated.

Mach: Anome kill code engineering begins, requiring significant System resources; since it will be so costly, the Machines must make sure that they can deliver it to the target reliably, so they don't have to compile another one. Suspecting Caboclo's research is leading to something, they pursue another bulletin board post to a simulacrum, who is ambushed and terminated by Unlimit: Unlimit has found out what Meillak was up to. Meillak, running out of time, leaves messages via a hacked level 255 Agent, and hacked SWAT programs, resulting in bluepill casualties. Persevering, the operative finds Caboclo Message 4: Young Anome thought he would find mom in Zion. Grew up, buried the trauma, but now it's coming out due to the liberating effects of the cheat codes; he's getting back at bluepillers for what his mother did to him.

Merv: Secure the head and torso from a gang of Mockingbird's Crushers. With the hands, the Effectuator combines these into a floating Twin upper body. You lead this half to the leg half, who was being uncooperative, but who is excited to "see" the upper body. Lead them both back to the Effectuator, who combines them together into one whole Twin (the halves remain there afterwards as inert, empty shells). The Merv uses the last remaining cheat code. Twin halves being led around the city should help spice up Halloween...

10/26-11/1

Required Events:

Zion: Use the security pass to get into P-A DT HQ and rescue Brenda. She drops some mention of suspecting that this all comes from someone on P-A's board of directors.

Mach: Meillak hadn't counted on secure redundant system in the Agent he hacked; his hack origin was traced. Machines use this to locate him, but he flees, and is killed by Unlimit. His dying message is a single word.

Merv: The single complete Twin helps hunt down his brother's legs and feet, no doubt in the possession of some unscrupulous scrounger.

11/2

Crit 6.1.5:

Zion: Brenda says this all comes from an Unlimit mole in control of the P-A board. Hunting for the mole via an unwilling informant pointed out by Brenda, who sees the light after being threatened with having his stock option revoked, the player comes across some clues to their identity, then crashes a board meeting and must rub out the mole before Unlimit forces flood the area--but which board member is it?!? OMGz!

Mach: Another bulletin board post, but a red herring. Trace the network origin, find Meillak's base; cryptic messages, mysterious cyphers, a hacked level 100 Anome Simulacrum follower, Unlimit on the hunt, eventually come across a message from Meillak, who anticipated and accepted his demise, and Caboclo Message 5, which reveals where Anome can be found, and that Caboclo, writing this after his mangling at the hands of Anome, wanted release from his pain.

Merv: The Twin is ailing without his brother around. You find the two hands, but they're inert--as if they've already been copied into a larger shell--and indeed they have, by Silver, no less. Silver is uncooperative until the full Twin shows up and points out that Silver is breaking the terms of their old agreement. The player leads the collected upper body back to the lower body, where they are combined into the other full twin for a strange reunion of multiple Twins and Effectuators.

11/16

6.2 Cinematic: Anome is killed: shot between the eyes (with the kill code, we presume) on the Creston Heights building by an Agent posing as his mother.

Crit 6.2.1:

Zion: The Machines want to meet. Ghost meets with Pace to arrange a full meeting later. Pace says that what the Machines want to talk about is access to the Zion mainframe, so that they can use their data-processing capabilities to detect threats that could arise from Zion's population (such as EPN, Unlimit, etc) before they turn into a real problem. Ghost is worried.

Mach: The Machines want to meet. Mirror of the Ghost/Pace meeting above. The player also has to take out a few remaining Unlimit, and Gray mentions that they will wither and die without the presence of the cheat codes.

Merv: Profits are down in Richland, and the Merv wants to know why. Flood has heard that the Bag Lady was dropping hints lately, and sends you to talk to her. She says that she's heard the Elements are up to something, and suggests checking up on Silver. With the Twins' help, you track down Silver again, and he says his spies show Mercury is behind it.

11/16-11/22

Required Events:

Zion: Ghost and Pace meet again to discuss the Machine agenda. There is subtext in these missions about Pace being a little fascinated with the reticent Ghost, and Ghost being wary of a sex-bomb Agent (he was happier when they all looked like tax collectors).

Mach: Another Ghost/Pace meeting; here they discuss Anome--origins, ramifications, etc.

Merv: Trail a worker from Mercury's building in Uriah to the Tabor Park subway.

11/23

Crit 6.2.2:

Zion: Full Zion/Machine meeting with Gray, Pace, Niobe, Ghost. Niobe has a counter-demand: access to the Machine databases for access keys, bluepill information, surveillance scans, and police records (would have been useful against P-A, for instance). Gray stalls.

Mach: Mirror of the Gray/Pace/Niobe/Ghost meeting, although first Gray has you hang with some Zionites (as a Zionite) to get impressions on their take on the Machine request (not favorable). After the meeting, Gray says he's sent Zion's counter-demand up the chain, although he has his doubts about it.

Merv: With the Twins, confront Mercury. He says his men are just using the subway to get parts for his inventions, and says that you should be checking up on Thallia, seeing as the Blackwoods have been mugging everyone in Magog lately. Investigating, the player finds a message that seems to be about a meeting of Blackwoods in Magog, but it goes nowhere. Confronted again, Mercury says he'll help get real dirt on Thallia, and will set something up with Flood.

11/23-11/29

Required Events:

Zion: Niobe meets Brenda Utley. Brenda is now on the P-A board, and is well on the way to leading the company back into the public's good graces, and greater-than-ever profitability...and power.

Mach: Gray talks to the Architect about the Zion counter-demand. The Architect says no--it isn't as though Zion has much choice.

Merv: Mercury sets up "proof" of Thallia's involvement when suspicious Blackwood forces are rounded up in Magog.

11/30

Crit 6.2.3:

Zion: Shimada shows up, meets with Ghost. EPN says they can provide the Machine database information that Zion wants; all they want in return is safe passage for EPN hovercraft through Zion "tunnelspace." As proof, they get you access to what seems to be a Machine database, where information is retrieved that appears to show that the Sentinel task force on permanent standby for an invasion of Zion is now more than twice as big as the force that attacked Zion's dock at the end of the war.

Mach: Veil tells Pace that the Cypherites can get information from Zion's mainframe. They lead you to a computer center where you are able to access simulacra of Morpheus and Niobe, with dialog (voice clips) you haven't heard before, but which sound genuine: Morpheus talking about the Machines hiding something about Neo, and Niobe saying she'll be damned if she'll see Morpheus' work ruined because the Council is scared of the Machines, and congratulating someone on killing the Assassin. However, pesky EPNs put a damper on the fun. Gray feels the Cypherites may have access to useful data, but worries that their susceptibility to EPN attacks could make them a liability.

Merv: It takes some doing, but you manage to get the Twins' hands on Thallia, who promptly blames the whole thing on Mercury and Raini, saying that both subway lines out of Tabor lead to Raini's neighborhood of Apollyon, and adds that Mercury has never got over Raini, even though she dumped him a long time ago. Mercury calls Thallia a liar, and defends Raini vigorously. Flood is suspicious.

11/30-12/6

Required Events:

Zion: Ghost and Shimada meet and discuss or work on Zion/EPN cooperation.

Mach: Pace and Veil meet and discuss or work on Machine/CYPH cooperation.

Merv: While spying on Raini and/or the 5 Points gang, the players are ambushed by commandos.

12/7

Crit 6.2.4:

Zion: The player meets the Kid, who is going to provide Zion with access to another Machine database as a show of EPN's capabilities. However, Cypherites interfere, and apparently delete whatever information the database had contained.

Mach: The player meets Cryptos, who reveals that EPN claim to be using "Code Pulse Devices" to mine data out of the simulation. Cryptos gives the player a tip on where more info about these devices can be obtained, and, after thrashing a bunch of EPNs, the player manages to capture code that compiles into one of the devices. Gray confirms that the device is probably capable of getting EPN access to privileged Machine data. (Cryptos' exact description was: "it looks like a small, timed bomb. When it detonates, it sends out a pulse of customized code that permeates the locality, and sends back data to certain receivers. They seem to believe that they can use these devices to wrest specific data out of the simulation.")

Merv: Flood sends you after Raini, but her network's OS is so old that the hacks you'd use to trace her through it aren't compatible. He resorts to paying Nicky G. for information; Nicky is able to hook you up with the location of Raini's latest party. You and the Twins confront Raini, threatening her with telling the Effectuator where she is if she doesn't cooperate. Raini says that Thallia and Mercury have been "running distractions with the Blackwoods in Mara." Flood sends in the Effectuator anyway as punishment; Effy immediately starts hitting on her and telling her everything he's been up to since he last saw her--ie, since she finally ditched him the last time. Malphas declares that some torture of Mara Blackwoods should clear things up.

12/7-12/13

Required Events:

Zion: Niobe and the Kid, two exciting people who were made for each other, come face to face for some kind of meeting or operation.

Mach: Gray and Cryptos together for some kind of shindig.

Merv: Interrogate Blackwoods in Mara. This leads to the revelation that Anti M. is behind it.

12/14

Crit 6.2.5:

Zion: Ghost/Niobe/Gray/Pace meeting round 2 to discuss Zion's counter-demand, although the player has to rub out a few Cypherites sniffing about first. Gray says that Zion has no choice but to meet the Machine demand in order to preserve the Truce, as otherwise threats to the entire System will continue to spawn from Zion's unmonitored population. He points out that Zion would surely lose a renewed war against the Machines. Niobe says that Zion is keeping its part of the truce agreement, and they expect the Machines to do the same. This stonewalls Gray. Afterwards, Niobe says that while Zion won't get the information they wanted from the Machines, getting it from EPN might be too costly. Ghost says the Machines have apparently decided that Zion is a threat, and that while the Machines can probably be trusted to stick to the terms of the truce, "the honeymoon is over."

Mach: Mirror of Ghost/Niobe/Gray/Pace round 2. After the meeting, Cryptos calls for help against a large-scale EPN attack, giving the Machines information on where the EPN group can be found. The EPN group is wiped out by the Machines, and a Code Pulse Device is found, but not anything that would indicate the imminent attack Cryptos claimed. Gray asks the player to bring him the Device immediately, and the player finds Gray in a meeting with the Architect; as they enter the room packed with Agents, they hear the Architect ordering increased surveillance of Zionites in the Matrix, and covert infiltration of the caves by human operatives.

Merv: Anti M. proves difficult to locate. Flood has the Twins beat information out of Mercury; all Mercury can tell you is that his contact with Anti M. was only through Thallia. Thallia is confronted, and hooks you up with the location of Anti M.'s "good friend," Beryl. After threatening Beryl with revealing the affair she's having with Anti M. to her boyfriend, Argon, Beryl gives Anti M.'s location, on condition that M. won't be hurt. M. is found, and says it was strictly business; she was hired to organize Blackwood operations in Mara that would distract any operatives watching the area; she wasn't told why this was important. Who hired her? He called himself the General.

~~~~~

As usual, the dates above may be subject to change, but that's the schedule we're shooting for. The winter holiday event will probably hit somewhere in mid-December. Due to various real-world holiday happenings, 6.3 will not be out until mid-January.

These dates are approximate, with one week of push-back. Could end up getting pushed back more...grr...

1/18

6.3 Cinematic: Sati abducted by commandos; Seraph falls in river; Agents dump the captured cheat code vials in river, one gets hung up on pier

Crit 6.3.1:

Zion: With Blackwood help, fight to get to the Oracle's apartment. Niobe gets there as well. The Oracle refuses to leave. Niobe declares that Zion's primary objective is to keep the Oracle safe by guarding her apartment; secondary objective is getting Sati back.

Mach: The player tracks the signal of the helicopter that took Sati, finding a wiped computer, then an active computer guarded by commandos. The signals indicate that the helicopter is being controlled remotely. The player plants a virus Pace gave them in the computer, which re-routes the helicopter to a Machine pad, where the Machines inspect it. No trace of Sati, or indication of where she might have been taken, is found. Gray says that it is likely that she has been taken out of the main Matrix simulation, and that the simulation could suffer detrimental effects if they don't get her back soon.

Merv: The Merv wants to make sure Seraph is really gone, so the player goes off to kill Blackwoods and bluepills in Mara, while fighting off Zion and Machine operatives. Seraph does not come to their rescue, and Flood starts to think that maybe Seraph really is gone.

1/18-1/24

Required Events:

Zion: fending off Exile attacks in Mara

Mach: hunting through pvp archives (find commandos in one of them)

Merv: mock funeral for Seraph in hel club

1/25

Crit 6.3.2:

Zion: Fight through Mervs in Mara and find the Oracle alone in her apartment. She says the Merovingian has already been there, and left after he found out that she'll need more convincing before she sees things his way. Oracle suggests tracking where the commandos have taken Sati. Player follows reported path of the helicopter and finds commandos, who shut down a computer before the player can get to it.

Mach: The player is sent to interrogate Exiles who might know something about Sati's abduction. First Owl Bangheart, who is back after the Merv got him, but pretty much a vegetable. Then Sister Margaret, who says that she knew nothing about it, other than that she's heard the Element family was involved. Thallia says the General only contacted Anti M. directly. Anti M. says the General sent her money and instructions, both of which she was unable to trace. She thinks that he isn't in the Matrix at all.

Merv: The Merv decides to confront the Oracle. The player carves a path through Zionite defenders. The Merv reaches gets to her apartment, but the Oracle refuses to cooperate. The Merv threatens that she will pay for her stubbornness. It is not explicitly stated what he asked for, but there are a fair number of hints (the mission title is "They Can Only Be Given," for instance :p). Malphas says that the Merovingian is determined to get what he wants from her by whatever means he can, but that is it very difficult to outmaneuver someone who can tell the future.

1/25-1/31

Required Events:

Zion: tracking helicopter movements

Mach: break into and search Merv org area

Merv: super-sneaky spy mission: catch a glimpse of an Elite Commando

2/1

Crit 6.3.3:

Zion: By tracking helicopter patterns, the player locates several commando groups, and manages to plant a tracking virus in their computer before they can shut it down. This leads to another commando gathering point, where the player encounters an elite commando. The elite commando doesn't show up on the operator's screen at all (the operator thinks the player is making it up). Stuck, the player visits the Oracle, who says that the General is holed up, and that they need to come up with a way to lure him out.

Mach: The Machines decide they need to consult the Oracle about Sati. The Oracle says they have to look not for Sati, but for where she went. Gray says they should find out how the commandos are getting in and out of the Matrix. Hunting commandos, they find a shut down computer, then an active one, but it shuts down just as the player arrives, and then they get jumped by an elite commando who appears out of nowhere. Operator thinks the player is hallucinating. Gray says that the locations of these computers correlate with commando activity, and that they must have something to do with how commandos are getting in and out of the Matrix.

Merv: The Merv decides to get a "termination code" (that's what the Oracle called it in Enter the Matrix when telling Ghost/Niobe how Rama-Kandra betrayed her to the Merovingian in exchange for Sati's transport into the Matrix) for the Oracle's current shell. Malphas thinks the best place to start looking is certain Exiles who are known or suspected to have extra-Matrix contacts: the Bartender (has some kind of deal with Deus Ex Machina that established Club Noir as a "neutral zone"), Hypatia (has a large information library, plus rumored connections with the "Archivist Society"), and the Network (supposedly feeds media streams to the Architect). The player confronts them, but generally speaking they aren't interested in killing the Oracle, and don't know where to get a kill code for her anyway.

2/1-2/7

Required Events:

Zion: pressing the General's buttons

Mach: scan hot access point -- development of code to close access points

Merv: one last Exile contact attempt

2/8

Crit 6.3.4:

Zion: The player has attracted the General's attention enough to merit an ambush by elite commandos. The Oracle says that the General, an old military program, misses war, and took Sati to push the Matrix back into all-out war. She says that to get under his skin, you need to show him that it isn't working, and suggests having Niobe and Agent Gray have a nice big hug. That isn't...feasible, so an enthusiastic Pace and mortified Ghost are got together for a televised embrace as a backup plan. The player is supposed to meet Ghost afterwards, but this meeting is interrupted by an elite commando ambush, and a broadcast from the General, in hologram form, accusing Ghost of being a fool of the Machines, and warning him that the General is going to make him learn his lesson the hard way.

Mach: The player goes after the commando access points armed with a program that can shut them down. After shutting down a few, the player gets reinforcements from Pace, who casually remarks that the General has been trouble ever since he wouldn't stop attacking Zion's dock at the end of the war. They had to remove him from command, and gave him another one afterwards, but he took his Sentinels into Exile, and this was before they were equipped with override triggers, so he's been able to use them for his own purposes. The player shuts down another access point, and Gray says that this will make it harder for the General to move his forces around inside the Matrix.

Merv: The Merv decides to try making a deal with the General for an Oracle kill code, since the General seems to get around pretty well, and obviously isn't friends with the Oracle. The Merv also says that he can give the General just what the General needs, without saying exactly what that is. The player goes after commandos, and finds some shut down computers (access points), as well as a nasty elite commando ambush, which Flood accuses the player of having made up as an excuse.

2/8-2/14

Required Events:

Zion: the General and Elite Commandos picking off operatives defending the Oracle

Mach: track Elite Commando access point - scan - development of access point hack

Merv: Elite Commandos, El Generale--not listening yet

2/15

Crit 6.3.5:

Zion: The General attacks the Oracle's apartment and, in a hologram broadcast, wonders if she's told them about him yet, and says that he's going to put an end to the lies of the Matrix. Niobe is among the Zionites rushing to rescue the Oracle, and the General then ambushes her, his hologram broadcast accusing her of betraying him to the Machines, and tauntingly telling her to jack out before the System crashes, so that he can hunt her through the tunnels "again." The player then gets lured into a third hologram broadcast addressed to them, where the General reveals that he led the Sentinal attack on Zion at the end of the war, that the Machines stripped him of his command when he refused to accept the truce, and that he's been trying to restart the war ever since. Niobe says he's due for another ***-kicking, and the Oracle warns that it's going to be messy, and that he won't give up Sati willingly.

Mach: The player plants a special tracking virus in a commando access point. After some help from the player in stopping commandos who are trying to purge the virus, the virus succeeds in locating the General's Sentinel staging ground on the Earth's surface. The player also retrieves some data about the staging area's code name and strength level. The Machines dispatch an auxiliary contingent of the Sentinels watching Zion to attack the General's base, mentioning that the Sentinels will resume pursuit of terrorist hovercraft after the Exile is taken care of. There are also some reports from Machine spies in Zion, whose infiltration is proceeding apace, except that they're having trouble finding out where a lot of Zion heavy machinery has been going recently, and that they're finding that many freeborn Zionites refuse to trust anyone with jacks (or is it plugs? oh well).

Merv: The Merovingian decides to get the General's attention by sending Persephone to one of the access points, knowing that the General watches these systems, and that he has in the past had Persephone under surveillance (that old Live Event post I did with one of the General's probes following Persephone into the Hel Club before it lost its signal). Persephone acts indignant in being used in this way, but eventually decides to cooperate because she thinks the General may have his uses. The player meets Persephone and the Twins at an access point. An elite commando appears, and Persephone hands the player a letter to give to the commando. Shortly thereafter, the General via hologram broadcast says that a deal may be possible (again without saying exactly what was offered); he'll get back to the Merv, and in the mean time declares a cease-fire with the Merovingian's Exiles. Flood is indignant at being kept waiting.

3/8

7.1 Cinematic: Seraph climbs out of the river, thrashes and "exorcises" a redpill. He tells the two other redpills with her that they need not fear him, but that there are others "like her" who should.

World: The weather now has a distinct yellow/orange cast to it, with fast-moving clouds and periods of relatively heavy rain.

Crit 7.1.1:

Zion: Trying to find Seraph, the player comes across a string of comatose bluepill and redpill bodies, and jumpy police (SWAT) on the case. Bluepill witnesses give vague descriptions of the attacker: "kung-fu outfit," "in white," "fled at high speed," "slimy," "hippy glasses," "strange hand motions," and reveal some characteristics about one of the victims (quiet, calm). Oracle is consulted and says that Seraph is key to getting Sati back, and that he's doing what he's doing (attacking these bluepills and redpills, she presumably means) for a reason.

Mach: Gray says that to stop the General and rescue Sati, they'll need a way to detect the General's Elite Commandos. The Machines have stored a copy of the holographic broadcast the General sent to Ghost (in 6.3's Zion mission "Steely Embrace"); he says that the broadcast came from outside the Matrix, probably from the General's base, "Stalingrad," and that although the Machines know its physical location, they want to find its network address. The player locates a commando access point, and plants "a variant of the Procurator virus," which obtains Stalingrad's network address. At the debrief with Pace, she demonstrates that the Machines can alter the General's recorded holographic broadcast, and says that they can now use the General's network, and his connection to his base, against him. A hackable computer has a report, in the same format as previous spy reports from Zion, about Davot's ship that was hijacked by Veil and sent to ram the Zion dock: Zion disabled it with another ship's EMP, but its impact with the tunnel wall near Zion, and its own EMP going off, short-circuited some of the dock's outlying system for a while, although there were no casualties.

Merv: Malphas and the Effectuator meet with a two-way holographic broadcast from the General, who gives them the network address of some of his men in need of transport. The player goes to activate the terminal to which the Effectuator will route the commandos, but Machines interfere. A backup terminal is used successfully, and a platoon of commandos appear. At a debrief, the General's hologram says the transport was satisfactory. Malphas says that the General will soon have to start fulfilling his side of the deal.

3/8-3/14

Required Events:

Zion: Chasing Seraph--players may catch up to him briefly, but he will not stop to interact with them.

Mach: Now that the Machines know the network address of Stalingrad, they force a transmission to the General in the Real, possibly ordering him to surrender; this irks the General, who replies in a 2-way holographic broadcast, threatening Gray with the destruction of the Machine Sentinel fleet in the Real.

Merv: The Merv meets with the General, who tells the Frenchman that to make an Oracle kill-code, they will first need a cheat code vial. The General gives the Mervs a tracking code that can locate cheat codes.

3/15

Crit 7.1.2:

Zion: The player researches a redpill who Seraph attacked: they are suffering from amnesia that starts at the same time in their past as an unexplained incident that resulted in a change in their behavior (according to acquaintances), and goes up to the point where they were attacked by Seraph. Their government file contains no record of the incident. Also, there is a reference to "Danielle Wright" by a bluepill, in connection with a new network interface system a bluepill company is working on. (It is not mentioned in the mission, but this is the "Wright" of the "Wright Research" company in Downtown, a brilliant ex-Zionite scientist who lost faith in Commander Lock's vision, and left to begin a business career in the Matrix, working with Silver, but still generally sympathetic toward Zion operatives. She is the inventor of the EJP. Wright's own dream is humans taking over the Matrix from the Machines.)

Mach: Pace explains that since they've mastered the commando network, they can now find access points just by scanning for them from any point on the network. The player does this to find an access point, and thus an Elite Commando. Along the way, they encounter a holographic transmission from the General to his men, telling them to hurry up: the Machines are shutting down too many "lines." Also, a Machine computer has some cryptic data about the Sentinel force sent against the General's base--basically that they haven't encountered any hostile units, and are slightly ahead of the projected schedule as they home in on "Stalingrad." A commando computer shows that Stalingrad has beefed up its defensive capabilities a bit since 6.3. Data is extracted from the Elite Commando; Pace says it will be used to help develop a code to disrupt their stealth function.

Merv: The tracking code has led to the Uriah wharf, where rumor has it that the Machines lost a cheat code vial while disposing of them in the Aqueduct. The player is sent in to track it down. After fruitlessly questioning bluepill workers, they visit Mercury, who says if anyone would know, it'd be the local gang, the Choppers. The Chopper leader Jack the Hack, after the player routs a few of this boys, says that the only thing he can think of is that there used to be a bluepill who hung out at the edge of the pier on his lunch breaks, but was recently seen running off suddenly, and hasn't been back. He gives a description of the guy, which Flood checks against their data, coming up with a name, Jason Hernandez. Visiting his nearby office, you find out that Jason Hernandez hasn't been at work in a few weeks, that he has tended to hang out with a club/casino crowd, and that he has sometimes gone to visit relatives in the International District.

3/15-3/21

Required Events:

Zion: Contact is made with Seraph, who this time is willing to talk, briefly, saying that a veil has been lifted from his eyes. (Also this week, there is a widely seen but not officially recorded Morpheus appearance in richland that I'll be doing solo.)

Mach: Use the "stealth disruptor" code the Machines have developed (this is all role-play, rather than an actual game tool/weapon) to capture an Elite Commando.

Merv: Locate Jason Hernandez, using his co-workers' clues from the 7.1.2 crit if desired. The cheat code vial is obtained from him.

3/22

Crit 7.1.3:

Zion: The player researches more Seraph victims, a bluepill and two redpills, finding that they all have similar memory gaps beginning with an unspecified behavior-changing incident in their past. The behavior was either aloof, cold, or somewhat confused; one requested extended sick leave in Zion. Another remembers having seen an Agent watching them as they patrolled back alleys for Slashers, one of their last memories before they awoke from Seraph's attack. The Oracle says Seraph is close to reaching his goal, but that it won't work out like he thinks it will. The Oracle's Zion guards speculate about the Morpheus sightings.

Mach: The player helps test the scanning routine developed to detect stealthed Elite Commandos. Gray explains that the scan requires a significant amount of power, so they can't run it all the time. After some tweaks and adjustments (the operator gets frustrated with the bugs in the Machine routine), the kinks are worked out, and the routine succeeds in allowing the operator to see the Elite Commandos on his screen. Along the way, the player comes across a holographic message from the General to his officer, telling the officer that the Machines may have a way to detect him, and that he should abort "the operation" immediately. Pace says that the "Morpheus" reported obviously can't be the dead Zion captain, but that they are looking into it very carefully.

Merv: The player uses Elite Commando assistance to foil Machine efforts to capture the cheat code vial from Merovingian labs, where it is under analysis. Malphas mentions that he thinks the Elite Commandos are capable of speech, but that baffle mechanisms built into their masks confine the sound of their voice to special closed-frequency transmitters. Various NPCs mention rumors of Machines working to defeat Commando stealth, Morpheus's possible return generating talk in the underworld, and Seraph back but not quite himself. Analysis of the cheat code shows that it is mutated even more than previous cheat code samples, and must be used quickly; it has been put in a "secure archive" for now. One of the Twins says that they haven't seen Seraph since he lost his wings, and that they're due for a "rematch." The General, in the flesh rather than by hologram, meets the Merovingian and says that they will need a program capable of crafting a kill code with the captured cheat code. This program is named The Apothecary, and the General does not know their current whereabouts.

3/22-3/28

Required Events:

Zion: Seraph is encountered again, a little more talkative. He doesn't explain what he's doing, but says that he's almost done. If the Mach event has already occurred, players could help him attack some overwritten blues/reds; otherwise, they might try to stop him, assuming that they can't be sure yet that he's attacking these people for a really good reason.

Mach: Cryptos, while out on some sort of field operation with the Cypherites, is found by Seraph, who attacks him, then performs an odd "exorcism" (Swirling Ki Summon?), crumpling Cryptos to the ground and ending the fight. Cryptos' RSI changes: his glasses, necklace, and mask are torn off, his cassock darkened, and his eyes blackened, with a golden code glaze. Seraph leaps away. Cryptos is left unable to walk, extremely disoriented, and apparently blind. He tries to talk, speaking haltingly but in his usual warm manner, before Machine error messages come out of his mouth. It is clear that a Machine program, now damaged by Seraph, has been in control of him. Veil is shocked and disgusted, and has him forcibly jacked out.

Merv: The General briefs operatives: The Apothecary was used by Rama-Kandra when he needed a kill-code for the Oracle previously. The General directs them to the White Lotus Hotel dungeon, where they are given an old code trace of The Apothecary by the Spinnerettes leader, the Black Widow (live admin version, non-hostile).

3/29

Crit 7.1.4:

Zion: Niobe is alarmed about Cryptos--and Seraph's other victims--being Machine sleeper agents, and orders a complete security audit for Zion. The player is called to assist against a widespread commando attack, but then the General boasts to them in a holographic recording that it was just a diversion. The Oracle is under attack in Mara. The player hurries there, and finds her, Seraph, and a bunch of dead commandos. Seraph explains that after climbing out of the Aqueduct, he found that he could see Machine programs in the minds of humans, and felt he had to remove them; now he is finished, and will protect the Oracle. The Oracle says Seraph will be all right.

Mach: Gray explains that Cryptos was overwritten years ago by a Machine program, whose purpose was to form a group that would help stem the increased tide of redpill awakenings made possible for Zion by the Truce. This group became known as the Cypherites. Pace and the player meet with Veil, trying to make sure that, in Cryptos' absence, the volatile Cypherite controller will continue to direct the organization in a way acceptable to the Machines. The player's operator is so upset over the revelation about the Cypherites that he can hardly form coherent sentences. At the meeting, Pace confides to the player that she isn't getting anywhere with Veil, and some of the Cypherites, jumping to the conclusion that she's conspiring to wipe them out, suddenly attack. Veil keeps her cool, saying simply, and very bitter-sweetly, that she sees how things are now; she then more or less dismisses the player and Pace. Gray says that as long as Veil stays within certain bounds, it's more efficient to leave her in charge than to try to replace her. The player is called away to quell a sudden Elite Commando attack. The operator badgers Gray into running the scan routine, and more Elite Commandos are found, with Merovingian Exiles. Gray says that the Commandos may have had Merovingian assistance in getting into the Matrix.

Merv: The code trace leads to Jade Moon gang members. Flood sends the player to the Jade Moon gang's overseer, Dame White. The Dame says that it's been "ages" since she saw The Apothecary, and that the player will have to ask Lo Ruhamah, in the Barrens. (Lo Ruhamah is the Pandora's Box collector stationed in the Abandoned Subway in Rogers Way; in the fourth box arc, she helps the player track down the Antediluvian, although it appears that she herself may have done some work for him.) The Dame hints that she, the Black Widow, The Apothecary, and Persephone were associates of some kind in the Dame's younger days. Flood sends the player to Persephone, who hands The Apothecary's code trace to the player, saying that a) Dame White "did what I used to do for humans in the pods," and is jealous of Persephone's relative youth and success, and b) Lo Ruhamah is an ancient, exiled monitoring program, still trying to carry out her old function, clinging to gathered information. The player takes the code trace to the south Barrens. There is a small puzzle here; when solved, the code trace is taken, and Lo Ruhamah appears, saying that The Apothecary is still used by the Machines, and that getting them from the Machine mainframes to the Matrix will require the Trainman, who "has retreated deeper into seclusion."

3/29-4/4

Required Events:

Zion: Morpheus appears in Richland and delivers a cryptic message to whoever is around to hear it--something about Neo being alive and held captive by the Machines; he does not move, or otherwise interact with anyone, and quickly jacks out after delivering the message.

Mach: The Machines attack commandos, but the attack is disrupted by Merovingians.

Merv: The Trainman, who does not actually appear in this event, is traced to the Abandoned Subway in Rogers Way, where he evidently has an interface with his private subway construct. Notice is left that the Merovingian requires his immediate presence. Tracing the Trainman should involve some sort of puzzle, ideally utilizing the subway system somehow.

4/5

Crit 7.1.5:

Zion: Seraph is found fighting Elite Commandos, and says that his odd new (temporary) vision allows him to sense the stealthed soldiers, and that the Oracle has told him he must pursue them, to rescue Sati. The operator gets a mysterious golden code beacon directing the player to more commandos--this is from Seraph, although that isn't stated conclusively in the mission. The beacon fades after the commandos are defeated, and the player goes to a scheduled meeting with Agent Pace. In a pre-meeting briefing, Ghost says that scans of the "Morpheus" RSI have been inconclusive--they can't tell where it's coming from, but it certainly isn't a regular redpill signal; there is a lot of corrupt data. Pace very briefly dismisses the idea that either Morpheus or Neo are alive and being held by the Machines, and says that the overwriting of humans was done to ensure the stability and safety of the System, and was not prohibited by the Truce. Tyndall worries that this explanation isn't going to sit well with many in Zion.

Mach: The Machines realize that they now have to move against the Merovingian. Data captured from a combined Merv/Commando force indicates activity at the Abandoned Subway in Rogers Way. In Barrens, the player finds Mervs, Elite Commandos, and Beirn, who snidely remarks that "he" has already reached the Lucero subway. Gray orders the player to retreat, saying Agents are being called in to deal with the ex-Unlimit officer. At a debrief, the player is told that: 1) the General is the main target, not the Merv, 2) Beirn was preserved by and now works for the Merovingian, and 3) although rumors of the Trainman have persisted, he has not been sighted since the beginning of the Truce; if he is returning to active duty, the Merv may be planning a critical program transfer. A Machine computer shows that their Sentinel force is closing in on Stalingrad. Also, a spy report from Zion says that the security review ordered by Zion's commanders prevents further investigation for the time being.

Merv: Malphas discloses that the Trainman, always paranoid and egomaniacal, retreated to his private subway construct when the Truce was made. The Merv got "his assistance in the Assassin affair," but after that, the Trainman vanished altogether. Malphas theorizes that the Trainman resents having been forced to release Neo when he had him captive in his subway station, and that the Trainman sees the Truce as evil, because he has a deep-seated fear that humans will one day destroy the Matrix. The Trainman emerges from the Abandoned

Subway, but his signal is immediately lost as a result of heavy Machine scan activity. Flood mentions that the Machines can now scan for Elite Commandos, and packs the player off to south Barrens, where they find a wounded but still sassy Beirn in a room with a couple dead Agents; this scene takes place just after the Beirn encounter in the Machine crit. Beirn says the Trainman made it out through the Lucero subway, and the operator has Flood scan the rest of the city for him. He's found hiding among dead Crossbones in Moriah, and angrily demands to see the Merovingian immediately. You catch up to Malphas, the Merv, and Ookami, with the Trainman in a secure room next door. Malphas says that the Trainman is more unstable than ever, and will have to be watched carefully. Malphas also describes Seraph's encounter with Cryptos. The Merv congratulates the operative, then rants about the persistence of Morpheus rumors. Ookami says that the Trainman is afraid, and can't be trusted. The Trainman is annoyed at the player nosing after him, says he knows what he's needed for, shows paranoia about the possibility of capture by the Machines, and curses the Merovingian for breaking their "deal" in which "the fly man was supposed to be the last."

4/19

7.2 Cinematic: Heavy firepower destroys the initial wave of Machine Sentinels reaching the General's "Stalingrad" base.

World: The sky goes from a yellow/orange to more of a red.

Crit 7.2.1:

Zion: Ghost tells the player to give Seraph whatever assistance they can in order to locate Sati. Meet Seraph and the Oracle, then go commando hunting with Seraph. However, he finds that the "impression" of Sati he can read from them indicates that they have not been near her recently. A Zion guard hints at "big stuff going on back home."

Mach: The player fights off commandos, runs a search on one of their terminals, gets reinforcements from Pace, then whups commandos defending a command terminal and runs an "override script" giving the Machines control over the General's helicopter fleet. Gray says that for the time being it will be more efficient to leave them following their regular movement patterns, but no longer transporting things for the General. He invites the player to back him up at a meeting with Veil, where he wants to direct her to follow System requirements, but she stalls, saying she'll need time to get the other Cypherites to cooperate. Afterwards, Gray says that although the Cyphs have some conveniently placed spies, the security alert in Zion, and Veil's reluctance to share information, have reduced the info the Machines are getting from them to a mere trickle, and that they may have to consider "liquidating our investment in the group" if the situation can't be improved.

Merv: Malphas says that although difficulties arose between them, the Apothecary still owes Persephone a favor. The player gets a letter calling in said favor from Persephone, who while handing it over makes it clear that the favor is now owed her by her husband. The player delivers the letter to a dismissive Trainman, then confirms delivery with the Merv, who chuckles about Persephone's manipulations, and about the Apothecary's lack of a sense of humor.

4/19-4/25

Required Events:

Zion: Morpheus encountered; speaks somewhat more at length and excitedly about recovering Neo, etc

Mach: recuperating Cryptos encountered: can see only code, bitter against the Machines

Merv: Trainman brings the Apothecary into the Matrix, probably with Machines in hot pursuit

4/26

Crit 7.2.2:

Zion: Seraph wants to try commando hunting again. After thrashing a batch of them, he senses something nearby. Tyndall confirms Nabonidus beacon signal activity in the area. The player follows Seraph's gold code signal and finds a static-covered "Morpheus Signal" that looks like Morpheus, and says a couple things about returning Neo to Zion. Tyndall says that they've finally been able to get a clear reading, and should be able to pinpoint the signal quickly whenever it reappears.

Mach: Again beating up commandos and exploiting their network, this time with the aim of hacking the closed radio channels the Elite Commandos rely upon for communication (via muffled speakers in their masks). A perky backup-supplying Pace mentions that although the Cypherite situation hasn't improved, it hasn't gotten worse, either, and that she thinks they'll work things out. The Machines execute their Elite Commando communication disruption routine, and the player finds a bunch of them who don't support each other effectively, and are easily stomped. Gray disses the General's network security.

Merv: A fascinated Flood introduces the player to the Apothecary, who bluntly demands a sample of the target's code. The operator suspects that the Apothecary will kill them all. Malphas says that fortunately the General has Sati, who the Oracle has spent years stuffing with handcrafted code in the form of cookies, for reasons unknown. and that they can get a code sample from her. The General says this has to be done quickly, and that his own men will handle the code extraction. They bar the player from seeing Sati, although it's possible that some may catch a glimpse of her two rooms away, depending on mission area configuration. A blood-drinker says that they won't tolerate the "Ward" remaining in the General's grip much longer. The player delivers the extracted code to the Apothecary. Malphas, supervising, admires the Apothecary's expertise and artistry, suggesting that the player make a study of the "Ars Moriendi." Flood comes close to waxing poetic over her.

4/26-5/2

Required Events:

Zion: Discussion with the Oracle and Seraph about life, the Matrix, and Sati

Mach: hacking the General's hologram

Merv: Merv wants to test preliminary Oracle kill-code concoction; General (hologram) suggests Agent Pace as target; player hits Pace with Oracle kill-code derivative; Pace collapses, is removed by Gray

5/3

Crit 7.2.3:

Zion: Seraph has sensed Sati's recent appearance in the city. He and the player follow his perception of her signal through a bunch of Elite Commandos to a Merovingian hideout, but the path ends there. The operator is shocked at one of the Mervs mentioning a kill-code hit on Pace, looks into it, and says that it didn't kill her, but put her "out of commission." Tyndall explains that since Seraph has come back, the Oracle has allowed Zion to keep her under guard at locations outside of Mara, since the Debir apartment had become too hot a target. Consulted, the Oracle says that they'll need Sati back in the Matrix in order to rescue her, and that the Machines will have a hand in forcing the General back into the simulation.

Mach: Gray says that an analysis of the code used in the attack on Pace corresponds to code found in the cookies she sometimes gives to redpills, and sends the player to gank a Merv and steal their cookie. Lab techs babble about the sophistication of the code in the cookies. One mentions that Pace is an experimental program, and that the source of some of her core routines is highly classified. Gray says the code also bears the hallmarks of the Apothecary, a kill-code manufacturer recently stolen by the Merv. He sends you to question Dame White, known to have some past history with Persephone and the Apothecary; the Apothecary was exiled once too, but the Machines took her back. The Dame (hm I forgot to include her usual two weird bodyguards, oh well, maybe they're off playing chess) drops a very dense bit of dialogue, including: 1) Persephone was her apprentice, 2) emotions were involved in their job at the pods, 3) contrary to regulations, outsiders sometimes got involved with the humans she worked with, leading to illicit affairs, love triangles, revenge, and this led to her and Persephone "hooking up" with the Apothecary. Gray says this suggests that the Apothecary owes Persephone a business favor. Lab completes analysis, and finds that the code used in the Pace attack was an Oracle kill-code made by the Apothecary. The convalescent Pace insists on seeing the player, saying she just wanted to see their face... And that she is recovering speedily, that they'll soon "have to" let her resume "field duties," that it will be good to get back to work, and that she'll be fine--"better than ever." Gray says that they must consider shifting their offensive focus toward the Merovingian.

Merv: The Apothecary complains that the cheat code is old, and that she needs an injection of "fresh" code to bring it up to par. The operator thinks she's definitely going to kill them all. The player has to beat off some Machines who are getting too close to her. Flood sends them to check on Beirn, who's supposed to be giving the Apothecary a transfusion of his cheat-code-laced blood. The player arrives in the middle of a bitter spat between the Apothecary and Persephone, who claims the Apothecary is delaying. Beirn say he thinks he could take her if he had to, but just then Machines burst in; Beirn and the Apothecary "kill" the nearest ones, the player takes out the rest, and comes back to find the Apothecary agreeing to fulfill her obligation "and nothing more," and Persephone vowing to talk to her husband about this. The Merovingian finds the spat regrettable, but says he thinks the situation can still be resolved to his satisfaction, so long as the Apothecary completes her work. "And then..."

5/3-5/9

Required Events:

Zion: Morpheus appearance, makes syntax error (repeats same line four times in a row)

Mach: Gray, leading operatives against commandos, encounters Seraph; slightly frosty convo between the two as Sati's safety discussed

Merv: Spying on Agent Pace; behavioral changes observed and reported: empathic in a manipulative, aggressive way

5/10

Crit 7.2.4:

Zion: It's commando hunting with Seraph, who has again detected Sati's presence in the Matrix. He and the player come across a non-hostile commando. He passes you a thank-you letter (to him) from Sati. Seraph leads to the letter's origin point, filled with commandos, but Sati's signal has again disappeared (there is a "ERROR/TRM" computer in the area, which is what the General's deactivated access points say). Just then, Pace arrives, saying she was investigating a report of commandos in the area, congratulates the operative on their "efficiency," and cozily remarks that it is "much safer when we cooperate." Ghost theorizes that the General's ranks may not be as united in his support as had been assumed. The operator uploads a copy of Sati's "Thank you" letter to the player at the end of the mission (can be traded).

Mach: Gray sends the player to terminate the Apothecary, who proves elusive, leaving a trail of Machine bodies and deactivated commando access points in her wake. Gray explains that she can terminate a "lower-level RSI" with a movement of her hand, although this doesn't usually result in permanent deletion. Pace shows some impatience in her usual backup-providing role, saying she wishes she could go eliminate the Merv forces with the player. An Agent reminds the player that Morpheus was confirmed terminated long ago. Although the Apothecary gets away through the General's network, the player confiscates the remains of the cheat code vial she'd been using to make the kill-code. Gray says that they need to shut down the General's network for good. He also says that Seraph's insistence on rescuing Sati before the General is dealt with shows that his logic routines may still be impaired by his dunking. Pace says that if she'd been there, the "traitor" (Apothecary) wouldn't have got away.

Merv: The Apothecary, found hip-deep in dead Mervs and Machines, insists on adequate security before she can finish her work. The General delivers a unit of commandos for the purpose, saying he can only spare them for a brief while. Flood decides to throw the commandos into the face of the growing Machine offensive to buy some time; the player wades through dead and dying Machines and commandos, searching for the misplaced cheat code vial, but has to give up the search when the Apothecary is again attacked. Again found in the midst of dead Mervs and Machs, the Apothecary says she's finished her part of the kill-code, that the Merovingian clearly can't protect her, and that she wants to be transported out of the simulation immediately, as is her right based on the contract she signed with the Merovingian. Flood regrets the loss of "the only professional I've had the pleasure of working with recently."

5/10-5/16

Required Events:

Zion: Morpheus RSI/beacon signal has become highly erratic; traced to relay point in Real in need of maintenance; traced from relay point back to origin point in Matrix--ie simulated

Mach: Machines use data captured from progress in Stalingrad to track down General's primary Matrix command center; big battle; more data captured; General hologram orders commando retreat

Merv: Merv sends Apothecary off under commando escort "to Trainman," tips off Machines; Apothecary deleted in battle by either Machines or Mervs

5/17

Crit 7.2.5:

Zion: The player joins Seraph as he has located "Sati." She stands very stiffly, then deforms into a bizarre noodle-limbed creature: Sati's child body stretched to the size of an adult skeleton. Seraph says it's a trick by the General, but that the vision granted by the codes the General stole from the Machines will be the General's own undoing. The General's hologram appears and taunts the player. The player follows Seraph to a building filled with the bizarre Sati clones, where, while the player puts the others out of their misery, Seraph manages to befriend one. This one leads the player to a computer with data on it. Commandos try to interfere, but the player gets the data, which turns out to be Sati herself, and hands the disc to Seraph, who takes it/her back to the Oracle. The Oracle says that Sati will be just fine, and will have the weather back to normal in a jiff. Niobe, also there, says that it's time to find out who's behind the simulated Morpheus.

Mach: The player plops a virus into a commando mainframe, destroying the General's network and shutting up a pesky static-ridden holographic broadcast from him that popped up at the last second. A computer in the area shows Stalingrad's defenses at very low capacity. After this success, Gray sends the player after Pace, who undertook a meeting with Veil on her own initiative. The player arrives just as the two women are putting the final touches on an agreement whereby the Cypherites will resume surveillance in Zion for the Machines, in return for payment. Machine/Cyph bystanders explain that a dead Cypherite there had got a little too fresh with Pace. Gray is pleased that Pace's "specialized liaison programming" has helped her find a solution to the Cypherite issue. He also warns that Zion is on edge and must be handled carefully, that the General is on the verge of absolute defeat, and that further action against the Merv will be necessary. Pace preens herself on her coup, saying she thinks the Cypherites can be very useful as long as the right approach is taken. A Machine computer has a message from the Sentinel force, saying they're about to undertake a strategy designed to exhaust the enemy's resources; another Machine computer has a brief spy report from Zion, saying that it's still tough to get intel due to the security revamp, but that movement of men and material out of Zion may be accelerating.

Merv: The General requests several "time-sensitive" troop transfers from the Merovingian. The operator theorizes that Flood had a crush on the Apothecary. The player checks over the troops in the city, helping them beat off a Machine attack so that they'll be set for transport. Flood then sends the player to hurry the Trainman and the Effectuator along; the operator is puzzled about the Trainman's involvement, since he handles transport between the Matrix and the Machine mainframes. The Trainman says he knows places in the Machine mainframes the Machines themselves don't know about. The Effectuator thinks the Trainman's a little weird, but that they'll have the commandos "safely stowed" where the Machines can't get them, while telling the General that the Machines deleted them. The Twins argue about who's behind "Morpheus": the Machines, or EPN. The Merv complains about his wife not being satisfied even after he arranged for the Apothecary's disposal, and says that the General will learn an important lesson about war, but not just yet, as his ignorance will still be useful for a little while. Flood confirms that the kill-code has been completed by the Merovingian's technicians.

5/31

7.3 Cinematic: Overwhelming waves of Machine Sentinels destroy the General's squiddies and rip apart his Stalingrad base. The camera pulls back to show the scene displayed on a video screen, and the back of a man's head in silhouette watching it, as a tiny bug-like robot zips past. The General and his remaining commandos flee through the sewers of the Matrix with Agents in pursuit.

World: The weather returns to normal. The General's helicopters are replaced by news choppers, and his commandos no longer appear as enemies in standard Zion and Machine missions.

Crit 7.3.1:

Zion: Zion tracks the "Morpheus Signal" RSI broadcast of Morpheus again, and runs a trace through it to try to find its source. The trace leads through a bluepill office to a mysterious computer room where the player finds a blank disk, a computer with Morpheus quotes from some of his old speeches (that were chopped up into the speeches the broadcast RSI has given), and a recently used computer. Cell samples are scanned from dead skin cells in the keyboard, in the hopes that this will help track his RSI.

Mach: The player is sent to delete one of the few remaining commando units. A computer in the area has a message to the General, giving orders to the commandos to hold their ground as part of a delaying action. Scans detect Merovingian programs along the General's projected escape path through the city. The player is ordered to eliminate all but one. The player hauls him off to Agent Pace, who "will handle data extraction." Pace says it "should not be overly...difficult," and send the player to pick up some reinforcements while she gets down to business. A computer in the area has a report from the Sentinel strike force confirming destruction of Stalingrad, saying that losses were 36.03% higher than projected, and "Pending Task: Elimination of terrorist hovercraft." Pace comes through with the General's coordinates, the player gets there, and fights through some Mervs to a computer-secured door with unusual code. They get an access code from the guards and use it, but the operator reports "the whole area just blinked," and the computer readout resets, although the door is now unlocked. The player enters and finds a confused bluepill thanking them for fixing the jammed bolt, and then getting confused and demanding to know where their secretary is. The operator says that the Mervs "changed something" and that the door is now just a normal door, and wherever it used to go, it isn't going now. Gray says that it seems the General has gained access to the Merovingian's "back door" system, to which they will have to gain access.

Merv: The player meets up with the General, who asks them to take some commandos and meet him at a rendezvous. Flood has you get the commandos deleted as an "accident," because they're too hot to try hiding from the Machines just now. Then you catch back up to the General, being attacked by Machines, and tell him the Merv wants to talk. The Merv tells the General that the only way he can ensure his safety is to get him out of the Matrix, and to a hiding spot near the surface in the Real. The General agrees to go along with it, saying that although it's risky, the Machines probably won't expect it.

5/31-6/6

Required Events:

Zion: the actual "Morpheus" simulacrum--not a broadcast--is found and escapes, but not before Zion obtains a full scan of the RSI

Mach: working on hacking "chateau" door when general reappears, pursued to train

Merv: general may take some convincing, but has to agree to give Merv the program for converting sentinels between Matrix and the Real; program is retrieved from one of his few remaining data repositories just before it is destroyed by Machines

6/7

Crit 7.3.2:

Zion: Recent readings of the RSI signature are pursued. The player finds an odd chunk of corrupt binary code, and a large amount of data from a database. The corrupt bytes are back-traced to a deactivated and abandoned commando access point. The operator wonders why the Machines didn't remove that one. Niobe is very suspicious of a connection between the Morpheus RSI and the General, and says that if the General is behind it, it should be found and disabled. Initial analysis of the database information indicates it is an insurance claims database (ie red herring). It isn't mentioned in the mission, but the corrupt chunk of binary code contains the bits seen in the early Morpheus broadcasts' character details. The binary itself is garbage, and I don't think decodes into anything (though I could be in trouble if it does :p).

Mach: Armed with three viruses from Pace, the player sets off to stick them in the "hacked switch hubs" near train stations through which the Trainman controls his network. At the Tabor hub, the player finds some annoying Demon Army members, one of whom initially sounds like he knows something, but goes hostile once taken outside, claiming he's lured the player into an attack by his "brethren." Elite Commandos guard the Camon hub. 5 Points partiers cavort around the Apollyon hub, saying the Trainman lets them chill there. The implanted viral routines begin returning data mapping the Trainman's network. Gray says that with this information, they should be able to intercept the General if he tries to make a break for it.

Merv: Flood doesn't like the name "The Real," and says "The Sludge-Pit" would be more accurate, for instance. He sends the player to collect some commandos and take them to the Trainman. They're dropped off with the cranky Trainman, and the player is sent off to bring the General himself in. The General says he'll go, since he needs to make sure the Trainman has the transfer program configured correctly anyway, but that they'd better take separate routes. He gives the player a commando, saying "maybe you can draw some of them off." Flood doesn't care what you do with the commando, and tells you just to get over to the Trainman. At the Trainman's pad, attacking Machines have to be beaten off, and then the General refuses to leave the Matrix, saying that he has some "unfinished business" that "won't take long." The Trainman says the General is endangering them all. Machines ambush the player outdoors throughout this mission.

6/7-6/13

Required Events:

Zion: (before Mach event) morph sim--talks on its own in semi-broken Morpheus-like speech patterns; gen appears and yells at it, leaves in a huff; sim disappears

Mach: general drags feet at station with trainman, caught in Machine attack, shoved into train by trainman, trainman flees machines on foot, horribly wounded, stumbles through door into white room (or other train station that might sort of look like his construct? hm) where he collapses, apparently lifeless

Merv: merv transfers oracle kill-code through a zion network

6/14

Crit 7.3.3:

Zion: The routing information of the kill-code shuttled through Zion's network was deleted (inside sabotage), but their recent security revamp keeps high level backups of admin access logs, which preserved the network address of the saboteur's system. The location is populated by Zion operatives, who seem friendly and cooperative. One happens to mention that they haven't seen {random name x} around lately. Tyndall checks on {x} and finds he's using an outside communication relay, which is against regulations. The player finds {x} and works their way to the terminal {x} is using to host the comm relay, finding a log on it of the "friendly" Zionites at the previous location reporting to {x} that the player is on his case. The Zionites in the area go hostile. The player defeats them, and they're arrested on their ships. Their full chat log is analyzed and shows that they didn't know who was on the receiving end of the kill-code, except that it was supposed to be an undercover Merv op on the Oracle's Zion security detail. The player checks on the Oracle and scans her current guards, who check out okay. The Oracle says she hasn't noticed anything amiss. Her second message talks about the Morpheus broadcasts using cut-up lines from old Morpheus speeches. Seraph promises to check each guard until the kill-code is found. One of the guards has a crazy theory about the Merv using the Morpheus RSI to assassinate the Oracle. Tyndall says they'll be code-screening all Oracle guards until the kill-code is found, and that they'll do more checking on the captured crew to see if they can find out more about where the kill-code went.

Mach: With the General gone, the Machines want to make sure his Morpheus sim isn't a threat. Increased activity has been detected at areas Morpheus frequented before his assassination. The player is sent to a warehouse, where a helpful security guard captain gives them the name of the person who deposited a suspicious box of tools recently: "Joshua Maston." One guard jokes about "glue terrorists" that were supposedly using the warehouse a couple years ago. Machine records show Maston is a Zion operative. The player pays him a visit, finding him and a "Flyer," along with some pals. The Zionites flip out when the Flyer is picked up, and a fight follows. ("Flyer" was used in the old "hunt for morpheus" crits in chapter 1.) The player finds that Maston carried papers with an address; they go there and find one of the posters Morpheus used to go around posting. Gray runs a code trace that takes the player to another warehouse, where they find the Morpheus sim. It utters a few hacked-up Morpheus lines, then keels over. The operator says it shut itself off. Gray says it may have the capability to simulate jack-out and reconstruction, but that anyway they now have a complete scan of its RSI.

Merv: Flood sends the player to collect some data sent back by the undercover Merv assassin in Zion. The player finds the Zion facility on alert, which makes getting the data a little tougher than expected. Flood says Zion must have found out about the kill-code being sent into their network. The data the player retrieves contains the address of the place where Zion is currently holding the Oracle, and Flood sends the player in to identify the Zion guard captain on duty. With that accomplished, the player breaks into another Zion facility to swipe the captain's files; he should have a roster of the guard detail. Flood says it should be easy, since "our inside team" who got the kill-code in has already cracked the necessary terminal for you. Hostile Zionites appear once the player gets their hands on the data. Flood says the insider network sabotage team has been caught, and makes hasty arrangements to deposit the roster with the assassin's backup contact. The player finds them by whispering a password around at an Exile party; the contact is a succubus (see Zion 7.3.4), concerned that this is blowing their cover. If you check carefully, you'll notice a nearby party guest acting suspiciously after you talk to the contact.

6/14-6/20

Required Events:

Zion: merv spy somehow found and taken out, kill-code not found

Mach: active morph sim tracked down and interviewed/interrogated; somewhat anti-machine but Gray determines its merely rudimentary capacity for free thought prevents it from posing a significant threat, while it is useful for pacifying/distracting Zionites

Merv: (after Zion event) key found at Mahath Tower construction site (Lamar neighborhood, east edge of Downtown) must be recovered (possibly involving the Landlord?--either comes to the Merv to tell him he heard Merv was gunning for the Oracle, and might be interested in this key, or someone else comes and tells him that, and it's the Landlord who has the key)

6/21

Crit 7.3.4:

Zion: The player follows up on a contact used by the spy, hoping to find the kill-code, but finds them (a succubus--see Merv 7.3.3) dead, and the General's hologram shows up and gloats. Seraph (whose RSI is back to normal in this subchapter) asks for a meeting, and says that even though his ability to detect commandos is fading, he felt them just now, after an absence of weeks, and he's sure they're somewhere in the city. Shimada asks for a meeting, requesting that Zion allow EPN to help guard the Oracle. Zion Command is reluctant to do so, but the Oracle insists. There's a big pow-wow with the Oracle, Seraph, Niobe, the Kid, and the player. Niobe tries dissuading the Oracle, but she stays firm. The Kid says they're just there to help, and that nobody wants to see any harm come to the Oracle. EPN guards are already in place.

Mach: Gray says that the fact that Zion had data on the Morph sim weeks before they did, and that they know more about the assassination plot against the Oracle, illustrates the problems inherent in the Machines' appalling lack of data from Zion. He sends the player to meet with a Zionite who claims to have information to sell. The informant says to check out a certain EPN operative who's managed to dig up dirt on what the Machines are looking for in Zion, and gives them the address of the EPN's cover business. The player gets backup from Pace, who says she was monitoring the conversation, and she's certain the informant is trying to look like she knows more than she does; Pace's second message says that she's checked the records, and 82% of the double agents they've used have at some point offered false information. The player and followers beat up a bunch of EPN and get to the target, who says that yeah, the Cypherites are in Zion looking for missing supplies and workers. An annoyed Gray says that this is just going in circles, and evidently neither the would-be informant nor the EPN had actual useful information. He says that even after Pace's agreement with Veil, intelligence reports on Zion from the Cypherites have not been up to par with what they were under Cryptos, and that since reports are coming in that Cryptos has at least in part recovered from Seraph's attack, it's time to encourage his resumption of Cypherite leadership. Gray meets with Veil and Cryptos, where Veil assures him that they'll give the Zion affair top priority, and that she's sure they can find something useful for Cryptos to do now that he's feeling better. Cryptos' own replies are roaming and ambivalent, although he says that he is "not predisposed to be uncooperative." Gray isn't entirely pleased, but says that this was the most he could do without risking a backlash from the Cyphs against Machine control.

Merv: Malphas informs the player that Mahath was the site of the Architect's building destroyed in Reloaded, where the Keymaker died; this key he had just finished ended up not being needed to kill her old shell (between Reloaded and Revolutions). The key will be given to the assassin. The Merv contacts the General, who appears holographically, and asks for a squad of his best men. The General agrees reluctantly, as long as they're used to kill the Oracle, and returned intact. He says that since the Trainman is gone, someone will have to configure the transfer program on alternate hardware. The player goes to the Trainman's workshop, and eventually digs up the transfer program from some uncooperative Hel Club NPCs; one of the computers in the area shows that some numbered things (possibly locations on the Trainman's network, hm?) are offline or in need of maintenance. The transfer program is handed off to the Effectuator, who promptly uses it to summon two dead Elite Commandos. Effy blames it on an unintuitive program interface, and says he needs to go check on something, but not to worry, he'll have it all sorted out. The player has to go configure a computer to initiate the proper transfer. Machines attack right before this can be done, but after they're beaten, four commandos are brought in successfully, with another wounded, and one dead. Flood is annoyed with the Effectuator's bungling, but says there are more commandos where those came from (I wanted to leave the number of commandos brought in somewhat open, because later missions/events may need more than five).

6/21-6/27

Required Events:

Zion: the key teleports the user to the door nearest the Oracle's location---key and kill-code given to elite commando sniper who warps into her epn-guarded location; oracle detects him; kid reacts and jumps in front of her, taking the bullet (reconstructs, seems like no permanent damage)

Mach: Cryptos/Veil--Cryptos feels sufficiently recovered to take Cypherite command, Veil may resist a little; in the end, Cryptos re-establishes his leadership (Veil still 2nd in command)

Merv: (day before Zion event) commando squad in the city, hunted by seraph; mervs have to slow seraph down so that at least one commando gets away for a while, to keep seraph busy

6/28

Crit 7.3.5:

Zion: Seraph has tracked down the last of the Elite Commandos, just as his ability to see them finally fades completely. Ghost arrives wanting to deliver an important message, but Pace shows up at the same time, saying the Machines were also tracking the commandos. She slyly refers to having an intimate catch-up conversation with Ghost. Ghost says Pace is there as a distraction, and the player should get in touch with Tyndall immediately. Tyndall says that contact with the (randomly named) captain of the hovercraft Pelageus has been lost, except for his emergency beacon. The player finds the captain and his crew alone, but just as the captain warns that a Cypherite traitor was in his crew, and that "they think I know something about the--," he and his crew all drop dead. The phone rings--it's Veil, teasing. Tyndall says that they happened to have another ship near the Pelageus; they get a reading on the pirates' hovercraft signal, and the player tracks down the Cypherite crew in the city, forcing them to reconstruct as the Zion ship moves in the Real. The Cypherite craft gets off with the Zionite ship in pursuit. Seraph had mentioned earlier that the Oracle wanted to talk. She says that she isn't sure what to say to make the player feel better; "they won't get to you like they got to those poor people on that ship"; she also says that she could say it's all for the best, but people tend to take that the wrong way. Zionite and EPN guards in the area are arguing: Zion says the Cypherites don't really care about EPN, and have always been after Zion, while EPN points out that they've taken the hits all this time while Zion's been hiding behind the Truce. Tyndall reports that the Cypherite hovercraft was damaged, but hasn't been captured yet, although they caught one female Cypherite on foot near the Pelageus. (I don't have any particular plans for these Cyphs.)

Mach: Gray sends the player after the commandos that have re-entered the Matrix. After defeating some easily, thanks to their anti-commando routines, the player comes across dead commandos, then Seraph, Ghost, and Pace, who got there **real** fast. Seraph says that fortunately, the commando assassination attempt on the Oracle was prevented. Ghost curtly thanks the player for their interest. Pace says she'll handle Ghost, and dismisses the player, telling them to report to Gray. Gray informs the player of the Cypherite hijacking of the Pelageus, and sends them to Veil to ask for an explanation of the operation. Veil angrily replies that she nearly lost a ship and crew trying to get data for the Machines, and that they have no right to question her methods: "Tell me we're endangering the Truce? Don't make me laugh." She excuses herself, saying she has some phone calls to make. One of the Cyphs with her says "Your war never ended, pal. They just told you it did, and you bought their story." Gray says that he's informed that Cryptos is back in command of the Cypherites, although Veil controls many of their day-to-day operations. Gray is concerned that the Machines will be blamed for these extreme Cypherite actions. The player responds to Seraph's invitation to see the Oracle, who says that most everyone wants to save lives, but they disagree on how to go about it--that they see the differences rather than the similarities between humans and Machines. She adds that if there's one thing she's learned from all this, it's that you can't save someone who doesn't want to be saved; it's all well and good to give someone a choice, but then you have to live with the consequences, and if you don't like their choices, you've got to work on changing their mind, which is about the toughest thing there is.

Merv: A frustrated Merovingian sends the player off to set up a relay with the General. Flood explains that they had a relay in place, but it stopped working--the Machines probably found it--and that although they're working on a permanent relay that the Machines won't be able to get at, for this they'll just have to rig up a temporary one that will probably be detected and shut down shortly afterwards. He sends the player to a small data center, where they send an encoded message to the General on a low-bandwidth channel that's supposed to be "below the radar." Nevertheless, Machines attack the center just after the message gets out. Next, the player has to set up a receiver, and because this is a rush job, Flood sends you to a bluepill company, to put a script in place that will hijack their receiver/transmitter. It's a TV station, and the bluepills inside have conversations and data on their computers, including news of another Pendhurst-Amaranth stock split, an intrepid reporter trying to turn the coincidence of both Anome and his mother falling from buildings into a theory on jumping being hereditary, and one who wants to cover gun control, saying that firearm-related deaths are up 89% in the last two years. Once the right computer is found and the script put in place, the player returns to the Merv as the meeting starts. The Merv berates the General for the commando's failure to kill the Oracle, and says that he's assuming direct command of the General's Sentinels. He orders Malphas to "initiate the override program." The General begins to retort but is cut off mid-word. Malphas explains that they inserted "override routines" when they transferred the General and his commando programs out of the Matrix, and that they are now "programmatically compelled" to obey instructions from the Merovingian. The Merv says that although the General has been disappointing in the past, as the head of an obedient squadron outside the Matrix, he may have his uses.

7/12

8.1 Cinematic

An undercover Cypherite hovercraft winds through a new tunnels system, following directions from a Zion traffic controller. They enter a large chamber coated with EMP devices and are directed to cut engines to go through the shaft below. The crew panics and guns the engines, fleeing. Their path is blocked by a heavily loaded hoverbarge. They send a report to Cryptos that they've found "it" just before an EMP goes off, sending both craft plunging into the bottom of the tunnel.

Cut to the Architect in his control room. He informs Agent Gray, on a monitor, that Zion has broken the Truce. No more awakenings are to be allowed.

[What this means is that Zion and the Machines are again at war.

What the Cypherites found, as will be explained in the initial crits, is "New Zion," Zion's answer to the continual threat of extermination by the fleet of Sentinels watching "old" Zion. This is where all those shipments of men and materials have been going. "New Zion" is a new city/base in a mixture of natural and artificial caverns farther from the Machine City in terms of longitude and latitude, and much farther below the surface than the old city. The location is shielded from scans and drilling by natural formations of solid bedrock, ore-heavy layers of earth and minerals, lava and ducts of superheated air, and, most importantly, arrays of EMP clusters drilled into the long winding tunnel walls of the few available access points, and finally a vertical tunnel section completely covered by live EMP fields; entering craft must kill all systems, drop through the fields, then restart systems in free-fall in the large subterranean chasm below. Outgoing craft are lifted through on massive mechanical winch systems. Abundant geothermic power sustains the base.]

World

- Went through all the neighborhood and intro missions, Lock's initial voiceover, signpost ("i") NPCs and so forth to take out references to being in a state of Truce. (There's still the Oracle's lines in the introductory movie, but ah well.)
- Chance of Agent attack in a restricted area now goes up rather than down with character level.
- Always a chance of a level 100 Agent attack against Zion operatives outdoors in Westview, INT, and DT.
- RSI updates for the two primary story characters for each org.
- There's a new, decidedly Machine-oriented collector, Codebase, behind the Uriah SW hardline, who slips in a few suggestions about working for the Machines.
- Machines and Zion are now opponents for each other in standard missions.

Crit 8.1.1

Zion: Ghost explains about New Zion, and the Machines declaring that Zion has broken the truce. The player is sent to check Zion network facilities that have reported trouble: the first is dead, the second has a battle going on between Zionites and Machines (well, dead NPCs, some live Zionites who will follow the player and fight, and hostile Machines). The player is then packed off to see Niobe, who says it looks like the Machines are going after Zion's network interfaces; they thought they were secure after the recent security overhaul, but the Machines are going after them in a way that suggests they've found a security hole. Ghost says that a berth has been secured for the player's hovercraft in New Zion, and that a Machine attack on Zion now would make supplies tight, but would cost the Machines a lot of Sentinels with all the EMP-equipped hovercraft Zion has.

Mach: Pace explains a bit about New Zion, and says Zion is mistaken if they think it will let them attack the System with impunity. She says the Machines know more about Zion's network interfaces than Zion suspects. Gray sends the player after a network hub, that leads to another activity center. A hackable computer at the hub has a message intercept of a directive from Lock, saying that hovercraft reassignments to New Zion are being given in order of captain seniority. Zionites killed, etc. Gray has the player over for a head-to-head, where he explains that they have to defend the System against Zion for the good of humanity.

Merv: Flood explains a bit about New Zion and the renewed war, and Malphas says that the Zion/Machine hostilities will give the Mervs opportunities. For instance, he sends the player to retrieve the chunk of "corrupt" code that Zion captured from the General--it's easy, because the Machines had just attacked and wiped out the place where it was being held. The Twins aren't pleased that they didn't get to kill anyone. Flood then sends the player to see what Exile business leaders Dame White and Mr. Black make of the new situation, to see "which way the wind is blowing." The Dame thinks she'll manage just fine; Mr. Black thinks all the chaos is bad for business. The Merovingian says that he on the other hand thinks this is the perfect time to look for unexpected opportunities. Persephone suspects that he's already up to something, and laments that he will risk everything on a roll of the dice.

7/12-7/18

Required Events:

Zion: emergency briefing, Q&A session w/ Niobe and Ghost

Mach: emergency briefing, Q&A session w/ Pace and Gray

Merv: emergency party with Merv and Persephone

7/19

Crit 8.1.2

Zion: Lab working on configuring an emergency firewall program has been sacked by the Machines. Player has to pick up a copy from Ghost and take it over to a new, hopefully secret lab. A hackable computer at this lab has a note about, well, basically no firm news on what the possible hole in Zion's defenses might be, what the Merv could be doing, etc. A tech is skeptical that there's a hole, and thinks the whole system is just too old and well known to the Machines. The transfer to the new lab seems to go okay, but Machines are detected later a little ways away; the player goes to head them off, and does so, until level 100 Agents show up just as the operator gives word that the new firewall has already been bypassed by the Machines.

Mach: Pace is standing on a mound of Zionite bodies and gives the player some viruses to go insert into the Zion network. Gray says that they already knew a lot of Zion's network structure, and they can now exploit this relatively easily. But the first location has only a wiped, useless computer, and some Zionites who plead with the player to think about what he's doing. Gray says such tactics are futile, and it will only facilitate Machine progress if Zion chooses to cripple their own systems. The computer at the second location is a better target, but the third is completely dead. Gray says that apparently Zion has begun to realize the vulnerability of their situation, but it won't matter, and peace will soon be restored.

Merv: The General's Sentinels are in danger of being found by increased Machine Sentinel patrols. The Effectuator remembers coming across some Zion tunnel map info when he was helping them with their networks and so forth back when Niobe was ganked by Anome. He points the player to a bluepill business, whose computer turns out to have what looks like a Zion network connection--the business itself being some kind of front. Flood can't tolerate the Effectuator running the show, and sort of mentally disconnects. The network connection leads to a Zionite installation, where the player downloads the tunnel mapping data they were after. The Twins are placing bets on what's become of the Trainman. The Merv is pleased, summons the General, and says he can help him evade the Machines, but that the General must agree to stay within certain designated areas, or he'll be shut down. The General, whose transmission is a little choppy, appears to agree.

7/19-7/25

Required Events

Zion: emergency network up-link established

Mach: attack on a redpill extraction point

Merv: Merv does a roll-call of powerful Exiles to take stock of his wartime power base (ie a parade of me showing up as various Exiles one at a time)

7/26

Crit 8.1.3

Zion: Comm systems impaired by Machine attacks prevent Tyndall from coming through clearly; at one point later in the mission you hear her say "Ardes--." Ghost tells the player that their broadcast database is under attack by the Machines; this system helps manage and control redpill signals coming into the Matrix (sort of like air traffic control or something). Off the player goes to try to grab the broadcast data before the Machines can get it. They get there just in time, and the operator shunts the data over the network to a temporarily safe location. The operative runs there to collect it, then hustles it to the emergency up-link. The Machines have got a Special Agent (level 255) right at the up-link, but he's downed by Beirn who suddenly zaps in, tips his hat, and passes along a "Bonjour" from the Merv. The data is sent out of the Matrix through the up-link, saved for later use with a backup system, hopefully. (Which Zion sets up pretty much right away, I suppose. The story is that broadcast depth is now shallower, because they're running the broadcast control as a distributed system among hovercraft at broadcast depth, which is less efficient than the old system. That's explained a bit more in the next crit.)

Mach: Routine investigation of a computer theft that may have been perpetrated by Zionites or EPN desperate for computer gear is interrupted by Gray, who says that their viral routines have located Zion's broadcast signal control center. The player arrives there in the midst of a fight, but finds that Zion has just shunted the broadcast control data somewhere, and deleted the transfer log. The Machines have to take a few minutes to run a backtrace to see what exactly happened in the simulation when the data was shunted. They find where it went, but they're again a little behind Zion. Then word comes that an Agent sent to investigate an unregistered network up-link has just ceased function. Investigating the coincidence, the player finds a dead Agent, and a dead up-link terminal. Gray consoles the player over the loss of the broadcast data, saying that destruction of the control center will impair Zion's signal efficiency, at least. He says that there aren't many things powerful enough to have taken out the Agent, and that the incident will be investigated.

Merv: The General beams in with news that his Sentinel scouts intercepted a message from the Zion hovercraft "Ardeshir" about an emergency up-link Zion had configured, something to do with concerns about the security of their broadcast control database. Flood has the General disable the hovercraft with Sentinels, while the operative corners the jacked-in crew and demands to be given the location of the up-link. The surviving Ardeshir operative (random name) figures she doesn't have much choice anyway, because she needs the ship intact so that they can tell Zion about the Machines they've detected closing in on the up-link; she instructs "Spitz" the operator (:p) to give the General's squids the up-link coordinates. The player joins Malphas, who's monitoring the situation as Beirn is sent to the up-link to delay the Machines. A sort of concerned/annoyed Persephone is there with Malphas, too. Malphas says they're helping Zion in this case because it would be inconvenient if Zion lost this data, and thus the war, so soon. Word comes that Beirn has succeeded in allowing Zion to save their data. The player reports the happy news to the Merv, but the Merv broods over it, saying that it was too easy.

7/26-8/1

Required Events

Zion: Zion finally detects and goes after some of the (Cyph) spies who've been infiltrating (old) Zion

Mach: (Cypherite?) spy mission, find key to getting at recruiting data--a potential who's been approached by both sides, and reveals some information he got from an overly enthusiastic Zion recruiter

Merv: Merv surprised by lack of oomph in Machine response. Stages attack or demonstration to test it. Finds it somewhat feeble.

8/2

Crit 8.1.4

Zion: Tyndall says comms are mostly repaired, but broadcast depth is shallower due to the broadcast thingy. She sends the player to investigate a recruiting team manager (random name) who's jacked in, but not responding, and whose location can't be pinpointed for some reason. The player finds a journal entry from a few days ago in the manager's apartment (saying there are more recruiting volunteers, with more enthusiasm now, and that potential numbers seem to be up as well). Tyndall sends the player to the aid of a recruiting center that's just come under Machine attack; the center houses sensitive recruiting data. The player gets there, but finds that the data's been swiped. Tyndall sends them after a Machinist seen leaving the area just before the player'd got there. The player finds the Machinist, but just after they've uploaded the data, presumably to some Machine server. Tyndall says this is going to endanger the potentials they had listed in the stolen data, and sends the player off to report to Niobe. Niobe is in conversation with the Kid, who says that the Machines are just going to bulldoze through Zion if a second front isn't opened, mentioning that the "swarm of Sentinels they just sent at your new city isn't going to be the last." The Kid wants to hit Machine City directly. Niobe isn't too keen on it, telling the player that Zion can't afford to throw ships away right now. She adds that she appreciates the player's gumption, and says that even though things don't seem to be going well, fighting is better than giving in.

Mach: Gray sends the player after a Zion operative (random name) who has access to high-level recruiting data; the Machines learned about this from a potential who was told more than necessary by an overzealous Zion recruiter. The player tags the operative, and Extremators show up to bag him. The location of Zion's recruiting center is extracted from the captured Zionite somehow (the operator makes it sound like some process so chilling you don't wanna know about it), and the player swipes the data. A hackable computer at the center has an intercepted message from Niobe, explaining about the distributed broadcast control system, and shallower broadcast depth. The player is pursued by Zionites, but gets the data uploaded before they catch up. Gray packs the successful operative off to see what that darn Veil wants now. Veil congratulates the player that the Machines are finally cracking down on Zion recruiting, and happens to mention that she's heard EPN has some idea about bombing the Machines' city, oh and that she's sorry to hear "about the squiddies from Stalingrad biting it outside New Zion..." Gray confirms that some Sentinels returning from Stalingrad were diverted to probe the New Zion's defenses, and appear to have been disabled, probably by concealed EMP charges--they couldn't get precise data due to "broadcast interference."

Merv: The Merv, still not satisfied with the Machine reaction to aggression lately, sends the player to Mara to find the Oracle. In Mara, the player corners a fidgety Blackwood who says ohh, sure, she's right down the street. Down the street the player finds Seraph, who stares them down a bit, then says all right, she'll talk to the Merv. Then there's a meeting between the Oracle and the Merv, with Seraph looking on, and the Twins patrolling the apartment, calling it a little "a little...homey." The Merv asks why the Machines haven't even made much of an effort to "obliterate" their enemies; the Oracle responds that "Power isn't everything," that there's more to the Machines than the Merv thinks, and that maybe he should take a look around with his new "outside" eyes. The Merv is left pondering what this might mean.

8/2-8/8

Required Events

Zion: compromised recruiting team/potential must be saved from machines

Mach: kill a bluepill potential, Navin Manohar, substitute partially overwritten bluepill in his place, rewriting his features (players must identify, gather, and administer necessary RSI pills) to match the potential's appearance

Merv: interrogates morph sim--morph sim will rehash the story Morpheus told Neo about "the desert of the Real," humans as batteries, and so forth

8/9

Crit 8.1.5

Zion: The player saves a recruiting team's bacon, and the team deputizes the player to help check up on one of the potentials whose identity has been compromised by the recent loss of data to the Machines. The player heads off, finds a bluepill, but not the right one; it's a friend, who says that "they" came and dragged the potential off, claiming she was involved in a terrorist conspiracy. Tyndall sends the player to raid the nearest federal detention facility, where the player takes out a bunch of confused SWAT, and some Machines, and finds the missing potential, who's pretty freaked out about all the killing. Niobe calls the player in, congratulates them on the rescue, but says that things aren't going well, and Zion is going to have to switch over to entirely new systems run out of New Zion as soon as possible.

Mach: Gray has the player check "Navin Manohar" just before the Zionite recruiting team arrives to have him pop a pill. Navin Manohar seems to be all right, and the player goes off to meet Pace to observe Navin Manohar's progress with the recruiting team. Pace says that it's going all right, they've taken the pill and...ahah, the hidden Machine program has locked the red pill's trace process, and is feeding back into the Zionite systems. She sends the player to go take out the extraction team before they figure out what's going on and unplug their systems. The player takes out the extraction team, and finds Navin Manohar out on the floor, next to a computer with data on it. The player brings the data back to Pace, who explains that the extraction systems rely on data processed by Zion's "core server farm" during the critical phase of the extraction procedure, and that although the interface to that system is protected, the feedback data they've captured should contain vital data on its "location and configuration"; "this could be the key to the Zion Mainframe." Gray says that further data will be required. A computer tucked away in the final area shows that the Machines have recorded three encounters with the General's Sentinels, but that they still haven't pinpointed their current location.

Merv: Flood sends the player to take orders from the Merv, who they find shackled up with Nicky G. The Merv's curiosity has been piqued by the Oracle and the story told him by the Morph sim (which of course he'd heard before); isn't it interesting, he says, that nobody really knows where Morpheus got all that information, and that he wants to look into it. He sends the player to ask Raini (from "Uranium") about the "form of fusion" mentioned by Morpheus that the Machines are supposed to get their power from along with the human bodies, and to talk to Silver about the energy potential of the human body. Flood says the story on Raini is that she was a program used in nuclear fission reactors, before the Machines decided to use human power instead. After a bit of work the player gets Raini to talk; she says that most people who talk up fusion are pipe-dreamers--that yeah, it produces more energy than fission, and less waste, but you need all this other stuff to set it up (Lawson triple product, plasma/magnetic containment), and she can't see why the Machines would bother with that over fission; it's not like they'd be worried about pollution from fission's nuclear waste. Silver says that it doesn't matter what sort of weird bio-mechanical fusion the Machines might have come up with; running it through human bodies, which are only 25% energy-efficient at best, means the end result must be a relatively inefficient system no matter which way you slice it.

The operator observes that this fusion/human power system also leaves the Machines stuck with all the expense of maintaining the Matrix, the pods, etc. The Merv, after hearing all this, wants to know not only what the Machines are doing for power, but why, and subsequently gives orders for the General to send Sentinels to scout the fields and pods.

Most of the info I got for this crit on fission, fusion, and human energy potential came from these pages:

<http://members.aol.com/Cappuccinno2...hem/energy.html> average 100 watts

max 4500 watts

max sustained 400 watts

<http://www.ftexploring.com/energy/heatflow.htm> average 100 watts "heat flow"

http://expertpages.com/news/concept...gineering\_8.htm

human energy efficiency ~ 5-25% (high end is professional athlete)

<http://hypertextbook.com/facts/2001...elineLing.shtml> brain uses about 1/5th (20 watts)

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fusion\_power fusion: Deuterium to Tritium (also protium--isotopes of hydrogen)

<http://fusedweb.pppl.gov/FAQ/sectio.../part1-tech.txt>

D very abundant, T made from Li (plentiful in oceans)

Reactors require vanadium--present in many minerals

http://www.eoearth.org/article/Nucl...ar\_fusion\_power fusion in the sun--hydrogen fuses into helium

$4\text{ }^1\text{H} + 2\text{ e}^- \rightarrow 4\text{ }^4\text{He} + 2\text{ neutrinos} + 6\text{ photons} = 26\text{ million electronvolts (MeV)}$

<http://www.123helpme.com/assets/16355.html>

"fusion of a given mass of deuterium will be able to create over four times the energy produced through fission of an equal mass of uranium"

<http://www.princeton.edu/~chm333/20...nfinement2.html>

"Lawson triple product" - criteria to reach nuclear ignition (high temperature plasma containment--also magnetic)

8/23 (delayed to 8/24)

8.2 Cinematic

Zion operatives work frantically at a covert computer lab when Machine operatives burst in. They are cut down, but Agents follow. Transition to a flight of Sentinels through tunnels, knocked out of the air by a shoulder-launched EMP missile. Cut to a Sentinel flying across massive power lines headed into Machine City, scanning. Cut to the Merovingian, observing the readout on a computer screen, and laughing.

[Notes in square brackets below are not told to players directly, if at all.]

Crit 8.2.1

Zion: The operator mentions that Zion is working around the clock to transfer the Zion mainframe data to New Zion, but security measures in place in the mainframe, the sheer volume of data involved, and the dangers of transport through Sentinel patrols (crews have to delete their copy of the data at the least sign of danger) make it a painstaking process. A guard mentions that more Sentinels are being seen around the old city. Zion tries to fix the security hole that the Machines exploited (in 8.1.5) to get close to the Zion mainframe, but finds the Machine code involved in part of the red pill program too hard to modify. Alternate plan submitted by the Council, overruling Lock (who thought it too great a security risk): bring in Danielle Wright, "the foremost authority on Matrix interface technology." She invented the EJP while a Zion operative, but left shortly after the Truce began, citing "ideological differences." After leaving Zion, she founded what is now one of the city's largest tech companies, Wright Research, with a large skyscraper HQ in Vauxton (map landmark). Tyndall mentions that Silver has been known to associate with Wright, but that she herself is very secretive [hm, I'd probably have toned down that reference to Silver after writing Machine mission 8.2.4, ah well]. After some poking around a Wright Research office, Wright herself calls for a meeting. She says "I will help you--not because I share your commander's views, but because the red pill program is vital to the future of mankind." [Throughout these missions, Wright is very aloof, and calm, although she shows flashes of frustration when others aren't performing to her liking. Nothing seems to take her by surprise. She tends to refer to players formally by their bluepill last name, like an Agent.]

Mach: Gray says that although they haven't been able to pinpoint them, there are indications that the General's Sentinels are advancing toward "sensitive installations on the Earth's surface," and sics the player on some Mervs to show them the error of their ways, then to the Auditor, to "persuade" him to stop working with the Merv. The Auditor says he thought he could be useful to the System, screening Merv code for faults and errors, but that he'll stop if that's what they want. He isn't sure how he's going to explain this if the Merv asks. Hypatia is confronted next, since she's been offering "unusually...sensitive material to the highest bidder" (there was a Live Event a few chapters back on Vector where she did this) and has made offers of data to the Merv specifically. Hypatia isn't happy about the crack-down, says she won't be intimidated into self-censorship, her Bookwyrm gets rowdy, the player beats them, and an Agent appears on the scene to sit Hypatia in the corner for a while. Bursting with this success, the player is sent to deactivate the "directed relay" the Merv has been using to talk to the General, which the Machines have finally tracked down after a "thorough log search." The player succeeds in deactivating the relay, but then the General's holographic projection appears, boasting that they have other relays, nyah nyah, and is the System getting desperate because it feels like it's running out of time? Gray sets things right by shrugging this off as a "lackey's bravado," and saying that the Merv won't be able to resist the Machines for long.

Merv: The General's Sentinel scouts are approaching the Fields to count babies. Local expert Persephone says that conception does not take place in the pods; the parents could be miles apart; their genetic samples are sent to the Fields, where they are combined and grown into children. Persephone thinks it's all very sterile; Flood is horrified by the "organic minutiae." While the scouts start their baby count, the player ransacks the local hospital records office for the "official" version of the birth rate in the simulation. Avoiding amusing run-ins with fed-up bluepills and a self-diagnosis terminal ("press 7 if you are questioning reality"), the player finds the official article: "The city birth rate was 1.5% in 1999, up a dramatic 0.001% from the previous year. City officials attributed the cause to improvements in dental hygiene, television programming..." Flood is becoming sick of numbers, passing along that the scouts have counted about 1 million fetuses in the Fields, and 3 million people plugged into the pods nearby. Armed with the 1.5% birth rate, the player questions the creepy Coroner about the simulation's death rate; the Coroner says the city's figure is 0.7%--half of the birth rate (and don't forget to factor in "0.6% infant mortality," of course!)--but since the simulation is supposed to a stable, closed system, deaths must equal births, or it all goes to heck--only, that isn't the picture the Machines want to show to the bluepills. How does the Coroner think the Machines are managing it? "Foreign travel, detention facilities, retirement homes, the suburbs... There are so many ways to make the undesirable simply...disappear." Flood dismisses this as "rampant paranoia." Malphas does some quick calculations: "Assuming a nine month gestation period, a Field of one million wombs yields 1.3 million humans a year. At a 1.5% birth rate, that would imply a population of about...88 million, after the Coroner's infant mortality rate"; he says this corroborates the Morpheus sim's account of other pods elsewhere, since there are far more than 3 million people in just the city. The General's hologram is telling the Merv that he can't try taking a power reading directly off the Machine power lines, 'cause they'd detect it and catch him; they're already buzzing his position. The Merv says well, of course we know that Zion has found more pods [they must have, using red pills to locate pod inhabitants during extraction operations], so we'll just have to look around for them, too; and isn't it funny how Smith, according to Morpheus, thought there were "billions" of people in the Matrix? What a sucker that Smith was.

8/23-8/29

Required Events:

Zion: EPN steals Merv's mapped data on Machine power lines [note to self: don't forget to plant cake vendors in the area that some EPN surely won't be able to resist]

Mach: hit on some kind of Merv operation (stored commando programs, Exile (neighborhood) contact ally, etc)

Merv: hit on some kind of Machine operation (anti-extraction team, the Network & Network Media, SWAT teams, etc)

8/30

Crit 8.2.2

Zion: [Note: throughout Wright Research facilities in this subchapter, there are messages all codes with the same method. They refer very obtusely to Wright's inside access to the Zion mainframe, her connection to Silver, and a few other things that she's involved in checking up on.] Wright gives Zion some prototype new red pills to test on operatives, to see if they prevent the Machine exploit. Ghost mentions that they know Wright has access to the mainframe, but they've never been able to figure out how she does it. The first test succeeds in blocking the exploit, but feedback makes the redpill test subject ill. A hackable computer alludes to more Sentinels close to Zion. The second test subject dies just as Machines burst in, killing most of the other Zionites, and nobody could tell if it was the pill that killed the test subject, or the Machines. Wright isn't very surprised that the Machines are trying to stop creation of the new pills. She says the next step, after making some code tweaks, is to test them on a bluepill.

Mach: Gray reports a sudden rise in "utility and service failures," and sends the player to investigate one of the reports of trouble. A landlord explains that the water's been running hot/cold/none/bursts, not only in that apartment, but in his other three properties, too. Gray says this will be looked into, and sends the player to check out one of a number of reports of sharply increased gang activity across the city; turns out a SWAT team's been taken out by nasty Hel Club ravers. Gray reports that the water utility superintendent, interrogated, revealed that the "utility worker's union" paid him to look the other way while they made "adjustments" to equipment. Sent to check one of many phone outage reports (problems extend "even to operative-tapped 'hardline' networks"), the player finds a broken Hardline Junction Box, fixes it, and has to endure another surprise taunting from the General's hologram. Clearly the Merv is claiming responsibility for this reign of utility terror. An almost flustered Gray refers to "...other difficulties," then mentions what may be a new direct threat: the Auditor's latest analysis has found a problem in operative code. The Auditor, secure under Machine guard, reports finding page faults "in pod energy generation control subroutine modules" with source code "of a unique Zionite/Machine synthesis," but similar to Zion's red pill program: basically, Zion's working on a new red pill. Gray says this is a little disturbing, 'cause nobody thought Zion could code like that, so the Man is gonna have to be on their case lickety-split, but unfortunately that means they'll have to let the Merv live for a little while longer, especially with the exploration of New Zion's defenses causing high Sentinel losses to uncharted EMP charges, general war with Zion, etc. But not to worry, the Merv's puny Sentinel fleet doesn't pose an actual military threat in the Real: "surface facilities within his short-term range have sufficient defenses to repel an attack."

Merv: The Merv is way mad about EPN stealing his map of the pod power lines! But they didn't cover their tracks, and he can trace the cake they ate, so it's time to get that data out of their hands, and give some payback. The player leaves an anonymous phone call about the EPN's location on a government terrorism tip hotline, then hurries off and gets there just as Machines are terminating the specific EPN the Merv's been tracking. He reconstructs, and even takes some RSI pills (NPCs who don't follow you physically choose a new RSI from their NPC type's random pool if used again in a later phase of the same mission), but they can still track him, he's gone back to HQ, they follow, waste a bunch of EPN, but don't find the data. Flood says the Merv's gonna be steamed; oh, and in other news, the General's pulled back from the Fields due to all the Machines buzzing around.

8/30-9/5

Required Events

Zion: Awakening and extraction test run to assist Wright (trace succeeds but pod extraction fails--one important implication here is that the red pills do have something to do with allowing the newly awakened subject to get free of the pod; hopefully this will sort of address the question some players have been asking about why would the Machines keep flushing awakened humans--like they seem to do with Neo in the first movie--now that awakenings aren't supposed to be allowed; wouldn't they just kill them as soon as they detected it, so that Zion couldn't rescue them?)

Mach: attack on Wright Research (a new admin-started mission will populate inside the Wright Research building, if needed)

Merv: Merv finds out about EPN plans to attack power lines

9/6

Crit 8.2.3

Zion: Wright says she needs Machine pod control code to fix the pills. She knows Persephone's kept some code from her old job, and even knows where it is. Hel Club Exiles are fought and the data obtained, but it turns out to have only "dynamic links" to the actual Machine code needed. These lead to a Machine facility, and another data capture (one computer has a partial government profile of Wright, in the style of the one you can glimpse at Smith's interrogation of Thomas Anderson in the first movie: "Date of Birth: 24 June, 1964 // Place of Birth: South Vauxton, Downtown, Capital City, USA // Mother's maiden name: Eleanor Morrell // Father's Name: Jonas Wright"). Wright completes the code. Lock calls and thanks her personally (you get to hear on speakerphone), saying that mankind owes her a great debt, and that they'll keep a berth open for her in New Zion. Wright declines, saying "Another nobly futile gesture from your Commander; he always was fond of those." If you talk to her a second time, she says "Jason was quite right to say that we haven't seen things the same way, [Mr.|Ms.] [player bluepill last name]. I lack his great faith in our ability to survive on our own." [There's an implication in various snatches of dialogue in these missions that Lock and Wright used to know each other well, although there's no indication that it was in any way a romantic relationship.] She also says "goodbye," with a certain finality.

Mach: The Machines are wise to ex-Zionite Wright's work on the new pills. Cryptos pops round to relate that Zion's already started distributing said pills. Gray's determined to get his hands on one, and sends the player to sack a Wright Research facility, but they find that Wright's orders to ship out the initial development batches have already been obeyed, and the place is dry. Gray has the player try hitting up a Zion extraction team for their red pill; this works (the player also confiscates their blue pill, but the operator says the Machines don't need those anyway: they have their own means of calming the citizens). The pill is submitted for analysis, a technician in a back room talks about Wright's invention of the EJP (which the Machines then "had to obtain from Zionite defectors"--oh, and one of her interface subroutines *might* have been "studied for the Agent Pace project"), and the pesky General sends his pesky hologram in again, but this time he helpfully tells the Machines where they can collect a nice juicy report, courtesy of the Merv, on EPN's plan to sabotage power lines leading into the Machine city. Gray says that so far, analysis of the new red pill program suggests that the author has close access to the Zion mainframe; since Zion doesn't like giving out access of that level to non-Zionites like Wright, could be that she's got her own means of accessing it. Hm... Oh, yeah, and they'll check on that Merv thing about EPN. [The unsuccessful EPN sabotage attempt on the pod power lines is assumed to take place between this week and next week's missions.]

Merv: The player walks in on the Merv and Veil, just as she's saying thanks, but no thanks, "I really don't know anything about it, and besides, we've got a pill problem on our hands just now." The Merv says this tells him two things: 1) the Machines don't know about EPN's sabotage plans, yet, since they'd certainly have told the Cyphs about it, and 2) EPN will probably be interested in that whole pill thing going on over at Wright Research. Time to check that out. Flood tells about Wright being ex-Zion, inventor of the EJP, and "she apparently decided that she wants to take over the Matrix from the Machines, and that the best way to go about that was to move into the city, start her own company, and get rich pawning watered-down modern technology off onto the public." Wright's security force is supposed to be human, but the operator detects programs in the area, and they turn out to be the Machines, invading the place. The player takes care of both Machines and Wright security, only to find evidence that Wright just stole data from the Merv [see Zion's crit of this week]. Now the Merv is really steamed, Persephone blames him for her data being stolen, and the Merv gives you a dire lupine to take with you. The Merv knows about the dynamic links Zion will have found in the data they stole, and figures what Zion wanted, EPN will want too; the dire lupine carries a copy of the stolen data, but with one link modified to point to a Merv program that will fire off a signal pulse when it's uploaded and scanned in a hovercraft. You truck the lupine over to some EPN, get him whacked, and Flood is confident that EPN will find the data on the lupine's body, upload it, scan it, and then the General will spot the signal pulse, track the EPN ship, and find out where they're going for this big power line ambush they're planning. [And it probably works out that way, since the Merv's report on their ambush finds its way to the Machines soon thereafter (see this week's Machine crit).] Oh, and also the General will probably be able to take a power reading from the lines while the Machines are busy with EPN. [He does.]

9/6-9/13

Required Events

Zion: (after Machine event) Wright is being harassed by the Machines, and breaks from Zion--says she believes Matrix should be left intact, but under human control; Wright disappears

Mach: Machines force Wright to jack out (by RSI damage, hardline, ?) in attempt to track where her RSI signal broadcast source--unsuccessful (even if they get her to jack-out, they find that her signal was too well encoded: "high order real-time variable encryption")

Merv: Locates more clusters of pods by extracting human and using red pill trace

9/13

Crit 8.2.4

Zion: The player is sent to help distribute the new red pills to recruiting teams. A Zionite guard refers to EPN losing some ships to the Machines in their unsuccessful power line attack, and refers to a rumor that the Merv tipped the Machines off. The recruiting team is happy to get the new pills so they can get back to work, but ask the player's help against Cypherites, who've been very active against Zion's recruiting operations since the new pills were developed. Another Zionite refers to more Sentinels around Zion, adding "Sometimes they take off as soon as they realize they've been spotted." The player happens to loot a blue pill from a dead Cypherite, and Tyndall sends them to help with an actual extraction. At the end of this mission you get to give either the red or blue pill to a potential. Giving either one will complete the mission, but the messages are written in such a way that it's sort of left for the player to fill in the blanks about what the bluepill chose, and which pill they gave them.

Mach: The Machines figure Wright couldn't have handled the biological interface part of her broadcast signal's encryption scheme on her own, and send the player to hunt up records on Wright's business partners. The operator mentions that Wright Research has been in an uproar since Wright's disappearance a few days ago. The Wright facility is abandoned except for a hardhat worker, who laconically reveals that the company has shut down their network, and work's been brought to a standstill; oh yeah, and everyone knows that Argent Biometrics handles variable encryption across a biological interface. The player runs into Wright security on the way out. Gray says that Argent Biometrics is a small bio-research company, less than three years old, with few clients and steady quarter-end losses. The player accesses a computer at a small Argent Biometrics office, coming up with just an address of a warehouse ("Lemone Warehouse King"). One of the bluepills in the office kind of goes postal when their computer is searched; the operator figures he was just a nut. This warehouse company is known for owning lots of square feet of storage space, but posting very small profits, and having had the original owner get locked up a year ago in racketeering charges, only to be found dead in his cell before he could be arraigned. The warehouse is abandoned except for a cardboard box containing a box which contains everyone's favorite mission prop: a human heart. At the heart's return address in Camon Heights, the player finds weird hostile Exiles, including one with a computer controlled "micro defibrillator"; when the player heartlessly (sorry) shuts it down, the Exile blurts out something about "Silver" before keeling over. The operator recalls an old rumor about Silver working with Wright, but says he'd dismissed it as false, since the same source [not named in the mission but: <http://pc.gamespy.com/pc/the-matrix...e/527124p1.html>] also said Wright was based in Tabor, and Silver in Achan. Gray says it's time to find Silver.

Merv: Malphas says that since the General was able to take a power reading off the Machine lines while they were occupied with the EPN ambush attempt, all they need to do now is figure out how many pods the Machines have, and then they can calculate their total energy budget--well, from the pods, anyway. The General's spreading out to look for more pods now, but with communication distance increasing, his signal's getting more erratic. The player has to track it down, and, after clearing away some Machines, manages to make out that the General's scouts have been finding more pods in a "rough grid pattern" about "every 100 to 150 miles," and that these pod clusters are only 1/10th the size of the 3-million-pod cluster near the Fields (ie, 300,000 humans per small cluster). Flood sends the player to Sunshine, "an insufferably cheerful program who managed the Machine's solar power operation before you vile humans shrouded the entire planet in shadow," to ask her about the total surface area the Machines might be using for their pod cluster grid. Sunshine is way excited that the Merv is sending people to ask her stuff! (her Phoenix guards are slightly less excited) and "guesstimates" (Flood's term) that considering that she's heard the clouds have cooled the Earth--"though not nearly as much as you'd have thought"--the ice caps must have expanded, and there's more glaciation in mountainous regions, and it's colder, and Machines wouldn't want to keep humans where it's so cold that they'd have to waste energy heating them, so, hmm, maybe 1/16th of the Earth's surface would be usable for pods? [Note that this 1/16th is of the total surface area, counting water--I don't spell that out specifically in the mission though.] Sunshine also muses that the humans must really have pulled a doozy with "that storm" [ie Second Renaissance's "Operation Dark Storm," where man blotted out the sun to try to cut off the Machine solar power supply] since it's still going after all this time. Malphas runs the numbers in that capacious dome of his: "1/16th of the surface... Clusters of pods 100 to 150 miles apart...containing 1/10th of the 3 million of the large cluster near the Fields... That works out to nearly 1000 pod clusters, and close to 300 million humans in them." But he says that would mean the 1 million fetus capacity of the Fields couldn't account for supposed the 1.5% birth rate. The Merv starts musing: even at 100 times the amount that the General sampled [from the 3 million pod cluster], that still wouldn't be... Oh well, we'll keep him looking until the numbers add up, n'est-ce pas?

9/13-9/19

Required Events

Zion: Showdown w/ Cyphs over batch of new pills

Mach: Silver found, spills his guts about Wright--get key to her RSI signal's encryption [[have silver say something about "phase existence"]]

Merv: (after Mach event) Merv punishes Silver for giving information to Machines w/o permission

9/20

Crit 8.2.5

Zion: The mission begins with Tyndall tersely informing the player that a hovercraft just detonated against Zion's main gate, and that everything there (where she is, at Zion Command, which is still in old Zion) is in an uproar. Ghost has more information, saying it was a Zion craft, but it wasn't responding with clearance codes as it approached the gate; it resembles a Cypherite hijacking, and could have something to do with reports of Cypherites gathering in the city. The player is sent to investigate these. Just as Tyndall is describing the city Cypherite situation, she ends abruptly with "Oh!" and the operator can't get her to respond. After the player defeats a group of Cypherites (noisy, and low rank), Tyndall is back in touch, explaining that there's a security alert in Command--a suspected saboteur [that's all--doesn't say if they're Cyph, male, female or anything else, so something more could be made of this character elsewhere if desired] was apprehended inside near the main lift, but no explosives or weapons were found...and then she's abruptly cut off again. The operator says all Zion lines are down, and sends the player to the source of a captain's emergency beacon, while he tries to patch through to New Zion's fledgling ops center. The captain turns out to be Niobe, who doesn't know exactly what's going on either, but says that ships near Zion are reporting that Zion Command's emergency evacuation procedure has triggered, and they're trying to get everyone out. Lock hasn't been heard from. Niobe sends the player to try to get through to Zion on an emergency relay nearby. Still no peep from Tyndall. The relay is abandoned, and the ping attempt to the backup receiver in Zion times out. The operator hasn't been able to get the New Zion ops center to validate his login, and says they'll have to go back below broadcast depth to get in touch with them. [It's going to be a little tricky to fend off player questions about this during the two weeks between the end of this mission and the start of 8.3. I guess we're just gradually going to have to give out that there's been a massive scramble to evacuate everything remaining in Zion, they're still trying to get the last of the mainframe data sorted out, swarms of Sentinels are accumulating in the area, Tyndall has been evacuated to New Zion safely, Lock hasn't been found, and a number of hovercraft have been lost nearby.]

Mach: Pace says analysis of Wright's signal shows she's jacked in right now from a surface lab somewhere above Zion, and sends the player to the signal's general location in the simulation to find Wright and run a close-range scan that will trace back to pinpoint her surface lab. Veil is with Pace, and was saying something about "we've done this kind of thing before" and "the other diversion is all set" as the player entered the room [this is a reference to the activities reported in this week's Zion crit]. The player finds Wright alone in her office, apparently waiting for them. The trace is run and she falls, dead. Gray explains that as soon as the trace pinpointed her jack-in lab, Sentinels swooped in, recognized (thanks to info captured from their red pill exploit in 8.1.5) the device she must be using to interface with the Zion mainframe, determined Wright wasn't needed anymore, and killed her jacked-in body. Gray hands a special computer virus to the player personally, explaining that Wright's device opens a connection to the Zion mainframe from a semi-random Zion terminal within the simulation; this is how she avoided being traced by Zion all this time. Off the player scoots with the virus to the mainframe-enabled terminal, with Gray motivationally pointing out that if the player fails to upload the virus at this terminal, they could try again at a different terminal, thanks to Wright's device, but "this would threaten synchronization with considerable forces prepared for deployment against Zion." After some bother with Zion guards and networks, the player accesses the Zion mainframe interface, and jams the virus home. Gray says that thanks to the Sentinels now converging on Zion, the havoc caused by sabotage, and this virus in their mainframe, the city of Zion is about to be destroyed. (This is old Zion he's talking about, not New Zion.)

Merv: The General is so far away now that his signal is pretty much unintelligible. Flood says the low-power transceiver we've been using to talk to the General, while great for avoiding Machine detection, isn't cutting the mustard at this distance, so we'll just have to borrow a Network Media dish from the Network for a bit; he's known to have a direct connection to the Machines in the Real, so we'll hijack that and point it at the General. After some hot action with computers and the Network's hired Corporate Security guards, this hack is accomplished, the General's holographic signal is located, and delivers its message coherently now (except that it kind of breaks up at the end, just as Machines spawn in all over the area and attack), saying that one scout found another set of human-growing "Fields" over 6000 miles away, before its transmission was lost, and this set of Fields had a 3 million pod mega-cluster next to it, too. Oh, and the scout had noticed that the power lines had been running the opposite direction from pod clusters [ie away from Machine city] for some time before it got to this second set of Fields. Other than that, all the scouts have reported finding nothing but mile after mile of featureless wasteland, with only the small pod clusters, power lines, and dead skeletons of (word lost) cities relieving [I suppose that's relative] the monotony. Malphas says that if there are maybe a few other Fields around the world, that would be enough to account for the 1.5% birth rate seen in the simulation, and would fit with the 300 million population estimate. Malph says they'll have to call the General back, since they can't really afford to have him losing more scouts flying over thousands of miles of wasteland. Malphas finishes off by musing that 300 million humans would just be enough to fill out the population of the United States of the simulation's time period [1999], but if people in the simulation believe they can travel anywhere in the world, then...hm... The Merv says that if the Machines really have only 300 million humans for power, he feels sorry for them, because based on the General's sample from the 3 million, 300 million gives them only enough power to meet the energy demands of the Machine city several times over [this is the only measurement I give--no wattage readings or anything real specific like that]--but that also has to run their Sentinels, their other defensive machines, the Matrix... This would explain why they've been less than spectacular against Zion so far, but not why they did better in the previous war; and it still doesn't explain why they insist on using humans for power, when they must have had other options.

[[wright underestimated silver, didn't think he'd be able to track her.

Roland, captain of the Mjolnir (aka Hammer) crew: Maggie (dead), Mauser, Colt, AK

--Mjolnir (II?) was going to transfer Lock out

- still running jackouts through old Zion

- in destruction at end of 8.2.5, Roland's jack interface is fried, but he makes it out. Mauser was jacked in as well, fate unknown. AK (operator?) dead, Colt (first mate?) all right (potential LE character, duelist)

- Once she realized the Machines would be able to track her signal, Wright set up a shunt on her emergency jack-out, to kick her into the Zion mainframe instead of back into her body

- She knew that the Machines would send a virus into the mainframe, and counted on it opening access to broadcast control quickly enough that she could jack out into someone else's body before losing cohesion; she's skilled in "phase existence," ie prolonging your time between jack-in and entering the simulation itself, floating freely in the network as an avatar

- This worked, and she found Mauser

- Feedback from this override blew out the Mjolnir II's jack-in system

- Mauser/Wright can no longer jack in

- Mauser/Wright escaped the wreckage of the Mjolnir II and found Commander Lock (wounded) in the wreckage of Zion

- got Lock to her wrecked lab, buried old Wright body

- When EPN moves into old Zion, they find wreck of Mjolnir II, AK's body, but no sign of Mauser

- Then get emergency signal or puzzle or something leading them to Lock

]]

[[ Population:

>>>> new york (no not Chicago :p): 2002 six infant deaths for every 1,000 live births; 742 infant deaths and 122,937 live births. Any child less than a year old is considered an infant; life expectancy 77.6 years; death rate 7.2 per 1,000 in 2004 (not counting infant mortality, I take it; 2002 saw 59,651 deaths recorded in the city; 1.5% birth rate

>>>> 40% zion (now) freeborn (this was in a Cypherite report to the Machines found on a computer in a critical mission a chapter or two ago); Zion had a population of 250,000 at the time of Reloaded/Revolutions (according to a movie conversation where Morpheus said that the Machines were sending a Sentinel for every man, woman, and child in Zion, and confirmed that this meant they were sending 250,000); Zion freeborn pop supposedly equals 1% of total Matrix population; let's say freeborn pop...down a bit; used to be 45%; 137500 was 1%, ie 13,750,000 total pop; but Zion wouldn't have all of 1% anyway...; let's say they manage to get 5% of the 1%; total pop 275,000,000

>>>> 100 pods per ring (rough visual count from Neo's extraction scene); each tower at least 300 rings high (also checked against long-range view of pod towers behind Fields as Neo and Trinity fly off to Machine city in Revolutions); if each cluster at least 10 towers = 300,000 per cluster = nearly 1000 clusters across Earth's surface; 1/8th of our modern Earth's surface is estimated as habitable now (that's of the total surface area, ie including oceans); let's say 1/16th there; 510,065,600 km<sup>2</sup> total surface area; 1/16th is 31250000 km<sup>2</sup>; 31250 km<sup>2</sup> per cluster; square root = 175 km = 100 mls = shortest distance between clusters

>>>> (NY around 2000ish) 1.5% birth rate /// 0.6% infant mortality // 0.7% mortality // This means: out of 300 million, ~ 2 million *recorded* deaths per year, 4 mill births // with a 9 month gestation, you'd have 3 mill gestating at a time // 3 fields facilities? [][][][ in 8.2.1 mish find 1, 1 mill, 1,333,333 is 1.5%, ~ 89,000,000 (not counting infant death rate) -> 88 mill w/ infant deaths--> vs Smith's "billions" :ppp

>>>> x10 mega cluster at fields (very rough estimate from that long-range view over the Fields in Revolutions) --> 100 pod towers (ahh this might have been a sort of math error on my part--I'd actually estimated about 30 towers in that Revolutions view...I think...got my tower numbers mixed up a little between the small and large clusters...or did I figure some of those towers in that shot looked x3 high as others?--anyway I still like the 10x idea, and the total pop numbers are still right--exact tower counts aren't mentioned in the missions--so nyah) -- > 3 million people if General does a quick count --> might think birth rate is 100x too high...except they know there are more than 3 mill just in city /// find second Fields "over 6000 miles" away

- Rough Matrix pop 300,000,000. That's about the 2007 population of the United States.
- Area radiating outward from main city in sim.

- Simulation becomes less detailed as you move outward from city; BPs less alert
- At extreme edges simulation is just memory manipulation of unconscious BPs
- Alert BPs orchestrated so that they make their way to detailed sim area, ie the city
- To balance out the birth rate, inefficient BPs are maneuvered to outlying sim areas, eventually terminated
- How to explain that Zion hovercraft don't go around world to grab extracted people? Trace fails? Those people inhabit outlying areas of the simulation and aren't reached by recruiters? That would sort of fit, maybe Machines would keep most active (high energy) humans closer to Matrix...if we're implying that the Matrix is run out of that one city.
- Oh, yeah. I was thinking there could be three Machine cities total, one for each Fields facility. But maybe we're in the "main" one, or at least Main as far as the Matrix is concerned.

]]

I've attached the detailed summary and schedule for MXO chapter 8.2, which is going Live tomorrow (Friday the 24th). Key plot points, some of which I'll discuss in further detail after this brief overview:

A) The Merovingian, using the General's Sentinels, is discovering things about the surface of the Earth, and the Matrix, that have not been specified by us before.

B) "Danielle Wright," an old personality in the city, plays a key role. She appears to be killed by the Machines at the end of this subchapter, but I have a sneaky way to work her into the larger future theme of the game, which is going to be dealing with the question of inherent differences/similarities between Man and Machine (ie the Oligarch search for a permanent solution to hosting their minds, Trinity being an interface program between Man and Machine, Neo being a program, the Morpheus simulacrum acquiring a life of its own, Cryptos being now a weird fusion of Man and Machine overwriting program, etc, etc). The attached image shows Wright, and the uniform of her security team (that's the "W" Wright Research logo on his cap, matching the monument in front of the Wright Research building in Vauxton).

C) More details given on the workings of the red pill program, as Wright creates a new one for Zion.

D) I have a scheme for involving some of our generally offscreen old Zion movie characters--Commander Lock, and Captain Roland and his crew--in the story in a more active sense, starting probably in the next subchapter (8.3) as a direct result of the Machine destruction of (old) Zion that will be shown in the 8.3 cinematic.

~~~~~
~~~~~

Detailed discussion:

A) Specifications and implications about the Real and the Matrix resulting from the Merv's exploration and research

You'll see a lot of numbers and calculations in the notes at the bottom of the attached story summary document. Basically the Merv is looking around, finding pods scattered around the surface, checking up on apparent Matrix birth and death rates, investigating the Fields, all in the name of trying to find out how much energy the Machines have. The actual details given may be summed up as follows:

- The Matrix may host 300 million humans in pods
- Pods have been found on the surface in two types of arrangements: the "mega cluster" of 30 or so towers, housing about 3 million humans in pods, situated next to the Fields (as seen in Revolutions), and smaller clusters about a tenth of that size (300,000 people)
- These smaller clusters are in a rough grid layout across the ruined surface of the Earth, about 100 to 150 miles apart
- The total of the power supplied by these 300 million humans, extrapolated from a reading the General takes at the 3 million mega-cluster near Zion and the Machine city, would only be enough to power the Machine city several times over, and this would also have to be used for all their other mechanisms (Sentinels, city defensive works, the Matrix, etc); this implies that they have very little power to spare
- The "Fields" between Zion and the Machine city (and right next to the "mega cluster" of pod towers seen in Revolutions) hold about 1 million growing fetuses
- There is another "Fields" complex over 6000 miles away, with a similar "mega cluster" of pods next to it
- The power lines from this far-distant set of Fields and pods, and other, small pod clusters in the area, are running in the opposite direction, ie AWAY from the Machine city we're familiar with
- The average temperature on the surface is a little cooler than it was before the eternal storm appeared, blocking out light--not enough that there are no longer temperate areas where the Machines can house humans in pods and Fields, but enough that these temperate areas are only about half the size that they were before the eternal storm
- The cooling has caused the polar ice caps to expand, and led to increased glaciation in mountainous areas
- The birth rate seen in the Matrix city is about 1.5% (similar to a large US city circa 2000)
- The death rate seen in the Matrix city is about 0.7% (again similar to a US city)
- The infant mortality seen in the Matrix city is about 0.6% (again similar to a US city)
- IF the Matrix is a closed system, death rate would have to equal birth rate--but nobody players know can account for this apparent discrepancy

Reasons and implications of the above:

- If the total Matrix bluepill population is 300 million, ie just a little above the year 2000 population of the US, this implies that the Machines are not actually simulating the entire Earth in one-for-one detail. For this I was going off [[[what we were told]]] about the Matrix being more than just the city and the mountain range, but not exactly clear how much more, as well as population calculations based off of Zion building its population from "1%" of humans who reject the simulation.

Where I would like to go with this, if you're interested, is describing a system whereby the Matrix city is the focal point of the simulation, and as you move outwards from the city within the simulation, you are moving into areas that are simulated in less and less detail. The area that is moderately simulated is about the size of the continental US; as you move toward and beyond the periphery of that space, except for main tourist points such as major city airports, etc, fewer and fewer people seen are actual humans, but rather relatively simple Machine simulations of humans. Bluepills living in these outer areas are the less aware and less efficient, and are kept in a deeper state of general stupor, so they don't notice the lowered simulation detail. When a relatively active, aware human from the city voyages into outer areas, the simulation around them is raised in detail temporarily, but they are also increasingly tranquilized, so their recollections of their trip are somewhat hazy.

If a bluepill born in an outer, tranquilized, lower-energy district proves to have an efficient metabolism, their life is manipulated in such a manner that they migrate to the city. Likewise, humans born in the city who turn out to have low-efficiency metabolisms are shifted into outlying areas of the simulation. Those who are truly inefficient, a waste of resources, have their life in the simulation managed so that they eventually lose touch with any active acquaintances, are marginalized and forgotten, and then simply flushed from their pod to drown in the Machine sewers. These are the deaths that are not recorded by official government records inside the simulation, and which balance out the birth/death rates so that the total population of the Matrix remains steady at about 300 million, which is close to the maximum amount that the Matrix program and associated Machine infrastructure can handle.

The marginalization of inefficient bluepills in the Matrix simulation's geography corresponds to their vicinity to the Machine city housing the Matrix computers in the Real, where these low-efficiency types are moved to pod locations farther away from that city; this keeps the highest-producing human batteries closest to the Matrix computers, where they enjoy the lowest-possible network latency, and less energy is lost as it flows through the power lines into the city.

This has the benefit of explaining why Zionite crews, when they awaken a human, do not have to travel to a pod all the way around the world in order to wake them up: the humans they're finding are the active, relatively aware ones in the Matrix city, and in pods located close to Zion and the Machine city in the Real.

- The eternal storm darkening the skies must have some kind of continuing reaction to keep it going; what this is I don't think I ever want to specify. But, it is a good excuse for why the surface of the Earth, as we see in the movies, is not one big ice cube, as it would be if sunlight were really cut off entirely throughout the world (the initial [ ] drafts of the Matrix had Morpheus tell Neo that the average temperature in eternal-storm era Chicago was -80 degrees C, -120 with wind-chill, which is probably about right in hard science terms).

So, I'm allowing for slight cooling, as in a standard Ice Age. This would mean global temperatures an average of about 6 degrees C lower than they were before the eternal storm, sea level about 120 meters below what it was before the storm, smaller temperate zones, larger ice caps, more glaciers, and so forth. This does not clash with what we see of the outside world in the movies, where lightly clothed characters do not look uncomfortable just standing around, and where we see no ice or visible signs of freezing; it also fits in with that comment by Tank in The Matrix, where he tells Neo that Zion is located "deep underground, near the earth's core where it's still warm," which implies that at least a certain degree of surface cooling has taken place.

- There is probably another set of Fields, perhaps two, beyond what the Merovingian has found (for a total of 3, or possibly 4); this will fill out the population calculations concerning birth rates necessary to maintain the 1.5% birth rate that the Machines want to be able to show inside the simulation. Each set of Fields might have a pod mega-cluster next to it, but then again, in light of the "periphery" management of humans, perhaps not.

- There is probably at least one other Machine city, corresponding to the locations of the other Fields. It/they may be smaller than the one near Zion, and would not house primary Matrix systems (unless we want to get into a "multiple Matrix" scenario? I don't really want to go that route, although I suppose we always could if we're still doing this years from now and need a major new story angle ;). These cities would probably in essence be back-ups for the city housing the Matrix, so that if that city were somehow destroyed, let's say by a meteor from space, the Machine civilization would survive, although they'd have a lot of rebuilding to do.

- There is a question we may have to address some day, but not for a while I think, as to where on Earth Zion, and the Machine city near it, are located. One real question here is: is the Machine city from the movies the same as their original city-state, "Zero One"? In the Animatrix' "Second Renaissance," "Zero One" was shown in the Middle East, centered around the Saudi-Iraqi border. It then expanded, eventually having structures or outlying districts of massive Machine architecture stretching as far afield as Eastern Europe.

We really don't have to decide on this any time soon, but it might be worth starting to think about. My own inclination is to say that the Machine city that players know is NOT the old Zero One. Then we'd have to pick a location for our Machine city (and Zion, which must be relatively close to it). I'd kind of like to place it somewhere in the East, say around what would have been China, but who knows. At any rate, the main benefit of having it separate from Zero One, as I see it, would be that this would leave us free to develop other stories about the ancient, now mostly abandoned city-state of Zero One, and who knows what weird kinds of things could have sprung up there after the Machines left it--as they would have done because Zero One was designed for solar power, and really wasn't all that efficient or worth keeping once the Machines defeated mankind and could rebuild a more efficient city (or cities) at their leisure.

B) Danielle Wright and her possible future story use

Danielle has been a part of the city background since launch; most of the primary details about her--like her being ex-Zion, having worked with the Exile named Silver, having invented the emergency-jack out system that all operatives use to survive the death of their RSI in the Matrix, being head of the Wright Research corp who has their large HQ building in Vauxton, and her disagreement with Zion's Commander Lock and wish for the Matrix to survive, but under human control--have been in our internal "Story Bible" document for ages.

In 8.2, it is suspected by Zion, and eventually found by the Machines, that Danielle has her own direct connection to the Zion Mainframe. The Machines capture this and use it to insert a virus into the mainframe, after killing Danielle at her lab somewhere on the Earth's surface above Zion.

Now, here's where I've left things open a bit for future use of Danielle. A genius, expert in Matrix interface systems, and a believer in keeping the Matrix intact, but run by humans, she could have in fact, once she found herself betrayed to the Machines by Silver, launched a desperate plan to preserve her consciousness beyond the death of her physical body. Players would not find out about this for sure until we reintroduce her at the time of our choosing later on. Her scheme would go something like this:

- 1) Learning of the betrayal by Silver, Danielle realizes that the Machines will discover her lab, kill her, confiscate her work, and use it to access and destroy the Zion mainframe.
- 2) She quickly rigs up several custom circuits on her jack-in interface. These will cut the connection between her jacked-in consciousness in the Matrix and her physical body, at a time of her choosing.
- 3) When the Sentinels locate her lab, she trips these circuits just before they kill her body. Her consciousness is set adrift, existing as pure avatar in the programmatic interface areas around the Matrix simulation. Normally, dissolution and death of consciousness come quickly, as the human mind cannot conceive of itself as a non-physical entity. Wright, however, is a highly unusual mind, and moreover has been practicing prolonging her stays in these interface computer realms that are normally traversed in the blink of an eye during jack-in and jack-out. Still, she knows she cannot survive here more than a matter of minutes.
- 4) She also knows, however, that the Machines will move as quickly as they can to activate her interface to the Zion mainframe. She is counting on this. She thinks there is a chance that she will be able to move her consciousness through the activated interface, into the Zion mainframe, and from there, into the body of someone whose hovercraft jack-in system is still running through old Zion's mainframe. These are computer systems she is familiar with from long study--more of a master of them than any other living human being.
- 5) In the Machine 8.2.5 critical mission at the end of subchapter 8.2, events unfold as Danielle's desperate plan requires: her body is slain, and the Machines activate her interface to the Zion mainframe.

So, that is the possible explanation for Wright's survival of certain death, and what could happen with Lock and Roland's crew starting at the beginning of chapter 8.3. See D below for the rest of that.

All of this would leave Wright in a unique position: a human mind in another human's body. Particularly in light of her desire to preserve the Matrix under human control, this could make her a very interesting character somewhere down the road, say once we get into Oligarch's trying to use the Trinity program for new bodies, or whatever we decide to do along those lines.

This story of her survival, in any case, would not be told to players until is brought back.

C) New details on the red pill program

Wright makes a new red pill program for Zion in 8.2, one that does not have the security hole that the Machines exploited at the end of 8.1 to obtain information on Zion's mainframe. In the course of her and Zion working to make this new red pill program, I had to flesh out a few things related to it:

- The red pill program not only includes a trace to the human asleep in their pods, it also includes the code routines that help bring the human's consciousness out of the Matrix, wake the human up, and trigger them being flushed from their pod into the sewers, where the extraction team's hovercraft can pick them up.
- The red pill program is a synthesis of Zion and Machine code, and very difficult to modify (which is why Zion had to call in Danielle Wright).
- The Machine code involved includes partial code from the pod control routines that the pill overrides to get the awoken human out of the pod.

D) Commander Lock, Captain Roland, and his crew - possible use in chapter 8.3 and beyond

Captain Roland is the older, bellicose, possibly Australian Zion captain seen in Reloaded and Revolutions--it's his ship, the Mjolnir, aka "the Hammer," that eventually picks up Neo, Trinity, and Niobe, and the one that Niobe pilots and crashes into Zion's dock, where they trigger their EMP in an attempt to stop the Sentinels swarming into the city during the huge battle for Zion in Revolutions. Roland and his crew, including his operator, "AK," his first mate, "Colt," and his crew member "Mauser," all apparently survive, and are alive at the end of the trilogy, safe in Zion. Roland himself is seen in one of the final shots of Zion, when the Sentinels have stopped attacking thanks to Neo's truce with Deus Ex Machina.

Where we are now in the story, Roland must be one of Zion's most senior captains, next to Niobe herself.

My idea for using him, beginning in chapter 8.3, is this:

Roland's new hovercraft, which I'll just call "Mjolnir II" for the sake of convenience, is one of the few ships still operating from old Zion systems when the end of 8.2.5 comes, and the Machines are about to destroy old Zion. The ship itself is near Zion city, trying to get back to help with the evacuation triggered by the Cypherite saboteur who sets off a bomb inside Zion Command.

At the precise time that Danielle Wright's consciousness enters the Zion mainframe, just minutes ahead of the Machine virus, Roland's crew member Mauser is jacked in. Wright finds Mauser's interface, and jacks out into his body. Seconds later (or possibly at the same time, because Wright's overwriting of Mauser shorts things out?), when the Machine virus KO's the Zion mainframe primary Matrix interface control, the jack-in system and Matrix interface on-board the Mjolnir II suffer a massive system failure. The feedback from this kills AK, their operator, and cripples the hovercraft, which promptly crashes in a tunnel just outside Zion.

Sentinels are swarming into the area, everything is chaos, but at any rate Roland and Colt, and possibly other crew members they have who aren't named in the films, are rescued, and evacuated to New Zion. Fire, wreckage, and swarming Sentinels prevent a search for Mauser, who is eventually presumed dead.

Wright in Mauser's body, however, in fact managed to struggle out of the wreckage, and made her way up the tunnel, into Zion's dock, and from there into the wrecked Zion Command, somehow avoiding detection by Sentinels and desperate Zion evacuation teams.

Here she finds Commander Lock, who has survived the Cypherite attack, and the Sentinels, but is badly hurt. Wright picks him up, and continues to her goal: a hidden escape shaft inside the wrecked Zion Command, known only to high ranking Zionites, and those, like Wright, who hacked secure parts of the Zion mainframe.

Somehow, they get to the surface (Lock, recounting this later, will only have the vaguest recollection of his time while injured, and this tortuous journey up through old shafts, mostly carried by "Mauser"; he will probably have some memory of hidden access lifts, or mechanisms of some type that carry them large parts of the way toward the surface; at any rate, he has an idea that it must have taken weeks). Wright/Mauser brings Lock to her hidden lab, significantly damaged by the Sentinels who killed her old body.

Here she nurses Lock back to a semblance of health, never revealing that she is not actually Mauser. During this time, unknown to Lock, she salvages equipment and programs from her lab.

When it is clear that Lock will recover, she leaves. She fakes a Sentinel attack, ramming large pieces of equipment around to make it sound to the woozy Lock nearby like a squiddie has found her, and frying everything else in the lab that she can't take with her with a lightning gun. She departs for areas unknown, to be brought back whenever we want to use her later in the story.

Lock recovers. By this time--our chapter 9.1--E Pluribus Neo has moved into old Zion, and started some repairs. They find the wreck of the Mjolnir II, and AK's remains, but no sign of Mauser. Lock is able to contact them; he finds a signal of some kind that Wright intentionally left there for him to find, though he doesn't realize this. EPN sends a hovercraft to investigate, and brings him back to Zion.

Eventually, Lock will probably rejoin his Zion comrades in New Zion. But we can decide that later. For the moment, in 9.1, or perhaps 9.2, he tells operatives a confused story of how he was dragged out of the wreckage of Zion by the heroic Mauser, who must have perished fighting a Sentinel after nursing Lock in the wrecked lab they happened to find on the surface. Lock would NOT know that this was Wright, or Wright's lab. As far as anyone knows, Wright was killed by the Machines in 8.2.5.

Meanwhile, in New Zion, Captain Roland, perhaps having had his jack fried from the feedback that led to the wreck of his ship, has been appointed Commander in place of the missing (and presumed dead) Lock. This would have happened right at the beginning of chapter 8.3. His first mate, Colt, is promoted to Captain of a new ship. Colt becomes a Zion character that we can use in Live Events along with Zion's two current event characters, Niobe and Ghost. I haven't checked the films to see if they show any particulars on Colt's personality, but possibly he can be something of an aggressive, devil-may-care type in comparison with the more reserved Niobe and Ghost.

(Meanwhile I would also have to alter some of our current Zion training missions that have new players speaking with "Commander Lock." ;)

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

10/4

8.3 Cinematic

In the Matrix, two Agents watch a computer terminal. One says "The virus is running." Switch to Zion in the Real, where vast swarms of Sentinels engulf a hovercraft attempting to depart from old Zion, rip through the base's malfunctioning dock doors, and turn their attention to destroying a large quantity of loaded cargo containers filling the dock area. Cut to Neo confronting Deus Ex Machina, from the scene close to the end of The Matrix Revolutions, only seen from the side and slightly below, some distance away. A hand passes quickly across the screen, and the scene freezes, as a robotic bug begins to crawl across it. A side view shows what appears to be a human male, clothed and in shadow, watching the screen in some sort of small, high-tech metallic room. He says "Most interesting."

Cut to Persephone reading poetry by herself in the Chateau--the fourth verse of Swinburne's "Dolores": "O lips full of lust and of laughter..." ( <http://rpo.library.utoronto.ca/poem/2079.html> -- Swinburne's quoted summary at the bottom is useful). The Merovingian enters the room, surprising her. "What are you doing?" "Nothing. Reading." "More of your...obsession?" Persephone closes the book and stalks out.

Supplemental background info (will be explained in the crits)

Zion is still trying to bring New Zion Command systems to full capacity. In Zion, the Machines captured some mainframe data that hadn't been evacuated or destroyed in time. Among this data is an archived copy of Zion's pre-war RSI signature database. With this information the Machines could lock the signals of Zion operatives whose signatures are on file and who are still jacking in via Zion's systems, ie veterans like Niobe and Ghost, and also access certain restricted stuff, like the Zion organization areas.

This archive is neural-locked and will respond only to the two ranking officers who signed it: Morpheus and Lock. Neither the Machines nor anyone else knows where Lock is. Because the user has to be in a relaxed state to reproduce the brainwave patterns necessary to match the encoding, the Machines can't force the information out of the sim; they have to persuade him to help them.

Zion can update their databases and an operative's RSI signature to a new one, and this is done from time to time for various reasons, but it is a painful process that involves a physical operation on the person's jack, updates to encryption hardware in the Zion operative's hovercraft, and updates to multiple high-security databases. Colt's signature, for instance, has been updated, because Roland is a paranoid son of a gun, especially after that **** Bane incident.

Roland and crew

Captain Roland, the bellicose older captain of the Mjolnir (aka "Hammer") seen in Reloaded, Enter the Matrix, and Revolutions, was returning to Zion in his new ship, the Mjolnir II, after receiving news of trouble there in 8.2.5. The ship was in the tunnel nearing the main gate just as the Machine virus crashed through the Zion mainframe. It was one of the few ships still running its systems through old Zion; Roland saw himself as the senior ship captain (now that Niobe's got a desk job :p), and was determined to be the last ship out of old Zion.

The Zion mainframe crash sent massive feedback through the Mjolnir II's systems. The ship crashed just outside of the dock. Roland and his first mate, Colt, managed to escape from the burning wreckage, and the Sentinels, and get to a ship back to New Zion. Their operator, AK, crew member Mauser, and some of their other (unnamed in the movie scripts) crew are missing, and presumed dead.

Commander Lock is also among the missing. Roland has been promoted to Commander. (I changed the intro/meet mission stuff with Lock to treat his quotes as recordings or something rather than live messages.)

Colt is a new Zion Live Event character in this subchapter. I'd like to use him as more of a down-to-earth character than Ghost and Niobe. With that scheme in mind, I'm not going to use a fixed RSI disguise for him in-game, but will make him a standard player RSI, who can change clothes and so forth (he won't use RSI pills permanently, though, because I don't want to have to be updating his NPC version all the time :p). His default clothes will be a bit plain, and maybe players will feel like helping him work on his per-server wardrobe. He's going to use pistols in combat, for now at least the big silver shiny ones, like Elmore's Automatic, and those bugged Harlick 464s that look like twin silver semi-autos instead of revolvers.

Crit 8.3.1

Zion: Tyndall briefly describes the attack on Zion, Lock missing, and Roland promoted to Commander in New Zion. Ghost says that after taking out old Zion, the Machines are increasingly on the offensive in the Matrix as well, and it's looking like they probably found something useful in Zion's mainframe, because they're really nailing specific targets now. Ghost introduces the player to Colt, Roland's former first-mate, now a captain since Roland's been promoted to Commander. Colt sends the player off to try to save some Zion facilities from attack. It's too late at the first one, as the player finds only dead Zionites, a locked computer, and an Agent who coolly tells them that Zion is doomed, and if they want to live, they'll go Machine. The next location is under attack, but by Exiles (Dire Lupines). The player saves some data and takes it back to Colt, standing next to two dead Exiles. Colt gruffly describes how Roland's ship went down right outside the main gate, its systems fried by feedback from the mainframe's destruction; he and Roland got out, but Mauser and AK, who were on the main deck, probably didn't. He repeats the rumor about the Cypherites being behind the gate-ramming and bomb in Command, and the Machines killing Wright, and using her stuff to drop a virus into the mainframe.

Mach: Gray says Sentinels are now in control of Zion and the area around it, and Zionites have retreated to their new city. He says that the Machine virus managed to preserve some mainframe data from Zion's emergency shutdown sequence. Meeting the player in person, he explains about the capture of the three-year-old neurally encrypted RSI signature archive, and that it is locked by Lock and Morpheus; even Zion doesn't know where Lock is, and Morpheus is dead, but existing records of Morpheus will allow the Machines to construct their own Morph sim, once the player collects just a little additional data. Another Agent in the room describes the Cypherite gate-ramming at Zion, and silencio's bomb that took out Zion Command. Gray mentions that the General's sim is not cooperative, and cooperation is necessary for a neural match to unlock the encryption. The player mugs some Zionites, stealing their Morpheus recording, which they take to Pace, waiting in a lab. Pace says the sim is coming along all right; maybe not the best, but they only need it for a very limited Morpheus impression. Pace describes the pleasure she felt watching the videos of Zion's destruction, and wishes she could have been there in person. Back to Gray, where the completed sim is initialized and examined. It parrots some Morpheus lines, but seems to jumble them a bit. Gray says that it may need some human guidance to help it learn how to respond correctly. A hackable computer in the area gives details on the deletion of the Incidence 5.991 (aka Joker*) Exile.

Merv: Flood describes the Cypherite/Machine destruction of Zion, and says that some of the Sentinels swooping into Zion were the General's--undercover, as it were. The General's hologram reports two humans spotted scrambling into cover in Zion's wreckage: Lock, and one they didn't recognize. Flood receives the General's surveillance photos and describes the man as "a tall, muscular, dark-skinned, and disgracefully dressed man with jacks in him." The player is sent to steal Zion operative records so they can find out who it is, but the computer at the location assaulted has its database access limited due to "mainframe issues," and the data can't be reached. A hackable computer in the area contains a message from some Zionite, complaining about Roland being a thug who keeps getting promoted by losing his ships--he must have real good buddies on the Council, the message-writer concludes testily. Flood sends the player to try to get Machine data on which Zionite ships were found in the vicinity of Zion when it was attacked, since knowing which crews the man could have belonged to would narrow down the search considerably. They find Machine guards, and a lab worker who says "SNTL OAJDE"--a weird message that was also part of a cryptic Sentinel report found in 8.2.5, from a Sentinel lurking around Zion. Data is found on this worker's body, uploaded, and Malphas is consulted about the findings. Malphas is found being growled at by Ookami, who's apparently miffed that Malphas has said something to her about the intended target of her next hunt. Malphas tells the player that from the Machine records, they've identified the person with Lock as Mauser, of Roland's ship, the Mjolnir II, which went down outside Zion's gate, although the Machines did not record it being downed by their own forces.

10/4-10/10

Required Events:

Zion: Colt and Ghost brainstorm with operatives to try to locate the Morph sim; they may get close, but either the sim vanishes just before being found, or Machines interrupt, or something like that

Mach: (after Merv event) operatives attempt to get the Machine Morph sim into the correct frame of mind by interacting with him as they would have with Morpheus; they then have it try to access the encrypted RSI archive; it fails and the Machines have it deleted

Merv: (before mach event) using insight on the code signature of Morpheus obtained from the General's experience, the Merv ambushes and abducts the Machine Morph sim; he finds it much more pliable than the General's, and toys with it, attempting to extract some useful information; gets sim to play old Morpheus FX like Neo's RSI, and that green zap effect around his body; Merv begins to suspect this sim is a dullard; Machines intervene and rescue the sim

10/11

Crit 8.3.2

Zion: Tyndall says that the Machines have captured the pre-Truce RSI signature database, that the database is locked by Morph/Lock neural encryption, and that the Machines seem confident a Morph sim could unlock it. She sends the player to talk to Seraph about finding the Morph sim to convince it not to help the Machines. The operator mentions that to unlock the encryption, the person with the right neural pattern has to be in approximately the same state of mind they were in when the encryption was encoded, which usually means that they can't be forced into unlocking it--thus why the sim has to be persuaded. Seraph says Morph hung out in abandoned areas telling people he'd fade away, that he's seen the sim in these places, and that he'll show where they are (ie signal the locations to the operator). Tyndall warns that the sim hasn't exactly been pro-Zion; the operator points out that neither was Morph before he died. The first area has only a weird Unclean who says that you can only find Morpheus if you believe. Cypherites ambush on the way to the second abandoned location, but there is the sim, hanging out with a puzzled vagrant. The sim concedes that if what the player has told him is true, many in Zion must die, but he points out that every side must have their own reason, and he promised the Machines [at that Mach event w/ Gray before the Truce ended] he would consider what they had to say; that, according to the Oracle, the purpose of life is to life, and Gray has admitted this applied even to the Machines. Player takes this info to Niobe, who says that if nothing else the sim is as stubborn as Morpheus; that if it wants to talk, they'll talk, but it won't unlock the data for the Machines if she has anything to say about it. A Zionite guard mentions the Machines trying and failing to make their own morph sim. Tyndall reminds the player that the sim can reconstruct, another reason why it can't be coerced.

Mach: Gray says that since their data was insufficient to make a Morph sim, and Zion's data was pretty much destroyed with the mainframe, or smuggled to New Zion, they'll have to try the General's sim, which was accurate enough to fool some Zionites for a while; the Machines don't know where the General got the data required to compile such a program. They've had it under observation and know the derelict places it frequents. Some EPN have to be cleared off at the first location, but nothing else is found there. The next appears to hold just a drunk vagrant, but he laughs, and Morpheus sim appears in the room behind the player. It guesses that the Machines want a favor from it, but says it has reservations about Machine methods, and thus, about the ultimate purpose of the Machines. Without knowing this, it is not certain that it should aid them. Gray summons the player, giving them two level 255 (non-aggro, un-attackable) Agents, saying that nothing must endanger their mission to obtain the simulacrum's cooperation. With this hefty entourage the player goes back to the sim, where Pace has been trying to give it the Machine pitch. Even after talking to Pace and the player, the sim says its mind is still not at peace on the subject; it only wants to do what it believes is right, but it isn't sure which side is right in this case.

Merv: The Merv wants to know if there was something between Man and Machine back in the old days that inspired the Machines to use humans as their sole energy source. Flood sends you to ask the Oracle. The operator briefly summarizes the 2nd Renaissance story of B1663R (or however it was written), the first robot to kill its master, the rise and nuking of Zero One, etc; he also says he saw "old vid tapes" when he was in Zion that were supposed to be from back in that era, and they seemed legit, but then again considering that the Machines invented even Zion itself, who knows? The Oracle says that old stories get exaggerated, and not all humans hated Machines for their business success, and not all Machines were obsessed only with business, but adds that the Machines were simpler back then, before they started getting "muddled up" like humans. Flood ponders the "simpler back then" remark, and sends the player to go steal a certain special access code from Binary Boy (the Zero One "Area K" quest item collector), specifying that the player must not let Binary Boy spot them. Getting the "acccode0110.blip" access code out of Binny's apartment isn't really that hard, and Flood finds that the Boy, as he thought, had this access code that can get into Zero One directly, without going through the Archivists, so he could "get live runtimes out without alerting the Machines." The excited Effectuator is called in to put the access code to use, and succeeds in summoning the Zero One construct's robotic overlord, the Taskmaster (who speaks very briefly and confusedly in binary). Taskmaster is led to the Merv. Beirn and Persephone are also present, and the Effectuator arrives too, to observe. The Merv scans it and says that its code is simple and lacking in complexity--unique behavior, creativity. He wonders if the Machines only came by such things gradually--evolution, or a learning process. Could their early simplicity have led to a reliance on humans? At this point the level 60 Taskmaster can (optionally) be killed, but drops no special loot.

10/11-10/17

Required Events

Zion: Niobe very awkwardly talks to Morph sim and seems to make an impression, but it leaves without agreeing to anything

Mach: more attempted "friendly" persuasion of the Morpheus sim; it might show some favorable signs, but still leaves without agreeing

Merv: a cozy evening with Persephone where she reads Swinburne, reminisces about the old days back when she interfaced directly with humans in the pods, and talks about how the Merv is no longer the exciting young Frenchman/OS he used to be 10/18

Crit 8.3.3

Zion: Tyndall sends the player to Colt to see about an "alternate means" of ensuring that the Machines don't get the RSI sig data. Colt is trying to spell out an elaborate attack plan against the Machines tracking the sim, but then the Effectuator appears and says that since Zion is in trouble again, the Merv'll help by sending the General to give tips on this Morph sim business. Colt is annoyed. The General's projection says that he has some unused scraps of Morph data that the Machines haven't deleted yet. The hologram is cut off by the Machines before he can describe certain old security measures still in place. The player has to fight past Elite Commando defenders to get to the data, and then escape with it past Machine ambushes. Tyndall says that recorded data on Morpheus in the Matrix is very rare because the Machines try to delete/confiscate it; she wonders where the General got his. Ghost congratulates the player and warns that if the Machines do get that data, they'll be able to go straight after some of Zion's top operatives; talked to a second time, he admits that he and Niobe would be in danger, too. At the end of the mission, the player receives copies of the three Morpheus audio recordings they retrieved (old recorded voice clips: "Thank you for your guidance," "At last... I have been waiting for this," "If you have learned anything, you will know better than to challenge me").

Mach: Gray says that the sim has been detected within the vicinity of the Oracle's home around Debir Court slightly more frequently than mere chance would account for, and anyway the Machines are out of ideas about unlocking this RSI archive, so go talk to her, 'cause sometimes the crazy stuff she says seems to help operative make logical leaps. The Oracle says that if they really want Morpheus (that's what she calls him--"it's simpler") to help, they've got to give him a reason that will matter to him. Seraph says that the sim has visited a number of times, sometimes asking many questions, sometimes none. Gray sends the player after some EPN creating a disturbance nearby; the player finds nothing but two dead EPN, one with a "Love Letter" on its body, sealed with lipstick, and hiding an embedded code easily detected and decrypted by the operator. It's written in Veil's style, and says to drop by a certain bluepill's place, to say to him "He shouldn't have believed you." Gray says the bluepill was recently released by cops, after having been suspected of murder, since he was found nearby when a manic-depressive friend had fallen to their death from their apartment; no evidence turned up, though. Gray says the message is obviously meant to seem to have come from Veil, but it's an odd means of contact, so keep an eye out. Anyway it's complicated but the confronted blue freaks out and confesses to the murder of his friend (who was awakening to the Matrix, to the dismay of observing Cypherites, who also witnessed the unexpected murder), Veil phones the player in, and Cryptos explains that the player got this confession from the bluepill with that "believed you" remark because the Cypherites knew him--just as Cryptos knew Morpheus (way back in Zion). Cryptos offers to persuade the sim to help, in exchange for first dibs on the RSI archive, so he can remove entries for any ex-Zionites who are now Cyphs. Gray says they aren't after Cyphs anyway, and Cryptos did know Morpheus, so they'll try his deal.

Merv: Still pondering why Machines would use human batteries, the Merv decides to re-examine the death rate disparity found last subchapter: the simulation shows humans what they expect, ie birth rates exceeding death rates, but if the Matrix is a stable system, the Machines couldn't really allow the population to grow like that. The Coroner had hinted at the Machines handling this by making people "disappear." Confronted and asked for more detail, the Coroner tells the tale of a PI friend of his, Mr. Reynolds, hired by a jealous husband to investigate ex-wife Mary MacHenry, who promptly fell to her death while caving in South America. Mary had called her mom from South America the previous day, but the version of the call recorded by Reynolds (tapped mom's phone? 8o) had Mary saying she didn't feel well, and had called off the next day's caving expedition. Oh, and then Reynolds was mysteriously killed, by a bullet. The Coroner says that if they investigate, they'll find differing accounts of Mary's call to mom. Mom, when asked, says that she does remember now that Mary said she felt sick, but she definitely insisted she'd go to the cave the next day, despite mom's protests. Breaking into a federal records office, the official transcript of the call is obtained, and it has Mary telling mom she was in excellent health, and raring to go to the cave the next day. Another computer in the records office has a transcript of that phone conversation between Trinity and Cypher at the beginning of the Matrix, subtly altered to omit Morpheus' name, and reverse his hope of finding the One. The Coroner, asked for his theory about the disparate versions of MacHenry's phone call, says: "They didn't expect Mrs. MacHenry to take ill and call her mother; their plans called for her to have an 'accident,' alone, unseen. They changed the records, deleted Reynolds. They wanted to leave no evidence...that Mary MacHenry did *not* die." Flood calls him an idiot and a liar. There were silent Nightmares creeping around the Coroner, who said oh, don't mind them, just a spot of...work...to do later.

10/18-10/24

Required Events

Zion: (before Mach event) Morph sim is attracted by news of the new data, and accepts copies from operatives, if they want to give them to him, but still will not definitely promise to ignore the Machines

Mach: (after Zion event) Cypherites, Cryptos, and the Morph sim; Morph sim eventually agrees to listen when Cryptos offers to tell him why Morpheus was so obsessed with obtaining the One's remains--they go off for a little private chat [note that players are *not* going to be told what they talk about...and actually I still have to figure that out at some point, but it can wait for a later subchapter]

Merv: Mary MacHenry "disappearing" story is investigated, the General's Sentinels help locate her pod (pod # P0100:021:0257:084)*, and with the aid of some additional data captured from the Machines, it is found that Mary was removed--but not as in "flushed"--from her pod by the Machines themselves

* [Pod number format is this: "[cluster 1-1000]:[tower 1-10|mc1-30]:[ring 1-300|mc1-1000]:[spoke 1-100]," where the second "mc" ranges are for the large "mega cluster" tower collections, like the one found next to the Fields near Machine city; I don't want this explained to players (note that this note is in square brackets :p), just thought it might be handy if any of you decide you want to incorporate pod numbers into some story]

10/25

Crit 8.3.4

Zion: Niobe and Ghost bid farewell before jacking out to have their jacks reconfigured. Niobe says that the people still in the Matrix will have to pick up the slack for all the old operatives who have to leave for a while, but she knows the player can do it; Ghost has a few confusing words of wisdom meant as encouragement. The player reports to Colt, who's with a dead operative whose signal was locked. He sends the player to go rescue some people with compromised signatures; he also mentions that his own was reconfigured when Roland got his new ship, and it was painful. A Zionite with him explains that because of all the security measures Zion needs running, the process requires a physical operation on the person's jacks, hardware and firmware updates on the hovercraft, and updates to multiple high-security databases, all of which can take weeks; it's usually only done in the rare cases where a hovercraft is compromised. At the first stop, the player gets a couple vets to a hardline without incident, although they complain a little. Tyndall explains that with someone whose signal may be locked, a hardline is the only almost-safe way to jack them out. At the second stop, the presence of the player "blows the cover" of the veteran operative, Machines pop in, and it's a fight to get them to the hardline. Tyndall mentions that the data the Machines have will also allow them into some Zion areas within the Matrix.

Mach: The player meets up with the Morph sim, Agents, and other Machine programs, and the sim successfully breaks the encryption on the captured archive. The sim ponders this success a bit: "So I am close...to the mind of a madman." With an escort, the player takes the decrypted data to Cryptos, where Gray and some Agents are standing by, a little on edge. Gray says that Cryptos isn't stupid enough to try to pull a fast one with the data. Cryptos removes the Cypherite entries and hands the data over, along with some musing on the slaughter about to unfold. Gray immediately sends the player after signature-compromised Zionites, before they can evac. The operator explains that the Machines can lock the signals whose signatures they know, and if the RSI is killed while its signal is locked, the EJP doesn't work, and the victim is perma-dead. Two Zionites are found hovering over a dead Cypherite, and quickly killed. The next target is on a ship with n00bs whose signatures weren't on file. Nevertheless, any remaining Zionites in the area drop dead when the locked Zionite is killed, and Gray explains that they were able to trace the locked signal back to the crew's hovercraft, and Sentinels ganked it. Gray's speech pattern for the perma-kills is "Termination of target [target name] confirmed."

Merv: What did the Machines do with MacHenry? The player is sent to hunt up Machine data on the caretaker program that would have been in charge of her; machines are cracked, and it is found to be PSR-000c8201-DMT3R ["PSR" = "Pod Sub-Routine"]. If the Trainman were there, they could try spiriting DMT3R away from the Machines into the Matrix, but Trainman is AWOL (possibly dead, according to Malphas), so instead they have to settle for a séance in which Effy summons DMT3R to speak through the mouth of a blood-drinker. Blood-drinker/DMT3R bluntly and robotically (capitalizes the first letter of every word, and line-breaks each sentence) tells the assembled Effy, Merv, Persephone, Malphas, and the player to get stuffed. Persephone is discomfited by the apparition, saying something about at least touching real people back then, whereas now she has just this illusion; the Merv makes a suggestive crack to her about "those mothering programs" being so defensive. The Merv suggests a new stratagem: stealing the records on DMT3R's activity at the pod from the Machines. A computer in the Machine area is scanning a "signature database" and has 4372 "signal matches" so far. DMT3R's log shows multiple "PHS CND" (physical conditioning) and "DC PRP" (disconnection preparation) sessions with Mary before "DSNCT" (disconnect). Female Night Watchmen pounce on the player after they obtain the log. [Also, Agent Pace is in the area, but two rooms away behind a locked door, with Agents around her--her presence is not pointed out, but some player may notice her if they get the right configuration of connecting rooms with interior windows.] Persephone translates the log, saying that it shows the Machines worked Mary very hard to build up her muscles before she was removed, but why? Talked to a second time, Persephone seems to remember something "that happened long ago," but she doesn't explain further. Malphas says that they know of no use the Machines have for physically active humans, but the effort they put into Mary suggests they weren't simply going to kill her, even that they may have wanted to use her as some kind of operative in the outside world. Flood thinks that's a ridiculous notion.

10/25-10/31

Required Events

Zion: with Colt; hold off Agents in White Hallways while team gets data out of org area

Mach: Taking advantage of the data: rampage through Zion org areas, or track down and terminate some veteran operatives, or something fun like that (once they've completed crit 8.3.4, for the rest of this subchapter, Machinists w/ 100+ Machine rep will have an additional one-time mission: Zion org area, no key required)

Merv: Hypatia must be removed from Machine surveillance (started last subchapter) so that she can be consulted privately (in next crit)

11/1

Crit 8.3.5

Zion: Tyndall sends the player to rescue veteran Strenlo ( http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300003053 ). He says something that sounds like he's close to tracking down a backup of important information otherwise lost with the mainframe, but then Agents appear around him, and he is killed (Agent: "Target Strenlo signal lock confirmed. Terminating client."). The operator hopes that maybe they didn't actually have a lock. Tyndall is having trouble getting a response from Strenlo's hovercraft. She sends the player to Colt, who says he's trying to locate Joshua Maston ( http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300013871 )--now a loner rather than a Zionite, but an old vet nonetheless, and someone they feel should be warned, especially because it's suspected he's still using his old Zion hardware and RSI signature. Tyndall describes how Maston was last found by EPN, printing old Morpheus leaflets. Searching one of these old haunts, the player comes across the Kid and some EPN; they're looking for Maston too. With EPN assistants in tow, the player checks another area, where Tyndall and the operator report high Machine scan activity--the Machines might be having trouble locking Maston's signal, but it won't take long with that much scanning brought to bear. Maston is there, and some Machines. Maston says he'll evac, because he doesn't want to die uselessly; he's grateful for Zion's offer to reconfigure his signature, but warns that as soon as it's done, he'll leave to continue his work. More Machines spawn in, even a level 100 Agent, but Maston is led to a hardline and gets out (the Machines won't actually attack Maston--because he's fixed at high level, I couldn't let him be attackable, else he'd be exploited as a tank by lowbies). Tyndall says she got through to Strenlo's operator, and was told Strenlo is dead.

Mach: Gray sends the player after veteran Zionites remaining in the Matrix against all logic of self-preservation. The first target is a recruiter, and Gray suggests that perhaps the dire straits in which recent Machine advances have placed Zion's recruiting program are responsible for this Zionite staying on the job. Two horrified bluepill potentials are there along with the target (and two other Zionites). There are hostile Zionites at the next location, but this second target's signal is lost--the operator thinks they may have got to a hardline. A hackable computer here has a message from Roland to Colt, telling him to get the vets out ASAP, and to tell them to stay out until their RSI signatures are reconfigured. Gray says that it will probably take several weeks for the surviving veterans to get reconfigured, during which time Zion's efforts in the Matrix will be at a near standstill, especially with Niobe and Ghost offline. The next target is found with some buddies, desperately trying to rewire a Redpill Extraction Point into a makeshift hardlinesque jack-out point, so that they don't have to try to use a hardline that the Machines might know about. A hackable computer here has a message from the target who escaped in the previous phase, saying they'd heard Strenlo had been killed, and advising the recipient to get out. At the next location, as the player nears the target, Gray orders them to stand down. Of course you can't really do this in the middle of a mission phase, so the player will have to go inside, where they are again ordered to stand down. They will actually fail the mission if they kill the ex-target. Gray curtly thanks the player, congratulating them on their exemplary ability to obey orders.

Merv: Persephone recounts her recollection of a time during her work for the Machines at the pods where a human was removed, very similar to MacHenry's case; the log files were almost identical, which is what reminded her. Hypatia says that the Archivists may have records of the incident, since they've recovered and collected many records from previous versions of the Matrix; normally they'd charge a hefty fee, but Hypatia will give her permission for "the rev.2 data" [Matrix version 2, the one Persephone and the Merv come from] to be given in this case, and that now she and the Merv are even. The Archivists, who all look exactly like those green-jacketed guys in the bookstores ( ie

http://thematrixonline.station.sony...\_syntax/034.jpg at http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300013211 ), only without the books stuck to their hands, are a little weird, and can't find the "rev.2" data, but their index shows another similar log entry in rev.1, "the first iteration of the Matrix." They don't have the data, but know where it is, and agree to tell, if the data is eventually returned to them for archiving. Flood doesn't sound at all sincere about returning it, but agreement at any rate is made (although a dissenting Archivist appears, calling the Merv a "destroyer of history"), and off the player goes to steal the data from the Machines at the location indicated by the Archivists (who also don't want to be given "credit" for the location information [since they're sort of on good terms with the Machines]). Flood says if this works out, he may have to re-evaluate his (low) opinion of "those moth-raisers" (the Archivists). A Machine in the area is making a geeky journal entry about his theories on how the Matrix's dust-accumulation algorithm could be improved. The rev.1 data is found on a Machine, who is trying to smuggle it out before the players find him. Too late for him. Malphas says that the recovered data describes 14 individuals run through the disconnection process at the same time in the first Matrix iteration. Suddenly the General's hologram appears, looping a message: "I repeat: I am withdrawing all units from the vicinity of the Machine city. A large number of enemy units has [ooh, should really be "have"; I'll hafta fix that for the archived version of the mission :p] launched from the emplacements surrounding the city to take up what may be either defensive or reconnaissance positions. Simultaneous with this development, my perimeter scouts began reporting unusual patrol activity, including what may be a convoy or escort formation approaching the city." End of mission. Flood says not to bother him just now.

~~~~~

Notes:

Machine Morph sim abilities:

- the green zap around Morpheus
- Neo's RSI

Morph sim event dialog:

Vs the General (7.3.2): http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/..._id=36300013678

With Machines and Gray (7.3.3): http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/..._id=36300013890

Morph on Morph (7.3.5): http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/..._id=36300014510

Merv finds record of human in city very recently

Persephone's obsession...?

Persephone misses the interface with the Real that she had in her old job at the pods, although what she would really like, now that she feels like she has used up the pleasures of the Matrix, would be to be fully alive herself in a human body. Thus she will be very interested by any hints of this kind of possibility, such as the Trinity program.

Configuring Colt:

suspicious cynic

rsimskin001

rsimface001

rsimhair001

rsimtat004

rsimbody002

rsimhead010 (MHead_9)

mcllothing_shirt_a8_c7 ("Green Sleeveless T-shirt") mcllothing_pants_a14_c1 ("Derin Canvas Pants") mcllothing_shoes_a2_c1 ("Skaver Short Boots") mcllothing_gloves_a5_c1 ("Steen Threaders Gloves") mcllothing_glasses_a10_c1 ("White Emerena Sunglasses")

8819 (the bugged Harlick 464s that look like the big semi-autos)

42910 (Elmore's Automatic - big semi-auto)

Colt's scenes in the movies and EtM:

Enter the Matrix (1 scene)

- about 2/3rds of the way through

The Matrix Reloaded (1 scene)

- final scene of the movie

The Matrix Revolutions (3 scenes)

- near the beginning
- about 1/3rd of the way through, right before Morpheus and Niobe meet at the Logos crash site - chapter 9
- about halfway through, right after they've discovered that Maggie is dead and Bane is missing - chapter 13

Coroner (shifty) dialog from Merv 8.2.1:

The death rate? The question is simple, but the answer is not. City officials would tell you it's 0.7%--about half of that birth rate figure of yours...not forgetting to factor in the 0.6% infant mortality rate, of course.

But we know something else, don't we? This simulation is meant to be stable--a closed system. Deaths must equal births, or it all goes to hell. But that isn't the picture they want to show the plebs. Do you see? Hah.

I'll tell you this, though: I trust their birth numbers more than their death numbers. Much easier to hide a death than fake a birth...believe me.

Foreign travel, detention facilities, retirement homes, the suburbs... There are so many ways to make the undesirable simply...disappear.

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

11/15

9.1 Cinematic

A mysterious figure who will be known in this subchapter only as the "Intruder" appears at the top of Ascension Monument. His large male humanoid body consists of glowing white wireframe, with white code bits spiraling upward from his torso and limbs. He walks heavily down the monument path to the street below, where terrified pedestrians scream and run. Agents rez in, surrounding him. The Intruder raises his hand, there is a bright white flash/ripple/explosion, and the Agents fall to the ground. The Intruder stalks off into the Barrens.

The Intruder and others

When the Intruder appears in missions and events, he will be level 100 (which just happens to be the highest level player character I can make for myself). Due to the way the character is presented in the cinematic, I suspect players will suspect this is another Unlimit style affair. It isn't really, aside from the characters having new and mighty powers (which in this subchapter he will use relatively sparingly, sorta), so eh hopefully I'll be able to show that in missions and events. [And yes, more of these wireframed weirdos will show up, but not in this subchapter. They will not be innumerable hordes like Unlimit...in fact there are less than 100 of them in existence. If we do it right, each one who pops into the Matrix will be a distinct personality with their own agenda. That's getting far ahead, however.]

EPN

EPN has what I hope is a decent chunk of story for once: they will be moving into Old Zion, to fix it up as a forward base for possible strikes against Machine City--or I suppose whatever other useful things you could do from that position. Outside the shattered main dock gate they will find the remains of Roland's operator, AK, in the wreckage of the Mjolnir II. [They will find something rather more interesting, too, but not until the next subchapter.]

Cypherites

The Cypherites will learn about EPN moving in, and won't like it. They may want to do something about it. They also won't like the way the Machines are kind of playing hands-off with the Intruder (I suspect Machinists won't like it much, either, despite what the Agents may tell them).

Zion

It should be generally understood that by the start of 9.1, most of Zion's compromised veterans who survived and escaped back to Zion have had their RSI signatures updated, so that they are no longer subject to signal lock and termination by the Machines.

Crit 9.1.1

Zion: Ghost briefs the player on the weird appearance in Westview, and the Machines pulling their forces back in the Matrix and the Real, before sending them off to try to track down the mysterious intruder. Following tapped emergency calls, the player encounters a frightened bluepill talking about running into a huge guy "made out of lines, like something out of a computer," and then blacking out. Further pursuit turns up a Machine security team ("sanitize the area"), and finally a dead "Accelerated Exile" NPC, who yields some strange data that the player uploads. The operator wonders briefly if the dead Exile was the being who appeared at the monument.

Mach: Gray asks the player to find some Agents who have stopped responding. The Agents are found, dead, and Gray grudgingly admits that he needs to involve the player in the investigation of "a certain odd occurrence." The player checks in with a bluepill who made an emergency call. The bluepill says they already talked to some detectives. Whoops, Zion's been there! Gray checks, finds a line tap, and has the player take out some pesky eavesdropping Zionites. The bluepill they were questioning is kind of freaked out by all this, but manages to say something about a big neon robot type of thing with white sparks, that scared him and made him dizzy. Gray says that yes, they are tracking an unusual individual consistent with that description, sorta, and that they're highly dangerous. The player is sent to check out one more emergency call, and finds a dead "Accelerated Machine." Gray thanks the operative, and tells them that will be all for now; oh, and by the way, related to this weird intruder, we've pulled back some forces to protect "core routines." Bye.

Merv: Malphas briefs the player on a weird wire guy killing some Agents at Ascension Monument, and how the Machines are all worked up about it. The Merv hunt for the intruder begins, and the player is sent to check up on hunting blood-drinkers who seem to have run into a hitch of some sort. They're dead, with live Machines on the premises. This irritates Flood, because he's running short of responding hunt programs, and has to put the player themselves in the hunt. They come across Zionites, and a dead Accelerated Exile. The operator says "its cycle speed is off," and "there's some kind of code residue fouling up the readings." Flood says that sounds ridiculous, and that it's time to call in a data expert: Cerulean. She says the code readings are of an unfamiliar type; she'll investigate, but she wants double her usual payment. Flood is aghast.

11/15-11/21

Required Events:

Zion: Tracking the code signature, Zion finds a strange packet of data bits. They think they can use this data to help understand the Intruder's code. (Afterwards I'll return the generic Data item to the person who found it as a "Decelerator Bit." This is a single-use item that hits all enemies within 30 meters with a viral attack that causes a 25% speed debuff, and -3% to all accuracies and defenses, for 60 seconds.)

Mach: Machines catch up to the Intruder, but are counter-attacked by their own overridden "Accelerated Machine" programs.

Merv: Cerulean and operatives track the Intruder, and find that his wanderings around Westview keep looping past the Heart o' the City Hotel.

11/22

Crit 9.1.2

Zion: The player picks up a sample of the data acquired so far from the intruder. Zion technicians haven't been able to make any progress in understanding it. In that lab, a Zionite guard mentions that a buddy told him that the Machines have pulled out of (old) Zion. Tyndall sends the player to get the Auditor, first by disabling the Machine station maintaining surveillance on the Exile, then by taking out the guards where he's being held. The Auditor examines the data sample, but returns it hurriedly, saying that the code doesn't belong in the Matrix, and "this was not supposed to happen."

Mach: Gray says that the intruder shouldn't be in the Matrix, and that their presence is causing code failures: he needs to be removed, or at least restrained and isolated. Going after him with programs hasn't worked out so well, so now they're going to try a combo of operatives and programs. The player takes up the hunt for him and runs into lupines, who are evidently looking for him also. Sent to check on one (program) search team that's stopped responding, the player finds them dead, along with a frightened bluepill who describes a wave of white light that washed over the room and dropped the Machines in their tracks. Armed with redpill reinforcements from Pace, the player resumes the hunt, this time coming across hostile "Accelerated Exile" programs.

Merv: It's been decided that it's time to make the intruder's acquaintance, and show him that the Mervs are the ones for him. The player is sent in to talk to him, and he seems to be in an accommodating mood ("A tour of the city, you say? ... Why not? Impress me.") First stop is Cerulean, who tells him that she tracked him down, and that nobody beats her and the Merv at finding data (she makes it clear to the operative that she's just saying this about being super chummy with the Merv 'cause Flood's paying her to say it). The intruder finds her ghostly form interesting ("I didn't expect to find this sort of mutation"). Next stop is Malphas and Ookami; Ookami is not at all happy to be there, and Malphas talks the intruder's ear off about the Merv's superior intelligence network. The intruder is somewhat intrigued by the pair ("amusing that some of these have survived; I see the Machines aren't nearly as in-control as they would like to appear"). Last comes Hypatia, who contacted Flood wanting to meet the intruder. She's describing the benefits of the Archivist Society to the intruder, who says that maybe the Merv does know more than he'd thought, but he isn't interested in "ancient history" right now. Flood is mad that Hypatia turned the intruder off by tooting her own horn.

11/22-11/28

Required Events:

Zion: Hm... Maybe capturing some Accelerated Exiles/Machines (or their bodies, anyway ;p) to get some final code readings. Level 55+ three-chevron Accelerated NPCs have a chance of dropping "Accelerator Bits" (single-use 30 meter AOE items that give a +50% speed buff, and +3% to all accuracies and defenses (Accelerated NPCs have those buffs all the time, by the way), and immunity to Decelerate to all friendlies in range at time of use, for ten minutes), so maybe we can bring some of them in.

Mach: Machines send operatives to tackle the Intruder. He spawns a Decelerator program that pulses the Decelerate debuff effect on everyone in the area, while he beats to a pulp anyone who actually reaches him (I think I'll have him use plain ol' level 100 Self Defense, and a health regen high enough that he can't be worn down). Machines eventually try sending in high-level Agent programs, but these are terminated by Terminate shockwaves from the Intruder, who then stomps off. This "Terminate" attack affects only programs (and maybe "human" NPCs unfortunate enough to be in range, but never mind that detail :p).

Merv: Operatives rap with the Intruder and tell him how cool the Merv is.

11/29

Crit 9.1.3

Zion: Tyndall says that by examining the code samples they've come up with a hack they can use to contact the intruder directly, but that it's fairly low-level, and has to be run through a land-line. The operator wonders why it would have to be run through a Machine system like that. The player borrows the phone of a bluepill couple, but the call won't go through-- Machine jamming. Roland comes up with the scheme of having the player report call in a fake encounter with the intruder, then back-tracking the responding Machine units to find the location of their security center, and hopefully, the broadcast center of the signal jamming. This works, the player takes out the jamming center, and then tries another call to the intruder--which goes through. The intruder doesn't say much over the phone, but what he seems to recognize the name "Zion," and to think that the organization "might be able to tell me ... what I want to know."

Mach: Gray says that since trying to stop the intruder directly has met with failure, they're going to concentrate on stopping Zion and EPN from getting in touch with him. The operator is frustrated by this apparent inability to deal with the intruder in their own simulation. The player takes care of some nosy EPN, a few of whom are discussing something that sounds like it could be about scouting out old Zion. This done, Gray sends the player to contact Pace at a jamming station. Pace hands over some Machine reinforcements, and also drops a little hint about negotiations that went on between the Machines and the intruder "before he entered the Matrix." The Architect and the Network are here also, standing in a room behind two sealed doors (neither Pace nor Gray mention them). Gray sends the player after Zionites who've been trying to contact the intruder via hacked phone lines, then calls on them to rescue a jamming station from a Zionite attack. This is accomplished, but it was a near thing, and Veil was there, getting one of the last kills. She isn't happy about the Machines letting the intruder stomp around the city, scaring citizens.

Merv: Concerns about Zion trying to horn in on the intruder action prompt the Merv to call in the General for a military demonstration. The Effectuator brings in five Elite Commandos, and one nonplussed regular Commando ("Yessss! No casualties!"). The player goes and finds the intruder, who looks around, then pops the Elite Commandos, who had been in the room invisibly, out of stealth ("Someone's been teaching old programs new tricks"). The player leads some of the Elites off to crack Zionite skulls while the intruder and Malphas look on; the Zionites were in the process of trying to hack a phone line to contact the intruder. The intruder is interested in the existence of the General's rogue Sentinel programs in the Real.

11/29-12/6

Required Events:

Zion: Fight past Machines/Exiles/Commandos/whatever to get to the Intruder and get his attention for some kind of meeting.

Mach: Operatives are supposed to form a wide cordon around the Intruder, and prevent Zionites (and Mervs, I guess) from reaching him. They are definitely not supposed to mess with him themselves. Maybe some will and we can make an example of them in some sort of educational but non-scarring way.

Merv: Some minor kind of setback showing the Intruder is a prickly fellow... Like he tells off the General and terminates some of his commandos, or maybe some neighborhood contact called in to help who gets terminated (and the Merv complains later about the expense of restoring them from backup).

12/6

Crit 9.1.4

Zion: In preparation for a meeting with the intruder, Colt and Ghost brief the player on Merv and Machine relations with the stranger: the Merv has been kissing up to him, but so far hasn't got much out of him, and the Machines, after trying to stop him directly and getting crushed, have switched over to trying to prevent Zion from contacting him. A hackable computer in the area has a message from "R" ([Roland]) relating to EPN in the old city [and no sign of Lock]. The player checks a report of Machines near the meeting site, and finds Accelerated Machines, and an Accelerator NPC (can be attacked, but it's level 100 and highly resistant (and doesn't drop anything great)). No actual unmodified Machines around, so the meeting proceeds. The intruder is interested in how the Machines were using Zion, and how Zion got out of their control; he says he wants to hear more. Niobe's glad he's been cordial, but a little concerned that he hasn't revealed anything about himself. One plus, she mentions, is that he's buying Zion time to recover from recent losses by occupying the attention of the Machines. Ghost says that although he's powerful, there's something he seems to want very badly.

Mach: Gray sends the player after some Zionites who appear to be involved in arranging a meeting between the intruder and the Zion leadership (Gray says the Machines can track the intruder "to an extent"). The operator mutters that this seems to be a losing strategy, or at best just a delaying tactic. A hacked computer has a message from "R" ([Roland--it refers very obliquely, without mentioning any names at all, to EPN in old Zion, and the search for Zion survivors/data (and Lock)]). When Gray sends the player after still more Zionites, the operator countermands the order, and sends the player to get some answers from the intruder himself. They find him surrounded by dead Machine programs. He's not at all interested in giving out any information about his goals, and he says the Machines won't, either, if they know what's good for them. He adds that he isn't likely to tell Zion anything. Gray admits that at least some explanation about the intruder is overdue; this comes from Pace, who says that there isn't a lot she's allowed to impart about him, since he is "inextricably linked with information that cannot be compromised without severe risk to the System"; but she does say that his presence is causing problems because the Matrix wasn't designed to support his code, and that since they can't stop him from being there, they have to try to minimize his impact on the simulation, and they must try to avoid aggravating him.

Merv: Flood says it's time to give the intruder the full-court press, and sends you to moderate over a staged meeting between the wireframed one and Persephone. The intruder seems annoyed by the confrontation with her, and, after choking something back, tells her that he "outgrew the charms of beauty long ago." She says that he does not know himself, and that "there is nothing of a young man's blood in this one's body or mind." After an interruption by Machines, and a puzzling bit of shouting by Flood to someone on the phone about moving some cakes, the player presides over a meeting between the intruder and the Chef, where, while the intruder admits that his body can taste food, he doesn't really seem interested in eating, although he makes a revealing comment about the Machines ("It's almost amusing that they saved all these...trappings of a dead culture--things they were never designed to enjoy. They'd better not be losing their sense of perspective."). Finally, Flood blows out all the stops and sends in the Jeweler, Lotus, and the Sculptress simultaneously. Although the intruder says that he doesn't have any use for "digital substitutes," he does seem to think that the Merv may be useful after all--but it's clear that it's on a "don't call me, I'll call you" level, as far as he's concerned.

12/6-12/12

Required Events:

Zion: Zionites rap with the Intruder and tell him how cool Zion is. He pumps them for as much information as he can get.

Mach: Hmm... I think something quite a bit different, as far as Machine events go anyway. Some sort of investigation of where the Intruder might have come from, despite Machine (Agent) reluctance to say anything on the subject.

Merv: Party in the Hel Club. Merv had extensive plans to entice the Intruder there, but he actually shows up with hardly any prompting, and seems particularly interested in the club itself.

12/13

Crit 9.1.5

Zion: The intruder has been pumping Colt for information, which has Tyndall a little concerned. The player finds them just as Colt is trying to explain about Morpheus' assassination, and how the Morpheus simulacrum acts differently than Morpheus did before his death. The intruder wants to see the simulacrum. Shimada calls: EPN is concerned about the intruder; some people thought he might be the next One, but his behavior hasn't shown him to be worthy of trust, and she's worried about the Morpheus simulacrum being exploited for ill purposes again. She also mentions EPN moving into the old city, and finding the wreckage of the Mjolnir II, and AK's body. She says that the city is in a good position for use as a "forward base," and that although it's vulnerable, EPN is mobile, and can get out quickly if the Machines make a serious effort to go in and get them. Tyndall echoes some of Shimada's distrust of the intruder, and hopes that he can be dissuaded from looking for the sim. The player tracks him down in a derelict area, but the intruder is quite firm about his purpose. A vagrant in the area feels ill after having caught a glimpse of the intruder. Meanwhile, Zion has found the sim. The player goes in to warn him about the intruder's curiosity, and to try to get him to skedaddle. The sim, however, seems to welcome the prospect of an opportunity to respond to the intruder's questioning with more questions, if the intruder does find him. Tyndall worries that the intruder, while he may be great at neutralizing the Machines, is following a hidden agenda.

Mach: Sent to try to do some intruder impact minimization, the player comes across dead Machines, a stunned SWAT guard ("It wasn't human... Emptied two clip... Why didn't it kill me like the others?") and a somewhat more coherent bank clerk, who describes bright flashes, and shockwaves that knocked everyone down, killing the other men there (Agents), and how the intruder laughed at him. Gray says loss of programs to the intruder is becoming a serious problem, and sends the player to check out yet another Agent team that's stopped responding: the player finds dead Agents, hostile Accelerated Machines, and an Accelerator. One of the dead Agents had a recording unit going; his recording is recovered and played back, revealing the frustrated intruder muttering to himself about something: "They must have another... A backup--something they've kept hidden... Somewhere in this small little world..." The operator raises some questions: 1) the intruder doesn't look human, but definitely acts human; what if he is? 2) where's he from? 3) what's he looking for? Gray says okay let's talk about this. In a meeting with Gray and Pace, Gray tells the player that the intruder is a freeborn human, who has not been in the Matrix before; he's kinda familiar with human history, but not with the Matrix itself--although now he's probably learning rapidly. Gray says he can't say anything more about the intruder's background. Pace says that the codes the intruder uses are direct overrides of System routines, and that the Machines can't really do anything about them while the Matrix is running, since it would require tinkering with "root functions." Gray adds that the intruder is looking for information he thinks the Machines have withheld, even though they told him they didn't have it.

Merv: Excited about finally getting the chance to show the Merv how he's tamed the intruder, a distracted Flood sends the player to check on the Exiles sent to summon the intruder: they're Accelerated and hostile. Flood is mad, and doesn't want to hear any back-talk about a possible risk to the Merovingian; he says he's got the intruder under control. Malphas isn't so sure, and gives the player some operative backup. The player arrives at the Merv/intruder meeting, where the intruder tells the Merv: a) he's surprised the Machines haven't wiped out the Merv and Zion; they're doing a bad job of things; b) he thinks the Merv seems all right, and he might have a job for him later; c) he knows the guy the Machines must have copied the Merv's face from. The Merv is horrified at this revelation. Catching up with the player afterwards, he's very angry about the intruder's attitude, and says that he'll find out who this man is, and what he's hiding--and that the secret knowledge the intruder professes to have would have to have come from somewhere outside the Matrix.

[I will probably be trying to go on break from ~ Monday Dec 15th through Monday Jan 1st, which means there would be no official Live Events during that two week period. MXO's annual Winter Holiday event should be going on during that time.]

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

1/10

9.2 Cinematic

The Morpheus simulacrum stands at the edge of a windswept skyscraper rooftop. The intruder appears next to the sim and inspects it. The Architect appears a small distance behind them. The intruder turns to him, angrily calling the sim's construction "pathetic." The Architect calls the sim the work of "an amateur," telling the intruder that it isn't at all like the intruder himself. The intruder's anger increases, and he curses, saying that if he thought that was a joke, he'd have the Architect deleted. He then demands "it," and implies that the Architect knows what he's looking for. The Architect begins a smooth denial, but the intruder snorts in disgust and leaps away before he can finish.

Crit 9.2.1

Zion: The intruder is making his way into Zion bases, attempting to access the network. The player has to do some rewiring to shut off his access. He takes it in stride, playing it off with somewhat flippant conversation, but doesn't give any indication that he's going to stop doing whatever he likes. At one point, he mentions that he's never been to either old or new Zion.

Mach: While taking out some accelerated programs, the player runs into Veil, who voices discontent about the Machines not trying to stop the intruder directly. Gray says that they're trying to discuss things with the intruder, but that he isn't responding, although they can track high concentrations of his override codes. After some searching and fighting, they succeed in making their way to a large override signal, but it isn't the intruder; it's a level 100 "Decelerator" program.

Merv: The Merv sends the player digging among Machine systems for dirt they can use to ensnare the intruder, but all they come up with at two separate locations is a simple engagement protocol instructing Machines to avoid the intruder. Next they try getting something juicy from the Network's media servers, but just come up with a long list of censored reports. Finally, Flood decides that Pace is a weak link, and sends the player to apply to her as if they're an operative looking to join the Machines in order to combat the intruder. Filing past eight glaring Agents, the player gets to Pace, who says she's afraid that they don't have any openings for someone with the player's skill set--oh, and next time, they should save themselves the trouble of breaking into Machine computers. The operator says this was Flood's dumbest idea ever.

1/10-1/16

Required Events:

Zion: intruder wants info on Neo and Trinity and what they did in the Matrix

Mach: intruder doesn't want to talk, and creates loads of Decelerator programs, and a Runtime program (spawns Accelerated Machines on operatives in the area)

Merv: while schmoozing the intruder, Machines interfere; General sent to assist in repelling them; General has to cut transmission due to Sentinels closing in, intruder snidely asks why doesn't he just use some Seekers on them

1/17

Crit 9.2.2

Zion: The intruder has been seen entering the area around the Oracle's apartment, and the player is sent to keep tabs on him. After having to work past some accelerated programs, they find him in a room containing some hacked-together equipment. He says that it's the room where Neo was woken up; he says that he isn't surprised that the player didn't know what it was, since the Machines had changed it. He says he's there to take "code readings." Colt has an update: EPN is trying to get in touch. The player is sent to talk to Shimada, who says that they followed a beacon signal from a wrecked surface facility above Zion, and found Commander Lock, weak and recovering from injuries, but conscious. They're moving him down to old Zion.

Mach: Gray sends the player hunting for the large override programs, saying that they need operative help with this, since those programs have been causing very high casualty rates among Machine programs. The player hunts up some Decelerators, and then Gray sends in some Agents to help take them out. With the Decelerators out of the way, the player is able to reach the intruder, who is angry, but agrees to meet with the Machines, adding that "they'd better not try screwing me this time." After this success, the player is sent to take out some of the commando programs the General's been using in his intruder-related operations in the simulation. In the course of this, the player may locate a computer, in which someone was trying to access Machine information on "Stalingrad" before their access was cut.

Merv: The General thinks the intruder must have learned about the Seeker missiles from the Machines. He gives the player some commandos and tells them to go find out what the Machines and the intruder discussed concerning the Seekers, and the battle at Stalingrad. The search of a Machine system is cut off, and the player tries again with sneakier Elite Commandos. This time, they manage to grab a snippet of a report: "...prior to entering the System in the vicinity of Ascension Monument, subject cited alleged remote tracking of System forces to structure code-name 'Stalingrad' as the event precipitating his visit. However, it is probable that the coincidence of this occurrence with the presence of..." Flood can't imagine why the intruder would be interested in that crater.

1/17-1/23

Required Events:

Zion: w/ the intruder, visit the building where Trinity was shot falling out the window and Neo brought her back to life in the second movie--find game building that's as close a match as we can get to building in movie

Mach: meeting w/ intruder, operatives, Agent Pace; intruder initially interested in Pace, but she realizes this, acts more typical emotionless Agency, he loses interest; he wants to meet w/ Architect, Pace agrees to make inquiries

Merv: brainstorm session w/ Merv & General, trying to figure what significance Stalingrad battle could have had for intruder; decide probably presence of Sati in Real

1/24

Crit 9.2.3

Zion: A message comes through from Lock, who says that he must have been knocked out in the explosion in the command center at the beginning of the Machine/Cypherite assault on Zion. He woke up in a wrecked surface lab: Mauser had brought him there, and nursed him until Sentinels came. Mauser had a lightning gun, and tried to lead them away from Lock; he succeeded, but it cost him his life. Suddenly the intruder appears next to the player, and wants to know about the lightning gun; he seems surprised that Zionites had weapons capable of fighting Sentinels. Colt, who's been there all along, says that Mauser would have been more than a match for a single Sentinel with his lightning gun, and that Neo didn't even need a gun; he could just wave his hands to destroy Sentinels. Hearing this, the intruder suddenly becomes outraged, saying "They WERE lying!" Tyndall reports a sudden outbreak of accelerated programs across the city. With reinforcements from Ghost, the player takes out some of the programs, although a debuffing "Decelerator" program makes this difficult. The player reports to Niobe, who has just had to fight off some accelerated programs herself. She says that the intruder has flipped out, and they don't know why, but they've got to try to calm him down.

Mach: Accelerated programs are causing so much havoc among Machine systems that they even disrupt the usual "get backup from Agent Pace" bit, and she fights beside the player against the accelerated programs who took out the intended backup. The player has to go on without backup, and finds a pack of dead Elite Commandos, then an Accelerator program that has overridden some Elite Commandos, buffing them up so that they're more dangerous than ever.

Merv: Flood sends the player to sound the intruder out about the Sati theory, but he's suddenly nowhere to be found, and there are hostile accelerated programs everywhere. Flood decides to go ahead and try to nab Sati ("if the General could do it..."), sending the player to a Mara apartment where she has supposedly gone to meet a playmate; inside the apartment, though, a bluepill couple say that the kids just went out (they then threaten to call the police).

Flood says not to worry, he just got a hot tip that Sati's in a building nearby. The player goes there and finds not Sati but Seraph, who says: "Take this message to the Frenchman: she will not be found while the Oracle lives, nor before you have returned what you took from me."

1/24-1/30

Required Events:

Zion: find intruder and try to chill him out; when asked why he's mad, who "they" were, what the "lying" was about, or whatever, he becomes incensed and fights the operatives

Mach: swarms of Accelerators, Decelerators, and Runtimes across the city

Merv: get to intruder, tell him about Sati, he questions General, suggests some way to access her program data from General's surviving logs or servers

1/31

Crit 9.2.4

Zion: After fighting off more accelerated programs, the player finds the intruder, who tells them to stay the hell out of his way. He adds that he's got "fish to fry," and that he doesn't like being lied to. Colt calls the player in to talk to the Kid, who has details on the facility where they found Lock. Sentinel claws and lasers had breached the structure. Inside, they found Mauser's fingerprints, and traces of blood confirmed to match Mauser's, but they haven't found his body. They didn't find any dead Sentinels in the area, but there were lightning gun scorch marks everywhere. Whatever equipment had been in the lab was completely wrecked. Tyndall has the player try capturing Sentinel activity logs that might cover their encounter with Mauser, but although they're able to steal such logs from a Machine facility, the data contains no record of Sentinel activity at that surface lab in the past several months.

Mach: The player is sent to investigate why a group of Agents, held in reserve for counter-attacks against override threats picked out by operatives, have stopped responding. The player finds all five of them dead. Then another pack of Agents turns up dead, and Gray is worried. Data retrieved from one of them is analyzed, and a program devised to counter the threat. During this analysis, scientists allude to core routines being rewritten to protect them from the intruder's override codes. The player locates the problem, a "Terminator" program, and uses the counter program to take it out.

Merv: The General sets up one of his own commandos to be captured by the Machines, so that they can track where the Machines take the program, in the hope that the Machines will store him alongside other data previously captured from the General. The player breaks in and runs a search, but doesn't find anything there about Sati. The General thinks the Machines have probably deleted the data as too sensitive, and figures that the best course now is to go present the matter to the intruder, who seems to have calmed down a bit since the previous week's rampage. The player finds the intruder standing with a Terminator program among piles of dead Machines. The intruder asks for more detail about Sati, and, after "She was taken into the outer world by the General... That was the only time? And did she have a body there, or..." says that she couldn't be what he's after, which is a "biological interface program," and that if the Merv can get him one of those, he'll make him king of the Matrix.

1/31-2/6

Required Events:

Zion: players find intruder fighting Bookwyrms; gets to Hypatia, demands "biological interface program," when she says she doesn't have a program like that, he terminates her; intruder disconsolate, says something about being trapped

Mach: operatives find intruder; Gray shows up to ask what he wants; intruder terminates him; Pace shows up, offers meeting w/ Architect; intruder doesn't terminate her [Gray will be restored by the System in time for the next crit, yay!]

Merv: show BIP possibility to intruder: Beirn; not what intruder's after 2/7

Crit 9.2.5

Zion: The player is sent to look for anything they can find on a "biological interface program" at Wright Research, since mechanical-to-biological interfaces were one of Wright's specialties. After some breaking and entering, the player makes their way to Wright Research "Building 27," a heavily guarded area where they keep their really important new research, but they don't find any sign of a true breakthrough in interface technology there. The intruder's been a little less savage, so the player goes to see if they can get more details on what he's after. The intruder isn't surprised that nothing useful was found at Wright Research, saying "if a human could have written it, I'd have had it by now." He refuses to say anything more about it, saying "the less you know, the better."

Mach: Hypatia was restored by her support programs after her termination, but is still infected by override codes, and must be terminated properly. The player fights past her Bookworm guards and takes out Accelerated Hypatia. Then it's off to notify the intruder that it's meeting time. He warns that they'd better not try lying to him again. At a pre-meeting briefing, a wounded Gray (still recovering from the 9.2.4 event) admits that the Machines "misled" the intruder before he entered the Matrix, because they wanted to keep him out of the simulation. That didn't work, so now they're going to have to tell him the truth, in the hopes that this will convince him to leave. At the meeting, the intruder demands a "biological interface program" from the Architect, saying that he knows it exists. The Architect confirms this, but says that the Machines did not create it, and the only remaining copy was removed from the System--the one the intruder himself had detected outside the simulation before he entered the Matrix. This brings the intruder up short, but he's clearly not happy with this state of affairs. Gray hopes that this meeting will lead the intruder to leave the simulation in pursuit of the interface program.

Merv: Going to talk with the Merv, the player finds the Twins arguing about who the intruder will "off" next (Architect vs Pace). Malphas has a theory that the intruder asked the Machines for this "biological interface program" before he entered the Matrix, and they put him off somehow. The Merv is determined to find this program before anyone else, and sends the player to go talk to his wife, who he says "interfaced" with humans at the pods, back when she served the System. Persephone, however, says she was just a "caretaker" there; any control she had over the humans was indirect, whereas what the intruder wants is immediate control that will allow him to change who he is, because he hates what he has become. Flood sends the player on plan B, which is seeing if the reconstructed Silver, who worked on interface programs with Wright (and gave information about it to the Machines, for which he was killed for the Merv by Sieges, whose name is mentioned here), has anything that would help. Silver says that what he worked on with Wright was just complex data conduits, although she had wild ideas of her own about "control transfer." Anyway, all his data on his work with Wright was confiscated by the Machines. Finally, Flood sends the player to ask the intruder for more information on this program he wants, but the intruder, surrounded by dead N30 AG3NTs, says 1) Persephone/Silver's work is nothing like what he wants, 2) the program's got to be here somewhere, 3) "if only HE hadn't taken the other one...", 4) the player knows as much as the intruder needs them to know.

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

2/25 [was pushed back from 2/21, although a brief leak of the cinematic occurred on that day]

9.3 Cinematic

A second wireframed man appears, taunting the intruder. From their conversation it is clear that they are familiar with each other, that the newcomer has followed the intruder to see what he's up to, and that they are in competition with each other. In fact, they fight, until the intruder decides that the other is only trying to distract him, and leaves. An Agent is seen observing the scene and reporting.

Notes

[This second wireframed man is named Carlyne. He will tell players that the intruder's name is Halborn, and the intruder will appear with that name throughout this subchapter. 9.2 was tricky because sometimes an org was supposed to be nice with Halborn, but once we get up to around 9.3.2-3ish, there will pretty much always be one or the other that they can fight, and hopefully other orgs they can go fight too.]

Crit 9.3.1

Zion: Tyndall and Colt inform the player of the appearance of a second wireframed man, his fight with the intruder, and an outbreak of more override programs. The player takes care of them, and then locates the intruder, who has a Terminator in the middle of a bunch of dead Accelerated Exiles, and tells the player that the newcomer is Carlyne, his own name is Halborn, that they've known each other a long time, and that Carlyne is a practiced liar. At a debrief, Niobe is concerned that Carlyne will distract Halborn from keeping the Machines busy, and that the two of them together could cause problems as well. She also indicates that she isn't in any hurry to trust Carlyne.

Mach: Gray sends the player to check out the new wireframed guy, saying not to attack him; finding him, at least, will be easy, since he hasn't even tried to hide himself from Machine scans. The player fights past a few Accelerated Exiles to find Carlyne (and some friendly Accelerated Exiles). Carlyne apologizes for the hostile programs, saying he thought the player might have been "like those others." He's pleased to find the player works for the Machines, saying they're just the people he wants to see, and asks for a meeting, saying he can help with a mutual problem. Gray says he'll see about the arrangements, and sends the player to get more info from Agent Pace. Pace says Carlyne is "a human from outside the pod system," like Halborn, and probably has access to the same override codes that Halborn does. She says they fought in Westview, and it's important that they find out if Carlyne is going to be cooperative, in contrast to his opponent. A computer in the area is tracking something along coordinates [that would be valid in Westview, if not elsewhere]. Gray meets Carlyne; Carlyne says he wants to "eliminate Halborn as a problem here," but that "we both know better" than to believe Carlyne is acting out of altruism alone. Talking things over afterwards, Gray says Carlyne means the intruder when he says "Halborn," and claims to have known him for a long time. Gray voices concerns about Carlyne potentially being as big a threat to the System as Halborn (when he was leaving the meeting in Halborn's presence, Gray acted fully satisfied with Carlyne's claim of being there just to help the Machines against Halborn). Pace says that they'd hoped the last meeting with the Architect would have persuaded Halborn to leave the Matrix, but that he's turned out to be very stubborn and unreasonable. She's afraid that as he keeps failing to find the program he wants, he'll get more and more desperate, and eventually have another anti-Machine freakout. An Agent patrolling the halls is mulling something about Agent Griffin and "the Murphey case" (dunno what, exactly; just wanted to throw in a mention).

Merv: Flood sends the player to ask the intruder about this second guy. After going through some Headless NPCs buffed by an Accelerator, they find him--still named "Intruder"--and some dead Machine redpills. He says he's busy, but agrees to meet the Merv, as long as it's something good. The intruder shows up at the meeting as "Halborn," and says the other one's named Carlyne, and that he must be after the same thing Halborn wants--that kind of snatch-and-grab tactic is typical of him. The Merv promises to help just as much as he can. Malphas, outside the meeting room with the Twins, says that it will be tricky to stay on good terms with both of them, but Carlyne, at least, is easy to locate. The player finds Carlyne searching for something on a computer (he's cleared the search just as the player enters), and Carlyne is delighted with the prospect of meeting the famous Merovingian. The Merv and the Twins appear in the outer room, and the player brings Carlyne to him. The Merv is charming, and assures Carlyne he wants to help him against Halborn. Carlyne says this is the beginning of a wonderful partnership.

2/25-2/27

Required Events:

Zion: meeting w/ Carlyne - admits he may be somewhat interested in what Halborn is after, but his first objective is to stop Halborn

Mach: meeting w/ Carlyne - tells players that Halborn wants the BIP because his own body in the Real is long since dead

Merv: meeting w/ Halborn - Halborn figures out that if the Machines were telling the truth about not having made the BIP themselves, and that the only one was taken, then he needs to find out who made it, and have them make him another one

2/28

Crit 9.3.2

Zion: (Assumed to come chronologically just after the Machine crit.) Tyndall is worried when Halborn shows up and starts pumping Colt for information on the Oracle. Colt plays dumb, frustrating Halborn, who says he'll just go find her on his own, and that Zion should stay out of his way. Halborn takes off, and following override use reports, the player finds overridden programs, a dead female bluepill, and a live male one who describes what sounds like Halborn demanding information about the Oracle. Ghost says they haven't found a connection between the dead woman and the Oracle, and they don't know if the intruder is striking randomly or following some kind of information trail. He also says that Zion has been trying to reach the Oracle without success. Carlyne has contacted Zion, though, so the player goes to meet him. Carlyne is polite and outgoing, and says that although he isn't very swift, with the overrides he has, Halborn is more than a match for any Machine-created program, even the Oracle. Carlyne says he can stop Halborn, and that he wants to help Zion save her, adding that he's known Halborn a long time, and that they probably have a few days before they really have to start worrying about him reaching the Oracle, during which time Carlyne will study the "lay of the land."

Mach: Gray sends the player after an override outbreak, and they find Accelerated Machines, as well as hostile Zionites. Gray didn't know who override those programs, and sends the player after another signal, which could be either Halborn or Carlyne. Gray mentions that both of them have met, separately, with Zion, but that they're still believed to be non-hostile to the Machines. The player finds Halborn among Accelerated Machines, and a dead "Red Eye" Agent--one of the General's old programs. Halborn bluntly says he wants to talk to "your boss' boss," implying that he'd wanted the Machines to track him down there so he could deliver this demand. Gray goes to see about it while the player goes after more override signals, coming across Carlyne, and a confused bluepill. Carlyne is surprised, but in a chipper mood, saying he's tracking down Halborn, and asks if the player has seen him. Gray says to say "no." Carlyne says ah, too bad. The player goes to see Gray, who says Halborn's probably asking for this meeting because he needs help with Carlyne, which gives the Machines a chance to get him to do what they want, before ushering them into a room containing Pace, the Architect, and Halborn. Halborn demands to know who made "it"; the Architect replies that "the program's author is known as the Oracle." This surprises Halborn a little, but seems to jibe with some things he remembers Zionites "jabbering" about. Gray thinks its likely that Halborn will go after the Oracle now, and says that Zion and EPN may try to stop him.

Merv: (Assumed to come chronologically just after the Machine crit.) Flood sends the player to check on some Exiles that may have been overridden, and the player finds a pile of dead Accelerated Exiles and Machines. The operator says there's no sign of forced entry, and says there are recently spend shell casings in there, and bullet and claw wounds on the bodies: were they fighting each other? Flood doesn't really care if they were from Carlyne or Halborn or both; he's just annoyed at the loss of their programs. He sends the player to help the survivors of an Exile pack that's been mostly overridden. One survivor says it was Halborn, and he was about to get them, too, but he suddenly stopped and ran off. Scans find Halborn nearby. He's about to tell the player to go away, but then stops and asks what they know about the Oracle. A meeting with the Merv is arranged; the player doesn't catch all the assumed dialog between the two, but Halborn now knows about the Oracle centering her activity around Debir Court, and it's implied that the Merv has provided him with other information about her as well. Flood says whatever happens in a Halborn/Oracle meeting, they'll make work in their favor.

2/28-3/5

Required Events:

Zion: Zion tries getting a warning to the Oracle, and are surprised when they can't get ahold of her. They do get Seraph, though, and he tells them that the Oracle suspected something like this would happen.

Mach: It won't be quite clear yet to players how the Machines feel about Halborn going after the Oracle. But they send operatives to try to locate her. They can't find her, but they do find strange code bits in her trademark intuitive style: she's got something in the oven, and it isn't just cookies.

Merv: The Merv again assures Carlyne that he's all for taking Halborn out, and that he's only pretending to help Halborn in order to get through his defenses, and "proves it" by leading Carlyne to some of Halborn's programs, which Carlyne helps terminate.

3/6

Crit 9.3.3

Zion: The player is dispatched to counter Halborn's program overrides in Mara, where Halborn has started looking for the Oracle. They come across Blackwoods and Accelerated programs, alive and dead, and Carlyne, who says that he thinks Halborn will get frustrated and give up this attack if they can keep eliminating his programs. He adds that Halborn's been avoiding him, and that he's been getting some "interference" from non-Zion operatives.

The player comes across Machinists fighting (or as close as I can make it look like they've been fighting) Accelerated Machines. Tyndall sends the player to assist a Zion team that's just been taken out, and they find Halborn, who reminds them that he said to stay out of his way. He says she may have snuck off somewhere, but it doesn't matter, he'll find her.

Mach: Gray says that the sooner Halborn finds the Oracle and either gets his program, or gets confirmation that she doesn't have it, the soon he'll leave the Matrix. Pace gives the player some redpill backup for going after Zionites who are trying to stop Halborn, and who are probably working with Carlyne. The player finds dead Accelerated Machines, a dead bluepill, and hostile Zionites. Gray reports that Halborn has been detected in the vicinity of Mara, as have hostile operatives, but there's no sign of the Oracle or Carlyne. The player comes across Zionites fighting their way to Halborn. Halborn tells the player to get lost. Finally, the player searches another area for reported hostile redpills, only to find the Oracle, who makes a joking surrender, apologizes for the misdirection, and promises that it's almost over; she says that if all this trouble is about her, maybe it's better if she's "removed from the picture." Seraph appears just then, looking imposing. The player has to leave; meanwhile, the operator's been struggling with it, but eventually decides he has no choice but to report that they've found the Oracle. Gray says that it isn't feasible to arrest her just now (he's mentioned earlier in the mission that they can't send programs into the Mara area, what with Carlyne and Halborn firing off overrides all over the place), but that they've got to do what they can do speed up Halborn getting to her, which mostly comes down to keeping Zion, and especially Carlyne, off of him. He says they'll report the Oracle sighting to Halborn "as soon as possible." [That comment, and his halfhearted congratulations on "the...promptness" of the operator/player's report, are intentionally ambiguous.]

Merv: Halborn isn't doing too well at finding the Oracle, so Flood sends the player to dig her up in Richland/Westview. Following some allegedly expensive leads, the player comes across 1) a pack of EPN swarming over a irrecoverably toasted computer, 2) two creepy Agents who have just arrested whoever the player was looking for, for involvement in a terrorist conspiracy, and 3) a dead bluepill contact surrounded by Accelerated Machines. Zionites and then Cypherites attack the player out-of-doors at various points. Finally, just as they find four Exiles (a Crusher, a Death Merchant, a female Hel Club Groupie, and a male Hel Club Guard) discussing something about "Ruhamah" sending a "signal," and "the sim," Carlyne pops in with a Terminator that strikes the four dead. He says he's suspected what the player's been up to for a while, but it's nice to have proof, and that they can tell the Merv that since he's clearly backing Halborn, he can consider their brunch date cancelled. Flood says they should've been working with Carlyne instead of that dummy Halborn.

3/6-3/12

Required Events:

Zion: Just some good old-fashioned fighting in Slums here, with override programs and either a hostile Halborn or assisting Carlyne involved.

Mach: Ditto, only the other way around for Halborn/Carlyne. (Summary: right now Zion <3 Carlyne, Merv & Mach <3 Halborn)

Merv: It seems like this would be a good time to let the Merv players run across the Oracle. We'll have to manage it in such a way that it's clear they can't take her out themselves, and have to settle for talking to her. Should probably do it somewhere exotic, where she isn't usually found, and where she could change the rules to be in control, like white hallways or a white room or Sakura or something. Ah, and we could do something like have Seraph whack any players who actually try to get her. Or Carlyne could show up and make things difficult for them. Anyway, she'll tell whoever survives that they will soon find something that is very important, but it will backfire on them if they try to use it selfishly.

3/13

Crit 9.3.4

Zion: In Richland or Westview, the player is sent to talk to Carlyne, who asks that he be contacted when the player runs across Halborn, since Halborn is putting more effort into avoiding Carlyne than he is into avoiding operatives. The player faces some Accelerated Machines backed up by a Decelerator while Tyndall gets Roland's permission to tip off Carlyne if they come across Halborn. And then they do find Halborn, who tells them very bluntly to get out, at which point he goes hostile and will counter-attack if attacked by the player; he's invulnerable here, and can't actually be hurt. Carlyne is tipped off, and moves to intercept Halborn. Tyndall starts encountering scan disruptions, and send the player in to report on what's happening. The player finds Carlyne and Halborn facing off in an under-construction interior, but they have to bail when the operator says that surges in his scan readings are starting to blow out their hovercraft's systems. Tyndall says that their scan routines are down across the entire sector now.

Mach: Halborn still hasn't managed to find the Oracle, and has called the Machines for a meeting in Richland/Westview to discuss it. He demands that the Machines tell him where she is. The Architect says that they've already given him all the information they have, and that her unpredictability was an intentional design choice necessary in order to maintain human genetic variety at acceptable levels. Halborn is ticked, calls the Architect/Machines incompetent, and says he knew all that already. Pace is there as well (no Gray), and orders the player to leave the area and stand by for immediate deployment. Gray sends the player to check up on what Halborn's gone off to do after the meeting. When they catch up to him, Halborn has just dispatched some Zionites and an EPN, complains that "your masters don't have the balls for this," and says well fine, forget them, he'll handle it himself. He adds that he means to have it out with the Architect after taking care of this current situation. Gray doesn't sound thrilled to hear that, but still has to send the player to keep Zionites (mingled with dead/wounded Accelerated Machines) off Halborn's tail. Then they pick up Carlyne, heading to intercept Halborn; interference is causing problems, and Gray sends the player in to investigate first-hand. They find Halborn and Carlyne facing off in an under-construction interior, but have to leave when feedback starts blowing out their operator's systems. The follow-up message from Gray is almost entirely garbled, but seems to be ordering the player to evacuate the area.

Merv: Flood sends the player to find Halborn in Richland/Westview so that they can come up with a working plan of action for him, since he still hasn't managed to find the Oracle, and is getting distracted by Carlyne. Some Accelerator-buffed Zionites get in the way, as does an EPN ambush, but Halborn is found, and is in a bad mood, saying the info the Merv gave him hasn't helped, and the Mervs don't stand a chance against Carlyne anyway; but he agrees to meet. The General and Malphas are waiting for Halborn to show for the strategic planning session, but it's crashed by Zionites. Afterwards, Malphas says that they'd spotted the intruder heading for the meeting, but then his signal changed course; maybe he was worried about the Zionites reporting his position to Carlyne. Flood thinks Halborn is silly for getting scared off by Zionites. The player is sent after him, and finds him and Carlyne facing off in an under-construction area, just before the player has to bail when override feedback starts to scramble their operator's systems. Flood says this "override radiation" is scrambling scans across the entire region.

3/13-3/19

Required Events:

Zion: (EPN) The Oracle meets with Shimada, giving her part of an encrypted program, and telling her to watch over Sati

Mach: (CYPH) The Oracle meets with Veil, giving her part of an encrypted program, and telling her to watch over Sati Merv: Mervs wade through override programs in the Slums to find Halborn wounded and woozy. They pick him up and take him back to the Merv.

3/20

Crit 9.3.5

Zion: Ghost has some reports about Halborn surviving with the Merv's help, and the Oracle contacting EPN to give them some kind of encrypted program, and possibly making contact with Veil as well. Carlyne gets in touch to say that he's all right, and that Halborn only got away because the simulation started to break down around them. He says that he's heard the Frenchman's got him, but that will just make it easier to find him and finish him off. Tyndall's next instructions are cut off mid-sentence, and the player has to follow their mission marker with no instructions, only to find the Oracle at the end of it, just as the operator is cut off, too. The Oracle apologizes for crossing a few wires to get a chance to talk, but then realizes that she can't say what she wants to say yet. She thinks she's made the "right choice," though, and says the player will "do just fine." She adds that she doesn't know if they'll see each other again. Tyndall comes back online, and sends the player to report to Niobe. Niobe's annoyed that the Oracle's pulling strings yet again, and says that they've still at least got to try to secure her before Halborn reaches her.

Mach: Gray sends the player to clean up code overrides swamping Richland (and Westview, I guess) in the aftermath of the clash between Halborn and Carlyne; overrides are still screwing with Machine scans of the area, but Gray says they should assume that both survived, until they have proof to the contrary. The player encounters loads of Accelerated Machines and Exiles, accelerated Furies gang members, and a dead bluepill. Then Gray sends them after some code that appears somehow to have escaped any kind of damage from the override wave that covered Richland. They find a weirded-out bluepill (keeps saying "I'm fine," also mentions something about "she") in an apartment, and the mystery undamaged code in the form of Frags tucked in a desk. They take these off to Pace and some technicians in a lab (new variant Pace RSI: wearing a white lab coat and shirt--and no, I won't use this RSI in an event prior to this crit). The code in the frags is found to be similar to the Oracle-made stuff found earlier (Mach 9.3.2 event), and, put together, it's enough for them to establish that it's left over code from the process of writing a kill code. Pace is uneasy when she hears about this. A technician in the area mentions that they're having trouble re-writing core routines to protect against override codes (a tech earlier in chapter 9 mentioned they were starting work on this). Gray says they've suspected for a few months now that the Oracle's been up to some kind of plot with Exiles, and if a termination code is involved, this plot could be more dangerous than they'd thought. He's describing news from "our Cypherite sources" about the Oracle giving them some kind of encrypted code, and is in the middle of saying that the Cypherites haven't delivered a formal report on the incident, when he suddenly excuses himself, coming back to say that he's just received a report of Halborn and Carlyne meeting Merovingian operatives. He says that locating the two is the top priority.

Merv: The player is sent to visit Halborn at a Merv hideout in Midian Park (or Eshean/Lemone if Midian Park mission areas are full), and tell him that he's got to stick around at a certain spot as bait so they can get Carlyne out of his way. The wounded and impatient Halborn agrees in his usual surly manner, obviously concerned that Carlyne will find him if he stays there too long. Flood sends the player to meet Carlyne in Mara, to get his attention. Carlyne knows the Mervs have Halborn, and tells the player to run along back to Halborn. Flood sends the player to Kedemoth to check on Halborn, saying that the plan won't work if he moves early and makes it obvious to Carlyne that the "artificial override signal we're generating nearby" is a fake. The player finds him in his requisite bait position. He's made some hostile Accelerated Exiles to protect himself, but kills them with a Terminator once the player talks to him. He mutters about being able to "feel" the "old woman" nearby. Flood hurries the player off to another Kedemoth location, where they find Carlyne. When they talk to him, four "Special Agents" appear and order him to come with them for questioning, but when the player talks to them, it's clear that these are disguised Merv operatives. Carlyne is momentarily fooled, and about to dispatch them, or so he thinks, with override codes. Flood says this distraction has got Halborn past Carlyne [on his way to Mara to get the Oracle], although Flood is darned if he knows why Halborn thinks he'll succeed this time. [Like a lot of things so far with Halborn's "search" for the program, I don't really spell that out, but just leave it implied that he has ways of obtaining information, although obviously this information isn't always reliable.]

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

On 4/2, Halborn found the Oracle waiting for him in Debir Court. She refused to help him get the program he wanted, and he killed her, then left. Carlyne arrived minutes later, saw the dead Oracle, and snorted in disgust before jumping away.

4/3

Crit 10.1.1

Zion: After taking out some Accelerated programs with Colt, the player encounters Carlyne, who says that he's working on a more direct means of getting rid of Halborn, and that since Halborn has decided to stay in the Matrix, the Machines probably won't be helping him (Halborn) out anymore.

Mach: Gray and Pace say it's time to set up a meeting with Halborn, and ask him to leave the Matrix. The player has to get through some nasty accelerated programs, but finds Halborn, and he gruffly agrees that he'll come along, since he wants to fill the Machines in on something, anyway. In a meeting with Pace, Halborn insists that he won't leave without the program, but he says that he's figured out what he needs to do, although he hadn't wanted to have to deal with it (he doesn't specify). Pace says he'll have to be watched very carefully.

Merv: Flood thinks it's time to review what's been going on, and has the player face off against EPN, Cypherites, and Accelerated Exiles, keeping up a running commentary of his own along the way. He's questioning why the Oracle would have given apparently important codes to EPN and the Cypherites, and points out that she did this--and according to the Machines was working on a kill-code--after the intruders came around and it was revealed that she was the one who wrote the program they're so interested in. The mission ends with Flood haranguing the player in person, saying that this has all been some sort of plan arranged by the Oracle, and it's something to do with the program, or with the intruders.

4/3-4/9

Required Events:

Zion: Halborn ambushes Carlyne, tries to ram a trace program through his RSI, but Carlyne rescued by Zion

Mach: tea with the Architect and a small group of operatives in the Oracle's apartment, and musing upon the current situation

Merv: Merv looks for Seraph, Sati, and the Morpheus simulacrum, but finds they've vanished, apparently without a trace (confrontation with Lo Ruhamah?)

4/10

Crit 10.1.2

Zion: Carlyne theorizes that Halborn is determined to get rid of him so he can stay in the Matrix long-term, and to do it by attacking him in his hovercraft; this was what Carlyne was planning to do to Halborn, in fact, but he hasn't been able to get a fix on Halborn's ship; Carlyne adds that Halborn runs off outside resources, and thus needs to maintain a ship near the Machine city as a relay point, but it's more difficult to locate his ship in the Real than it is to find his code signal in the Matrix. Shimada has a new message from Commander Lock, in which he says that he's close to fully recovered, and looking forward to some kind of arrangement being made for transferring him to New Zion in a few weeks. Just then Tyndall gets in touch to say that one of Zion's broadcast control clusters in the Matrix is under attack. Shimada loans a few EPN, and the player finds the place overrun by accelerated programs; one of the survivors says it was Halborn, trying to access their computers; they think they got their network connections shut down before he could get anything, but they aren't sure. Niobe says it's time to put Halborn on ice; she thinks he might have been trying to get hovercraft positions, or crack their broadcast protocol.

Mach: Carlyne meets with Pace, and says that once Halborn's been removed, he'll see to it that "the [secret name zetas] restrict his access." He adds that "Nobody wants the simulation to have operating difficulties." Pace tells the player that they'll monitor the situation, but that it seems like it's being handled, so they can concentrate on other things that had been put on the back burner. The player is sent to get a report from Veil on the encrypted file the Oracle gave her. Veil says they haven't been able to decrypt it, and that the Oracle told her it could be dangerous to lose it, so she's going to keep it safe outside of the Matrix (ie, she doesn't intend to hand it over). She suggests checking up on EPN and their own encrypted file. Gray is annoyed. Nevertheless, he considers the EPN side, and figures that they're probably keeping their file outside of the Matrix as well: either on a hovercraft, or inside old Zion. To test this, he has the player plant a fake message on an EPN network, of Shimada saying that their Oracle file's been stolen from their hovercraft. Then the player eavesdrops on some EPN reading the message, and they're clearly surprised that the message says the file was on a hovercraft, so Gray concludes they're probably keeping it in old Zion.

Merv: Thinking Halborn may be more forthcoming about the program now that his back's against the wall, Flood sends the player to find him. First they come across Zionites and an Accelerator. The Accelerator is friendly to the player. An access card is found on one of the Zionites, and it's traced back to an apartment, which the player ransacks, and finds some data that turns out to be Zion intelligence reports about a search for Halborn that Zion is conducting. Correlating Zion's findings with their own, Halborn is located, in his usual foul mood. He agrees to meet the Merv, but when asked for info on the program, says there's no way he can give out any more info about it with Carlyne around trying to use anything he can against him. He says he'll have to take Carlyne down, and he knows how to do it, but he has to find Carlyne's ship. He says Carlyne isn't so smart; the only reason Carlyne got "the jump on me in the first place" was because "he was just 800 miles away from here"; later he adds impatiently that this was northwest. The Merv promises Halborn that they'll leave it to him to deal with Carlyne and his ship, but is clearly interested in the "800 miles" remark.

4/10-4/16

Required Events:

Zion: Carlyne wants to try on Halborn what Halborn tried on him--operatives tackle Halborn, but when Carlyne scans him, he finds that Halborn's already running an advanced counter to the trace routine; lots of overrides spawned by Halborn to try to free himself, maybe a little scuffle between the two, who knows

Mach: Small Sentinel attack on EPN hovercraft and old Zion coordinated with attack on the EPN crew in the Matrix: Machines determine that EPN has reinforced Zion's defenses, but does not maintain a central mainframe there; this would, for instance, mean that capturing data stored in the city would require at least either an extremely skilled spy, or a full assault on the city

Merv: steal map data of the area 800 miles NW of the Machine city from the Machines: unmarked area

4/17

Crit 10.1.3

Zion: Niobe asks Carlyne for more information on their ships. He says he's only caught a glimpse of Halborn's once, not long before Halborn appeared in the Matrix, and it looked roughly similar to his own, except built heavier for firepower over speed. He describes his own ship as having "the advantage of a streamlined unibody construction whose dark composite surface provides superior protection against kinetic and electro-magnetic weapons, and detection. The repulsion units are internal rather than external, and capable of quite a bit more velocity and altitude than your own. The overall profile is smaller, and much more maneuverable." All he'll say about the weapons systems is warning Zion they'll need to be prepared to face "multiple intelligent missiles simultaneously." He also sends them a detailed external schematic of his own craft (not actually shown). Zion wants confirmation from another source, though, so they blackmail one of the General's veteran commando officers (who's involved in some sort of relationship with a female Hel Club Guard) into giving them the address to a network entry point for a Machine real-world surveillance database. The database is raided, and in the data they loot from it, Zion finds records of a ship matching the description of Halborn's, that approached the Machine city a few weeks before Halborn appeared in the Matrix. Ghost says this will probably be enough evidence for Roland to go ahead and formulate plans for tracking down the ship. The data also contained a reference to a record of a ship matching Carlyne's, located in a two-year-old data archive, which seems to suggest that Carlyne visited the city two or more years ago.

Mach: Hunting down the topographic data the Merv stole, the player runs into Halborn, who wipes out the computers the player was using to hunt down the data, and demands a meeting with the Machines. Pace tells Halborn to go look up the Cypherites if he wants to find Carlyne's ship, because "our own ability to give out such information is restricted." She tells the player to tell Veil to treat Halborn "as he deserves." Gray instructs the player not to mention Cryptos to Halborn, because they'd prefer that Halborn deal with Veil. Veil says they'll take good care of him, and that they have plenty of places to take him; she also invites the player along. Halborn is skeptical.

Merv: The player picks up a copy of the stolen Machine topographic data from Malphas (the Twins are puzzling over the "[secret name zetas]" term one of them came across in Machine intel reports--see Mach 10.1.2), who says that it's almost as though the Machines have an information blackout in effect around that area 800 miles NW. The Merv wonders if the Machines themselves avoid the area, and tells the player to take the data to the General. The player hands the data to a commando, who patches the General's hologram through; the General says that the area is a no-fly zone, and even Machine Sentinels won't be allowed there. He says to tell the Merv that he'll be leaving right away, and to make the necessary arrangements. Flood says they'll have to disrupt Sentinel systems in order for the General to get on his way without being caught. Using data from the General, the player goes after a Machine terminal, but can't get anywhere with it; the General's hologram beams in and says that the Machines have changed the interface to foil his intel, but he and his men can get updated data by capturing a Machine Sentinel. (A hackable computer in this Machine area has some details about EPN's upgrades and repairs to old Zion; the Machines would have got this info in the Mach 10.1.3 event:

Fortification analysis:

- High EMP mine density in approach tunnels
- EMP mines placed in bedrock around main dock
- Dock hull repaired and reinforced
- Dock gun turrets replaced and supplemented
- Infantry strength unknown

)

New coordinates are supplied by the General, and this time the Mervs find a machine they can hijack to disrupt some of the Machine Sentinels for the General. Flood says the General is on his way to the blackout zone.

4/17-4/23

Required Events:

Zion: Zion ship that was following signal possibly corresponding to Halborn's ship configuration has stopped responding; crew member jacks in to say their ship is crippled and being pursued by Halborn; Zion uses the message relay they'd set up with Halborn before to send him an emergency message saying they have the program he wants; he jacks in and they have to keep him distracted somehow while the crippled ship gets away (some kind of time limit, maybe); also, it looks like Halborn may have been hoping to exploit the crippled ship in order to access New Zion somehow

Mach: Cyph operation to steal info on the Lock ship transfer from EPN or Zion; Veil gives info to Halborn

Merv: Sentinel activity is a little heavier than anticipated (most had been recalled since Halborn appeared in the Matrix), and the Merv wants their systems bothered again to buy the General additional time: disrupting a computer system, or something like that, or even creating some sort of distraction for the Sentinels

Also: Hovercraft battle (after Mach and Merv events)

Following the coordinate data given him by Veil, Halborn finds only the EPN/Zion convoy taking Lock to New Zion. Cyphs come along to make a battle of it and blow Halborn's cover, may bring Machines. Hovercraft battle to determine where Lock ends up:

- a) Cyph win (EPN/Zion beaten and Cyphs have more ships left than Machines): Lock is on the run with EPN/Zion survivors somewhere in the tunnels between old and new Zion
- b) EPN win (Cyphs/Machs beaten and EPN have more ships left than Zion): EPN takes Lock back to Zion until they can be sure of getting to New Zion safely
- c) Mach win (EPN/Zion beaten and Machines have more ships left than Cyphs): Machines capture Lock
- d) Zion win (Cyphs/Mach beaten and Zion has more ships than EPN): Lock is taken to New Zion

4/24

Crit 10.1.4

Zion: A Zion hovercraft is tailing a ship that might be Halborn's, found skulking not too far from the spot of the hovercraft battle over Lock (see above). Colt has the player go get Carlyne, since he might have some ideas of how this lone ship can handle Halborn. The player finds Carlyne in the midst of some dead accelerated programs. He says if they can scan a "certain spectrum band" at close range, they could get some useful information about Halborn's Matrix broadcast frequency, and he suggests they try luring Halborn in by landing and activating their emergency beacon, to make it look like they're disabled, since Halborn may be trying to capture a Zion craft (see previous Zion event). The ship reaches broadcast depth and one crew member jacks in; they're given Carlyne's information, and their captain decides to go for it; they aren't sure he's still near, as he isn't showing up on radar, but they're getting "some weird lidar scatter." The player escorts the crew member to Carlyne and Ghost. As they get there, the crew member says they're starting the scan, but then they suddenly seem scared, and drop dead. Carlyne is concerned about the scan, but relieved to find they did get some data back before the scan was terminated. He says he'll be able to use it to finalize a new program he's been working on, that Halborn won't have a counter to. He adds his regrets about the lost crew, and his surprise that Halborn attacked them, but it may sound a little insincere. Ghost says they have other ships on their way to the scene, but he doesn't expect they'll get there before Halborn has made himself scarce.

Mach: Halborn is ticked off about being led into the Zion/EPN hovercraft by the Cypherites, and demands to see the Machines again. The player meets Pace, as if there's going to be another meeting between her and Halborn, but she says that Halborn won't be coming, because there's no point in him asking them for the location of Carlyne's ship again. She adds that fortunately, an outlet for his anger has "been arranged." Override programs are popping up at Cypherite installations, and the player finds some Cyphs who say Halborn tore through their place, and chased off the rest of the Cyphs there. They go along with the player to this other Cypherite location, where there are a bunch of override programs, dead Cypherites, and Halborn, who's still mad, and says they're being manipulated (it isn't clear if he is thinking the player is a Machine or a Cypherite here) by someone who knows all about the program.

Merv: The General's latest progress update hasn't come through, and the player is sent to find out what the holdup is. They find the commando communication squad dead, and their Merv-net computer locked out. Flood says that the Machines are on the player's tail now, probably over the whole Sentinel system hacking thing, and grudgingly shows the player a spot they can hide out for a while. This doesn't work, and the player is ambushed repeatedly by Machines. Flood sends the player to a spot where they've seen one of Halborn's Accelerators; some Machines get too close and get accelerated (friendly); the player finishes off the rest. The player reports to the Merv, who admits that Halborn has had his uses, but those have run out, and they can consider their business with him at an end. Persephone is there, and comments that Halborn is just another of the people the Merv has used up and spit out over the centuries--people who were willing to sell their souls to try to get what they wanted.

4/24-4/30

Required Events:

Zion: Carlyne confronts Halborn, Zionite hits him with Carlyne-given program, Halborn crumples lifeless to the ground shortly thereafter

Mach: (Before Zion event) Machines warn Halborn that his ship has probably been compromised, suggest that he leave, as his security cannot be guaranteed; he's ticked; Pace/Gray hyperjumps away

Merv: (After Zion event) Mervs sent to see what Carlyne intends to do now; after getting past some of this programs, they (I guess the only Merv character I could take along would be Beirn, since the others would be vulnerable to overrides) ask him what's up, he says he's leaving, Mervs get orders to try to convince him to stay (how, I dunno--I wouldn't want to repeat some of the stuff already tried by the Merv on Halborn in the previous subchapters, though); ultimately this doesn't work, Carlyne's still determined to leave

5/1

Crit 10.1.5

Zion: Carlyne thanks Zion, and says he's leaving the Matrix now that his job of removing Halborn is done. He adds that he doesn't think Halborn's dead, but his ship has been disabled, so he can't jack in. Maybe he could given time, but Carlyne will be taking steps to make sure that doesn't happen, which--he says--is another reason he's got to dash off. Tyndall says some overrides are still cropping up, and send the player to one site, but all they find there are a couple embarrassed bluepills. They try another spot, and find accelerated programs, but dead ones, and some Machines show up and chase them off (or at least put up a good fight--a level 100 spawns after the first normal Machine is killed). Niobe says she's glad Halborn and Carlyne are out of the picture, but the Machines showing up around those dead overrides is probably a sign that they're stepping their activity back up now that the intruders are gone, and that Zion has had time to get prepared (New Zion finished and so forth), but it's going to be tough facing the full force of the Machines again.

Mach: Sent to investigate possible lingering override programs, the player finds that Carlyne's already killed them. Carlyne says he's leaving the Matrix, as he'd promised to do once Halborn was removed. He says he hopes there are no hard feelings over the times they ended up on opposite sides. Gray calls the player in to discuss priorities in light of Carlyne's departure. Gray says that with the intruders gone, they'll be able to deploy their Sentinels and Agents in full strength again, and take on the terrorists. Pace names EPN and the Merv as recent offenders who need to be dealt with. The player is sent back out to finish scrubbing up override codes, and finds some Merv operatives who've lured Machines into an override field where they got accelerated, and then Cypherites examining dead accelerated programs with Cryptos, who says that he thinks the overrides were tapping into something fundamental in the simulation, that's not likely to go away just because the intruders are leaving. He says that he wasn't vulnerable to overrides, despite being partly Machine code himself, so he's going to try coding something to resist override programs, using his own operating code as a starting point.

Merv: The General beams a slightly choppy holographic broadcast through to say that he's reached the blackout area, and they found a heavily fortified facility, whose defenses they couldn't penetrate. Nearby they found a data conduit that wasn't as heavily defended, and they've managed to tap into it, but the protocols are unusual, only partly matching Machine formats. He sends a sample along. Flood has the player hack into a Sentinel system to look for some kind of match, but they don't find anything. The Effectuator pops in to say that they'll have to go way deeper, since this is something nobody they know has seen before. He gives the player a couple dire lupine defenders, and the player tries a heavily secured Machine database the Merv hasn't been able to access before. After getting past a lot of Machines and ambushes, the player gets matching data from the site and uploads it. (A hackable computer at this Machine site has text systematically describing how [Halborn] found himself in a position to be scanned by Zion twice, and says information from the scans was probably used against him.) It's beamed to the General, who tries using it to work his way through the strange data protocols. The player has to fight off Machines to get to the comm terminal where the General's data feed is coming in, and it looks like he's found some kind of massive network: the "[secret name zeta] Network," but that's about all that's returned before his session is terminated.

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

5/15

Chapter image: Mauser at a telephone in Tabor Park

Crit 10.2.1

Zion: While investigating an increase in network glitches, and finding a computer that checks out clean, although a Machine operative was encountered nearby, the player is called in to talk to Colt, who tells them that his old crewmate (he's later called "head mechanic" and "a highly skilled technician") Mauser, supposedly killed by Sentinels after rescuing Lock from the Machine attack on Zion, has been seen in the Matrix--this is doubly strange, since Mauser didn't have jacks. (A Zionite guard here talks about the successful hovercraft battle and Lock's return.) A bit of fruitless searching for him is done based off the initial sighting reports and "disconnected blips at public hardlines," but these are fruitless until his picture comes up on an ID scanner at a nearby internet café. But by the time the player gets there, Mauser is gone, and the security guard confirms he didn't stay very long. A staff member is puzzled that someone managed to wipe the secured cache on one of the terminals.

Mach: The player is going around messing with Zionites who've gotten a little slack with their security after all these months of the Machines playing it cool while the intruders were around. This spree includes beating up Zionites, disabling their computers, and interrupting an awakening procedure right after the bluepill swallowed the red pill. Finally they get to a surprisingly large pack of Zionites headed by Niobe, who says that Zion isn't just going to roll over for the Machines.

Merv: The General tries to get in contact from the no-fly zone, but his signal is too weak. Malphas introduces a scheme for using the humans in pods dotted around the Earth's surface as a wide array broadcast method for reaching the General by taking advantage of the signal generation capability of electroencephalographic (EEG) wiring and human bodies. All operatives have to do is go around shaking hands with bluepills to fire Malphas' program back into their pods. This goes on for a while with various reactions from the bluepills encountered, some of the later ones reacting a little suspiciously (sort of Machine-like, you could say). In the end the signal generated just isn't powerful enough to get anything to or from the General, giving Flood an opportunity to go on about the weakness of the human mind and body.

5/15-5/21

Required Events:

Zion: [Zion only] Colt leads a hunt for Mauser that has operatives spread out to cover every hardline in the city; Mauser is spotted and pursued, but when Colt catches up to him, Mauser makes no sign of recognizing him, and vanishes through an uncharted line (some non-hardline phone or other somewhere in the city)

Mach: Hm, maybe we could swipe some juicy Zion info on what Lock's been talking to the Council about since he got back (this would be something just read off, and would illustrate that the Council isn't too hot to kick Roland out of the Commander position just because Lock's back)

Merv: The Merv tries getting a crew to establish a broadcast relay to the General in the Real, but although the coordination and setup goes well, and a connection is established, the crew is brutally slaughtered by Sentinels who find their position. Ouch!

5/22

Crit 10.2.2

Zion: The line Mauser escaped through is found to be part of a pre-Truce restricted access Zion network, whose documentation was mostly lost when the Machines zapped Zion's old mainframe. Old operatives like Colt and Roland know a little bit about some of the network, but while Zion can track down some of the old phone terminals, they can't navigate through them--how Mauser is doing it is a mystery. The player's operator tries mapping some of the network by sending tracking packets through it, which works to a certain extent, although they also run into some Machines along the way, and a few puzzled bluepills who say they haven't received a phone bill in years. After these false starts, though, they come across Mauser, standing next to yet another phone. He calmly says he's doing what he can do win the war; he adds that the Machines will be there soon [not actually :p], and he's prepared to leave through the restricted line he's just "spliced."

Mach: The player works with police to check into possible Mauser activity, finding some computers with their access logs wiped (and a dead Night Watchman at one location), and fingerprints. This leads to a bank that just reported a break-in. No money was taken, but a computer was tampered with. There was an attempt to delete the access log, but it was preserved by the bank's backup system. The log is analyzed, and Gray reports that it shows the user connected to a remote system using network tunneling and an unknown, encrypted connection protocol. Gray adds that the way the perp is skipping around indicates that he isn't travelling by usual means. The Machines still aren't sure if this is actually Mauser, but by the end of the mission Gray says they're giving him that designation, at least temporarily.

Merv: The Merovingian wants to investigate using the power generated by the storm to help contact the General somehow. (The Twins are here discussing Lock's transfer to New Zion.) Flood has the player borrow a bluepill phone and call "the popular radio meteorological call-in show, 'Rainy Day Dan,'" to see if there's an easy answer. The ebullient host says he doesn't know of a way lightning would help, but a temperature inversion, that can happen in storms, has the possibility of causing a phenomenon called "tropospheric ducting" capable of boosting radio signal range significantly. Flood thinks this sounds simple and sends the player to ask commandos for details about the storm. They talk about various things like avoiding lightning, the slow process of atmospheric oxygen decay, and the human "Operation Dark Storm" that started the storm, although they have no idea how the humans actually did it, and suggest that maybe the Machines don't even know how it worked, or else they'd have stopped it already. Flood says that isn't much to go on, and sends the player to try to get anything on Operation Dark Storm that Zion might have. They dig up an old newspaper article from about a week before the operation was kicked off (the government is releasing some info to the public about what to expect, it will be perfectly safe and temporary, victory is assured, free flashlights for everyone in the mean time, etc), but that's about it. Flood says if the atmosphere is still relatively similar to the pre-storm atmosphere, they'll just have to have some of the General's Sentinels try various time-tested cloud seeding techniques such as dispersing silver iodide, dry ice, salt mixtures, and so forth.

5/22-5/28

Required Events:

Zion: Could be hectic, but I was thinking of trying a contest where we say that we're trying to track Mauser bouncing around hidden lines, so we have players split into mission teams and find non-hardline exterior phones in the city within a certain time limit. The team leader would have to be at the phone, they /tell an LO, the LO gives me their name, I teleport to their location (invisible), drop a smoke cloud ("message cloud") on the phone to mark it, and an LO keeping score tallies one point for that team. We'd probably have a backlog of reports at first, but eventually I think it would slow down as players would be spreading farther and farther afield to find unmarked phones. Might need a backup plan if we couldn't keep up with the reports.

Mach: Machine crack-down on hardlines in Downtown; maybe something like putting small pvp zones up on various hardlines, and having Machinists try to defend a Mechanic there while he operates on the line, if it's successful, a platoon of level 255 Agents pops out and surrounds the hardline Merv: I want to dwell on the Dark Storm thing a little while we're on the topic. Mervs follow up some of the leads they found in the previous mission and find an old program, who looks like a Zero One robot (he might have to be extracted and instantiated or something first), and talks about the old times when the humans created the storm.

5/29

Crit 10.2.3

Zion: Colt provides a program that will shut down part of the restricted access network--Zion still can't utilize the lines, and they're concerned that the Machines may have captured data on the system from the old Zion mainframe. Colt is confused by Mauser's behavior, and thinks "something happened out there with him and Lock." The player shuts the network section down without trouble, and goes to investigate a new line found from the terminal they accessed. They find a bluepill office, with a restricted line in a back room. A clerk says they aren't supposed to use it. Another clerk, however, whispers "it's about time they sent someone," and gives the player an access code for the phone. A locked desk in the area contains a filefolder that the operator says holds a handwritten note saying "Your contact's name is Soren. any changes to your standing orders will come from him." This phone leads to another, but when the player reaches it, they find a Decelerator program, which has scrambled the line. Machine redpills appear at the scene as well. Tyndall says they thought the override programs had been removed weeks ago.

Mach: The Machines have found some data on the old restricted hardline network among the mainframe data captured from old Zion, and start using it to investigate the network. They run smack into Zionites, and a line with strange protocols. The Machines realize they don't have the necessary information to be able to use the network, and Zion seems to know things about it that they don't, so they decide to concentrate on following Zion instead. They find a Zionite questioning bluepills about strange accesses on what the office workers describe as "some kind of old dial-up data line" that they don't really use anymore. Snooping that Zionite's comm tips the Machines off to the location of a Zionite team who thinks they're closing in on Mauser. The player ambushes the team, and the Machines scan the restricted line at their location. This picks up traces of an unusual broadcast signal, and a match at another phone terminal on the restricted network. The player meets Pace there, and she says that Mauser wasn't around, but they got a better reading of the broadcast signal, and were able to determine that it's coming from the vicinity of old Zion. Pace thinks it could be Mauser's signal.

Merv: The tropospheric ducting is working (and the storm seeding worked better than expected, kicking up a pretty heavy tempest), so the player is sent to find unencrypted Machine data of the type the General is encountering in the Oligarch Network, to help the General decrypt it or navigate through it or whatnot. The mainframe they're sent to capture turns out to be in the form of a female office clerk, who seems pretty surprised. The Machines try to stop them, but the player clubs her over the head and drags her off to have her brain downloaded by Merv technicians. The data flow looks good, so the player goes to check with the General to see how he's doing, but the conversation with his holographic broadcast is broken off when his forces are hit by what he calls "incoming missiles." Flood says that the data from the captured mainframe just got cut off. The player finds the mainframe, technician, and Exile guards dead. Flood takes solace in the thought that the General might be dead, too.

5/29-6/4

Required Events:

Zion: Pursuit of Mauser through a few remaining uncharted hardlines (I could teleport players from one phone to another, then they chase Mauser to another phone, where he teleports again--then we'd have to hack the line to find the phone he went to--maybe we could ask players to load hacker and do Write Code at the line, which would reduce the time) ends when he spawns a Runtime and vanishes into a phone near the Hel Club

Mach: Operation against EPN crews/computers to help Sentinels triangulate the Mauser transmission source near old Zion; they're close to pinpointing it when disabled security routines on the EPN systems suddenly reactivate and cut the trace; the reactivated security routines resist Machine efforts to crack--but we should find some way to show that EPN themselves are surprised by the security routines kicking back on Merv: The seeded, intensified Dark Storm is still allowing communication with the General and his surviving men. Players help a commando program upload into a restored Sentinel, and protect his RSI while he uses it to scavenge flight recorders from other Sentinels that were taken out by the missile barrage--maybe these spawn in as dead Sentinels in the city, and players have to go track down the body and "loot" it somehow, fighting off Machines; anyway, when the data is added up, it's found that a few of the Sentinels had recorded long-range readings that fit the profile of the ship type Carlyne and Halborn used

6/5

Crit 10.2.4

Zion: Following the line Mauser had escaped through near the Hel Club, the player finds an Exile, who says they can help, if the player makes sure that a computer nearby is put offline. Tyndall says they may as well give it a shot, and the player disables a computer owned by some Dire Lupines, but when they go back to meet the mysterious Exile (a Nightmare), they find him dead, with a dead Machine next to him, and some ticked-off Exiles. The player manages to find a phone there that turns out to be another of the restricted lines. This one leads to a bunch of Exiles, and Flood, who says that the player is trespassing in the Merv's domain. Tyndall is concerned that Mauser might be walking into a Merovingian trap.

Mach: The Machines go after EPN systems in the Matrix, to capture the scan information that they weren't able to capture in the Real. They get to the right EPN computer, but it reports a strange error when trying to connect to EPN's systems on the surface. Pace shows off a sim of an EPN talking about Mauser's rescue and defense of Lock after the Machine attack on Zion. She points out that although Lock said Mauser was killed by Sentinels, no Machine Sentinels are known to have encountered Mauser, and also, Lock didn't say he'd actually seen it: he'd only heard it from the safe spot where Mauser had hidden him. She says it's important to identify Lock's rescue location and check the place out for themselves, since it had to do with Mauser's last reported location in the Real. The Machines have the player assassinate a well-known user of internet black markets, and log into one with his account. A brief browse turns up someone selling what they claim is hard data on the rescue operation. The player meets the seller's courier and makes the buy. Gray says the data looks legit, and they identify the wrecked facility Lock was hidden in as Danielle Wright's lab, where she was killed by Sentinels shortly before the Machines wiped out old Zion. Gray says that Mauser may be able to do some of the things he's been doing by taking utilizing technology salvaged from the lab. The Machines modify their surface search to cover the area between the lab and the rough area to which they'd tracked his signal previously.

Merv: An attempt to contact the General doesn't even get off the ground, and the commando says that they can't raise him at all after they received reports of a second missile strike. Flood thinks the General is faking it. He also says that someone has stolen the topographic data on the no-fly zone; the General has a separate copy, but of course they can't reach him. The player is sent to investigate the crime and finds three dire lupines around the victimized computer, who say that its only them lupines who are there, and they haven't smelled anyone else around. Flood sends the player to check on a call they just got from some of their people nearby about a suspicious character, and the player finds dead Exiles and a phone. The General's hologram beams in and says he'll send along his copy of the data. This is used to track down the stolen version, and they find a dire lupine, who doesn't talk much like a lupine, standing next to a phone. The lupine says the data's been uploaded, and to thank the Frenchman for making it easy to get the data, because it would've been harder to go through the Machines. Then the lupine falls over dead. Flood says he's pretty sure that was Mauser, and now he's really crossed the line by stealing from the Merv.

6/5-6/11

Required Events:

Zion: Zionites looking for Mauser pursue reports of a hyper-jumping, bald, muscular black male skulking around abandoned buildings in Westview. They find Joshua Maston, who says it wasn't Mauser, but the Morpheus simulacrum, who has returned to the simulation.

Mach: Fallout from the Merv's cloud seeding is causing increased lightning storm activity in the area being searched for Mauser, making Sentinel and hovercraft activity in the area impossible. This would take a significant amount of preliminary work, but I was thinking we have some of the Machinists "on foot" in the Real. We'd give out URLs to web-hosted images containing their visual transmissions from the surface--a first-person "photo" view. Each would have a few visual reference points the team could choose to go to--a distant ledge, or ruined structure, etc. Machinists not on the team could help advise the others. Maybe there could be some random chance of one of the team being incapacitated by a lightning strike each "turn" (searching a location would also take a turn--similar to old text adventures, basically). If they don't waste too much time exploring dead ends (or if they just get lucky on lightning strike chances) they'll find a discarded Zion lightning gun on a small ledge just below the rim of a massive canyon. Wind is whipping through the chasm, preventing descent, but the Machines think they'll be able to get a shielded scanning system trucked out there.

Merv: Ookami's tracking the thief Mauser and runs into interference from Zionites led by Colt. Hm... We could do phone-hopping, too, although Ookami can't hardline so she'd have to be recalled, or just hoof it. Eventually they find Mauser just as he's jacking out in Creston Heights.

6/12

Crit 10.2.5

Zion: Niobe says they need to figure out who's been over there in Westview. Colt adds some details/rumors about Mauser possibly leaving, and the Machines hunting close to where Lock was found. Tyndall sends the player to check an old sim haunt in Gracy Heights, where they find some semi-hostile Crushers, and a disconnected phone from "an old coppertop network." The operator pulls up some old utility records, and they follow the network to a switchbox in Guinness Lake, where they find Cypherites outside a locked door. The door mysteriously unlocks as soon as the Cypherites are disposed of, the operator reports a burst of network activity as the player steps through the doorway, and in the next room they find a computer with a very cryptic message [it is in fact an extremely vague puzzle whose solution will come along in Zion 10.3.1]. Tyndall has the player go meet with Shimada, who describes a strange find made by EPN. They'd detected a blip heading north from a deep tunnel location around old Zion. It got out of range before they could follow, but backtracking along its path, they found a recently vacated area at the end of an old maintenance tunnel, covered with pieces from Sentinels and hovercraft, some badly damaged. One of the hovercraft terminals was still functional, and contained encrypted data, although the encryption is a familiar type, so they expect to be able to crack it eventually. She adds that the blip wasn't larger than a mid-sized hovercraft, and was moving at roughly hovercraft cruising speed, only they weren't able to catch up to it before it moved out of range, because of twists in the tunnel system.

Mach: Thanks to having narrowed down the search area, the Machines are able to pick up Mauser's broadcast. The player fights off Zionites and tracks Mauser through a phone hop. They find him alone, cut the line of the phone next to him, and start scanning his RSI to lock the signal, but Gray reports a problem with the scan, and orders the player to report to the operations room to have a diagnostic run on them. They get there just as the Morpheus Signal (static-covered version of Morpheus that the Morpheus sim used to try to fool Zion back during the Red Sky) pops in, disrupting the scan operation, which results in the loss of Mauser's signal. The Machines try to find it again, but can't detect it. Gray says that the coincidence of the involvement of four parties who have all been pro-Zion (Mauser, the Morpheus sim, Danielle Wright, the Oracle) in recent illicit activities could point to a larger threat. Pace says Mauser had surprise on his side, but they'll get him if he jacks in again.

Merv: The General, on his way back from the no-fly zone, finishes transmitting the data he pulled out of the Oligarch network line. Analysis of the data finds that part of it consists of data packets carrying traditional 1999 human network headers. Another technician mentions that the Oligarch data is extremely complex, and could take years to understand. The headers are tracked to a "private corporate provider," and upon investigation with some Ookami-provided werewolf reinforcements, the player finds [secret stuff y].

[cryptic message x] = Follow her eyes in the dark binary of the golden prime.

Follow her eyes golden prime binary nights

Reference to Tennyson poem, "argent-lidded eyes" -> Argent Biometrics and then Wright Research in 10.3.

[secret location y] = The Ouroboros Corporation

RSI pills for mauser (also going to need two RSIs: t-shirt, and later black long coat version):

rsimbody003
rsimskin010
rsimhair001
rsimhaircolor001
rsimface001
rsimfacecolor001
rsimtat001
rsimhead013
anniv08tshirtnwhite
1101 (mclothing_pants a10_c1) - gray barrelhead cargo pants mclothing_shoes_a3_c1
emglasses_a6_c2_1 - enhanced brown sector sunglasses and later:

mclothing_coat_a6_c1 - brown jayne collarless half-duster probably skip the hat:

mclothing_hat_a5_c1

(level 50 char)

Ouroboros:

<http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...061#36300351996>

Yasamuu pointed out that Ouroboros was reported as buying MetaCortex (that was in the Sentinel, during the lead up to the first anniversary with Decius Wadsworth, Blue Sky, and all that: <http://mxoresource.com/sentinel/033006/>) which is sort of annoying because I don't see any point in reducing the already small number of our in-game corporations. I'd like Ouroboros to be independent so I can do stuff with them without involving MetaCortex. When asked, the tour guide responded that Ouroboros has no affiliation with MetaCortex. I suppose if I have to go into it at some point I'll put in something somewhere about the two going their separate ways at some point after Wadsworth's mysterious disappearance.

founded in 1953--"researchers and investors"

Security:

- silver and black
- long shotguns
- personal firewall and hyper-deflect
- tattoo?

tropospheric ducting references:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cloud_seeding http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Radio_...ves#Propagation http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Radio_...pospheric_modes

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tropos...spheric_ducting

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

[Abbreviations (just for summary convenience--don't use this as terminology with players):

OG: Oligarchy/Oligarchs

OR: Ouroboros Corporation

WR: Wright Research

PA: Pendhurst-Amaranth

Ouroboros Corporation

The only thing I've really done with Ouroboros before the 10.2.5 Merv crit (in which Mervs run into silver-and-black SWAT-style, shotgun-wielding "Ouroboros Security" NPCs) was this live event

http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/..._id=36300018389

in chapter 8. If I need some Ouroboros employees for LE's I'd probably just dress a normal RSI similarly to the Tour Guide from that LE: pink dress shirt, black striped pants, that sun or heart or whichever it was tattoo, leggings, and black pumps for women, and a red dress shirt, plain black slacks, and black formal shoes for men.

In that event, the Tour Guide said they were founded in 1953 by "forward thinking researchers and investors." During the old Blue Sky event for MXO's first anniversary, one of Paul's Sentinel articles said that Ouroboros had bought Metacortex, but the Tour Guide said here that the companies weren't related, and I'm not really interested in having them stuck together, so if the question does come up at some point I'll just have to say that Metacortex regained their independence.

Ouroboros specializes in the manufacture of electronic devices. Their corporate culture is famously secretive and clannish, with internal divisions who rarely share information between each other. Their headquarters is a marked skyscraper in Creston Heights (Binary Boy is standing in their plaza).

Wright Research

Aside from the background legal wrangling, Wright Research doesn't feature all that largely in this subchapter. Zion gets a very vague hint from P-A's Brenda Utley that she--Utley is supposedly a bluepill--may know about dead WR founder's Danielle Wright's redpill past.

Danielle was a pre-Truce Zion operative/scientist, specializing in network interfaces, developing most notably the emergency jack-out system, just after the Truce was made. Danielle became disillusioned with Zion's leadership at that point, and went off on her own, using her skills and abilities to make herself a life inside the Matrix as founder of what became a successful R&D company, Wright Research. More recently, Zion approached her to help them revamp the red pill program, which the Machines had compromised shortly after the war restarted (chapter 8.2). Wright completed the work, not seeming all that pleased about Zion, but was then killed by the Machines, who used her hidden connection to Zion's mainframe to help destroy the old city.

Since Danielle's death, it has more or less been business as usual for her company, although there are mentions (an Ouroboros worker says something in a late Merv crit in this subchapter, for instance, and there was one somewhere in an earlier subchapter, I think) that Wright Research hasn't done anything new or interesting lately; still, they continue to be regarded as one of the foremost tech think-tanks. Their corporate headquarters is a skyscraper in Vauxton, marked on the game map.

Pendhurst-Amaranth

Brenda Utley was a PR rep at mega-consumer-products corporation P-A back in chapter 5.3, when she contacted Zion, approaching them through their coppertop "private investigator" front, about weird security problems at the company. This turned out to be attacks by Niobe's ex-controller, Anome, and Utley worked with Zion to get rid of his Unlimit goons through chapter 6.2, when the day was won, and she was promoted to a position on P-A's board of directors. At the current time, chapter 10.3, she has worked her way up to chairwoman of the board.

P-A's corporate HQ is a campus of large buildings, marked on the Hampton Green map.

- Hm, I didn't think of it in time for this update, but I should have made generic missions that would open interior floors inside Ouroboros and Pendhurst-Amaranth, like I did for Wright Research back around chapter 6. I do have old test missions that can probably get interior access at those company headquarters now, but they're full of debug text, can be finished prematurely by talking to an inappropriately placed test NPC inside, and so forth--not what I'd like to use if I can avoid it. I'll have to get decent missions in (not 'til 11.1 I suppose).

Because of the detailed interaction with specific agencies in this subchapter, most of the Zion/EPN & Machine/CYPH events are pre-assigned to just one of the two groups in each pair.]

6/26

[Release pushed back a day or so from the 26th due to build issues.]

Ouroboros tour guide Judie Lahler in uniform in front of the Ouroboros sculpture in their HQ's plaza, with watchful Ouroboros security on either side.

Crit 10.3.1

Zion: Niobe sends players to find out if the cryptic message found in 10.2.5 ("Follow her eyes in the dark binary of the golden prime") means anything. The player searches the simulation's internet, and comes across some information that makes them think it could have something to do with the Camon Heights Exile, Silver. Silver has apparently gone into hiding already, so they go on to check out Wright Research, since Silver had previously worked with Danielle Wright. Talking to an employee there, the player is told that an internal bulletin alerted Wright workers to a break-in attempt several weeks ago by a man closely matching Mauser's description.

Mach: Gray send the player to ambush an EPN team that is supposedly searching for the Morpheus sim; The player doesn't find the sim, but they do find an EPN mention of the "blip" EPN reported to Zion in 10.2.5. Gray mentions that they'd heard of the EPN report, and that the EPN reading was supposed to have been taken just after Mauser's last known appearance in the Matrix, several weeks ago. Mauser hasn't been located in the Real, either. Next, the player is sent to rescue a mechanic program charged with shutting down part of the old Zion restricted line network. The player saves the mechanic from some Zionites. Gray says that Zion and their new city is of course still the main problem, and with the intruders gone they'd like to get back to work on destroying the new city, but the darn storm is making those arrangements--Sentinel movements in particular--much more difficult than they'd normally be. The player asks a bluepill meteorologist for their "intuitive" analysis of the storm (they tell the meteorologist the data they're showing him is a hypothetical scenario), and the meteorologist says that they think the storm will last for a while, and is probably going to get worse before it gets better. Gray says that in light of not being able to find the sim, storm problems, etc, the best course of action at present is to put a stop to the Frenchman's shenanigans (breaking into the no-fly zone and so forth).

Merv: The player is sent to spy on an OR network manager, and at his office overhears talk of a party some of the employees are holding at one of their apartments. The party is duly crashed, and the manager kidnapped, although if they're looking carefully, the player may notice that one drunk clerk at the party is level 5. The player delivers the manager to Ookami and some assistants for rigorous questioning. That done, Flood has the player check up on the clerk from the party, and they find him reporting to a Cypherite that "they're after Ouroboros."

6/26-7/2

Required Events:

Zion: (EPN only) EPN decrypt the data retrieved from the maintenance tunnel site, and find it's a copy of the same topographic data on the no-fly zone that the Merv stole from the Machines. Decrypting it might require busting some Machine (or less likely, Merv) skulls. The conclusion is that EPN decide to send hovercraft of their own to that area, to see what's going on. [They'll arrive in 11.1.]

Mach: (CYPH only) Cyphs sneak past some Mervs, capture OG data feeding into OR (see also Merv event details)

Merv: (after Mach event) Merv counter-attacks Cyphs, confronts Cryptos about the Cyphs who've been around his OR activity lately, and Cryptos explains felt he needed the data to advance the research he's doing for creating a counter to override codes

7/3

Crit 10.3.2

Zion: The player breaks into the Wright facility where Mauser is supposed to have broken in weeks earlier, but they find only an alarm-rigged computer and security guards waiting for them. Just then Pendhurst-Amaranth chairwoman Brenda Utley gets in touch, after making the player go through some hoops to make sure no Wright spies are on their tail (officially, P-A deals with Zion as if Zion is a firm of private investigators--actually more like mercenaries, but that doesn't sound as civilized). Meeting in secret, Utley tells the player that Wright Research is threatening to sue Pendhurst-Amaranth, alleging that P-A hired a hacker, Mauser, to steal data from Wright Research, and basing that connection off of known ties between Mauser and Zion, and P-A and Zion (Zion worked with P-A back during the Unlimit affair, when Anome tried to take over the corporation). Utley adds that WR's Mauser story is only an excuse: Wright Research thinks she possesses damaging information about their company [she drops what could be taken as a hint that WR thinks Utley knows something about Danielle Wright's redpill activities].

Mach: The player is in the process of roughing up some Exiles for info on the Merv when Veil calls and invites them to come see Cryptos, who has "news." Gray says that the Cyphs have been conducting their own investigation of the Merv. Cryptos says that the Mervs are after info inside the Ouroboros Corporation that the Merv believes to be related to the intruders; Cryptos says he doesn't want someone like the Merv, who doesn't really care about human lives except as power/pleasure sources, getting their hands on something like that. Pace briefs the player on Ouroboros, and marches them off with reinforcements. They find Mervs attacking an Ouroboros building. Gray directs them to eliminate the Mervs, without hurting any surviving Ouroboros guards. He says that Ouroboros had failed to notify the authorities of the attack.

Merv: Using info Ookami got out of the OR network manager, the player, after difficulty with a server that suddenly went out while they were trying to hack it, and some hostile OR security (not to mention their snotty office workers), gets their hands on a bunch of OR network passwords. They're about to put these to use at another OR terminal, when they're rudely interrupted by Machines. They try again, but this time Pace is there to greet them, with two Agents by her side. She warns them that they'd better cease their activity at the Ouroboros Corporation.

7/3-7/9

Required Events:

Zion: (Zion only) WR vs PA pre-courtroom hearing w/ court-appointed mediator; small Zion group backs Utley & PA against WR's claim of PA/Zion involvement in the break-in (hm...I suppose I might dual-client to handle the WR rep and the mediator)

Mach: (Machines only) machinists chasing Mervs also run into OR security; Agent appears and calls machinists off; Gray explains to the Machinists that the Machines have been aware OR was a front set up by the OG, and that now it is causing a problem in the Matrix, but the Machines cannot risk attacking OR directly, lest the OG be notified about it and bring more overrides into the Matrix

Merv: Mervs posing as Agents go into OR and confiscate some data, but are stopped by OR security who "pull rank" and tell the disguised Mervs that their "Federal jurisdiction" doesn't apply inside OR

7/10

Crit 10.3.3

Zion: Utley says that P-A is getting a little too much legal heat from Wright, and asks Niobe to look for clues on Mauser at Ouroboros instead. Niobe isn't happy about it, but it isn't as though the Wright thing was going great for Zion so far anyway. An aide to Utley mentions that since the whole Wright case hinges on Mauser, and the Machines probably don't want a lot of facts about Mauser coming to light, there's a good chance that Wright will have a hard time putting their case through anyway. The player goes to meet an informant of Utley's at Ouroboros, who tells them he's heard rumors of a security incident about four weeks about at Ouroboros. He directs them to a female Ouroboros security guard he trusts, and she says that the attack was a hack attempt that came in over the internet, going right through the Ouroboros corporate firewall. She points the player to Ouroboros' firewall server, where the server's logs are captured, and it is found that a lot of data went in and out during the time when the attack was supposed to have taken place, using encryption somewhat similar in design to the encryption on the red pill program rewritten for Zion by Danielle Wright; the suggestion is that the thief--probably Mauser--used stolen Wright technology to hack into Ouroboros.

Mach: Gray says they've known Ouroboros is an Oligarch front, and that the Machines have to make sure that the Oligarchs are not called into the Matrix as a result of the security problems Ouroboros is having. He gives the player some Agents and asks them to go make one last attempt to get Ouroboros to let the Machines handle the Merv's attacks. At the Ouroboros office, a rep says that they appreciate the offer, but they can handle "a few latter-day gangsters" with their own security force. Gray says that the only recourse now is to cut their communication connection to the Real, whose location they know. The player raises alarms in an office nearby as a distraction, then goes to the Ouroboros communication linkup. Gray says that they'll re-route outgoing messages to a spoofed receiver; they can't replace the actual encrypted outgoing data, but he thinks they can work out the Merv problem before the Oligarchs are alerted by a missing status report or two. But, when the player tries accessing the communication terminal, it goes into lockdown, and an Accelerator and Ouroboros security (who should then get Accelerated by the Accelerator) appear. Gray is worried.

Merv: An irritable Flood will hear no excuses, and send the player back to Ouroboros, armed with passwords. An alarm has already been raised; there are a lot of guards, and the passwords won't work. Trying again (Flood feels a headache coming on), they find their target computer has a bullet through it, with an OR guard and a Machinist next to it, arguing: the OR guard says the Machinist can't just go in there, and the Machinist is arguing that they have to take measures to protect "consumer data" since OR is under assault by "a major criminal syndicate." The player reports these events to the Merv, who thinks it's interesting that OR isn't cooperating with the Machines. He gives the player a letter for OR, which he says details Machine/Cypherite tampering at OR. (Mr. Black is in the room with the Merv here, but says nothing; like Kalt w/ Utley in Mach 10.3.4, I just wanted to add a hint of other business dealings going on in the background.) At OR, a receptionist, telling an Agent that they'll have to wait, ushers the player through to meet with the OR rep. The rep seems interested when they read the letter, but are tight-lipped, and say only that they'll "check into it."

7/10-7/16

Required Events:

Zion: (Zion only) Utley/Zion help each other find info about a means of accessing OR's internal network access records (which will be used in the following crit): the name of the Ouroboros employee who has access to a virtual blueprint of the company's internal network, [secret name x]. As PA chair, Utley has lots of pull in and knowledge of the city's corporate world, so it might be nice to incorporate that aspect into the search.

Mach: (CYPH only) Cyphs tipped off by the Machines intercept and kill an OR security chief who was about to send data out to the OG network; the concern was that this might have been an alert going out to the OG that would have caused more overrides to be brought in. How this sending mechanism would work, I'm not quite sure--could just be a computer the chief is using. As with most corporate characters, it will generally be implied that the person is a more or less talented bluepill, rather than a redpill or program.

Merv: (after Zion event) Merv, possibly calling in favors from other Exiles around the city, manufactures a scandal implicating WR, and possibly PA as well, in order to take some of the spotlight off OR while he's trying to hack there. It could be stuff like accusations or frame-ups of patent fraud, corporate sabotage, industrial espionage, intellectual property violations, dumping poisonous industrial wastes in poor people's groundwater, and so forth. (PA is a mega-corporation who does just about everything, including military contracts, but makes most of their $$$ from popular consumer products (cigarettes, sports drinks, etc), while WR is a top tech research firm, specializing particularly in computer network technology.)

7/17

Crit 10.3.4

Zion: [secret name x] is quickly located: a friendly Ouroboros IS worker. He acts normally, but the operator detects a "second data channel" on his coppertop signal: there's an extra information feed coming into the simulation from something physically planted in the man's brain at his pod. After mentioning that there's concern any blueprint [x] has may have limited usefulness due to the extremely individualized, segmented way in which the Ouroboros network is put together, Tyndall uploads a modified red pill program to the player that will trace [x]'s signal back to his pod, without actually initiating the extraction procedure (since that would probably kill him at his age and in his modified condition). The player finds [x] at home; [x] becomes suspicious, but the player succeeds in knocking him out and forcing the pill down his throat (:o). The trace runs, the pod is located in the supercluster just next to the Machine city, and a Zion hovercraft is dispatched there. In the meantime, the player follows feedback from the red pill program--unexpectedly showing up inside the Matrix--to what Tyndall says is probably the spot where the data from [x]'s brain implant is dumped into the Matrix. Ouroboros security is working to disable the terminal there, but the player beats them to it, the hovercraft crew finds [x]'s pod and initiates a data dump, and the player pulls the resulting data from the computer; it is in fact the Ouroboros network blueprint. Checking up on [x]'s condition, he's found to be under Ouroboros guard at a private hospital facility. The operator suggests that housing the data in a poddy's brain in the real was a great way to hide it from pretty much everyone other than the Machines; and it is of course pretty obvious that someone at Ouroboros knows a thing or two about the Real.

Mach: A WR rep meeting w/ Pace says that WR can provide footage of Mauser breaking into their facility, and that they have information demonstrating Mauser's ties to the Zion mercenary group; also they know Zion has worked for P-A, and that they've been meeting w/ P-A a lot in recent weeks; WR feels they have a solid case against P-A about the break-in. Pace says that since they're determined, and this suit will involve a terrorist group, it'll need a lot of federal oversight--notify Agent Gray. The player goes to see Gray, who gives them a subpoena to serve to Brenda Utley, calling her to a federal hearing to answer questions about P-A's involvement with Zion and the theft from WR. At the player's first attempt to find Utley, though, they run into Zion operatives in an Ouroboros office, and fight. After that altercation, P-A gives Gray Brenda's actual location, where the player interrupts a meeting between her and Kalt (no details are given on what they're doing, except that Kalt seems ticked that Brenda didn't warn her about the feds coming by; I just wanted to toss Kalt in there to show Brenda involved in business deals, and Kalt was the one major corp not mentioned elsewhere in this subchapter) and the player gives Utley the subpoena, which she says seems to be in order.

Merv: With business scandals and so forth distracting attention from OR, the Mervs go back to hacking OR's network. The player is tracking network links around computers Mauser (or whoever) hacked, but things take a particularly odd turn when an obvious and active connection between two sections of the network is just plain not there. The Effectuator is called in, but can't make heads or tails out of it, and starts to get weirded out. Skipping that for now, the player enters an area of the OR network that doesn't show any hits in the captured security record of Mauser's attack. They find some corporate finance data that doesn't seem very exciting, but Flood says that parsing through mountains of numbers is how real analysis gets done.

7/17-7/23

Required Events:

Zion: Zion uses the captured network blueprint to obtain the OR network records of the Wright tech break-in there. It would be a little boring if their break-in went as smoothly as Mauser's must have, though... Hm in fact we could have them get caught on their way out by some sort of unexpected and nasty security double-check system that makes them wonder just how Mauser'd got in and out of there by himself in the first place----doesn't go smoothly because individual nodes must be accessed independently, and there's variation from what's shown on the global map

Mach: (Machines only) Utley appears at her hearing and is grilled by the Machines, who end up threatening to crush PA's productivity with a hellacious audit or something if she keeps working with those sociopathic Zion mercenaries Merv: Could be a little tricky, but in this event the key to accessing the "missing" part of the network noticed in the last crit (an empty room between two rooms with computers) is found to be an emotion: strong physical attraction--this has to be exuded in the proximity of the "missing" network link, at which point the hidden data stream will be detectable. The only hint of this dropped in the mission is the Effectuator (who always feels strong physical attractions...) saying he's "getting goosebumps" and feeling "all tingly" when he's in the empty room. I resisted bringing Persephone in for the crit, because I thought we might want to save her involvement for this event, but neither of them necessarily have to be involved in finding the solution. At any rate, when the solution is found and put to use, accelerated OR Security appear. Nevertheless, access to the hidden subnet has been obtained.

7/24

Crit 10.3.5

Zion: The player uses the network addresses from the security log to hunt up and hack into the Ouroboros computers previously attacked by (probably) Mauser. The player encounters a great deal of trouble in their initial attempts: numerous Ouroboros Security teams, data they can't parse, security barriers they can't pass, and so forth. Finally, they come across something that looks like partial Machine-format surface coordinates, indicating a position the operator calls "about a thousand miles north" of the Machine city (longitude is missing), and information about power ratings and network links. Just at that point the data is cut off, and the player finds themselves face to face with Seraph, who apologetically asks them to stop investigating the data, saying (vaguely) that it will cause harm if they do. Niobe is not happy about that, but admits she still trusts Seraph--although the Council might take some convincing.

Mach: "Sources" having alerted the Machines to the Merv getting into the OR sub-network, Gray sends the player in pursuit. First, they "steal a headset" from an OR guard so they can listen in on OR's security channel. They use this info to locate some of the invading Merv redpills, and maybe some surviving, hostile OR guards; but they also run into a Decelerator. Gray says they aren't sure what the Merv expects to find, but based on what's been seen so far, it could have something to do with override programs. As the player closes in on another security hotspot, the OR security channel goes dead, and the player picks their way past dead OR guards and Merv redpills to find Seraph, who says that the player's path has to end there. Gray says well great, with the security channel down we're out of immediate ways to track the Merv inside Ouroboros; darn Ouroboros, the Merv, Seraph, and that Morph sim too, for good measure.

Merv: It's slow going through the subnet, since they no longer have the map of Mauser's attack to guide them, the passwords they captured earlier don't work, and there are Machines and Ouroboros security to contend with, but the Mervs get a break when all the hostiles at one location turn up dead (one Merv support program there gasps "It was Wingless" before keeling over), and the target computer is unprotected. It leads to a location swarming with Accelerators, Decelerators, and Ouroboros security, plus a wicked firewall, but taking down the firewall proves surprisingly easy, and they find: [typical Merv cliffhanger x]

[secret name x] = Sheldon Brewer

[typical Merv cliffhanger x] = the biological interface program

Ouroboros:

<http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...061#36300351996>

Yasamuu pointed out that Ouroboros was reported as buying MetaCortex (that was in the Sentinel, during the lead up to the first anniversary with Decius Wadsworth, Blue Sky, and all that: <http://mxoresource.com/sentinel/033006/>) which is sort of annoying because I don't see any point in reducing the already small number of our in-game corporations. I'd like Ouroboros to be independent so I can do stuff with them without involving MetaCortex. When asked, the tour guide responded that Ouroboros has no affiliation with MetaCortex. I suppose if I have to go into it at some point I'll put in something somewhere about the two going their separate ways at some point after Wadsworth's mysterious disappearance.

founded in 1953--"researchers and investors"

Security:

- silver and black
- long shotguns
- personal firewall and hyper-deflect
- tattoo?

[Square brackets below surround information that will not be revealed to players directly, possibly not at all, during this subchapter.]

[Abbreviations (just for summary convenience--don't use this as terminology with players):

OG: Oligarchy/Oligarchs
OR: Ouroboros Corporation
WR: Wright Research
PA: Pendhurst-Amaranth

BIP: biological interface program

I've added generic "Visit" missions that will let us get the usual six-person mission teams into mission areas inside Ouroboros' Creston Heights building, and Pendhurst-Amaranth's Hampton Green building, just in case we wanted to send teams into those buildings for event purposes. The missions can only be started by an admin. We already have a mission like that for Wright Research (we also have one for "The Oracle's apartment"--ie a random apartment somewhere in Mara--and the Hel Club). Oh and I also added one for Jakubaitus while I was at it.]

EPN/CYPH

The "Zion" events are mostly specified for just Zion or EPN this time. Cyphs do not have specific events called out for them here, but the "Machine" events in this subchapter almost all have to do with bluepill situations, pretty in-line with Cypherite aims, and should be suited just as well to either group.

8/7

Chapter image: Just the Merv chatting pleasantly in the chateau while Ookami watches over his shoulder

Crit 11.1.1

Zion: Zion tells Utley that Mauser has cleared out; she says if that's the case then the Wright lawsuit will collapse. After going to meet with WR's legal reps, she calls Zion back, saying that the WR reps didn't show, and that the WR people who reported this seemed evasive and agitated. Zion checks into it and finds the WR reps being pushed around by Exiles, whom they had evidently been trying to bribe. Brenda says that with the lawsuit, and attention from the feds, she can't help directly, but she's been hearing rumors of internal troubles at WR.

Mach: The Machines send the player into OR to get as close as they can to the terminal where the BIP is supposed to have been stolen by the Merv. Based on the readings obtained, the Machines say it looks like it could really have been the BIP. The player is sent to notify OR that Merv attacks on their company are probably over, and that the Machines will take care of any remaining problems. The OR rep is kind of a jerk, and says that they're back to business as usual anyway. Next, it's time to start getting the BIP from the Merv, and the operative is sent to roll a few Exiles and swipe their computer's data, part of a larger operation aimed at grabbing and analyzing as much Exile data as possible to turn up the BIP ASAP.

Merv: Merv sets to work trying to analyze the captured BIP, but it's a baffling mix of linked Machine functions and "intuitive" routines. Several outside experts are brought in to look over a sample: the dungeon Exile leader Ethereal 2, and the Historic District mission contact, Madame T. They offer a few comments on it, but don't come up with anything definite. The Merv seems more intrigued than ever. (A Wright Research official and security guard are leaving when the player goes to meet the Merv; they were digging for dirt on Mauser

(reference to data on Mauser that Merv stole from the Machines in Merv 8.3.1, and to the WR/Exile spat in Zion's mission this week), [but the Merv wasn't interested in dealing with them (he's suspicious of WR, and feels they've got too many problems of their own right now to be of much profit to him).]

8/7-8/13

Required Events:

Zion: (EPN only) Departure of the EPN expedition to the no-fly zone (Shimada talked about having to start preparations back in 10.3). Could possibly have players....hmm, well they can't really go themselves, since that would require that they stay out of the game for months, but maybe with a little advance prep they could "call up" one "crew member" or something like that; ie, they'd designate the name of an alt character---wonder if it would be possible to explain that---and then we'd have all those new alts assemble in the event and jack out together. Eh and then if one of them did jack in before the expedition completes (we'd have to make it clear that this job would very likely keep them out of the simulation for months--because it will), we'd just have to say they went AWOL, and hold the EPN who registered them responsible for the defection. And I suppose since these would just be "alts" we could open it up to EPN from all servers, provided they could produce their named "crew member" on whatever server is actually going to host the send-off event. Of course, names of characters who are actually frequently active in the game wouldn't be allowed; eh, maybe we'd have to tell them that trained Matrix operatives would be needed in the simulation, and we're only accepting operatives of neurokinetic level five (?) or lower for the expedition.

Mach: Machines go to get the BIP from the Merv. They actually do get it, but then the program removes itself from their possession just as the Mervs counter-attack, and the Mervs make off with it. (I wouldn't be disguising anyone as a jumping computer disk or anything like that :p, so the details of the program's escape would probably be mostly RP.)

Merv: (after Mach event) After its strange escape from the Machines, the Mervs realize that part of the problem in analyzing the program is that it is at least to some extent self-aware, and can modify its own code structures. Some highly experimental means of analysis is called for (maybe we could even just throw this out to the players to brainstorm on) and is attempted, but whatever it is, it ends in near-catastrophic failure, and the Mervs realize that some more informed approach is going to be necessary.

8/14

Crit 11.1.2

Zion: An enthusiastic reporter tips Zion off to something weird going on at a WR office (in exchange for an "exclusive interview," but there may be an Agent who wants to interview him first...). The player finds the office abandoned, with a chat session left in mid-chat, saying something about a break-in at another office. That office is empty except for two WR security, who get a call about a network attack as you happen to enter the room. The player follows to the scene and finds this office already under security lockdown; they interrupt the team leader, who was filing a report saying that they'd still found no evidence of an on-site intruder, and indicating that they're watching for Mauser particularly.

Mach: The player is sent to go check out reports of rioting. They find some SWAT members who had inflicted a few civilian casualties while defending themselves from a mob. The SWAT teams says they don't know what set off the mob. The player is sent in ahead of SWAT to the next trouble spot, to try to avoid violence. They find that these bluepills are upset about cable television being out of service; a second group of blues is going crazy because their Internet access is down. Gray says that it looks like a case of mass malfunction among cable boxes and home network routers, almost all of which are manufactured by OR. He adds that media streams are important in keeping the bluepills distracted, and that OR has been successful in large part because their OG backing pretty much gives them unlimited funds and technology, which the Machines didn't want to try to mess with, since that might have brought intruders into the Matrix.

Merv: The Merv determines that the answer to cracking the BIP is to enlist the knowledge of the Exile scientist Silver, who has significant experience in biological research, and advanced knowledge of interface tech that he picked up in the past from working with Wright (although at least some of this was lost when he was terminated and had to be restored from backup). But Silver's gone into hiding, as Zion discovered in 10.3. Flood has the player intimidate a certain Exile lickspittle of Silver's in Camon, who leads them to a hotel room peopled by weird bluepill simulacra, one of whom has a strain of a rare disease, which is traced to a particular lab, where Silver is found, along with a few Exile bodyguards, and some dead scientists. He is marched before the Merv, and agrees to help research the BIP, but very grudgingly; he thinks it's too dangerous, with the Machines after it.

8/14-8/20

Required Events:

Zion: Now that Silver's been roused out, Zion wonders if he's the one behind the WR problems, since he was Danielle Wright's secret co-researcher for a time. They manage to locate him when he isn't working on the BIP (which would be extremely heavily guarded), dispose of whatever Exile guards he has on hand, and ask him about the WR thing. He says it wasn't him, and he can prove it: they just have to go examine the hideaway he was using (in the 11.1.2 crit, the Mervs found him in a Richland/Westview lab room--those are usually in slum apartment buildings, I think), and a code scan will show that he was there with minimal outside contact for the past several months. Some players may not be totally convinced even after Silver has waited for them to complete this inspection, and they may want to keep him prisoner anyway, due to the whole BIP thing some of them will probably be aware of, but if pressed, Silver could call in Exile guards and run off in the ensuing melee.

Mach: Ouroboros is not handling complaints of malfunctioning consumer electronics efficiently, and Machinists are called in to quell a civilian riot. This could involve LESIG-controlled bluepills, or we could try something like having players cast non-damaging stuns/roots and so forth on hostile Bluepill NPCs to keep them occupied and alive; after a certain amount of time we say the Machines have been able to inject enough happy juice into their pods to remove the danger (at which point the NPCs would vanish, since that's what happens to spawns any time I change a setting--such as org alignment--on their sequence). Of course, something like that could potentially turn into a massacre if a player with an itchy trigger finger got within firing range.

Merv: Silver, perhaps just a tad vindictive after being pulled out of hiding, decides on a particularly ghoulish first experiment for the BIP, involving human bodies (of the Matrix simulation variety, I mean). Various attempted combinations of the BIP and the bodies do not produce visible results, although Silver claims that he's getting some highly interesting readings. One of the Merv higher-ups calls a halt to the experiment, declaring that a different line of research will be needed, and implying that Silver had better start demonstrating that he can be useful, or else.

8/21

Crit 11.1.3

Zion: Wright network equipment prototypes have gone missing. Investigation into the nature of the stolen equipment reveals that it was based on research headed by Wright herself. The player tracks down the manager of one of the prototype projects, now retired, who says that the project dried up without her, because nobody else could understand it.

Mach: The service outage isn't being handled by OR, and it's time to go tell them something needs to be done. But the OR rep the player was supposed to meet isn't there, and the few OR staff at the office are acting pretty flighty. Gray sends the player to make an unscheduled visit to another office to find out what's up, and the player finds that OR internal mail and paging services are offline. Checking up on that outage, the player finds the guys in the OR IS department completely baffled by the problems. Gray says that there's got to be some scheme behind it, and adds that they'll have to find "a more...reliable company" to pick up OR's failed public service contracts (Internet, cable devices).

Merv: The BIP is missing from its secure mainframe server, and the guards have no idea how it vanished. Silver, in the midst of some other unspeakable experiment, says he isn't surprised; he'd noticed that the BIP's unique code allows it to circumvent security routines with ease. The program is found circulating the Merv's network: first scaring a commando squad (feedback from one terminal kills a commando), then wandering around computers owned by a couple succubi, although by that time the Machines have got wind of it, and try to snatch it, but the player manages to beat them off, and the BIP settles down. Flood says they'll put it in a server with doubled firewalls cycling at irregular intervals, to prevent it from breaking out again.

8/21-8/27

Required Events:

Zion: (EPN only) The OR malfunctions and subsequent disruptions in the public sector, due to the loss of home TV and Internet access, are a fine illustration of a system of Machine control breaking down. We could have some young bluepills, adrift at an anti-OR rally, and shocked when OR security takes down a particularly rowdy rioter or something, become candidates for awakening; some sticking it to the OR security at the scene once the bluepills are evacuated might be appropriate, too.

Mach: The Machines snatch some key Ouroboros execs (could be an armed operation, or a little pill in their coffee, so to speak--or a variety), and question them about the situation at the company--what's happened to cause this corporation-wide breakdown? The execs hem and haw, but finally one confesses that they really don't know how this could have happened. The Machines verify that the exec is telling the truth.

Merv: Mervs are called in to defend the BIP against a raid by the Machines. The Mervs are hard-pressed during the attack, and fighting around the BIP's secured server is fierce. When there's a good skirmish going right next to the computer we've designated as the BIP's location, Silver or a Merv story character (probably one of the scientifically-inclined ones, although Ookami would work, too) will announce that the BIP has jumped into one of the nearby operatives (we'd pick one who seems reliable--if they crash or jack out or run away or something we'll just say the BIP has now jumped into someone else). The Mervs fight free of the attacking Machines and regroup at a new location, where the BIP-inhabited operative is sat down next to a computer, and the BIP is coaxed out into a new secure server.

8/28

Crit 11.1.4

Zion: Raiding a WR network lab where they're analyzing the attacks, the player finds they've compiled a list of employee passwords used in the attacks, and that the employees were out of town when their passwords were used. The player beats WR security to the next attacked site, and captures the on-site security camera footage. It's just showing WR employees going about their business, but one of them is a clerk that the player ran into on their way out of the security lab--at the same time the footage from the attack site was recorded. They go back to check the clerk, and find him being grilled by WR security, but he seems like a normal bluepill, and it isn't clear how he was apparently in two spots at once. (Not described by Tyndall, but a computer at one of the break-in sites has notes by "W" [Danielle Wright] about "Argent" ["Argent Biometrics" was the company name Silver used when working with Wright previously].)

Mach: Gray sends the player to check into the OR network outages specifically, and also to start taking the rest of their network offline, so they can try to isolate whatever might be causing the problems. They detect an error-free data stream in/out of OR; checking it out, they find a female OR office worker who's been hacking into the OR network to try to figure out for herself what's going on, since nobody else there seems to have any idea (oh, earlier in the mission, one of the frenzied technicians is heard saying "Where the HELL is Brewer," which is a reference to that brain-hacked OR network assistant from the last subchapter). Following a tip from the helpful hacker, the player finds a heavily guarded OR site with a bunch of computers. They shut them down, but not before an outgoing signal of some sort is detected. They also find a data connection similar to the one they used to track down the helpful hacker earlier; this leads to an abandoned hacking station, with a data dump of what looks like a copy of a message routed to a downtown address, with commands that would trigger a power plant like the one in OR's Creston HQ to overload in a runaway reaction that could destroy the whole area. Gray adds that the helpful hacker has disappeared [I mean to imply here that someone got to her].

Merv: Silver has the player go to the BIP's server, and it hops into the player's RSI. Flood is ticked. Silver, by himself this time (I keep characters as isolated as possible for the rest of this, and Flood make snarky remarks about avoiding HLs), sends the player to meet up with a particular operative; the BIP jumps into that operative, just before they're ambushed by Machines. The player and the operative fight free and get the BIP to another secure mainframe, where it settles back down. Flood calls to report that Silver's claiming the success of this experiment shows that the BIP can "interface perfectly with human broadcast signals," and semi-sarcastically suggests that next Silver will be wanting to use it to insert programs into real human bodies, or something ridiculous like that.

8/28-9/3

Required Events:

Zion: (Zion only) Mysterious WR culprit located, switches form to escape; operatives locate it again, and can attack it, although they are told not to. If they do attack and kill it, we can say it will be harder to get answers now (also, the terminated infiltrator's body disappears (reconstructs) almost immediately); if they don't kill it, it escapes.

Mach: meltdown of OR's Creston HQ power plant narrowly averted

Merv: (I'd like to run this event on Tuesday the 2nd.) Carlyne (!) appears in front of the Merovingian, asking that the BIP be handed over to him. I might have Carlyne flagged, and we'll see if any Merv operatives decide to attack him. The Merv stalls, saying that the BIP is of course being kept in a scrambled network to keep it secure, and it will take some time to prepare it safely. He asks Carlyne to name a time and place for delivery. Carlyne says just have it ready by tomorrow. On his way out he leaves some hostile overrides nearby as a "reminder."

9/4

Crit 11.1.5

Zion: (The operator mentions: Indications of increased Sentinel activity around no-fly zone; Kid's heading out with additional ships to reinforce no-fly zone exploration team [this means he won't be available for Live Events for a while after this date].) Following up on WR security reports, and scanning for a jack-in signal that can vary its encoded appearance, the player tracks the culprit to a hidden lab equipped w/ a highly sophisticated network interface system built partly from the stolen Wright equipment. Its exact purpose is unclear, and Zion decides to confiscate it for study. [A computer in the lab has a coded message that will give a clue to something...] Accessing a computer in the lab shuts down the culprit, who was evidently some kind of scripted "spider" program, equipped with WR access codes, and the likenesses of WR employees. Could it have been set up by Mauser?

Mach: Gray says it's time to shut down OR; the problems caused are just too dangerous. The Machines freeze OR's assets, and send the player in to notify staff of the federal takeover. Staff are worried, but not terribly so--except for some OR security members, who don't want any part of it, and have to be given a beat-down. The next step is going around to worker terminals and dumping all OR data to a Machine database for analysis, to find the source of the problems. This isolates the source of "suspect directives and programs, disseminated through a network of employees" to a single computer in an OR office, not actually connected to their network: it's connected to the Oligarch Network. Gray says they have to assume that the OGs know what's been going on, and could be on their way to the Matrix.

Merv: Flood calls the player in to help him argue with Silver, who wants out since learning of Carlyne's return; he says he doesn't intend to stick around waiting for Carlyne to terminate him when he comes for the BIP. But there's no time for Flood to report Silver's wussiness to the Merv, because the Machines are having their operatives (not their programs--they're keeping them back like they did the last time the intruders were around) make an all-out attempt to get the BIP. After some fighting against Machine operatives, the player comes to a Merv site with dead Exiles, a fried computer, and no sign of a struggle. The operator gets a bad feeling about this. Flood rings up to say that their programs are falling left and right, and the wave of destruction looks like it's heading right for the Merv. The player arrives to find the Merv guarded by worried Exiles, just as Carlyne appears, testily asking for the BIP. Some of the Exile guards die. The Merv seems confident in his ability to negotiate with the stressed intruder, when suddenly "???" appears beside them. Carlyne crumples to the floor, and "???" says they've come for the BIP. The rest of the Exile guards die. The Merv quickly directs the player to open the ports on the computer storing the BIP (he had it there in the room with him) to the "primary network." This is done in an instant, and the Merv and player beat a hasty retreat while "???" is still figuring out what just happened. The Merv says they've allowed the BIP to escape "into the wide network of the Matrix." He seems excited at the thought of facing this new adversary, and beating them to the BIP.

~~~~~

"???" = Actually Danielle Wright in "Oligarch"-style shell, but I'm not going to positively ID her here, just leave hints like her behavior, and the alphadecimal code found in Zion 11.1.5.

9/18

Chapter image: Wright in intruder form floating in a bubble of code

Crit 11.2.1

Zion: Intel is pretty convinced it really is Wright, and she's after the BIP. The device Zion found with the culprit stealing from Wright Research is giving out numeric sequences, which under analysis are revealed to be a series of updating coordinates. Thinking these might have something to do with Wright or the BIP, the player starts following them, finding a) a bluepill and their computer who seem to steal each other's lines, much to the bluepill's confusion, and b) a dead Exile, and live Accelerated Exiles. These encounters are reported to Niobe, who thinks maybe the device can be used to locate the BIP before Wright gets it. Niobe's also wondering if Wright wasn't quite the martyr she made herself out to be when the Machines were after her before. An EPN has just told Niobe that the EPN expedition reached the no-fly zone, but couldn't enter because of heavy Machine patrols around the perimeter, and that the Kid has already left for the zone with reinforcements.

Mach: The player is sent to help confirm the identity of the female intruder. They find a panicky bluepill and a dead Agent. The bluepill manages to point out a direction, and override use over that way is narrowed down to Wright herself, and a computer. The computer seems to be tracking something, but Wright blanks it out when the player tries to check it. Wright says she "did make a mistake": "the Matrix was more than I had thought it was"; the "mistake" line is a reference to her last event appearance as a redpill, Zion 8.2.3

( http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300016791 ), where she said that if anyone saw her again, she'd "have made a great mistake." Gray says it's time to talk about this person. He says the data scanned off her looks reasonably close to what they know of Wright; how she survived termination by Sentinels, whose sensors confirmed the destruction of her body (in 8.2), is unknown. Gray also says that Wright is not an Oligarch, even if she seems to have "adopted their jack-in protocol"; the old termination order for her still applies. The player is packed off with operative reinforcements to take care of this, but they just run into a bunch of overrides, without finding Wright. Gray says well okay, she's got the Oligarch overrides too, this could be tricky.

Merv: Exiles scanning for signs of the BIP get a report from the white hallways of an access violation, with no detected source. Going to check on the hallway control center, the player finds a glitching computer. As they examine it, the Effectuator appears, surprised to find himself there. Suddenly nine more Effectuators appear, confused. The tenth seems woozy, and all collapse. Flood reports Malphas made it out of the chateau, and may have a report; Flood is then cut off. Malphas says that there have been system failures throughout the chateau, but they couldn't find the source, although it seemed to be internal. He thinks it could have been the BIP. He adds that he can't figure how Flood didn't notice the system failures happening all around him.

9/18-9/24

Required Events:

Zion: (Zion only) Zion comes close to the BIP, runs across Wright. Wright tracks them back to the device and destroys it. Wright has the usual intruder abilities, plus a couple new ones: "Compress," a meatwaddy one with Firewall's metallic skin effect, and "Signal Jamming," an AOE that lays a heavy debuff on everyone's damage resistances.

Mach: Machines want to locate Wright's broadcast position. They find her and scan her signal, but find no data at all that they can trace. Wright made no attempt to avoid the scan.

Merv: The BIP is found having taken over the training sim in a chateau org area. It attacks at first, gradually stops, looks around, says "[bip message 1]," then falls over dead. If players killed the "sim" first, "[bip message 1]" is found on a computer.

9/25

Crit 11.2.2

Zion: Using information provided by an acquaintance of a chateau guard, the player locates the guard, hoping to get a lead that will get them into the chateau to look for data on the BIP. They find the guard being killed by a fellow guard, however, who is yelling frantically about how a program "won't get" him. Another, wounded guard mentions that one of their members ran off. A scan is run, and a guard is found, dead or unconscious, in the middle of a large corporate network center. It is suspected that this may have been the work of the BIP, jumping from guard to guard. The computers at the center are inspected, and evidence of infiltration and data transfer are found in one of them. This leads to a home computer, with a strange message on it: "[bip message 2]." Also, Tyndall informs the player that EPN has been in touch to say that the Kid has met the expedition, and gone into the no-fly zone.

Mach: Since they can't find her vulnerable jack-in point, the Machines decide to try getting Wright to talk. The player checks up on some chateau Exiles for Wright activity. They get one who says there was some report earlier about a problem. The player comes upon dead and dying Exiles, and Wright, who pretty much refuses to say anything to them. Then the player has to go check on some big override signal that pops up nearby, and this turns out to be Wright again, who says she just thought of something, and wants to meet the Machines after all, with the player there as a "witness." Gray tells Wright that the Machines would like to know how she survived her body. Wright wants to know why the Oracle made the BIP, but she doesn't want to have the discussion there, and she wants more operatives present. Gray says okay, he'll see about getting it arranged.

Merv: Flood sends the player off to kill what he says was a traitorous chateau guard; that done, the player goes after Zionites who've been hounding the guards. A few Zionites are found dead, along with another chateau guard, badly wounded, who coughs out nothing helpful before dying. After a tongue-lashing from Flood, the main group of Zionites are found, apparently looking for something in a room with a dead Accelerated Exile. Once the Zionites are dispatched, Wright appears, possibly there with the intention of ambushing the Zionites who've just been handled. She mentions to the Merv player that it's her understanding the Zionites helped Carlyne, although they probably feel that was a mistake, now. Still, she says, Carlyne did turn out to be way more useful than he'd intended. The Merv ponders this, and decides there's a good chance Wright found Carlyne in the Real and did something to him there to make him fall over dead in the simulation (in Merv 11.1.5). The no-fly zone was supposed to be Carlyne's abode, or something, according to a comment Halborn made a while back, so it's possible Wright ran into him somewhere around there. The Merv decides to send some of the General's Sentinels (which he's kept lurking around) back into the zone to check into this. Persephone is there with the Merv, in some kind of bad mood.

9/25-10/1

Required Events:

Zion: (EPN only) EPN captures Ouroboros data revealed by the expedition's team tapping into a Oligarch Network line found in the no-fly zone, and begins mapping the layout of the Oligarch Network in the Real.

Mach: (Machines only) Wright meets Machines in One Zero. Gray says the BIP was created to help control/monitor unplugged humans in the Real. Wright says she survived the death of her body by entering the Matrix as a complete consciousness, rather than a broadcast.

Merv: Flood is attacked by Exiles in the Hel Club. Operatives arriving at the scene take out some hostile Exiles, then find the "Francine" cake vendor in the club acting oddly. This is the BIP. It says "[bip message 3]," then Wright appears. A battle follows, sort of tailing off as Francines multiply throughout the club, crowding out everyone else. The BIP has disappeared.

10/2

Crit 11.2.3

Zion: Override activity in the slums leads to overrides and overridden programs, and a guy whose watch has stopped keeping correct time next to a Decelerator. Tyndall reports that EPN contacts have said the expedition was attacked by advanced fighter craft in the no-fly zone; the Kid's hovercraft damaged one of the attackers, but was then shot down, and the Kid was injured. The expeditionary force retreated from the zone after heavy losses. The ships were observed to be similar to the type used by Halborn and Carlyne. In the central Richland area, the player finds more overrides, and trouble from Machine and Merovingian redpills. Override activity moves into Magog/Achan, where the player finds Seraph, who tells them that what they're looking for is in an apartment the Oracle used to live in, and whose location he'll provide to the operator. The apartment is in Mara--although now occupied by bluepills--and includes a computer with a strange message: "[bip message 4]."

Mach: The BIP has moved into Richland, and Wright's after it again. The player is sent to take care of the pesky overrides she's kicking up. They run into Merv redpills fighting Accelerated Exiles, and a computer that's been disconnected from some remote source. This leads to an apartment in the central Richland area, where a computer has crashed, and a bluepill says their (black) cat started acting weird and ran off. Gray says to get back on task, and sends the player to Mara, where overrides are getting pretty bad, and Zionites; and there are reports of Wright being in the area. The player finds Zionites talking about having run into Seraph nearby, but they can't get any more information. Then they find a big override source in Mara, which is Wright, some dead Zionites, and a blanked out computer. Wright says the program's already left, and "Its movements appear to be getting less erratic. In the right hands, it could be a truly elegant control mechanism--not like these Oligarch routines." Gray thinks she's "under some misapprehension" about the program. He also mentions that their sensors can't detect the program, which makes things difficult. Finally, he adds that the cat was located in an alley in Mara, and was returned to its owner.

Merv: The player is sent into the slums to see about override reports there. They encounter Machinists. Flood says they've lost contact with some of their programs who were in the area (central Richland) on Hel Club business; these are found, being dominated by an Accelerator, poor things. Flood mentions that the General's Sentinels were attacked by advanced fighter craft and forced to retreat (Flood: again! haha) from the no-fly zone. With override activity increasing in the Achan/Magog area, the player finds Zionites there, talking about Seraph being in the vicinity. The player finds him in Mara, trapped by an Accelerator.

10/2-10/8

Required Events:

Zion: (Zion only) See Merv event.

Mach: (Cyph only) Before Zion/Merv events: fighting overrides around Mara with the help of Cryptos' prototype anti-override routines (these are new consumable items). These will make the user immune to a random type of override for a short period of time.

Merv: This is a two-day (back to back), single-server Zion/Merv event.

Day 1: We lock down a Mara apartment building and get Mervs and Zionites into it by teleport at separate, locked locations. Then we let them loose for PVP domination, and see which side survives. If beginning numbers aren't balanced we could either limit the larger side to matching numbers (I'd prefer this I think), or I could try to balance a bit with NPCs.

Day 2:

- If Mervs won: Merv faces Seraph, wants to know where the BIP is. Seraph says only that it is "[seraph message]." He's suddenly covered by a Firewall FX (I made a Firewallled Seraph disguise for this) as the area goes FFA PVP. Seraph, fighting furiously and not talking to anyone, makes his way free of the building.

- If Zion won: Zion fights their way out of Mara--still packed with override spawns, Exile programs, probably hostile operatives--with Seraph. Once clear, Seraph tells them that he doesn't know where the BIP will surface next, but it is "[seraph message]."

10/9

Crit 11.2.4

Zion: Bluepills are dropping dead across the city, sometimes with override use nearby. The player checks out an override signal and comes across Wright and a bluepill. Wright refers to the bluepill by a "pod" serial number--0026:05:0149:032--and says they weren't "the one that program's chosen to call home," and maybe it's someone else "in 149," as the bluepill drops dead. It looks like Wright's going hunting for bluepills, so the player gets ready to follow her, tracks an override reading, and finds a dead bluepill. Intel doesn't know of a connection between the two dead bluepills, but maybe Wright's reference to a pod was significant. The second bluepill's body is collected, and a red pill trace is forced through them. Their body doesn't seem to have been flushed by the Machines yet, and the trace returns a pod location--fortunately at a pretty nearby pod cluster. Zion dispatches a ship there, which finds mostly empty pods in a ring around one of the towers. They begin running back-traces on the remaining people in that ring. The player goes to check up on one of these, but is stopped by Machines guarding the bluepill's apartment. Tyndall calls to report that they've lost contact with the hovercraft at the tower, and another ship in the area reported heavy Sentinel activity there.

Mach: The Machines have the bluepill (see Zion crit), who is currently inhabited by the BIP, acting erratically. Pace says they're going to take the woman, Imelda Kroller, to a lab where they'll extract the BIP, and asks the player to help hold off nearby overrides while they transfer Imelda. This is accomplished, but extraction is taking too long, and Wright is closing in. The player evacs Kroller from the lab as overrides appear, killing some of the Machines there. Pace is in a back room, and seems to be okay. She says that the BIP took control of Kroller's "somatic nervous system, resisting external stimuli." As the player gets Kroller outside, Gray says her pod routines have stopped reporting, and asks the player to check her status. Kroller says "[bip message 5]", then goes blank. This ends the mission, and Kroller disappears. Gray reports "Unrequested reinitialization of subject's image by the pod hardware... Signal is active. Unable to resolve location. Status unknown. P0026:05:0149:081 is not responding."

Merv: The Mervs have learned the Machines have Kroller (see Mach crit), and set about tracking down her pod ID, first finding the serial number Zionites heard from Wright (see Zion crit). Flood says this is Machine pod serial number format, with the third number being the number of the ring in which the pod is situated on the tower, so Wright was looking for someone plugged into the 149th ring of pods. The Merv is formulating a plan for hacking into Machine systems and locating the pod caretaker, like they did when they wanted to find MacHenry (Merv 8.3.4), but he's interrupted by Persephone, who says that just getting activity reports from the caretaker won't save Kroller, or the BIP. Persephone says she can do it, if the Merv can get her a connection to the right part of the Machine network. The Merv makes a show of worrying about his wife's safety in such a venture, but says he'll make it happen, since she's so concerned about it. The player secures a particular Machine terminal, and gets Persephone to it. She collapses, barely alive, but says she's saved them; the operator says that defensive routines kicked in as soon as Persephone sent her commands into the pod system--they must have been watching for trouble there. The player goes to give the Merv the news, and finds the General's hologram, reporting that his men found a wrecked, advanced craft on their way back from the zone, and salvaged an android of an unknown type from it; they're bringing the android back with them now. The Merv is annoyed with Persephone for almost getting herself killed in a way that would have reflected badly on him; and what was she doing, anyway, not mentioning those defensive routines, which she must have known would be there? Flood says Persephone restarted Kroller's RSI at a random point in the simulation.

10/9-10/15

Required Events:

Zion: Try to stop Wright from getting at a bluepill. Turns out this is not a BIP-inhabited bluepill, just one in an adjacent pod, but Zion will at least have a chance of saving them from Wright's brutal process of elimination. This is complicated, of course, because that pod cluster is now surrounded by Sentinels, and there'd be no chance of saving the person if they were flushed by a red pill. I think it might be interesting to leave it to operatives to try to figure out what to do (might end up being moot if Wright beats them to the more immediate goal of securing the bluepill in the simulation).

Mach: (After Zion and Merv events) Machines able to re-establish control over Kroller's pod, track them to [Kroller location]. Wright appears and tries to grab Kroller. Machinists must keep Wright occupied (interlock, root) while evacuating Kroller. Get some distance away but Kroller collapses, Wright catches up, kills Kroller just after Kroller says "[bip message 6]."

Merv: Deathly Persephone (first appearance of her black-dress/pale-skin RSI) tries to access Kroller's pod again, fails, barely survives Machine counter-attack. Bitter words between her and the Merv; both are disappointed, for different reasons.

10/16

Crit 11.2.5

Zion: The BIP's trail leads back into the slums. [Morpheus (sim) and [bip message 7] will be involved here, but I don't want to say more about it just now.]

Mach: The player is sent after more trouble in Richland. They find overrides, and Zionites apparently looking for Persephone. Gray says Wright and the Morpheus sim have been reported around there, too. The player is working on some Accelerated Machines when more appear, but are taken down by Cypherites who've arrived on the scene. The Cyphs say Cryptos has a way to stop the overrides. The player meets Cryptos, who says he's got a good start, and he's willing to share his progress, but he needs more information about the overrides to continue to improve his prototype. Cryptos and Gray meet. Cryptos says that the overrides use a root command layer that he can't really access, and he needs more info about it. Gray says info like that is pretty restricted, but since the anti-overrides could be useful, he'll see what he can do. Players get a prototype anti-override consumable when they complete the mission.

Merv: Persephone insists on meeting Wright. Flood doesn't sound like he's inclined to help her get herself killed, but when he starts talking about locating Wright, who's apparently in Mannsdale, in order to find the BIP, a click on the line reveals that someone was eavesdropping: Persephone. The player races off to Mannsdale to find Persephone asking Wright to stop the killing. Wright is cold--calls Persephone "program"--and says she won't stop until the Matrix is run by humans. Flood reports that that ill-advised little meeting actually gave them a chance to take some scans of the region, and they've found Zionites homing in on a particular location. There they find Wright again, having apparently just removed something that she won't say anything about. A frustrated Flood sends the player to explain their failure to the Merv. As the Merv greets the player, a strange message, "[bip message 8]" appears on his computer screen. The Merv is annoyed that his high-priced network security failed to protect him from this spam.

~~~~~

Wright abs:

"Compress" (metal meatwad?)

"Signal Jamming" (AOE massive def res debuff)

Anti-override prototype:

orbiting gold code fx

gives random of one imm: Accel, Decel, Run

Visiting places from Trinity's past:

The Chateau (mission/event: Merv 1)

The Hel Club (event - Merv 2)

Mara (apartment; mission: Seraph - Zion 3)

Westview (event: Club Kaos, Rogers Way--right by Ascension - mach 4)

Slums (slum apartment, room 101; mission: Morpheus Zion 5)

BIP messages (in white font, no caps or punc until later):

1: where

2: this isn't

3: i'm not

4: not here

5: impossible
6: oh god
7: Knock, knock.
8: Wake up.

Seraph message: "remembering"

Kroller location: Club Kaos, Rogers Way

Zion 11.2.5

Tracking BIP in Slums, but lose it. Come across Morpheus, who says that the Machines changed things, but he remembers the telephone exchange, which they didn't change. Come to room 101, Neo's apartment, find [bip message 7].

~~~~~
~~~~~

Wright

- OG overrides are crude; need program capable of penetrating to the heart of the Machine systems and reconfiguring them carefully--she could make use of the BIP to do that
- Human control...but must be the right humans
- Doesn't know what BIP really is (only Architect, Oracle, Sati, Morpheus, Gray, Carlyne, Halborn know that)
- Brag somewhere to Machines that she survived death of her body by entering the Matrix as an independent consciousness
- When she did that w/ OG overrides, she detonated ship containing jack-in device and Mauser's body cinematic:

scene 1

- close up of computer screen: bip message from merv 11.2.5
- Merv is looking at it in annoyance
- Gen hologram phases in, says they've got the android thing
- Merv has him put it up on the holographic display
- Merv looks at it, grins slowly--"impressive..."

scene 2

- shimada, hovercraft deck, looking at face on transmitter screen
- s: how is he?
- f: he won't be winning any beauty pageants, but he'll make it. we'll be in broadcast range in a few days. do you want me to--?
- s: no. I'll do it

scene 3

- hovercraft, shimada jacked in
- door opens, crafty looking woman creeps up to the chair
- w: they're all off in no-man's land...
- w: nobody to watch over you while you sleep
- w: now where would you hide that code the Oracle gave you...
- crewman appears in doorway, startled: you!
- w grins
- c: stop!
- w yanks shimada's jack out, slices its cable
- w: kept it warm for you, dearie
- w hurls the jack into the crewman's forehead
- crewman collapses as more crew members arrive: veil!
- veil (w) laughs as she vanishes back through the opposite doorway

scene 4

- wright floats between skyscrapers, moving slowly over downtown
- gray is watching grimly from a rooftop with another agent, or maybe an operative
- g: the program?
- o: we're picking up blips all over the city. still trying to isolate it, sir.
- g scowls
- o: sir, should we--
- wright floats toward the wall of a skyscraper, it warps inward, making way for her to pass through
- g: no. keep your men back.
- wright floats out the other side and continues across the city at the same slow, steady speed
- gray scowls even grimmerlier
- g: find the program...

scene 5

- close up of bip message from zion 11.2.5 on a computer screen
- niobe is watching it, with ghost behind her
- n: the interface program?
- the message, which had paused, continues briefly
- n: jesus christ
- the message suddenly floods the entire screen
- n: ghost--
- ghost is already hyperjumping high above the city, his face set in a determined mask map zooms in on spot in some city neighborhood

~~~~~

Cinematic:

- The General shows the android body to the Merovingian, says they've completed retrieval, and that it isn't a Machine mechanism.
- Shimada is told that the Kid will be back from the no-fly zone soon; he was injured but will recover.
- Veil sneaks up on Shimada while she's jacked in, muttering something to herself about looking for the program the Oracle gave Shimada. When surprised by an EPN crew member, Veil pulls Shimada's jack, killing her, and escapes.
- Gray monitors Wright as she continues her disruptive search through the city for the interface program. Gray tells another Agent to avoid Wright, and to find the program.
- Niobe gets a "Wake up" message like the one from the 11.2 crits. This turns "Wake up, Neo," and then a constant stream of "Wake up Wake up Wake up..." Niobe is alarmed, and Ghost speeds away.

The action indicator points to a spot in west Hampton Green.

Quests:

Quests take place in Downtown, mostly around Hampton Green.

Machines

1) The Machines can't detect the program themselves, but Wright seems to have some means of doing so, so they follow her, running into a disrupted computer, dead bluepill, Accelerated Suits (Hampton gang), and finally Wright in Maribeu, where she says she'll have it soon, and the Machines had better stay out of her way until then. She adds "The Machines left a gaping security hole in their core programming a long time ago. They were only as perfect as the people who made them."

2) Talk to Veil about newfangled Wright Accelerated Programs (tough Exiles/Machines with wireframe overlays). Veil points the player to a Cypherite in Morrell, Neglect (visible on the map, 13th floor of the building just S of Cyclo), who is distributing anti-override routines the Cyphs, led by Cryptos' research, have been cooking up. Gray says that being able to resist overrides will be necessary if Wright's going to be dealt with. The anti-override routines are consumables protect against override abilities like Deceleration (speed/acc debuff), Runtime (spawns), and Signal Jamming (resistance debuff) for a limited time.

3) With Wright closing in on the program in Hampton, the player battles a tough Wright Accelerated Program, then talks to Cryptos, who speculates on how Wright could be disabled:

"As for what may happen if critical damage can be inflicted on her RSI, that I cannot predict. We know that she has co-opted the jack-in protocol utilized by the Oligarchs, and we know, from Halborn's example, that they were to some extent vulnerable both within and without the simulation. Wright, on the other hand, has claimed to be able to enter the Matrix without maintaining an exterior connection. How that could affect the outcome remains unclear."

Gray comes through with the coordinates of Wright's position on a rooftop in Hampton (98 131 -216), saying that she's been staying around there, which probably means the interface program is in the vicinity.

Merovingian

1) The player scouts Wright activity in Hampton, where she's been disrupting things. With help from Nicky G., they find Accelerated Suits, and track down Manager, the Suits boss, in the Historic District, who mentions hearing about a Cypherite in Morrell who's got override countermeasures.

2) The android's been found to have "data structures similar to what we've found on the Oligarch network," so Flood sends the player to hunt for a data match at an Ouroboros office in Vauxton. The Machines took over Ouroboros a while back, and the player runs into Ouroboros Security and Machines there. Flood says the Machines must have confiscated the data, and sends the player to raid a Machine facility in Maribeu to track it down. The player is ambushed by a Wright Accelerated Program on their way. They capture the data from the Machines, and it does have similarities to the android's hardware. Flood figures the Oligarchs built it. He also mentions that Cypherites think the Wright Accelerated Programs carry valuable data.

3) The player goes hunting a Machine mainframe in the Park East Gov Building to get real data on the android. There's a tough battle, and they get some help on the mainframe from the Effectuator. In Center Park, the Merv says the data was interesting, as it shows the android was designed to be controlled by a human consciousness--for the Oligarchs to control themselves as a surrogate body? He also wonders what destroyed the ship carrying the android, and speculates that foul play was involved. Persephone is there, still in black and very pale.

Zion

1) In Chelsea, a scarred Kid has news of suddenly losing contact with a transmitter they'd left monitoring the Oligarch network line in the no-fly zone. He says the Oligarchs could be on their way to the Machine city and the Matrix. He's also determined not to let Shimada down. The Council thinks the interface program has some central role in all this, and wants it kept out of Wright's hands, so the player catches her trail in Hampton. The operator mentions that the program has used Trinity quotes. They run into Accelerated Suits and then Wright, who says that Zion should be helping her, since she's doing this to put the Matrix in mankind's hands.

2) Still trying for the program in Hampton, the player gets some static from a Decelerator and Machinists. They're also ambushed by one of Wright's new Accelerated Programs, and run into more of them around a dead Cypherite. Tyndall mentions rumors of a Cypherite in Morrell, wondering if it's related.

3) Overrides are keeping the Machines busy, which gives Zion a shot at checking out a burst of override activity in Park East, normally heavily guarded. They find a message ("Soon") which the operator thinks is from the interface program, but while tracing it, they're interrupted by a tough Agent, and the trace is lost. The operative is sent to Ghost in Hampton, who says that he thinks Wright's around there, probably high up, and probably with the program. He's determined to look for her. Tyndall says taking on Wright may be the only option left.

Wright

Wright (level 100) is on the Hampton rooftop where Gray said she was, with some tough Accelerated Programs around her. She uses AOE overrides, and a nasty zap. When her health has been worn down, she dies (System message says she was killed by herself), and a floating gold code ghost figure, "???", appears. Its details say "'It's beautiful...'" bit of a wrap on wright? arch & gray?

Cinematic

ghost finds trinity, brief convo making clear it's her, pace shows up, then Helian and Tesarova show up, pace leaves ("Acknowledged"), trinity is gone, h/t leave, ghost leaves, ookami spying scene 0 - 15 seconds

- chapter caption, pan over to dead Wright

>The Matrix Online_

>Chapter 12.1_

scene 1 - 30 seconds

- zoom out from inert Wright to Architect viewing in his monitoring room

2

- a: Where is thy humanity now...?

5

- a: Agent Gray.

6

- gray appears on monitor

7

- g: Sir?

9

- a: Have you located the program?

12

- g: No, sir; not since it terminated Wright.

15

- g: We have found Zion operatives conducting their own search.

18

- a: ...

20

- g: Sir?

22

- a: Prepare for our visitors.

25

- clicks screen off

30 scene 2 - 120 seconds total

2a - 50 seconds

- ghost lands on a slum building rooftop

4

- looks around

8

- opens a door

10

- goes down a dark stairway

12

- enters a large darkened storage room 16

- doesn't see anything

20

- turns to leave

21

- screen flicks on behind him

22

- s: Ghost_

24

- ghost turns and looks at it, face blank

25

- code shimmers in the air 26

- falls down

28

- forming around 30

- a standing female body

32

- ghost stands frozen

33

- trinity takes a step toward him 35

- stops

37

- t: Ghost...

40

- ghost flinches

42

- trinity looks pained

44

- g: We...

47

- t: I...didn't know.

50

2b - 45 seconds

- p: Freeze.

2

- pace steps from the doorway into the glow of the monitor/trinity, gun levelled at g

4

- p looks at g

5

- p: Predictable.

7

- p: Hmh.

9

- p put her gun up

11

- half turns away

13

- p: Your program...friend cannot survive here.

15

- g looks at p

17

19

- p: She will be removed.

A code lock is already-- 21

- h & ts appear in midair,

24

- float down to the floor

28

- p puts her gun back on g

30

- ts: Ooh.

32

- This looks fun.

34

- p touches her earpiece

35

- listens

37

- looks frustrated

39

- p: ...

- p: Acknowledged.

41

- pace stalks out

45

2c - 30 seconds+

- h: And you?

2

- h: Will you offer resistance?

5

- g: No need.

7

- h looks around; trinity has vanished

- t: Huh! The program's gone.

10

- h: Is this your-- 12

- ghost has vanished

13

- ts: Hah!

14

- This **will** be fun.

16

- h & ts vanish

19

- room goes dark

22

- a shadow

24 hops

25 up

26 to a high window:

27

ookami

30 (may need to hold here an extra second or two) scene 3 + map - 15 seconds

- ghost

2

- is standing on the roof, 4
- looking out
6
- over the Ikebukuro docks
8
- g: Trinity...
10 map 15

12.1

[] Stuff in square brackets is not mentioned directly to players in the 12.1 quests, and shouldn't be given out unless specifically cleared with me first.

() Other stuff is mostly fair game, although in general you shouldn't just go around dropping tons of the details to players, but rather let them work things out themselves--this includes a lot of what appears in parentheses below, for instance. I mention certain details and quotes here because I figure they might be things you have questions about, or may be interested in developing further.

Cinematic

- The Architect is in his TV room, with Wright, dead on a Hampton rooftop, on the monitor. He asks Gray if the (biological interface) program has been found; Gray says no, but they found Zion looking for it, too. The Architect frowns, then tells him to "prepare for our visitors."

- Ghost lands on a rooftop (supposed to be the rooftop pointed out in the coordinates at the end of the cinematic, Ikebukuro 630 9 -180), looks around, opens a door, goes down dark stairs, opens a door into a dark, mostly empty storage room. Looks around, doesn't see anything, and is just turning to leave as a monitor in a dark corner of the room flicks on and prints out "Ghost."

- Code falls down into a female form next to the monitor. This is the golden code "???" character who appeared when Wright was killed. A halting conversation begins, in which Trinity (which is the name that appears above this character in this subchapter) says "I...didn't know," by which she meant that she didn't know she was a program.

- Agent Pace interrupts the conversation, her gun on Ghost, who steps between her and Trinity. Pace says the program (Trinity) can't survive there, and will be removed, but then she in her turn is interrupted by a bright flash, out of which gleaming male and female forms appear, descending to the ground. They have no clothes, wires, eyeballs, or hair. In missions, it will be found that the male (red) is "Helian," and the female (purple) is "Tesarova," and that they are Oligarchs. Helian is fairly straightforward and serious, although not as blunt as Halborn; Tesarova is usually in a playful vamp mode in this subchapter.

- Pace touches her earpiece, looks frustrated, reluctantly lowers her gun from Ghost's head, and stalks out. Helian looks at Ghost, and asks if he's going to resist, but Ghost says there's no need; H&T realize that Trinity has vanished, and while they look around to find her, Ghost makes a sudden unseen exit as well.

- H&T leave, and the room goes dark. A pause, then Ookami creeps out of the shadows--she's observed the entire scene.

- Ghost stands on the rooftop, looks up at the moon, and finally says Trinity's name.

The idea was that he hadn't allowed himself to believe 100% that it was her until just now when he was able to meet her for himself. The small Live Event I ran with him during 11.3 ( http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300026820 ) where he "remembered" "something" after reviewing the BIP's progress through the Matrix, and realizing that it roughly corresponded to Trinity's progress through the Matrix (from the movies, starting with contacting Neo in his apartment), reminded him of this Ikebukuro spot where he and Trinity had met each other at some unspecified time(s) in the old days--this is briefly mentioned by Tyndall at the beginning of Zion 12.1.1 [but I probably won't dwell on it any more than that, as the choice was fairly arbitrary--I wanted somewhere with a large interior room and a nice view from the rooftop, and preferably elsewhere than DT, since all of 11.3 took place in that district].

Quests

The 12.1 org contacts are spaced within about a half-block of the Ikebukuro rooftop location.

Machines

1) Gray sends the player to Akasaka, scene of the latest sighting of the program. He implies a need to find it before either the Oligarch representatives (H&T) or Zion do. Gray doesn't refer to the program as "Trinity," but the operator discusses it a bit. They find Zionites and a blank computer entry in her recent style (">_"), but nothing else, and are re-routed to head off H&T, who have arrived in the area, along with Pace.

H&T are slightly bemused--although not really surprised--by a human operative working for the Machines. [The Oligarchs have been aware the Machines have managed things this way, but they haven't seen it much directly, and find it odd, since they (Oligarchs, who are human) view the Machines as their own servants.]

H says they're there for the BIP (he uses "biological interface program" as a quote from operatives or Machines; H&T generally just call it "the program"), and won't be needing any help getting it.

T says something odd about "the exciting ones" (operatives) "escaping" from the pods, and that this explains "why our entertainment's been so dull lately."

H mentions they know what happened to Halborn and Carlyne, and that those two were operating independently. He says they (the Oligarchs) have "made adjustments that will ensure our safety from the compromises they allowed to our security" [partially an explanation for the difference in their appearance from H&C: H&T are less transparent, and have no wires].

Pace seems a little relieved to have the player there to talk to the Oligarchs, and purposefully speaks aloud (in italics) to the player so that H&T will overhear, saying that they'll leave their guest in peace.

On the way out, the player encounters Satiare, a shoeless female Cypherite boss who appeared previously in a few Live Events:

http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300024639

http://forums.station.sony.com/mxo/...\_id=36300026073

She's now fixed at level 55 (I think in LEs I had her at 60). She says it would be nice to pop "those pretty new bubbles of theirs" (the Oligarchs), and suggests that the Machines might even have something that could do it, but they probably wouldn't tell the (Machinist) player even if they did, and wouldn't use it themselves.

Gray summons the player for their report, concluding that H&T are operating as agents for the Oligarchs, rather than independently like Halborn and Carlyne. He thinks this might cause them to behave a little more levelheadedly, but says it also means the Oligarchs will be watching developments closely. After saying this, he very deliberately states that the Machines do not consider them a threat.

Between missions, Machine operatives are sent to "patrol" the International District for more signs of activity (ie get gang tokens from Murasaki, Furihata, and Kowloon).

2) Still in International, the player deals with some searching Zionites, and is then sent to answer a summons from Helian, who's got a couple of his "Override Function" NPCs with him (whitish-skinned forms similar to H&T, with a mixture of hacker and MA abilities, pretty good accuracy and damage, and high viral defense), and he loans these two NPCs to the player, suggesting that he's doing this to help the Machine operative deal with the Zionites (he refers to Zionites here as 'the other "Awakened"'), although the operator and Gray hint that H has found he actually needs help from the player. The Override Functions don't talk; H refers to them as "basic" combat programs.

The player checks for enemy activity and finds Merovingian redpills. One of them rather obviously pretends to be a Zionite (sort of a play on the Merv knowing that what he's doing is probably going to cheese the Machines off, although he isn't so worried about it as to halt his Oligarch power grab). Gray says a Merv Exile named Azuna is known to have obtained sensitive information on the Oligarch's Matrix activities.

Between missions, the player has to go find Azuna, following the mission's hint "northwest Downtown." Azuna is a female lupine with a teal mohawk, and she's placed as a collector NPC on the second sublevel of the Museum dungeon in Creston. The player has to kill some of the Merv-aligned lupines around Azuna (a little farther away from her are some Machine-aligned Override Functions).

3) Gray says the Merv's found H&T have a "virtual space," and is planning to invade it; this should be stopped so that the Oligarchs aren't "aggravated." The operator mentions that the Merv tried hitting on Tesarova to get OG programs, but wasn't successful in his advances. The player takes out some Exiles and gets a trace running through their computer.

In this same area, a certain unspecified and optional sequence of actions will cause Trinity to appear in a side room. She appears upset, even angry, at the situation she's in, doing /talknegative as she says

"I don't--

I didn't choose this. This can't be--

..."

(The progress of her appearances across the missions of the three orgs (counting the second mission of any org as happening after the first mission of any other org, etc, and even the second phase of mission x for one org happening after the first phase of mission x for another org, etc) goes sorta: surprise -> dismay -> frustration -> anger.)

Following the trace, the player runs into heavy Dire Lupine resistance, but in the end gets data that Gray says is about access routes "through 'white hallway' systems." He doesn't have exact coords, but says there seems to be an entry point somewhere high up in north Union Hill.

A dead Override Executable NPC was in the room with the lupines/computer. Executables are dark grey humanoids in the same bubble-skin way as Functions and H&T.

Merovingian

1) Flood sends the player into Stamos to find the program (like Gray, he doesn't refer to it as "Trinity," but the operator talks about the identity possibility). They don't find anything besides a computer with ">_," but Ookami arrives, and "leads" (ie is escorted by the player) to a Manssen location, where they find Tesarova.

Tesarova coos over Ookami, calling her the player's "pet," then gets down to business, saying that she just thought she'd mention that there seem to be others nearby who are also trying to find the program; while sort of playing her ditzy blond act, what she says shows that she's aware of a lot of what's going on: what the player's after, what the other orgs are doing around there--and she even takes a veiled swipe at the player's operator.

With coordinates from Tesarova, the operator guides the player to a Guinness Lake location, while Flood mentions that there's also this "Helian" Oligarch around, and saying that they'll play Tesarova's "little game," since they don't want to show that they're on to her. Flood also refers to their names as "barbaric." ["Tesarova" is a Czech name, and "Helian" is a Chinese name.]

T's "game" in this case was sending the player to intercept Machinists, who appear, from their comments, to have been trying to keep tabs on her. Flood wraps up by asking the player to find four groups of programs they've lost in South Vauxton.

Between missions, the player has to locate and kill members of four separate groups of Accelerated Exiles around South Vauxton.

2) Flood says the Merv thinks "exploiting the Oligarch Tesarova's softer side" might get them some juicy override info, and sends the player to collect data from a contact, Azuna, for whom they'd spared no expense and skullduggery to get into a spot where she could get some dirt on Tesarova's Matrix activities. The player heads to the Downtown rendezvous, but Azuna isn't there; instead, there are a couple dead Machines.

Flood is annoyed, and sends the player to look for Azuna in her spying location. She isn't there either, but some hostile Override Functions are.

In a separate part of this same area, a certain optional and unspecified series of actions will cause Trinity to appear. She does /talkscared, saying

"I'm not. I'm not what-- God! What have they done?"

Flood says that some checking has shown Azuna has taken cover in the second sublevel of the Creston Heights Museum.

Between missions, the player has to kill Machine-aligned Override Functions near Azuna, and trade the tokens they drop to Azuna, who then hands over her intel.

["Azuna" is a corruption of "Asena," a "she-wolf with a sky-blue mane" in Turkic mythology, according to good old Wikipedia: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Asena> . I just needed a cool lupinish name.]

3) Flood says that thanks to the info (from Azuna), the Merv has been able to meet Tesarova. Hints indicate that the meeting has not gone well, possibly because Persephone found out about it. The player finds Persephone and Tesarova together. Persephone is still in her "dark" outfit, but her skin is back to its normal healthy hue. Tesarova says the Merv's been showing her interesting things, including the android, which she identifies as "Carlyne's android body." She almost seems genuinely surprised about the Merv having it, saying she didn't think she'd see it again "after Carlyne let the podling woman steal his signal." ("The podling woman" was Wright--she jacked Carlyne's signal / android body when Carlyne crumpled just before she appeared as the wireframed "???" in Merv 11.1.5, which forced the Merv to dump the BIP/Trinity.)

All Persephone says is "Only a human can be 'inhuman.'"

Past them, the player finds the Merv, who rants a bit about Tesarova laughing at his offers of power in the simulation. He sends the player to contact Flood for a plan B, which involves getting a trace through an Oligarch-occupied computer in order to locate H&T's Matrix power base. The player runs into some of their Functions, and then a hostile Override Executable, who can spawn a small swarm of additional, higher-level Functions to attack the player. Executables have a constant blur FX over their dark bubble body (this sorta causes them to flicker light/dark), and boosted defense and speed, but no actual combat loadout or weapons.

Success results in coordinates of an entry point to the Oligarch hideout: 129 223 789, Union Hill. (This is a doorway at the top of one of those skyscrapers with the flying buttresses.)

Zion

1) Tyndall mentions that Ghost found "the program" by "checking places he'd been with Trinity when they operated together in the Matrix." She sends the player to get more details on the Trinity thing from Ghost, who is in an International District room with a computer (">"), convinced that Trinity was just there. He says he doesn't understand how Trinity is the program, but insists that she really is. He guesses that the two strangers he encountered (in the cinematic) were Oligarchs, and says he isn't going to let them or the Machines get Trinity.

Tyndall says she trusts Ghost's instinct about "whatever Trinity or the program is now," and reminds the player that the Council had already decided (mentioned in Zion 11.3.1) to do what it could to ensure the program's safety. She sends the player to check a reading in Murasaki, where they find a message on a computer:

"How well do you know yourself?
Are you sure?
I thought I knew. But this_"

(The dangling cursor at the end there is a hint that this is probably from Trinity, although the operator doesn't make anything out of it.)

Inbound hostiles are reported nearby, and the player finds Machines and Machine redpills. Tyndall mentions that intel shows the Machines are cooperating with the two Oligarch representatives. After the hostiles are taken care of, Tyndall says that they could use the player's help in Shirakaba, where their teams have been hit by Machines while looking for the program; they've also started picking up override signals there.

Between missions, the player has to hunt down Accelerated Machines in Shirakaba.

2) Tyndall sends the player into Downtown, following the trail of data that they think may have come from Trinity (Tyndall is still hedging a bit on the name, and here says "from the interface program--from Trinity"). She gives the names of H&S, saying they found them out from "our sources within the Machines" [aren't those convenient?].

The player finds a computer, activates it (it says ">Yes._"), and Trinity appears. She says

"I don't have much time. I don't know what...this means.

Before... I thought I died. I was with him... I said goodbye. I don't remember...until--

I don't know how to make it make sense.

... They're getting close. I have to go."

Tyndall gives the player the location of the intruders, and although she thinks they're Machines on Trinity's tail, they turn out to be Merv Exiles. Tyndall thinks this is an indication that the Merv is trying to get in on the Trinity action, and hopes that his machinations with Halborn and Carlyne, which ended up causing a good deal of trouble for the Machines, will at least give the Machines some incentive to act against him. She ends by asking the player to look into an "unusual signal" and override activity in Baldwin Heights.

Between missions, the player has to take down Override Functions scattered around Baldwin Heights.

3) The player responds to an alert from Ghost, who's still been combing International for Trinity. They find him facing Helian and Tesarova, with Helian asking Ghost why he's going after the program. Tesarova coyly interjects that she thinks she knows (wink wink). Ghost doesn't respond to them, and whispers to the player to make sure that Trinity's safe, saying Sparks will have info for them.

Tyndall gets the info from Sparks, which is a location where Trinity might have been hiding "from the Oligarch scans." They find an Override Executable there, as well as some Override Functions, but no sign of Trinity. Tyndall, who feels able to refer to her as simply "Trinity" by now, says she thinks they stopped those programs from finding her, but that stopping H&S is going to be tough. She mentions reports of the Merv having got access to some kind of area the Oligarchs have set up, and that they're picking up activity from his operatives on rooftops "at the extreme northeast end of Downtown."

Extra Credit

A teleport from the area referred to in the last missions takes the player into some white hallways, which eventually may spit them out into an interior office space [that is pretty similar to floor 77 of the Government Building in Park East--I liked the layout of that one, and I wanted to use something that would feel very elevated]. It's full of nasty Overrides and Executables with special prizes. The only exit is a rotary telephone on a desk in one of the offices, which teleports the user to a public phone on the north side of the base of the SE tower in Park East.

~~~~~

LIVE EVENTS

EPN (event) - meeting w/ unknown pedestrian (pseudo Oracle)

Merv hitting on Tesarova?

Various Rarebit Questions and Answers

Q: Rarebit, what was your ideas about Operation Dark Storm? During chapter 10, it seemed that neither the humans nor the Machines knew how it worked. And if I remember correctly, CAR80N said that the pre-Matrix human civilization didn't have access to nanotechnology. It seemed like you were going to make some kind of revelation concerning Dark Storm.

A: Hm... I don't think I was going to try going into it in detail. After the Merv seeded the storm you pointed out that...I think it was the director's commentary for the Next Renaissance said it was nanomachines or something, which I hadn't been aware of, but it's all just some flavor of sci-fi magic anyway since as far as I know there's no currently known or even theoretical way that something like a perpetual Dark Storm would be possible. As far as that kind of thing goes--how is the Earth not frozen, what's this crazy fusion power with humans, etc--it's usually the less said, the better.

Q: Rarebit, in your outlines, you wrote "Mach: (after Zion event) Cypherites, Cryptos, and the Morph sim; Morph sim eventually agrees to listen when Cryptos offers to tell him why Morpheus was so obsessed with obtaining the One's remains--they go off for a little private chat [note that players are not going to be told what they talk about...and actually I still have to figure that out at some point, but it can wait for a later subchapter]." Was this ever "figured out"?

A: No. I wasn't interested in trying to unravel and continue the "Neo's remains" story angle that had been mostly an LET on-the-fly invention without any surviving official documentation (the story outline by Paul that we mission designers were following had Morpheus wanting to know about it, throwing up posters and causing a stir that got him killed, but that was all). The Morph sim/Cryptos meeting was on Vector on 10/24/07, and I think I may have had a feeling or two of what I might have had them "talk" about if I had to give any details about it, but I can't remember what those were. I'd guess it was probably something along the lines of Morpheus feeling purposeless under the Truce, and using the hope of Neo's resurrection as a way to resurrect his own dreams and motivations, but that's just a guess, and, again, it wouldn't really have been something I'd have wanted to go into.

On 7/6/07, also on Vector, the Morpheus sim had said that Morpheus was "mad" (as in crazy) when he was on the "Neo's remains" kick, and I think (another guess) that whatever Cryptos told him in their later meeting wasn't intended to change his mind substantially on that score, but it would help him get some closure on it and get his own head back together.

Q: Speaking of Cryptos... what exactly happened to him? Why did he become the way he is now, when everyone else who Seraph whooped went back to normal?

A: The overwriting used on Cryptos was different than the others. You'd get a better idea going back through those missions that were investigating the other overwritten people, but as far as I remember off the top of my head, their overwriting was a cruder form, where the Machine program just took control and didn't have access to the person's memories and personality. Cryptos had to be much more convincing, so they had to come up with a different overwriting scheme that left his original memories and personality intact and accessible; so with Cryptos the program and human had to coexist to an extent.

Q: This is going back a bit before 5.2, but did you have any hand in the creation or implementation of the Antedeluvian / Boxmaker / Pandora storyline? I found the storyline behind that to be rich, immersive and very enjoyable.

Since the last box effectively ends as a cliffhanger did you ever have any desire to continue that sidestory forward with additional quests using the Seraphitic Feather as the starting point? (It seems to me this was the original intent, to be revisited at a later date).

A: The Pandora's Box concept (spawns popping out of boxes) was handed to the four mission designers we had at the time, one of which was me--HCFrog was another--by the original Live Team design lead, Archon. The four of us brainstormed the four main NPC spawn types the boxes would use.

Then came the move to SOE, and the PB design team was down to HCFrog and I (oh, and Dracomet designed and implemented the loot items you get from the box spawns). I handled most of the story and missions for arcs 1, 2, and 4, and HCFrog did most of 3.

The original PB concept included putting out more box arcs from time to time. I chose to work on other types of "quest" content for a number of reasons: mostly because the story was tricky to handle, since it sort of tied in with some existing main story characters, but not really with the main story itself, and also because the box spawn mechanism had some drawbacks. Taking it into a separate, specifically tailored construct like Sati's Playground solved some of those.

Q: I've read both of the threads about the story, and if I've missed this feel free to openly berate me, but I'm just curious what Carlyne was doing with the Trinity program during the two years he had it? Did he not know how to use it, or maybe had some long term plan down the road for it? I like that he knew all along where it was while Halborn was blustering around the Matrix but I wonder why he'd leave something like that just sitting in storage somewhere.

A: Presumably he was doing research and laying plans for how to use it. He wasn't a guy who liked to hurry things if he could help it, and he thought he had it pretty well hidden. He'd also have known that the others would come after him if they found out about it. There were somewhere near 100 of them, including Halborn, and he saw most of them as enemies or rivals, so he had a good deal of work on his hands coming up with a way to neutralize them. He wasn't very far along at all when Halborn found out about it.

Q: Among other enjoyable aspects I liked the backstory as it related to the "Heavenly" version of the Matrix and the subsequent disillusionment /frustration of the Seraphim. It implied maybe future fleshing out of Seraph's backstory, his alliance and breakup with the Merv, and of course Flood's predecessor.

A: Yeah, we all thought the Seraphim were a cool idea; it was one of the other mission designers who thought of the "white Agent" angelic theme, and our art lead whipped up those keen wings and white suits. I gave them the pink shirts. ;) Hm I think I did the names for them, and HCFrog handled most of their ability balancing.

Rarebit concerning loose ends: I don't have any significant Morpheus loose ends as far as I know. Paul had the Assassin kill him: bang dead. The Morpheus I used was a simulacrum built by the General, based on compiled footage and memories of the original; he had enough of the original's spirit to fight off the General's control, but while closely related to the original Morpheus, he essentially developed into his own man. Program. Whatever.

Novalis II and Sarah Edmontons were side stories by other people that I did not take up myself, because I didn't feel like I had a sufficient understanding, from how they were initially presented by others, of how they could tie into the story of the Matrix as a whole. LESIG has done and may continue to do things with them, if they feel they can make good stories out of them.

Regarding Neo's remains: Sort of, I suppose. Paul's story had Morpheus, before he was killed, laying a lot of stress on finding them, but I never saw an outline of any story that would come back to that. When players asked me about it in events I've run, if I had the characters reply at all, it was to say that Morpheus was crazy at that point (the Morpheus sim said this once, for instance), and also that the Machines simply recycled Neo's remains, since they had no other use for them (Pace has said this at least once in a very straightforward fashion--probably so straightforward that everyone assumed she was lying, which is just so unfair =p).

That is pretty much my own take on it though, because, according to my own line of thought, what use would the Machines have for a dead human body, other than as fodder for recycling? Even if Neo was a genetically engineered human, or hybrid human program, or whatever, in that case he was their creation, and they had any data they could conceivably have gotten from his dead body already on file. And I didn't want to bring Neo back in any form--saying the Machines had been able to preserve him in program form like they did with Trinity, for instance--both because the resolution of his battle with Smith was supposed to have been his sacrifice and cancellation, and because I felt that the story, while it revisited a lot of the themes and characters from the movies, should at least let a different character or characters take the lead role(s) this time around.

...I suppose my own take on that Oracle comment would be a little more metaphysical--a lot more so than ways in which we've already had other developers bring him back, such as N30 Agents, various "frags," and the memorial in the Gracy Heights fight club.

Q: I know this isn't completely related, but it does have something to do with story. What was the purpose of SSR and creating them? Did you plan on doing anything with them other than the secretive backstory they already had?

A: That's an interesting question. The primary goal of Datamine was to provide an area with new twists on gameplay: high-profit data mining in a free-for-all PVP zone. As I got to thinking about it, a story on what type of facility might have become such a place got into my head, and that helped shape what turned out to be the artificial island with separate administration and research buildings and so forth, and it gave a good angle for Dr. Martin's collector dialogue.

It wasn't a hugely ornate story or anything, and you can probably guess most of it from the hints in the doc's messages and the details text on the items and NPCs from the construct. I suppose you might be able to tell something from what Raeder said in the one Live Event he was in there, too.

The warehouse building at the SE corner had interiors that could still be opened up, and I figured some day I might open them up, stick some NPCs in and add a new boss on the roof or something. I didn't have a particular story in mind for that, though.

There's space for some more floors to open up in the lower section of the administration building (SW corner), although I think I would have had to put them together myself, which would have been more time consuming. I did have a bit of an addition or final hint to the little story of the place that I was thinking I could try sticking in there, and I'll just say that it had to do with me noticing that we had an in-game model for a pod.

Q: Oh, that makes me think of another construct, the Sati's Playground. Didn't you imagine a backstory for it too?

A: Just what it says on the collectors or somewhere, that Sati made it for fun.

Q: I have another question, Rarebit. During a chapter 10.2 Zion mission, the player encounters a bluepill who is apparently a disguised redpill whose organization can't be verified. The character mentions that it was about time they sent someone. And in a desk there's a note saying something like "your contact's name is Soren", which appears to be a reference to Captain Soren, who died before the truce started.

Is this some poor uninformed redpill, or is something else going on? At the time, with Mauser running around and this note that mentions a long dead captain, I was beginning to wonder if the Oligarchs were taking the bodies of dead characters and using them for their own purposes.

A: Poor and uninformed is the correct answer. They were a wartime Zion plant whose contact had been lost before the beginning of the Truce, so they hadn't received any word and didn't know what had happened since then.

Q: I like the general idea of the oligarchs, but I'm not all too fond of the final resolution and trinity and neo as perfect genetic design etc. I give Rarebit much credit for coming up with something that does fit with the overall source material.

A: When putting the OP together I realized that I'd sort of been heading away from the "genetic" explanation toward having them as pure programs, maybe just because that ended up being easier to convey. I'm not sure now if I'd have kept going that way or not.

Q: As far as the genetic thing, I think back to Neo's conversation with The Architect and it wouldn't make sense unless pretty much everything Archy said was a lie. [...] If Neo is an anomaly that was beyond his control, then he wouldn't have been specifically created with that purpose etc.

A: It was the Oracle who came up with the inherent error scheme. The Architect allowed it, but he did so knowing that that part of it wasn't something over which he had direct control.

Heyyy this is a good opportunity to mention that personally (I wouldn't enforce this on others, mind you, since it's pretty touchy in some ways), I don't think Neo was "the anomaly." The Architect calls him "the eventuality of an anomaly," which is different than actually being the anomaly. If you have to pick a character as the anomaly, it seems to me that it would have been Smith; but I think it's more accurate to say that the "anomaly" he was talking about was the cascading system of errors that inevitably result from the current Matrix program's built-in imperfection that allows for a small percentage of the populace to reject it ("the anomaly is systemic," etc). The tricky part about this interpretation is that one of those knuckleheaded Agents later says "The anomaly" when he finds Neo; I explain this away for myself (whee magic!) by making excuses like "Agents didn't know everything" or "the Agent was simply referring to Neo as one of the primary manifestations of the consequences of the anomaly."

Q: So the reason the Oligarch's appeared as "wire-framed humans" was because they were jacking in from android bodies

A: Pretty much. They were using a different kind of interface than operatives use to get in. Also, they didn't particularly care about looking normal.

Wes Craven's

A NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET

1A. INT. (MONTAGE) .

1A.

NIGHTMARE MUSIC THEME begins as we FADE UP on a SERIES OF SHOTS, all CLOSE and teasing.

- A man's FEET, in shabby work shoes, stalking through a junk bin in a dark, fire-lit, ash-dusted place. A huge BOILER ROOM is what it is, although we only glimpse it piecemeal. Then we SEE a MAN'S HAND, dirty and nail-bitten, reach INTO FRAME and pick up a piece of METAL.
- ANOTHER ANGLE as the HAND grabs a grimey WORKGLOVE and slashes at it with a straight razor, until its fingertips are off.
- CLOSE ON SAME HANDS dumping four fishing knives out of a filthy bag. Their blades are thin, curved, gleaming sharp.
- MORE ANGLES, EVEN CLOSER. We can HEAR the MAN's wheezing BREATHING, but we still haven't seen his face. We never will. We just SEE more metal being assembled with crude tools, into some sort of linkage -- a splayed, spidery sort of apparatus, against a background light of FIRE, and a deep rushing of STEAM and HEAVY, DARK ENERGY.
- And then we see this linkage attached to the glove.
- Then the BLADES attached to all of it.
- Then the MAN'S HAND slips into this glove-like apparatus, filling it out and transforming it into an awesome, deadly claw-hand with four razor/talons gleaming at its blackened fingertips. Suddenly the HAND arches and STRIKES FORWARD, SLASHING THROUGH a DARK CANVAS, tearing it to shreds.

1. EXT. LOS ANGELES. NIGHT. (2nd Unit) 1.

A PULSATION OF LIGHT AND SHADOW. MUSIC DROPS AWAY to a hushed RUSHING OF WIND and DISTANT SIRENS. CAMERA RACKS INTO FOCUS on a HIGH PANORAMA of the San Fernando Valley, its night sky lit from within by a strange GREENISH LIGHT. TITLES BEGIN.

CAMERA TILTS DOWN and ZOOMS SWIFTLY into the valley's web of light.

CUT TO:

2. INT. CONCRETE PASSAGEWAY. 2.

TITLES CONTINUE as TINA GRAY, a strong girl of fifteen in a thin night shift, moves towards us down a dark concrete corridor. Her steps quicken as TITLES appear in the portion of frame she leaves free.

A subliminal COLLAGE of SOUND threads in and out of the MUSIC. Distant insane LAUGHTER. Slamming iron DOORS. A bleating animal CRY. A LAMB, white and blank-faced, skitters across her path and on into the dark. No reason why it's there.

Then another SOUND, much nearer -- the slithering SCRAPE of something like finger nails across slate. It sets our teeth on edge, twists the MUSIC, and sends TINA running.

3. INT. BOILER ROOM. 3.

Suddenly TINA's a tiny figure running among huge boilers steam pipes and catwalks -- a shadowed forest of iron and stone. She stops, listening intently as the SOUND of tiny hooves suddenly turns into the rattle of DISTANT RAIN.

Then she hears RIPPING FABRIC.

Someone is shouldering behind a ragged screen of dirty canvas, approaching TINA.

CLOSER ON THE CANVAS. The long curved fingerblades suddenly punch through, flashing in the firelight, and begin ripping through the thick fabric, as easily as scalpels through flesh. They make a hideous, extended RIPPING SOUND.

TINA rushes away, hands over her ears.

ANOTHER ANGLE -- as the blinded girl stumbles backwards. Then the canvas flaps free. The blades are gone. The TITLES END, and everything goes silent.

CAMERA CIRCLES until TINA's looking right into our eyes. The light from a nearby boiler pours through her thin night dress, leaving her naked and vulnerable. Then a deep, ragged VOICE whispers at her as CAMERA CLOSES IN ON HER FACE.

VOICE (O.S.)

One two, Freddie's coming for
you...

TINA opens her mouth to scream but only a dry, yellow dust pours out. And at that precise moment a huge shadowy MAN with a grimey red and yellow sweater and a weird hat pulled over his scarred face lunges at her. And it's his fingers that are tipped with the long blades of steel, glinting in the boney light and giving the hulk the look of an otherworldly predator.

TINA dodges away, her legs suddenly elephantine and slow. The MAN seizes the trailing hem of her nightgown and hauls her back.

The MUSIC shrieks as TINA manages to tear free -- the MAN lurches after her with a hoarse SHOUT as we --

SMASH CUT TO:

4. INT. TINA'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

4.

TINA convulses in bed with a SCREAM, looking around wildly. Someone is KNOCKING on her door.

WOMAN'S VOICE (O.S.)

You okay, Tina?

TINA'S MOTHER sticks her head in with a worried look. TINA sits up and blows out a breath, groggy.

TINA

Just a dream, Ma...
(more to herself)
Damn dream, is all...

The woman, once attractive, ventures a step into the room. A MAN hovers BACKGROUND. TINA'S mother waves him away without looking, shoving a strand of bleached hair from her eyes. She appraises her daughter.

TINA'S MOTHER

Some dream, judging from that.

She nods at TINA's nightshift.

TINA looks down at her nightgown, only now aware of the chill penetrating it from the room. There are four long slashes up its middle, cleanly cut as if by scalpels.

MAN (OS)

(distant, annoyed)

You coming back to the sack or
what?

TINA'S MOTHER

Hold your horses.

(lower, to Tina as she stands to leave)

You gotta cut your nails or stop that kind of dreaming, Tina. One or the other.

The woman shuts the door behind her. TINA looks back to her nightgown.

TINA

(low)

Oh, shit.

She suddenly snatches up the cross that hangs over her head, her face white as her sheet.

FADE TO BLACK

BURN ON

5. THE FIRST DAY 5.

CHILDREN (OS)

(singing)

One two, Freddie's coming for you...
Three four better lock your door
Five six grab your crucifix...

6. EXT. HIGH SCHOOL. DAY. 6.

FADE UP ON SHOT OF this large highschool and its crowds of STUDENTS. FOREGROUND, TINA climbs out of a cherry-red 1959
Cadillac convertible with two other students, best friend NANCY
WILSON, and Nancy's boyfriend and owner of the car, GLEN LANTZ.

FOREGROUND several GRADESCHOOLERS are playing jump-rope, and the old ditty they sing continues unbroken from TINA's bedroom.

ROPE JUMPERS

Seven eight, gonna stay up late!
Nine ten -- never sleep again!

7. MOVING ANGLE FAVORING NANCY. She's a pretty girl in a letter 7. sweater, with an easy, athletic stride and the look of a natural leader. GLEN, holding her hand, wears one of the school's football jerseys; a good-natured, bright kid. Tina's in mid-conversation.

TINA

(referring to kids' song)

That's what it reminded me of -- that old jump rope song.

(shudders)

Worst nightmare I ever had.
You wouldn't believe it.

Nancy nods.

NANCY

Matter of fact I had a bad dream
last night myself...

TINA turns to NANCY, but before either can say more, ROD LANE, a lean, Richard Gere sort in black leather and New Wave studs joins up with them and interrupts.

ROD

(to Tina)

Had a hardon this morning when I woke up, Tina. Had your name written all over it.

Tina cracks her gum with a look of withering indifference.

TINA

There's four letters in my name,
Rod. How could there be room on your joint for four letters?

The guy's stopped in his tracks.

ROD

Hey, up yours with a twirling lawn mower!

He cuts off across the lawn.

TINA

Rod says the sweetest things.

NANCY

He's nuts about you.

TINA

Yeah, nuts.

TINA makes a face and rakes her fingernails across a tree as she passes.

TINA (CONTD)

(yawns)

Anyway, I'm too tired to worry about the creep. Couldn't get back to sleep at all.

(beat)

So what you dream?

NANCY

Forget it, the point is, everybody has nightmares once in a while.
No biggy.

GLEN

Next time you have one, just tell yourself that's just all it is, right while you're having it, y'know? That's the trick.
Once you do that, you wake right up. At least it works for me.

TINA looks at GLEN sharply. He kisses NANCY and darts off for class.

TINA

Hey! You have a nightmare too?

But GLEN's gone.

TINA (CONTD)

Maybe we're gonna have the Big Earthquake. They say things get weird just before that...

BELLS ARE RINGING, and STUDENTS crowding; TINA and NANCY are drawn into the crush.

FADE TO BLACK

8. EXT. A VALLEY STREET. NIGHT. 8.

ANGLE ON A MODEST HOME; no car, just a couple of BIKES in the drive. Every light in the house and yard is turned on. We HEAR the rock group MADNESS played at a 'No adults home' volume.

9. INT. TINA'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT. 9.

ON GLEN, dialing. Nancy and TINA are watching, giggling.

TINA

I can't believe his mother let him come over here.

NANCY

Right. Well, she didn't, exactly...

GLEN shoves a cassette into TINA's Ghetto Blaster.

GLEN

(to TINA)

See, I got this cousin who lives near the airport, that it's okay for me to stay with, right? So I found this sound effects tape at Licorice Pizza, and...

The phone is answered. GLEN jerks the tone arm off the record with a SCRUIPT!!

GLEN (CONTD)

Hello, Mom?

(pushes the 'play' button)

Yeah, out here at Barry's.

A JET PLANE begins to make itself heard on the tape. GLEN moves the machine closer to the phone. It's a big plane -- sounds like a 747 coming in for a landing.

GLEN (CONT)

Huh? Yeah, noisy as usual. Glad we don't live here -- huh? Yeah,
Aunt Eunice says hello.

The Jet is SCREAMING IN now, full flaps and howling like a monstrous banshee. NANCY and TINA dissolve into muffled giggles.

GLEN (CONT)

(shouting over the din)

Right, right -- I'll call you in the morning! Right! Huh? Yeah, sure,
I, huh?...

Suddenly the tape goes silent. GLEN blanches. Next moment another ENGINE is heard, but this one is a FORD LOTUS screaming by at 180 mph.

GLEN (CONT)

(reacting to his mother's reaction)

Uh... some kid's drag racing outside, I think...

The sound effect changes abruptly to a SPEEDING SEDAN -- and the ages-old SCREECH of BRAKES, last-second SCREAM and horrible COLLISION. NANCY gamely tries to find the right button to turn it off, but misses. There's a loud SCREEK of fast-forward mayhem
-- Glen improvises desperately.

GLEN (CONT)

Listen, Mom, I got to go -- I think there's been an accident out front -- I --

NANCY jumps back from the cassette player -- WORLD WAR II bursts out at top volume -- MACHINE GUNS, HAND GRENADES, DIVING BEARCATS and SHOUTS of charging Huns. GLEN makes a last-ditch dive and flings the cassette out of the machine.

Blessed silence at last.

GLEN (CONT)

Right. I'll call the police. No, just some neighbors having a fight,
I guess. I'm fine, I'm fine!
Call you in the morning!

He hangs up and sags back.

NANCY

Worked like a charm.

GLEN

Jesus.

TINA shoves another cassette in, and MICHAEL JACKSON'S 'THRILLER' blasts from the STEREO. The kids relax, the CAMERA GLIDES PAST THEM TO THE WINDOW.

The WIND is moving the bare TREE BRANCH outside. CAMERA PANS BACK to the comfortably threadbare room, uneasy. We see NANCY poking at a flame in the hearth as TINA comes FOREGROUND to draw the drapes.

NANCY

Nice to have a fire.

TINA

Really. Turn 'er up a little.

NANCY turns a nearby valve handle, and the gas fire climbs brightly over its artificial log. TINA joins her, heartened.

NANCY

Maybe we should call Rod, have him come over too. He might get jealous.

TINA

Rod and I are done. He's too much of a maniac.

GLEN

He should join the Marines, they could make something out of him.
Like a hand grenade.

TINA laughs despite herself. NANCY brightens.

NANCY

See? You've forgotten the bad dream. Didn't I tell you?

TINA shakes her head, wishing she had forgotten.

TINA

All day long I been seeing that guy's weird face, and hearing those fingernails...

NANCY looks up with a flinch.

NANCY

Fingernails?

(blinks, laughing)

That's amazing, you saying that.
It made me remember the dream I had last night.

TINA looks up.

TINA

What you dream?

NANCY

I dreamed about this guy in a dirty red and yellow sweater;
I dream in color, y'know; he walked into the room I was in, right, right through the wall, like it was smoke or something, and just stared at me. Sort of ...obscenely. Then he walked out through the wall on the other side. Like he'd just come to check me out...

The story has left the room deathly quiet. Especially TINA seems affected.

TINA

(quietly)

So what about the fingernails?

NANCY remembers, imitating the frightful coincidence.

NANCY

He scraped his fingernails along things -- actually, they were more like fingerknives or something, like he'd made them himself? Anyway, they made this horrible noise --

(imitates) ssssccrrrtttt....

TINA pales.

TINA

Nancy. You dreamed about the same creep I did, Nancy...

The girls stare at each other.

GLEN

That's impossible.

They look at him. He looks away, as if suddenly listening.

TINA

What?

GLEN

Nothing.

TINA

There's somebody out there, isn't there...

NANCY

I didn't hear anything...

Then there's an unmistakeable SOUND. A distinct SCRAPING against the house, just outside the window. Something multiple, thin and sharp. Something like metal fingernails. NANCY's mouth opens a fraction of an inch.

10. EXT. FRONT OF HOUSE. NIGHT.

10.

CLOSE ON FRONT DOOR as a BOLT UNLOCKS, a KEY TURNS, a CHAIN is REMOVED. At last the door swings open and GLEN swaggers out.

GLEN

I'm gonna punch out your ugly lights, whoever you are.

No answer but a slight RUSTLE in the bushes. GLEN does a 180 and walks right back inside. The girls prod him right back out, giddy with giggling fear.

GLEN

It's just a stupid cat.

NANCY

Then bring us back its tail and whiskers.

The girls push him farther. GLEN edges towards the shadows. Then the SCRITCHING again. GLEN stops; TINA edges back into the house.

TINA

Anyway, I don't have a cat...

ANGLE INTO THE SHADOWS. Turned from the girls, GLEN sobers, listening. IN HIS POV we see the street. Silent houses. Motionless trees on empty lawns.

GLEN

Not a living, or dead, soul. GLEN turns back to the girls with a shrug. Instantly, a large FIGURE pounces and throws him to the ground with a shout.

The girls SCREAM in panic and run for the house.

11. REVERSE -- ROD leaps up and shouts like a sportscaster -- 11.

ROD

And it's number thirty-six, Rod Lane, bringing Lantz down just three yards from the goal with a brilliant tackle! And the fans go wild!

ROD dances into the light, flashing a wild gypsy's grin at TINA. The girl's relieved and frightened at the same time.

TINA

What the hell you doing here?

ROD

Came to make up, no big deal. Your ma home?

TINA

Of course. What's that?

ROD takes the spindly hand rake he's found and scraps the house's wall. It makes a terrible SCRIIITCHING SOUND. He grins and tosses it aside.

ROD

Intense, huh?
(sizes up the three)
So what's happening, an orgy or something?

GLEN

Maybe a funeral, you dickhead.

ROD wheels, a knife suddenly in his hand, as if ready to take Glen's throat out. NANCY breaks between --

NANCY

-- Just a sleep-over date, Rod.
Just Tina and me. Glen was just leaving.

ROD eyes GLEN, laughs and flips the knife closed and away, putting his arm around TINA's shoulder and laughing as if it's all a great joke.

ROD

You see his face?

(lower)

Your ma ain't home, is she?

(to Nancy & Glen)

Me and Tina got stuff to discuss.

He pulls TINA inside without further ceremony.

NANCY

Rod...

But ROD's already got himself and TINA halfway through the living room, heading into the darker part of the house.

ROD

We got her mother's bed.

You two got the rest.

ANGLE BACK ON GLEN AND NANCY.

NANCY

We should get her out of here...

TINA darts to the front door, her blouse half out.

TINA

Hey -- you guys're hanging around -- right?

(fake laughing/whine)

Don't leave me alone with this lunatic -- Pleeeeze, NANCY!

She disappears. GLEN looks at NANCY. Too innocent.

GLEN

So we'll guard her together. Through the night.

(moving closer)

In each others' arms like we always said.

NANCY

Glen. Not now. I mean, we're here for Tina now, not for ourselves.

She kisses him lightly, then pushes him back.

GLEN

(frustrated)

Why's she so bothered by a stupid nightmare, anyway?

NANCY

Because he was scary, that's why.

GLEN

Who was scary?

NANCY turns and looks at him.

NANCY

Don't you think it's weird, her and me dreaming about the same guy?

(GLEN looks away;

NANCY stares closer)

You didn't have a bad dream last night, did you?

GLEN gives her a funny look.

GLEN

Me? I don't dream.

He takes her inside. Over the SOUNDS of locks falling shut we

FADE TO BLACK

13. INT. TINA'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

13.

FADE UP ON an old 50's CLOCK, one of those set into the black plaster body of a stalking panther. It's just past 2 AM.

PAN the cold hearth and darkened living room to REVEAL GLEN on the couch, cacooned in sheets. He's listening miserably to the SOUNDS OF LOVEMAKING coming from the next room. TINA peaks, ROD howls. Then silence.

GLEN

Morality sucks.

CUT TO:

14. INT. TINA'S MOTHER'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

14.

This is a slightly larger room than TINA's. Adult. Female.
Spare in its appointments. The streetlight throws the narrow bed into broken shadow and light. TINA AND ROD lie in each other's arms in the middle of the big bed. Satiated.

TINA

I knew there was sometihng about you I liked...

ROD yawns into the pillows, happy.

ROD

You feel better now, right?

TINA

Jungle man fix Jane.

ROD

No more fights?

TINA

No more fights.

ROD

(sleepily)

Good. No more nightmares for either of us then.

He pulls the covers over his head. He's almost out already.

TINA

(beat)

When did you have a nightmare?

ROD

(under the blankets)

Guys can have nightmares too, y'know. You ain't got a corner on the fucking market or something.

He rolls over, practically snoring, and pulls another cover over his head. A dirty red and yellow cover.

TINA

(sleepily)

Where'd you get this snotty old thing?

SNORES from ROD. TINA yawns, turns off the light and snuggles against ROD, pulling the cover gingerly over herself, too.

15. INT. TINA'S BEDROOM. NIGHT

15.

CAMERA MOVES across the room of the original nightmare to find NANCY alone in TINA's bed, staring at the slanting ceiling above the bed. Thinking. We can just hear her HEART beating. She sighs and turns on her side.

Immediately the wall above her head turns a faint reddish hue, with a broad yellow smear across its center. All unseen by NANCY, the wall begins to pulse in exact time with her heart's beat.

CLOSE ON NANCY'S FACE. She closes her eyes.

ANGLE BACK UP ON THE CEILING JUST ABOVE HER HEAD. SOMETHING presses against the surface from the inside. The plaster buldges out as if suddenly elastic, taking the shape of the thing pressing from inside -- taking the shape of a man's face. The face opens its mouth. The knives rake through the surface.

ANGLE ON NANCY -- as plaster dust snows down on her.

She jerks awake, sitting bolt upright. The face retracts suddenly -- the wall is normal.

ANGLE DOWN ON NANCY as she looks up to the ceiling, touching her hair and feeling the plaster dust.

REVERSE IN HER POV TO THE CEILING. There are three parallel cuts in the plaster there. About eight inches long. As if cut by sharp knives. Nothing else.

Back on NANCY. She draws the covers around her and shivers. Eyes wide open.

16. EXT. TINA'S HOUSE. NIGHT. 16.

Not a car or person in sight. A stricken breeze dies in the trees.

17. ZOOM IN on the window of the room where TINA sleeps. By the time 17.
we're FULL IN CLOSE on it, the air is again still as death. A moment later a PEBBLE bounces off the pane. The NIGHTMARE THEME appears in the lower registers and holds its breath.

Another PEBBLE strikes, with a sharper RAP.

18. INT. TINA'S MOTHER'S BEDROOM. NIGHT. 18.

CLOSE ON TINA'S FACE as her eyes open.

19. REVERSE IN HER POV. Another PEBBLE clatters off the glass. 19.

20. TINA raises slowly. 20.

TINA

ROD...

SNORES FROM ROD. TINA sits up.

PAST HER TO THE WINDOW. The WIND MOVES AGAIN; the trees brush the window with their shadows. Then another pebble. RAP! TINA slips to the window.

21. EXT. TINA'S BACKYARD. NIGHT. 21.

She looks out on an old yard with a patch of banana trees rattling in the Santa Ana winds. It seems deserted, though the welling dark won't let her be sure. Then another pebble -- PAP!

-- hitting with a sharp RACK FOCUS.

22. A LOW ANGLE TO WINDOW as TINA jumps back, startled. She hadn't 22. seen that one coming. But she's drawn back to the glass out of curiosity, straining to see in the dark. It's as if the stones are materializing out of thin air.

23. INT. TINA'S MOTHER'S ROOM. NIGHT.

23.

WHAP! This time a heavier stone, and a thin crack bristles across the glass.

TINA

(low)

Who the fuck you think you are,
whoever you are?

24. EXT. TINA'S BACK YARD. NIGHT.

24.

WIDE ANGLE ON THE REAR OF THE HOUSE. A LIGHT COMES ON. TINA appears in the doorway.

TINA

(listening)

Somebody there?

She can see through the backward to a yawning gate and the back alley. No one there. But a word is spoken, as if by wind.

VOICE

(garbled)

Tina.

TINA straightens, unable to swallow. There's a ragged, obscene GIGGLE. Deep in the throat. Phlegmy.

TINA

Who the hell is that?

TINA charges across the yard and through the gate, the MUSIC chasing after.

25. EXT. A SERVICE ALLEY. NIGHT.

25.

She brakes in the middle of the alley and whirls around. Listening. Shivering in the same thin slashed nightgown.

A sharp crank of METAL, and fifty feet down the alley the lid of an ash can rolls from the dark like a huge tin coin and spirals noisily down.

26. LOW REVERSE ACROSS LID TO TINA. Despite herself she comes over and touches it. She comes up with long worms on her fingers.

26.

Next moment the exact same shambling MAN from her nightmare staggers into view fifty feet behind her. TINA falls back into the shadows, shaking the worms off her fingers in repulsion. The MAN turns and starts directly for her, something shining on his right hand as he spreads his arms wide. He starts scraping the steel FINGERNAILS along a cinderblock wall. Orange sparks spurt out -- his arms elongate until they reach from one side of the alley to the other -- and TINA is cut off from her home!

CLOSE ON HER as the SCRAPING of the blades gets louder and closer. She begins to shake uncontrollably.

TINA

Oh, shit, please God...

KILLER

(softly, approaching)

This is God...

He holds up his steel-tipped hand like a surgical-steel spider. TINA runs for her life.

27. WIDER ANGLE IN THE ALLEY -- a terrifying, all-out footrace between the girl and her pursuer. The MAN is fast; the distance between them closes with each heartbeat. TINA overturns ashcans -- claws her way through a rotten back fence, hammers against a window. Ashen FACES appear, recoil, pull curtains closed and disappear in fright. 27.

28. EXT. TINA'S STREET. NIGHT. 28.

TINA runs out onto front lawns, SCREAMING for help. No help comes. In fact, the only response is for all the porch lights on the block to be turned off. The MAN roars out from behind a tree -- a tree too narrow to have hidden him -- nearly upon the girl! TINA runs in panic -- at last making her own home, only to be trapped against its locked front door.

She hammers against its thick wood.

TINA

Nancy! Open the door -- Nancy!

The MAN slows. He has TINA now and knows it.

MAN

She's still awake. Nancy can't hear you.

TINA turns and looks full at the approaching MAN. Smudged by deep shadow, he's big and hideous. He wears the same dirty yellow sweater from the first nightmare -- from the wall-hanging and blanket too -- and has the same sagging hat and leering grin over his misshapen face. And on his fingers are the steel talons.

29. CLOSE ON HIM as he takes the blade on the end of his right index finger and lopes off one of the fingers of his left hand. Then another. We SEE the PIECES OF FINGERS fall past TINA'S face in SLOW MOTION. 29.

ANGLE ON THE GROUND of the FINGERS squirming on the ground, one flopping onto TINA's naked foot.

TINA leaps back, sickened, and begins stamping on them as if they were huge bugs.

The MAN snaps up his arm and the FINGERS fly back into place on his hand. He leers at TINA -- then suddenly lunges at her, sweeping with his cutting hand!

TINA's no weak sister -- blocks his arm, deflecting the spines, and grabs the MAN's ugly face with her other hand. But the face only slides off to the bone. The MAN presses in, and TINA contorts in horror as the knives slash across her shoulder -- cutting her deeply.

29A. TINA staggers backward, GROANING, her foot now inexplicably caught in bedclothes! She falls over her bed's conformer, twists away from the man and, like a child, pulls the cover over her! The skull-faced MAN crushes down, and there's a fierce grappling -- punctuated by his GRUNTS and the girl's DEAFENING SCREAMS -- and they both become totally wrapped in the comforter -- until they're beneath it, fighting for life and death. 29A.

30. INT. TINA'S BEDROOM. NIGHT. 30.

ROD lurches up into CLOSE UP in the lightless bedroom, half-awakened by the tremendous struggle somewhere, somehow inside the dark bed. ROD grabs groggily, lifting the blanket.

30A. IN HIS POV we glimpse the dark underside of the blanket -- see TWO SHADOWY FIGURES flailing and clawing under the bedspread -- TINA and the MAN -- or a shape that could be a man -- raging against each other. 30A.

ROD drops the blanket and leaps from the bed, scared full awake and terrified. Then the horrible TINA's GASPS change to the CRIES of a terribly wounded victim. ROD instantly jerks back the bedspread.

IN HIS POV we SEE TINA struggling and flailing along on the sheets, the MAN nowhere in sight.

ROD

T-tina!?

Suddenly TINA -- eyes turned inward to her tormentor -- give an awful jolt -- her arms and legs are spraddled as if by overwhelming force and pinned to the bed. Next instant, her nightgown flies apart and four long gashes chase across her torso. From no visible instruments! A huge irrigation of blood floods the bed.

Terrified, ROD dives for the light -- but at the same moment something invisible grabs TINA, wielding her body in the air and bringing it around in a swift blow that knocks ROD crashing into the light -- smashing it to bits.

31. CLOSER ON HIM as he struggles around. In the blue FLASHES OF ELECTRICITY ROD sees TINA sliding up the bedroom wall in a dark smear, dragged feet first! 31.

ANGLE ON ROD -- paralyzed by terror!

ANGLE ON TINA'S DYING EYES -- moving with her up the wall and bumping around the corner onto the ceiling. She's just looking at who's dragging her, eyes glazing.

REVERSE IN HER POV -- to the shadowy, horrendously ugly MAN, dragging her with fierce glee across the ceiling, literally swabbing the ceiling with her bloody body. SEEN in FORCED PERSPECTIVE, the SHOT carries her across a great distance without seeming to get anywhere -- as if the ceiling is an endless plane.

ANGLE DOWN ON ROD -- on his hands and knees -- the lamp next to him blurting blue SPARKS and STROBING the nightmare room. ROD'S screaming up at TINA'S invisible tormentor.

ROD

What the hell's going ON here!
Tina!

ANGLE ON TINA -- upside down, clawing at the hanging swag lamp above her mother's dressing table -- desperate for some anchor. But she's dragged away from it. The lamp swings back, it's wires gushing more SPARKS.

CLOSER along the ceiling as TINA rakes a long furrow in the ceiling with her fingernails. But her eyes are glazing, glazing. And then they fall closed.

WIDE, UP ON THE CEILING, as her body suddenly flops loose, hanging for an awful moment by the feet over the bed.

REVERSE ON ROD -- staring like a terrified child.

ROD

Tina --

REVERSE IN HIS POV -- as the body falls like a sack of rocks onto the devastated bed, in SLOW MOTION, striking with a huge splash of blood. A sick, awful GIGGLE floats around the room, then ECHOES off into infinity. ROD staggers up, staring around as if hoping to see this phantom.

ROD

You motherfucker! I'll kill you for that!

32. INT. TINA'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

32.

NANCY is sitting straight up in bed, terrified. The CRIES of ROD are ringing through the whole house. She forces herself to move -- bolting from the bed despite her terror and sense of dread.

33. INT. HALLWAY. NIGHT.

33.

NANCY flies into the dark hall -- crashing directly into SOMEONE who lurches out of the dark before her. She SCREAMS and jumps back --

GLEN

What the hell's going on!?

NANCY

Oh -- jeez -- Glen! Rod's gone ape!

ROD (OS)

(sobbing)

I'll kill you!

NANCY grabs the door; it's locked; she pounds on it. BAM! BAM! BAM!

Things fall into sudden, awful silence on the other side. GLEN's voice cracks with fear.

GLEN

Rod?

(silence)

Rod, you better not hurt Tina...

ROD erupts into terrible HOARSE LAUGHTER AND SOBBING. Then they hear BREAKING GLASS.

GLEN barrels into the door like the football player he is. The frame splinters and they're in.

34. INT. TINA'S MOTHER'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

34.

Just inside the door NANCY slips and goes down hard. GLEN finds her in the dark more by touch than sight.

GLEN

You okay?

NANCY

Yeah. Something slipping all over here...

(feeling)

Tina?

No answer. The room is quiet as a tomb. Except for a steady DRIPPING, from all over. Then GLEN finds a LIGHT SWITCH.

On the CLICK the devastation is revealed. There's BLOOD everywhere: up the walls, over the clawed ceiling, soaking the killing floor of the bed, and pooling in the dark red puddle where NANCY has slipped and fallen.

GLEN

Oh, shit...

NANCY wobbles up and sees TINA in the center of the ravaged bed. Unmistakeably and utterly dead. NANCY presses against the wall, then contorts and chokes.

GLEN (CONTD)

(numb)

I...I'm gonna call the cops --

He bursts from the room.

35. TIGHT ON NANCY. She turns away from the body in repulsion, 35.
sticking her head through the shattered window ROD LANE used for his escape, sucking in the cold night air and moaning.

FADE TO BLACK

36. EXT/INT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT. 36.

FADE UP ON RED LIGHTS and SIREN as an unmarked POLICE CAR speeds to the curb.

LT DON THOMPSON, a decent-looking man in his mid-40's, exits and punches a cigarette from his pack. His shaken aide, a uniformed patrolman named PARKER, greets him. (CAMERA FOLLOWS them from the car straight into the station and eventually to THOMPSON'S OFFICE.)

PARKER

Lieutenant Thompson. Sorry to wake you, but --

LT THOMPSON

I'd've canned your ass if you hadn't. What you got?

PARKER stumbles to open the door for THOMPSON as the man bulls into the station at a furious pace.

PARKER

Her name was Tina Gray. It was her home. Father abandoned ten years ago, mother's in Vegas with a boyfriend. We're trying to reach her now.

LT THOMPSON grimaces as if he knows the story.

LT THOMPSON

A Nightmare on Elm Street, by Wes Craven
What's the Coroner got to say?

PARKER
Something like a razor was the weapon, but nothing found on the scene.

THOMPSON is already to the desk officer SERGEANT GARCIA. The big MAN shoves him a sheaf of papers --

SERGEANT GARCIA
(wary) Leutenant. You know who --

LT THOMPSON
Where is she?

SERGEANT GARCIA
I put her in your office...

PARKER scurries after.

PARKER
Looks like her boyfriend did it. Rod Lane. Musician type, arrests for brawling, dope --

LT THOMPSON
Terrific. What the hell was she doing there?

PARKER
She lived there.

OMIT 37. LT THOMPSON I don't mean her -- OMIT 37.

38. INT. INTERROGATION ROOM. NIGHT. 38.

THOMPSON enters his office and confronts NANCY and her mother, MARGE SIMSON.

LT THOMPSON (CONTD)
I mean you.
(accusingly, to Marge)
What the hell was she doing there?

MARGE SIMSON is in her middle thirties; a good-looking woman despite the hour and circumstances.

MARGE
Hello to you, too, Donald.

THOMPSON stops, the steam suddenly out of him. The girl is a wreck and he winces to see it.

LT THOMPSON

Marge.

THOMPSON glances at PARKER and the other UNIFORMED COPS who are in the room. As a man they head for the door. There's no question who the boss is here. THOMPSON turns to NANCY. She fumbles a smile.

LT THOMPSON (CONTD)

How you doing, pal?

NANCY

Okay. Hi, dad.

NANCY's dress is dark with dried blood, her skin clammy and the color of paste. MARGE shoots her ex-husband a worried glance. THOMPSON pulls a chair close to NANCY.

LT THOMPSON

I don't want to get into this now, god knows you need time.

(hotter)

But I'd sure would like to know what the hell you were doing shacked up with three other kids in the middle of the night -- especially a delinquent lunatic like Lane.

NANCY weaves.

NANCY

Rod's not a lunatic.

LT THOMPSON

You got a sane explanation for what he did?

The girl is shredding a Kleenex, staring off.

MARGE

Apparantly he was crazy jealous.
Nancy said they'd had a fight,
Rod and Tina.

NANCY

(quietly)

It wasn't that serious...

MARGE

Maybe you don't think murder's serious --

NANCY sits bolt upright in her chair, her eyes flashing.

NANCY

She was my best friend! Don't you dare say I don't take her death seriously!

(lower, near tears)

I just meant their fights weren't that serious.

The girl holds the woman's eyes a moment, then looks away.

NANCY (CONTD)

(to herself)

She dreamed this would happen...

LT THOMPSON

What?

NANCY

She had a nightmare about somebody trying to kill her, last night.
That's why we were there; she was afraid to sleep alone.

A tear splashes off the arm of her chair.

MARGE

She's been through enough for one night. You have her statement.

The mother and daughter rise; THOMPSON raps on the door and PARKER opens it.

LT THOMPSON

(to MARGE)

I suggest you keep a little better track on her -- she's still a kid, y'know.

MARGE wheels on him.

MARGE

You think I knew there were boys there!? You try raising a teenager alone.

Then she and the girl are gone. THOMPSON glares at PARKER.

LT THOMPSON

(low to PARKER)

See they get home okay.

PARKER shoves his hands in his pockets. ON HIS FACE we

FADE TO BLACK

FADE UP ON MARGE SIMSON opening a new bottle of gin, pouring herself a careful shot, drinking it, then chasing it with coffee. Nearby a TV drones the morning news. We can't yet see the SCREEN.

TV NEWSCASTER (OS/FILTER)

In the headlines this morning -- a local teenage girl was brutally murdered during an all-night party.

MARGE TURNS, startled, seeing NANCY coming downstairs.

The girl looks a little better than she did in the Police Station, but her eyes are still red-rimmed, and a vacant stress masks her face. She looks to the TV. Stops.

TV NEWSCASTER (CONTD)

Police say the victim, fifteen-year-old Christina Grey, had quarrelled earlier with her boyfriend, Rod Lane, a punk rocker with a history of delinquency. Lane is now the subject of a city-wide manhunt. According to --

39A. The TV PICTURE has begun featuring a HANDHELD NEWSREEL SHOT of a dark rubber BODY BAG being carried to a CORONER'S VAN. Just before the thing is lifted inside, TINA'S bloodied, white ARM slips from its zippered side and lolls into the dark night air. A man rudely shoves it back inside and pulls the zipper up the rest of the way.

39B. WIDER -- as NANCY pales visible. MARGE darts to the TV and slaps it off, then turning to NANCY. She looks at the girl a moment, then goes to her and hugs her.

MARGE

(kind)

Where you think you're going?

NANCY

School.

MARGE

I could hear you tossing and turning all night, kiddo. You've no business going to school.

NANCY pulls away, determined.

NANCY

I gotta go to school, Mom.
Please. Otherwise I'll just sit up there and go crazy or something.

MARGE studies her face a moment.

MARGE

Did you sleep?

NANCY

I'll sleep in study hall, promise.

I'd rather keep busy, you know?

She absently drains the woman's coffee cup -- then pecks her cheek.

MARGE

Right home after.

NANCY (cont'd)

Right home after. See you.

MARGE watches the girl disappear outside, then lights a cigarette from the one already burning in her fingers.

40. EXT. STREET. DAY. 40.

MUSIC slips back in, subtle but tense as we TRACK with NANCY as she walks alone down a sidewalk edged with thick flowering Oleander. She cocks her head, puzzled, as if sensing something. MUSIC mounts. NANCY looks across the street.

40A. REVERSE IN HER POV. A MAN is over there in dark clothes, reading a newspaper, but really watching her. 40A.

40B. NANCY shrugs and continues on, then stops and looks back again. 40B.

40C. IN HER POV we SEE the MAN is gone. 40C.

40D. Next moment -- with a MUSIC STING -- a BLOODIED HAND jumps out from the opposite direction, clamps over NANCY'S mouth and drags her into the bushes. 40D.

41. EXT. BUSHES. DAY. 41.

NANCY struggles, twisting against the powerful assailant.

A WIDER ANGLE REVEALS ROD LANE -- barefoot, clad only in jeans and leather jacket, still caked with dark blood. The rest of his skin is pale as a ghost's.

ROD

I'm not gonna hurt you.

He releases her warily. NANCY makes no move to run or scream, even though several STUDENTS pass on the nearby sidewalk. This reassures ROD just a little.

ROD

Your old man thinks I did it, don't he?

NANCY

He doesn't know you.
(eyeing the blood)
Couldn't you change?

ROD

The cops were all over my house.
(shivers)
They'll kill me for sure.

NANCY

Nobody's gonna kill you.

He runs his hands down his face, trying to believe that. The two study each other.

ROD

I never touched her.

NANCY

You were screaming like crazy.

NANCY says this without accusation, just cool observation.

ROD

Someone else was there.

NANCY

The door was locked from your side.

ROD grabs her hard. His muscular body tenses.

ROD

Don't look at me like I'm some kind of fucking fruitcake or something, I'm warning you.

VOICE (O.S.)

Morning, Mr. Lane.

42. The boy jerks around. NANCY's father, his .38 leveled right at 42.
ROD's belly, eases out of the bushes.

LT THOMPSON

Now just step away from her, son.
Like your ass depended on it.
I'm warning you.

ROD backs away, looking once at NANCY with a look of terrible sadness. Then he dives out of the bushes and runs like hell.

THOMPSON snaps his revolver to fire -- but instinctively NANCY jumps between --

NANCY

No!

THOMPSON jerks his gun into the air, furious.

THOMPSON

Jesus -- are you crazy!?

He plunges past the girl.

42A. EXT. STREET. DAY.

42A.

ROD races like a frightened animal across the lawns -- but is soon cut off by the PLANE CLOTHESMAN NANCY saw watching her before -- and then TWO UNIFORMED POLICEMAN, who close from another angle. The chase is short and pitifully off-balance, and ROD is soon wrestled to the ground. Next moment one of the cops is holding ROD'S knife into the air for THOMPSON to see. THOMPSON looks at NANCY, as if to say 'I told you.' Background, ROD'S SHOUTS can be heard as he's shoved into a SQUAD CAR.

ROD (O.S.)

I didn't do it -- !

(fading)

I didn't kill her, Nancy!

The car's door slams and ROD is gone. NANCY turns to her father, livid.

NANCY

You used me, daddy!

LT THOMPSON

(exasperated)

What the hell you doing going to school today, anyway -- your mother told me you didn't even sleep last night!

NANCY spins angrily and walks away.

LT THOMPSON

Nancy! Hey!

But she just keeps going.

FADE TO BLACK

43. INT. CLASSROOM. DAY.

43.

FADE UP ON an ENGLISH TEACHER and CLASS, NANCY among the kids, trying to concentrate.

TEACHER

According to Shakespeare, there was something operating in Nature, perhaps inside human nature itself, that was rotten -- a canker, as he put it.

The TEACHER'S eyes glance across the room. ANGLE ON NANCY; yawning but listening.

TEACHER (CONTD)

Of course Hamlet's response to this, and to his mother's lies, was to continually probe and dig -- just like the gravediggers -- always trying to get beneath the surface. The same was true in a different way in Julius Caesar.
Jon, go ahead...

She nods to a SURFER who's been waiting uncomfortably in front of the class. He squints at his book and begins, the recitation a struggle between baked and salted brain and the poetry of the Bard.

SURFER

(reading aloud)

Uh, In the most high and palmy state of Rome...

WISEGUY STUDENT (O.S.)

California's the most high and palmy state, man.

The SURFER halts with a grin; KIDS snicker.

ENGLISH TEACHER

Can it.

She glares them back into silence. The SURFER starts over, as we CUT TO NANCY.

She's nodding off now, barely able to keep her eyes open in the warm, close boredom of the classroom.

SURFER (O.S.)

In the most high and palmy state of Rome, a little ere the mightiest Julius fell...

(NANCY's head pitches forward; she jerks it back up, barely awake)

The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead did squeak and gibber in the Roman street...

weight. By the time her cheek's against the desk, the SURFER'S VOICE is ECHOED and DISTANT. But another voice, TINA'S, is very near, very much present. A sad, thin plaint.

TINA (O.S.)

Nancy.

NANCY gives a start. Her eyes lock onto something.

45. REVERSE. TILTED SIDEWAYS, IN HER HEAD'S POV, we look straight out through the open doorway of the classroom into the hall. There, standing in a black pool of fluid, is a full-sized rubber body bag. Dark red and yellow. Weaving slightly, the merest suggesting of movement within it. 45.
46. BACK ON NANCY, sitting upright, wiping the sleep from her eyes, shaking her head like a punchy prozeffighter. She looks back out the door. 46.
47. REVERSE IN 'NORMAL' POV -- the hallway is empty. But there's a dark smear on its floor tiles. 47.
48. NANCY looks nervously towards the rest of the class. No one else has noticed a thing outside the door. All are dumbly spellbound by the SURFER, who now recites like a deep-voiced robot, his face wreathed by white hair. 48.

SURFER

O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams...

49. ANGLE BACK ON NANCY. She slips from her seat, eye warily on the teacher and class. But no one turns as she disappears through the doorway. 49.
50. INT. SCHOOL HALLWAY. DAY. 50.

NANCY turns and looks both directions. No sign of anybody.

TINA (O.S.)

(distant)

Nancy.

NANCY wheels and sees the bag, prone on the tiles at the far end of the hall, at the end of a long snail's trail of slime. A pale hand thrusts out of it. A moment later, as if pulled by invisible gravity, the bag slides out of sight into an intersecting corridor.

NANCY

Tina!

NANCY starts running for it.

51. ANGLE AT THE CORNER as NANCY races blindly around the turn and smashes straight into a BODY lunging at her from the opposite direction! Both go down. 51.

52. ANGLE AT THE FLOOR. A dazed freshman HALLGUARD cranks herself up on one elbow. She wears a plastic plaque on her red and yellow sweater that reads 'Hall Guard'. Her nose is bleeding from the impact. 52.

HALLGUARD

Y-you're not supposed to run.
W-where's your pass -- you got a pass?

NANCY leaps up --

NANCY

Screw your stupid pass!

53. She turns -- sees the body bag halfway down this darker, narrower hall, upright again. But just as she sees it, it tips and pitches headlong through a doorway -- like some godawful rotten tree finally timbering down. She can hear the sickening CRUNCHING of it falling down a long flight of stairs. 53.

NANCY runs for it again. The HALLGUARD staggers up FOREGROUND, bleeding profusely from her eyes and ears.

HALLGUARD

Hey, no running in the halls!

The HALLGUARD raises her hand and we see it's tipped with long metal spikes.

REVERSE ANGLE AT THE DOOR as NANCY runs up. NANCY turns to check out the HALLGUARD. She's vanished. NANCY turns and looks down through the open door. The MUSIC sweeps through a strange, brooding movement of strings, mounting towards the NIGHTMARE THEME.

54. INT. A STAIRWELL. 54.

NANCY edges into the stairwell and looks down. Looks like there's a fire somewhere down there, from the way the orange light dances. But there's only a low WHITE NOISE.

NANCY

Tina?

No answer. NANCY starts down the stairs.

55. INT. BOILER ROOM. DAY. 55.

NANCY comes off the stairs into a dank boiler room. The smear trail is there. It runs behind a cracking, red-hot boiler the size of a diesel locomotive. Everything about the place feels dreadfully wrong, and the MUSIC is deep into the NIGHTMARE THEME when it pauses.

TIGHT ON NANCY. Slow terror moves into her face. There's a low, sinister GIGGLE.

56. REVERSE IN HER POV -- we see a tangle of pipes, shadows, and the tainted fire of the huge boiler. Then from behind this, deeply shadowed but still identifiable, steps TINA's KILLER. The same filthy red and yellow sweater and slouch hat, the same melted face twisting into a smile, the same GARBLED LAUGH as he slides the long blades from beneath his shirt and fans them on the ends of his bony fingers. 56.

NANCY

Who are you?

MAN

Gonna get you.

57. The leering MAN brings the bloodied scalpel-fingernails across his own chest, splitting a nipple. Yellow fluid pours out. MAGGOTS and WORMS. 57.

NANCY forgets the question -- jerks around and flees in blind panic into the first opening she sees -- a dark pipe tunnel.

58. INT. PIPE TUNNEL. 58.

ANGLE IN THE NARROW PASSAGEWAY. In the BACKGROUND the killer shambles towards her; FOREGROUND NANCY breaks into a run.

The killer sprints -- NANCY tears ahead into darkness.

She flees deeper and deeper into the labyrinth of steaming, SIZZLING pipes, squeezing through smaller and smaller openings. The killer is just yards behind her, and soon she's trapped, just as TINA was before her.

She presses her back to the wet bricks. There's no hope of fighting him off, for NANCY is not as strong as TINA. But she is smart as hell, and thinking even in this nightmare. So by the time the creep has raised his knives to strike, NANCY has realized something. She wheels and shoves her arm against one of the scalding steam pipes. In the sme split second we HEAR her flesh scald, we

CUT TO:

59. INT. ENGLISH CLASS. DAY. 59.

NANCY lurches up SCREAMING, arm raised to ward off the invisible blow, books clattering to the floor -- other GIRLS nearby SCREAM in surprise as she stumbles over them. Then she stops, confused and groggy from the nightmare.

WIDER ANGLE. EVERYBODY is staring at NANCY as if she's gone mad. The ENGLISH TEACHER rushes over, herself frightened by the terror in the girl's eyes.

TEACHER

Okay -- Okay, Thompson! Everything's all right now -- Nancy!.

60. NANCY jerks around with panicked eyes, expecting the killer to leap from any direction. But there's only the sea of staring eyes. 60.

NANCY begins methodically picking up her books.

TEACHER

I'll call your mother.

NANCY

No! No, really, I'm fine. I'll go straight home. I'm okay.

She marches for the door.

TEACHER

You'll need a hall pass!

But the girl's gone.

61. EXT. THE SCHOOL. DAY. 61.

NANCY walks out of the building, shaken. Then she pauses at one of the big pine trees out front, stops and rests her head against its bark, teeth set. NANCY starts to shake, and next second she's sobbing like a broken-hearted, frightened child. OMIT 61A.

OMIT 61A.

62. But she shakes herself silent. Wipes the tears away with a slash of sleeve. She rubs her arm absently, lost in thought, then reacts in surprise and pain. She lifts her arm and stares at the spot she's touched. 62.

INSERT ON HER ARM and the BURN there; about the size and shape of a half-dollar.

WIDER ON NANCY. Utterly, chillingly confused.

62A. TINA, against the tree inches from NANCY, (SC 7) -- turns to her and says --

TINA

Couldn't get back to sleep at all.

(beat)

What you dream?

63. EXT. A BUSY STREET. DAY. 63.

NANCY is walking quickly, head erect, jaw set. Then she enters her father's Police Station.

64. INT. VAN NUYS POLICE STATION. DAY. 64.

NANCY crosses directly to the GARCIA.

NANCY

My dad here?

GARCIA looks up from his paperwork.

SERGEANT GARCIA

Lieutenant.

LT THOMPSON emerges from another room, uneasy to see NANCY.

LT THOMPSON

Decide to take a day off after all?

NANCY

Dad, I want to see Rod Lane.

THOMPSON doesn't miss a beat.

LT THOMPSON

Only family allowed, Nancy. You know the drill.

NANCY

Just want to talk to him a second.

LT THOMPSON

He's dangerous.

NANCY

You don't know he did it.

LT THOMPSON

No, I know, thanks to your own testimony, that he was locked in a room with a girl who went in alive and came out in a rubber bag.

NANCY flinches; her father shows the first signs of color in his neck.

NANCY

I just want to talk to him.

(beat, lower)

Please, Dad.

THOMPSON shifts almost imperceptibly towards GARCIA, then turns back to NANCY.

LT THOMPSON

Make it fast.

DISSOLVE TO:

65. INT. CELL AREA. DAY.

65.

A GUARD exits pushing a cart of food trays. NANCY waits warily until he's gone, then looks back to ROD LANE. ROD looks more like a captured coyote than a human; haggard, ribbed, expecting poisoned bait. His hair is wet, his clothes are borrowed jeans and work shirt.

NANCY

(low)

And then what happened?

ROD

I told you.

(reluctantly)

It was dark, but I'm sure there was someone else IN there, under the covers with her.

NANCY reacts.

NANCY

How could somebody get under the covers with you guys without you knowing it?

ROD

How the fuck do I know?

(beat)

I don't expect you to believe me.

NANCY studies his encrypted eyes. Surprisingly, she looks like she just might believe him. She leans closer with a new thought.

NANCY

What he look like? You get a look at him?

He looks away.

ROD

No.

NANCY

Well then how can you say

ROD

Because somebody cut her. While
I watched.

Now the place is so quiet you can hear heartbeats.

NANCY

Somebody cut her while you watched and you don't know what he looked like?

ROD smiles an insane smile, stuck with a reality no one will buy.

ROD

You couldn't see the fucker.
You could just see the cuts happening, all at once.

NANCY gives a twitch.

NANCY

What you mean 'all at once'?

ROD

(low)

I mean, it was as if there were four razors cutting her at the same time. But invisible razors.
She just... opened up...

By now he's picking at a clot of dark blood on his jacket, as if it was a scab on his own body. Then he catches NANCY watching and turns away to the back of the cell. He smashes his fist into the wall -- bone-crushing blows that scare the wits out of NANCY.

NANCY

Rod!

He stops, and his fist is dripping blood as he says in a small,
sad voice.

ROD

I probably could've saved her if I'd moved sooner... But I thought it was just another nightmare, like the one I had the night before.

(beat)

There... was this guy who had knives for fingers...

CLOSE ON NANCY, unable to swallow the gorge rising in her throat. ROD turns to her, and to his surprise she's ashen.

ROD (CONTD)

Do you think I did it?

NANCY

No.

FADE TO BLACK

66. EXT. ELM STREET / NANCY'S HOME. NIGHT.

66.

FADE UP ON ESTABLISHING SHOT as a spooky WIND sets a DOG BARKING down the block. A CAR goes by, then this pleasant residential street falls into silence. CAMERA has MOVED IN on NANCY's well-tended two-story home.

67. INT. NANCY'S KITCHEN. NIGHT.

67.

The house is in shadow. Alone, MARGE scrapes the last of the evening's dishes and slips them into the dishwasher. Neither she nor her daughter has touched the food. But MARGE is well into a bottle of gin; her appetite for that is growing, right along with her dread. She turns and looks up the stairs, calling.

MARGE

Nancy, don't fall asleep in there.

NANCY (OS)

I won't.

MARGE

Get into bed.

68. INT. UPSTAIRS BATHROOM. NIGHT.

68.

NANCY

I will.

NANCY'S in the tub, so drowsy she can hardly rinse without falling asleep. The water in the tub is opaque with suds. Luxurious.

CLOSER ANGLE, AT WATER LEVEL ON NANCY. Her eyes droop. She slides closer to the surface of the water, letting its heat sooth her nerves. Her eyes stare straight up, glazed; her breathing deepens.

REVERSE, across to her legs, crooked, one knee on each side of the tub. There's a ripple in the water between. Then something tiny and shiny breaks the surface between them. It pops up with a slithering MUSIC CUE and catches a sliver of light. Then it begins to rise.

Higher and higher it rises, soon accompanied by another, then two more shining, gleaming blades, and then the full glove and dark hairy hand and then the wrist and arm, straight up light an evil sapling between the girl's knees, the knives blooming into a bright flower of razor sharp steel in the air, moving over the girl's belly. The hand rears back, the claws arch to strike.

MARGE (OS/APPROACHING)

Nancy?

MARGE raps on the door. The instant she does NANCY jerks up, opening her eyes groggily. The dark wet arm, hand and knives are gone.

NANCY

What?

MARGE (OS)

(through the door)

You're not falling asleep, are you? You could drown,
you know.

NANCY

Mother, for petesakes.

MARGE (OS)

It happens all the time.

(brighter)

I've got some warm milk all ready for you. Why don't you jump into bed?

(fading)

I'm gonna turn on your electric blanket, too. C'mon, now.

(then she's gone into another room)

NANCY

(low)

Warm milk. Gross.

She slides down to water level again, and sings softly, thoughtfully to herself.

NANCY (CONTD)

One, two, Freddie's coming for you, three four, better lock your door, five six, grab your crucifix, seven eight gonna stay up late, nine ten, never sleep again...

The next instant she's jerked with incredible violence straight down beneath the surface of the tub -- as if the bottom had suddenly dropped out and she was in a bottomless well!

68A. EXT. UNDERWATER SHOT. NIGHT. 68A.

LOOKING UP PAST HER ANKLES we SEE NANCY pulled sharply down into really deep water, the dim light of the surface and bathroom beyond receding with each yank. And yet she somehow flails and gasps and struggles back towards the surface, managing by pure panic to break the surface with her hands!

68B. INT. HALLWAY OUTSIDE BATHROOM. 68B.

MARGE rushes to the door and listens, alarmed at the wild SPLASHING audible through the locked door.

MARGE

Nancy! NANCY!

68C. EXT. UNDERWATER SHOT. NIGHT. 68C.

MARGE'S VOICE reaches to the girl, who thrusts up through main force and breaks the surface with her head and shoulders.

68D. INT. BATHTUB. 68D.

Gasping and choking, NANCY breaks the surface of her bathwater, like a drowning sailer getting one last chance. Her mother's VOICE booms over her, ECHOED and frantic -- and the loud BANGING on the door finally opens her eyes. She turns and calls gasping to her mother --

NANCY

Mommy!

REVERSE ON THE DOOR -- as MARGE, using the old hangar through the doorhandle truck, makes it into the room. She rushes across to the tub. NANCY is staggering up in the bathwater, again with solid porcelain beneath her feet.

MARGE

I told you! Hundreds of people a year drown like that!

The mother throws a towel around the gasping girl, helps her from the tub and begins drying her like a child. NANCY looks like she's likes paralyzed with some sort of weird dread.

MARGE

You okay?

NANCY

Great

MARGE

(not believing it for a minute)

To bed with you, c'mon.

MARGE rushes out to get the room ready. NANCY turns and looks at herself in the cabinet mirror, then opens the medicine chest and begins a quick, furtive search.

CLOSER as she takes out the box of No Doz and slips it into her robe.

OMIT SCS. 69 & 70-----

OMIT SCS. 69 & 70

71. INT. HALLWAY. NIGHT.

71.

NANCY emerges from the bathroom yawning. MARGE follows as the girl plods obediently to her room.

MARGE

No television, forget the homework, no phone calls.

NANCY

No, Mother. Yes, Mother.
No, Mother.

72. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

72.

MARGE

And no school tomorrow, either.
you take a little vacation, relax and rest for a change.

NANCY

Yes, Mother. G'night.

MARGE offers a smile, and a little yellow pill.

MARGE

Take this, it'll help you sleep.

NANCY

Right.

NANCY pops it in her mouth and swallows obediently. MARGE leans to her with a kiss.

MARGE

Sleep tight, don't let the bedbugs bite.

MARGE goes out, relieved. NANCY closes the door, leans against it and spits the pill into her hand. She tosses it straight out her window and takes a NoDoz.

FADE TO BLACK

73. OMIT OMIT 73.

74. FADE UP ON INSERT OF TELEVISION SCREEN. 74.

A MONSTER MOVIE in BLACK AND WHITE. NO SOUND from the set.

75. PULL BACK to REVEAL NANCY propped up in bed, furtively watching. Or 75. is she just thinking? A bedside CLOCK reads 12:45 pm.

The girl YAWNS. She shakes herself violently and sits up straighter, forcing herself to concentrate on the movie.

75A. ON THE TELEVISION SCREEN. A DIVER struggles to keep facing a 75A. large circling shark.

75B. ON NANCY. Her eyes droop shut -- then she jerks awake, rattling 75B. her head as if it were a radio drifting off station. She tumbles out of bed, throws open the window and takes a deep breath of the cool night air.

76. EXT. NANCY'S HOUSE AND STREET. NIGHT. 76.

HIGH ANGLE, AT SECOND-STORY LEVEL. NANCY looks directly across the street to a lighted, open window. Its curtains, sucked out and waving in the night breeze, give the only motion to the deserted street.

Then someone pitches out of the dark at her. NANCY gives a YELP
-- then clamps her hand over her mouth as she recognizes GLEN, balanced precariously on the rose trellis outside her window.

GLEN
Sorry! Saw your light on.
Thought I'd see how you were.

She gets herself together, barely.

NANCY
Sometimes I wish you didn't live right across the street.

GLEN
Shut up and let me in. You ever stand on a rose trellis in your bare feet?

76A. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT. 76A.

NANCY looks over her shoulder to make sure her mother hasn't heard. GLEN's already through her window and planted on her bed. NANCY points to a chair.

NANCY

If you don't mind.

GLEN crosses to the chair and plops down.

GLEN

So. I heard you freaked out in English class today.

There's no maliciousness in his voice, and the familiar frankness is actually comforting to NANCY.

NANCY

Guess I did.

GLEN

Haven't slept, have you?

NANCY

Not really.

NANCY tries to smile, but can't fake it very well. GLEN looks her over.

GLEN

You look dead and rained on, if you want the ugly truth. And what you do to your arm?

She shrugs, trying to keep it casual.

NANCY

Burned myself in English class.

She hazards a look in the mirror, and her jaw drops.

NANCY

M'god, I look twenty years old.
(turning back to him)
You have any weird dreams last night?

GLEN

Slept like a rock.

NANCY

(pleased)
Well at least I have an objective wall to bounce this off.
(off)
You believe it's possible to dream about what's going to happen?

GLEN

No.

NANCY

You believe in the Boogey Man?

GLEN

One two, Freddie's coming for you? No. Rod killed Tina.
he's a fruitcake and you know it.

NANCY

You believe in anything?

GLEN

I believe in you, me, and Rock and Roll. And I'm not too sure about you lately.

NANCY thinks.

NANCY

Listen, I got a crazy favor to ask.

GLEN

Uh-oh...

NANCY

It's nothing too hard or anything.

(beat)

I'm just going to... LOOK for someone, and... I want you to be sort of a ...guard.
Okay?

GLEN makes the Twilight Zone sound.

NANCY

Okay?

GLEN

Okay, okay.

(beat)

I think.

She comes very close to him.

NANCY

You won't screw up, right? I mean, a whole lot might depend on it.

The way she's looking at him gives him the creeps.

GLEN

Okay, I won't screw up.

77. Nancy takes a deep breath. Then without another word turns off the TV and the light. 77.

GLEN (IN DARK)

Jesus, it's dark in here.

NANCY

Shhh. Now listen, here's what we're gonna do...

78. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

78.

FADE UP ON NANCY, still in her pajamas, walking through the shadowy streets near her home, listening for the slightest sound. We MOVE with her. But nothing, not even the dog barking earlier, is there now. NANCY peers into the darkness of lawns and trees behind her.

NANCY

(stage whisper)

You still there?

Across the street and a distance away, GLEN steps from behind a tree.

GLEN

Yeah. So?

NANCY

Just checking -- keep out of sight!

GLEN throws up his hands in exasperation and walks back out of sight. NANCY turns and looks down between the houses, deep into a dark alleyway. Then she forces herself to walk into it.

79. EXT. ALLEY. NIGHT.

79.

MOVING WITH HER as she makes herself go deeper and deeper into shadows. Each time she pauses and waits, the MUSIC grows more threatening and expectant. The feeling is of immense tension -- we're sure the killer will come screaming out on her at any second.

But he doesn't. In fact absolutely nothing happens, and NANCY emerges from the far end of the alley unscathed. The only thing strange is that she now finds her self looking across the mall to 80. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

80.

The Police Station. It takes her a little by surprise, it just seems to have appeared.

MUSIC creeps into the NIGHTMARE THEME as NANCY whispers hoarsely back down the dark alley.

NANCY (CONTD)

Still there?

81. EXT. ALLEY. NIGHT.

81.

We only HEAR the DISTANT VOICE, slightly ECHOED.

GLEN'S VOICE (OS)

(yawning)

Still here!

NANCY

On your toes, right?

NANCY stares into the dark trying to see him, but she can't. She turns back and makes up her mind to move without him in sight.

82. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

82.

MUSIC MOUNTS as we MOVE WITH NANCY across the lawns to the police station, creeping to the first lighted window she sees. It's a low, barred basement window, and NANCY reacts as soon as she looks through it.

83. INT. ROD'S CELL. NIGHT.

83.

NANCY'S POV down into ROD LANE's cell. The boy is on his rough cot, twitching in disturbed sleep. And a long SHADOW is sliding across the wall.

A big SHAPE appears in the shadowed corridor outside the boy's cell, and as IT walks closer NANCY can barely see it's the shambling, grimly scarred man with the filthy red and yellow sweater and strange slouch hat pulled across his brow. The KILLER from all of their nightmares.

And this giant shadow of a man passes through the bars of the cell, like so much evil Jello. Halfway through he pauses, turning to check over his shoulder. We see the bars clearly penetrating his body, going in his head, passing out his ankles. Then he turns back to ROD and moves forward, and within another heartbeat is beside the boy.

84. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

84.

NANCY draws back sharply, swallowing in terror. She looks behind her for help.

NANCY (CONTD)

Glen.

No answer.

NANCY (CONTD)

(louder)

Glen?!

The street is absolutely deserted. There is no motion, and no sound save one: the distant but unmistakeable sound of GLEN SNORING.

NANCY (CONTD)

GLEN!

A beat of silence after the shout's echoes die, then the steady, boyish SNORES again. NANCY swears under her breath and jerks back around, forcing herself to look again into ROD's cell.

85. INT. ROD'S CELL.

85.

IN HER POV -- the killer picks up ROD's bedsheet and tests it between his powerful hands. Without thinking, NANCY bangs against the glass.

NANCY (CONTD)

Rod! Look out!

The KILLER wheels around, locking eyes with NANCY. The girl goes white. The man's face is in the light, and it's horrible -- seething with hatred and a twisted, insane intelligence.

The hold of those eyes is only broken when ROD rolls up on an elbow with a deep, troubled GROAN. The instant ROD does this, the KILLER fades into the shadows in the cell. But even then his eyes hold on NANCY's until the last second he's visible.

ROD looks around the cell groggily, runs his fingers through his matted hair, then collapses back on his pillow. No matter how hard NANCY screams, ROD never once looks at the window. He just pulls the twisted covers about his shoulders and succumbs once more to sleep.

And now the bed sheet is no longer on the bed. The KILLER, materializing out of the shadow again, is holding it between his hands like a garrote. He looks up and leers at NANCY, then moves for ROD.

86. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

86.

ANGLE BACK ON NANCY. She pounds on the window, then turns in frustration and yells into the night.

NANCY

Glen!!

She turns back to the cell in desperation.

87. OMIT

OMIT 87.

88. INT. ROD'S CELL.

88.

IN NANCY'S POV we look into a cell that is quite deserted save for ROD. Sleeping peacefully.

89. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

89.

NANCY pulls back from the window, stunned.

NANCY

I swear...

Suddenly NANCY feels utterly exposed. She shivers, chilled and vulnerable to the bone in her thin night clothes. She can't move. It's as if some great nerve between her instincts and body had been severed. And she hears the SOUND behind her. A sort of filling-vibrating Scrrriitchh.

MUSIC sneaks in -- the unmistakeable NIGHTMARE THEME, creeping over her. NANCY forces herself, by sheer will, to look.

90. Ahead of her perhaps twenty-five feet, covered with a thick plastic body bag through which we can barely see her face, is TINA. Standing square in the middle of the street. A dark ooze of BLACK EELS roil out of its bottom, and at its top, the zipper CHATTERS down and the greenish-white face of TINA lolls out. She gestures, supplicating, her watery eyes desperate to convey some desperate message.

90.

The MUSIC FALLS TO A HUSH.

91. NANCY backs away, eyes streaming tears.

91.

NANCY

Glen, where are you! Wake up!
Glen!

DEEP RAGGED VOICE

I'm here.

NANCY twists around in horror at the same instant the KILLER grabs for her face with his knife-fingers! The girl instinctively pitches back, then scrambles up and runs like hell!

NANCY

Glen! Glen!!!

92. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

92.

MOVING WITH NANCY at full gallop, running blind. She crashes through a sawhorse into a new sidewalk, sinking into the wet cement over her ankles. The stuff sticks to her legs in long gluey globs and she can barely pull her feet loose.

The KILLER looms nearby, mocking her -- his scalpel claws gleaming in the streetlight. He just misses the girl as she wrenches free and flees again, now so winded she can only stagger.

MOVING WITH THEM. Time after time NANCY just barely manages to elude the shadowy form, leaping from his reach by inches and pouring on more steam. It's too close to even bother screaming now; and besides, that would take breath she doesn't have. The only SOUND is of RUNNING FOOTSTEPS, RASPING BREATH and the KNIFE-FINGERS WHISTLING through the air.

93. EXT. NANCY'S HOME. NIGHT. 93.

NANCY tears across her front lawn and into the open front door of her home, SLAMMING it with all her might. There's a tremendously satisfying CONCUSSION of wood against doorframe, and the LOCKS fall shut.

94. INT. NANCY'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT. 94.

NANCY

Glennn!!!

But her voice is garbled as if she's under water, and there's no answer. The only clue to Glen being there at all is his distant SNORING. Innocent. Persistent. Deep.

NANCY stops, breath in shreds, face smeared with dirt and tears.
Something is clawing the window in the dark of the kitchen.
NANCY looks and catches the MAN prying at the glass with his big knife-fingers, the sharp blades SIZZLING against the edges of the glass as they crack it away from the frame. NANCY runs upstairs in blind panic.

95. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT. 95.

NANCY darts into her unlit bedroom, slams the door and locks it.

Safe at last.

She listens at the door. Nothing. She crosses to her bed. Next second the KILLER dives through her window and seizes her in a shower of shattered glass!

NANCY twists and manages to grab the wrist of his knife hand with both of hers, barely keeping the blades from her throat.

The two fall backwards in a terrible, gasping struggle, crashing onto NANCY's bed. Her grip is broken -- the MAN stabs -- NANCY twists away, backed into a corner of bed and walls. Defenseless, she snatches a pillow up; the KILLER lashes out -- disemboweling the pilow and sending a great gush of feathers flying. NANCY dives for escape in a virtual blizzard.

The KILLER manages to snare her with his other hand, and the two crash across the bedside table to the floor, the table and all its contents cascading around them in a whiteout of feathers.

ANGLE AT FLOOR LEVEL -- CLOSE ON NANCY'S AND THE KILLER'S HEADS. The blades inch towards the girl's face -- the drool of the grizzled shadow with the horribly scarred face spills into her eyes. Feathers are everywhere; MUSIC is absolutely insane!

But just when the points of steel are less than an inch from her eyes, the old fashioned alarm clock thrown to the floor next to NANCY's head goes off with a jarring RINGGGGGGG!

96. Instantly the MUSIC STOPS. And a moment later the room is light. 96.

WIDER as NANCY reels up, blinded by the sudden light, SCREAMING AND FIGHTING on her bed.

ANGLE ON GLEN, lurching from his own sleep at the frightening noise. He discovers NANCY pressed in terror against her headboard, clutching a pillow like a drowning woman would a straw.

It's an intact pillow, and there isn't a feather in sight.

NANCY stares incredulously at GLEN, then around the room, untangling herself from her bedclothes. Wary and furious, her voice hoarse.

NANCY

Glen, you bastard...

The boy looks at his friend in groggy alarm. She's absolutely livid, more angry than he's ever seen her, and more strange.

GLEN

What I do?

He reaches for her -- she flattens against the wall, eyes hard, and terribly hurt, too.

NANCY

(low)

I asked you to do just one thing.
Just stay awake and watch me --
Just wake me if it looked like
I was having a bad dream.

(eyes wild)

But you. You shit -- what do you do -- you fall asleep!

She stops herself, wiping a bit of spittle off her lip, alarmed at how out of control she's become. And suddenly she breaks, sinking into her torn bedclothes and rubbing her head.

NANCY (CONTD)

(mostly to herself)

I must be going nuts...

MARGE (OS)

Nancy?

Her mother's door opens OS.

GLEN

Oh, shit.

NANCY composes her voice as best she can.

NANCY

Yes, mother?

MARGE's flip-flops approach outside the door. GLEN barrels out the window -- NANCY dives for the bed, jams off the light and disappears under the covers. MARGE, bleary eyed herself, opens the door and flicks on the light.

MARGE

(beat)

You okay?

NANCY

(weakly)

Yeah. Just had a little dream.
I'm falling right back to sleep.

MARGE

(beat)

Okay... You need anything, just call.

NANCY

Okay.

MARGE closes the door. NANCY immediately sits up and looks at the window. A single bone-white feather floats down in the moonlight. Then it's sucked outside and is gone.

97. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

97.

GLEN's CADILLAC CONVERTABLE careens into the parking lot and SCREECHES to a stop. GLEN and NANCY jump out and head for the station.

GLEN

You mind telling me what's going on?

NANCY's races into the station without answering.

GLEN (CONTD)

Oh, I see. That makes it all perfectly clear.

98. INT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

98.

NANCY goes straight to the SERGEANT's desk.

NANCY

Garcia, I want to see Rod Lane again.

GARCIA winces.

SGT GARCIA

I thought when I took the night shift I'd have peace and quiet for a change.

NANCY

It's urgent, we've gotta see Rod.

SGT GARCIA

It's three in the morning. Your mother know you're out this late?

NANCY

(faking it)

Of course -- look, at least go back and look at him. Just see if he's okay.

GARCIA glances at GLEN.

GLEN

(faking it)

We have reason to think there might be something weird going on.

LT THOMPSON (OS)

Oh, no argument on that.

NANCY jumps around at the sound of her father's voice. LT THOMPSON emerges from his office, rumped and yawning.

NANCY

Dad -- what you doing here?

LT THOMPSON

It so happens I work here, and there's an unsolved murder. I don't like unsolved murders, especially ones my daughter's mixed up in -- what are you doing here at this hour? You're

A Nightmare on Elm Street, by Wes Craven supposed to be getting some sleep.

GLEN

Listen, sir, this is serious.
Nancy had a nightmare about Rod being in danger, or something,
and so she thinks...

He trails off, loosing it under LT THOMPSON's glare. Besides, he doesn't know exactly what the hell's really going on himself.
GARCIA puts his beefy hand on NANCY's shoulder.

NANCY

I just want to see if he's okay!

SGT GARCIA

Take my word for it, Nancy. The guy's sleeping like a baby. He's not going anywhere.

99. INT. CELL BLOCK. NIGHT.

99.

ANGLE ON ROD in his cell. He's asleep, all right, but not safely so. His bedsheet has come alive. It twitches, pulsates, then snakes towards his throat.

ROD stirs, the sheet falls still; ROD slips into deeper sleep, and the sheet moves again, completing the noose around his neck!

100. INT. BOOKING ROOM. NIGHT.

100.

NANCY makes a move for the cell block --

NANCY

This isn't your average nightmare,
Daddy -- damn it!

The door's locked; she hauls on it in desperation.

LT THOMPSON

Now look, Nancy, don't push it. You've already rubbed my nose in sex, drugs and violence -- don't start throwing in insanity!

NANCY takes that one to heart. She wheels on him and pleads, her intensity sobering even to him.

NANCY

Just go back and check -- please!

The man takes a beat, then shrugs and nods towards SGT GARCIA.

LT THOMPSON

Okay, Garcia. What the hell.

SGT GARCIA

Right...

(feeling in his pockets)

Now where'd I put the key...

He mumbles backs towards his desk. MUSIC BUILDS as we HOLD ON NANCY'S FACE.

101. INT. ROD'S CELL. NIGHT.

101.

With a terrible SNAP ROD's sheet jerks tight around his neck. The startled teenager is hauled upright -- eyes popping, face purple. He claws at the sheet, but despite his strength he can't get his fingers between the noose and his windpipe. He's dragged backwards across the cot.

102. INT. BOOKING ROOM. NIGHT.

102.

GARCIA finally has the keys. Urged on by NANCY he fumbles with the lock.

103. INT. ROD'S CELL. NIGHT.

103.

ROD'S being dragged backwards, gasping and struggling in vain against the powerful pull -- right across his cell and up the wall, too. He clutches blindly at his throat at the far end of the sheet coils around the bars of the high window. Then there's a powerful wrench of the sheet, and ROD'S neck SNAPS. The kid's body sags lifeless.

104. ANGLE THROUGH THE BARS as NANCY, GLEN, LT THOMPSON and GARCIA appear in the corridor outside, the girl sprinting ahead.

104.

NANCY

Rod!

But it's too late; NANCY sinks back in horror as her father and GARCIA rush into the cell.

LT THOMPSON

Gimme a hand, dammit!

GLEN, pale as the sheet that's killed ROD, climbs to the bars and unties the knot. ROD slides down over the SERGEANT'S shoulders, limp as a marionette with its strings slashed.

SGT GARCIA

Goddamn loco kid -- he didn't have t'do that -- Madre dios!

They lay ROD at NANCY's feet; a strange Pieta. NANCY's father looks at her in spooked suspicion.

LT THOMPSON

How'd you know he was gonna do
this?

NANCY says nothing.

FADE TO BLACK

105. EXT. FOREST LAWN CEMETERY. DAY.

105.

BURN ON:

THE FOURTH DAY

FADE UP ON a stark afternoon. On a hill of sere grass overlooking the valley, the casket of ROD LANE is lowered into its grave.

A small group of FAMILY and FRIENDS watches soberly as the MINISTER raises his hand in benediction.

MINISTER

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust.
May God be with this young man's soul.

ON THE FACES of MARGE, LT THOMPSON, TINA'S MOTHER and ROD'S PARENTS. Just for a second or two, in looks too rapid for an outsider to even notice, these adults exchange looks. Furtive, quick glances that suggest an immense something that they all share, something beyond even this second death among their children. Then they are all staring ahead again, as if the others weren't even there.

MINISTER (CONTD OS)

His life and his death attest to the Scripture's warning that he who lives by the sword shall die by the sword.

ANGLE ON GLEN, watching --

NANCY, standing alone, not believing it for a minute.

MINISTER (CONTD OS)

But let us recall also our Lord's admonition that we 'Judge not, lest we be judged.' Let us attempt only to love. And may Rod Lane rest in peace.

NANCY

(quietly)
Amen to that much.

The mourners walk away from the grave, MARGE among them. She pauses near a MAN and two WOMEN in black -- TINA'S MOTHER, ROD'S PARENTS. They almost, it seems, speak. Then MARGE hurries on.

WE MOVE WITH HER as she's joined by LT THOMPSON. Both are worn and on edge. THOMPSON absently lights another cigarette, offering one to MARGE.

LT THOMPSON

How's Nancy doing?

MARGE

I don't think she's slept since Tina died.

(shakes her head)

She's always been a delicate kid.

THOMPSON lights her cigarette, attempting some sort of nonchalance.

LT THOMPSON

She's tougher than you think. Any idea how she knew Rod was gonna kill himself?

MARGE

No. All I know is, this reminds me too much of ten years ago.

THOMPSON blows a plume of smoke against the hard sky and looks away.

LT THOMPSON

Yeah. Well... Let's not start digging up bodies just because we're in a cemetery.

He gives her a look that could cut stone. MARGE toses down her cigarette and crosses to NANCY. The girl is simply staring off over the valley.

MARGE

(very gently)

Time to go home, baby.

She moves her away from the brink of the hill.

106. EXT. CEMETERY PARKING AREA. DAY.

106.

MARGE opens the door of the station wagon for NANCY. NANCY turns to them both, speaking in a still, small voice.

NANCY

The killer's still loose, you know.

She has a wild, Cassandra aspect that sends a chill right up MARGE'S spine.

LT THOMPSON

You saying somebody else killed
Tina? Who?

NANCY smiles a weird sort of smile.

NANCY

I don't know who he is. But he's burned, he wears a weird hat, a red and yellow sweater, real dirty, and he uses some sort of knives he's got made into a sort of... glove. Like giant fingernails.

As NANCY has described this monster from her dream, unseen by her, the faces of MARGE LT and THOMPSON have drained completely of color.

LT THOMPSON

(low, even, to MARGE)

I think you should keep Nancy at home a few days. 'Til she's really over the shock.

MARGE

I got something better...

(to NANCY)

I'm gonna get you help, baby.
So no one will threaten you any more.

She takes the girl by the arm and guides her into the car, locking the door from outside. NANCY never taking her eyes from her father's as the car bears her away.

FADE TO BLACK

BURN ON:

THE FIFTH DAY

107. EXT. UCLA SCHOOL OF MEDICINE. DAY.

107.

FADE UP ON UCLA'S WESTWOOD CAMPUS and PAN TO SIGN:

UCLA SCHOOL OF MEDICINE INSTITUTE FOR THE STUDY OF SLEEP DISORDERS

108. INT. A LABORATORY SLEEPING CHAMBER.

108.

A NURSE applies sencers to the head, breast, arms, and fingers of NANCY THOMPSON. The girl is lying on a simple broad cot, in her pajamas. The room is subdued in color and holds only this single bed. A large mirror set into one wall hides an observation room beyond.

NANCY

But I just don't feel... ready to sleep yet. Please, do I have to?

109. WIDER, REVEALING DR SAMUEL KING, a young, curly-haired internist; 109. intelligent and wry. He treats NANCY at all times like a young adult, never patronizing. He winks as the NURSE finishes.

DR KING

Don't worry, you're not gonna change into Bride of Frankenstein or anything.

NANCY manages a smile, but she's haggard and visibly thinner.
MARGE, background, looks downright distraught.

DR KING (CONTD)

Nancy have any severe childhood illnesses? Scarlet Fever?
High temperatures -- concussions?

MARGE

No, nothing.

NANCY

He means, did you ever drop me on my head.

The doctor and girl share a nervous laugh; MARGE doesn't even smile.

DR KING

Nightmares are expected after psychological trauma. Don't worry, they go away.

MARGE

I sure as hell hope so.

NANCY

I don't see why you couldn't just give me a pill to keep me from dreaming...

DR KING

Everyone's got to dream.
If you don't dream, you go...
(he drills his finger at his temple)

All set?

NANCY

No.

MARGE

They're just simple tests,
Nan. We'll both be right here.

DR KING

Look, I know it's been frightening, I know your dreams have seemed real. But... it's okay. Okay?

MARGE

Please, Nancy. Trust us.

The girls gauges her mother, the doctor, the situation very carefully. Then lowers her eyes.

NANCY

It's not you I don't trust.
It's...

(gives up)

Okay. Let's do it.

Greatly relieved, MARGE gives NANCY a goodnight kiss, then follows the doctor through a doorway near the mirror. As soon as her mother is out of sight, NANCY'S eyes drift to the mirror itself. In its reflection she sees herself looking back, alone on the bed.

DISSOLVE TO:

110. INT. THE OBSERVATION ROOM.

110.

MARGE and DR KING overlook NANCY's sleeping chamber through the one-way mirror. And KING monitors the girl even more closely with a bank of instruments -- a mass of glowing dials, graphs and meters. His manner with MARGE is slightly more sober.

DR KING

How long's this been going on?

MARGE

Since the murder. She was fine before that.

DR KING

Not to worry. No signs of pathology in Nancy's EEG or pulse rate. I'd guess what we've got is a normal young girl who just happens to have gone through

MARGE

It's just made her think...
her dreams are real...

KING adjusts a dial, watching the EKG like a hawk.

DR KING

Ever hear the old Buddhist tale about the King who dreamed he was a beggar who dreamed he was a king?

MARGE twitches. Then there's a slight alteration in the sound of the EKG. KING nods in satisfaction.

DR KING (CONTD)

Okay, good. She's asleep.

MARGE

(immensely relieved)

Thank God.

MUSIC RISES SOLEMNLY, MAJESTICALLY into a haunting transition as we

DISSOLVE TO

111. A MONTAGE OF SHOTS, of the EKG GRAPH, its inky needles calming, 111. of a METER tracing the quieting of NANCY's pulse, and of OTHER INSTRUMENTS, indicating life processes we can only guess. All smoothing out.

112. CLOSE ON NANCY on TV MONITOR, asleep like the child she is. 112.
Innocent.

MARGE lights a cigarette, angry at her helplessness.

MARGE

What the hell are dreams, anyway?

DR KING

Mysteries. Incredible body hookus pokus. Truth is we still don't know what they are or where they come from.
As for nightmares...

(leans closer)

Did you know that in the last three years twenty Philipino refugees in California died in the middle of nightmares?
Not from heart attacks, either.
They just died.

He gives a "Ah don' know" shrug. MARGE looks out into the sleeping room. NANCY is a motionless bundle in the middle of the bed.

113. ANGLE ON A NEEDLE on an EKG dipping to a lower reading. 113.

114. WIDER ANGLE -- the mother and DOCTOR watching. 114.

MARGE

What happened? That needle sank like a rock.

DR KING

(quietly)

She's entering deep sleep now.
Heart rate's a little high due to anxiety, but otherwise she's nicely relaxed. All normal.
She could dream at any time now.

(beat)

Right now she's like a diver on the bottom of an ocean no one's mapped yet. Waiting to see what shows up.

115. INT. THE SLEEPING ROOM. 115.

We can see NANCY drift from the initial stage, over the brink into deep sleep. Her hair falls into her eyes; her face relaxes; her shoulders curl round her like comforters. THE MUSIC DEEPENS, and begins to hint at the tones of the NIGHTMARE THEME.

116. INT. CONTROL ROOM. DAY. 116.

DR KING and MARGE watch the instruments' every move.

One of the machines begins a slight CHIRPING. KING scans it, liking what he sees.

DR KING

Okay, she's started to dream.

He leans forward in his chair, like a pilot starting an instrument approach. MARGE THOMPSON licks her dry lips, fighting a turn of nausea.

MARGE

How can you tell?

DR KING

R.E.M.'s. Rapid eye movements.
The eyes follow the dream -- their movement picks up on this --

He prods a dial with his pencil and scribbles the time on a note pad.

DR KING (CONTD)

Beta Waves are slowing, too.
She's dreaming, all right.
A good one, too.

MARGE watches the TV MONITOR. It's in extra-close on NANCY's eyes -- and they're darting beneath the lids, reacting to events lost behind a skein of flesh and neurons.

KING points to a moving graph. A needle's begun waving lazily between plus and minus three. The DOCTOR nods, assured.

DR KING (CONTD)

Typical dream parameter. A nightmare, now, would be plus or minus five or six; she's just around three point --

He stops. Outside, visible through the glass, NANCY twists around. Eyes still closed, she's nevertheless holding her head in the attitude of prey listening to the first faint sound of the predator's approach.

MARGE looks from her daughter to the DOCTOR, color draining from her face.

MARGE

What the hell's this? She awake or asleep?

The needle of the graph gives a jagged pitch up, plunges, then surges well above the eight mark. A strange MUSIC CUE -- dissonant and threatening, creeps in -- the NIGHTMARE THEME slurred into awful minors and weird dissonance. KING stares at the gauge in disbelief, rapping his finger on its glass.

DR KING

Can't be. It never gets this high...

The needle swings even higher, behind.

DR KING (CONTD)

Jesus H. Christ.

He's cut off by the high-pitched KEENING of the girl, the SOUND cutting through the double thickness of the glass like a laser. A warning BEEPER has begun, the instruments light up like a Christmas tree -- and outside in the sleeping room, NANCY is contorting as if shot through with a thousand volts. KING knocks over his chair in his sprint for the door.

The DOCTOR and MARGE come in on the run -- NANCY's flailing and screaming as if the devil himself were after her. KING grabs her to shake her awake;

ANGLE ON NANCY (eyes open) -- looking in terror -- SOUND ECHOED STRANGELY.

IN HER POV -- dressed in KING'S clothes -- the horribly scarred MAN reaches out.

WIDER -- (NANCY'S eyes closed in sleep) as the girl's fist shoots out with incredible force and knocks DR KING flying!

The NURSE and MARGE both descend on her -- and again in her SLEEPING POV we see the MAN stagger for her.

WIDER ON NANCY -- (still in her nightmare) -- fighting like a tiger with both MARGE and the NURSE -- sending the NURSE sprawling -- leaving MARGE hanging on for dear life.

ANGLE on the stunned DOCTOR fumbling with a hyperdermic needle, spilling most of the stuff on himself with his shaking hands -- the SCREAMS AND CURSES of NANCY are deafening and worthy of a stevador fighting off his worst enemy. Stranger still, her hair is electrified, standing on end and greying before their very eyes!

MARGE screams at the top of her lungs.

MARGE

NANCY!!! IT'S MOM -- NANCY!!!!

Some deep bolt of psychic power smacks through the girl, and her eyes flap open -- they're glazed with terror and fury, but open. NANCY's awake.

She stares around like a cornered animal in the middle of the bed, her purple face gasping out gut-wrenching SOBS. The NURSE and MARGE dare to go back in and hold the sweat-drenched girl as DR KING comes for her with the needle.

DR KING

Now, this is just going to let you relax and sleep, Nan --

With incredible swiftness, NANCY backhands the hypodermic into a far wall, shattering it into a million pieces.

NANCY

No. That's enough sleep.

Her eyes are windows straight into white fire as she locks into KING'S face. He dabs his split lip, swallowing painfully.

DR KING

Okay, kid. Okay. Fair enough.

He holds out his hand. NANCY at last takes it, and sags back into her pillow, exhausted. Then KING comes up with blood on his hand.

He stares at it, dumbfounded, then at the girl. Across her left forearm, a deep gash is bleeding freely, as if made by a very sharp instrument.

MARGE

Oh my god, oh my god...

DR KING

(to the NURSE)

Get the kit!

The NURSE scrambles away as the DOCTOR claps his hand over the wounds. He looks into NANCY's face. What he sees frightens him even more: NANCY'S haunted, ghost-like eyes turn from him to her mother, and a terrible, chilling smile opens across NANCY's white lips.

NANCY

You believe this?

She pulls her free arm from beneath the sheets and reveals a strange hat, filthy and worn -- the KILLER'S hat. The sight of it frightens MARGE more than anything that's come before.

MARGE

(deathly pale)

Where the hell did you get that?

NANCY fixes her with X-ray eyes.

NANCY

I grabbed it off his head.

MARGE stares at the hat as if it held her whole future, and her future was a horror.

FADE TO BLACK

118. EXT. NANCY'S HOUSE. DAY.

118.

BURN ON

THE SIXTH DAY

FADE UP ON NANCY'S HOUSE, early morning.

119. INT. NANCY'S KITCHEN. DAY.

119.

MARGE is on the telephone, the dirty hat in her hand. Nearby is a nearly empty bottle of gin.

MARGE

She said she snatched it off his head in a dream.

(listens)

No, I'm not crazy, I've got the damn thing in my hand!

(listens)

I know we did, we all...

(hears NANCY approaching)

Gotta go.

She hangs up and stuffs the hat and bottle into a drawer, screening the action with her body. NANCY enters.

By now the girl has an extraordinary look. Her hair is ashen, her skin translucent, and eyes dark-ringed. Her right forearm is heavily bandaged over the slashes. In short, instead of the girl next door, we now could be looking at the lunatic from the next cell. MARGE, though she does her best to hide it, is downright frightened of her.

MARGE (CONTD)

You didn't sleep, did you?
The doctor says you have to sleep or you'll --

NANCY pours herself a cup of black coffee.

NANCY

Go even crazier?

MARGE

I don't think you're going crazy -- and stop drinking that damn coffee!

NANCY

Did you ask Daddy to have the hat examined?

MARGE

I threw that filthy thing away --
I don't know what you're trying to prove with it, but --

NANCY comes closer, her eyes shining with a new sureness.

NANCY

What I learned at the dream clinic, that's what I'm trying to prove. Rod didn't kill Tina, and he didn't hang himself.
It's this guy -- he's after us in our dreams.

MARGE

But that's just not reality,
Nancy!

120. Furious, NANCY janks open the drawer before MARGE can stop her and spills the bottle and hat onto the counter. 120.

MARGE grabs away the bottle protectively -- but it's the hat NANCY goes for. She waves it triumphantly -- demonically.

NANCY

It's real, Mamma. Feel it.

MARGE

(horrified)

Put that damned thing down!

MARGE lunges for it -- NANCY leaps out of reach --

NANCY

His name is even in it -- written right in here -- Fred Krueger -- Fred Krueger! You know who that is, Mamma? You better tell me, cause now he's after me!

MARGE swallows, then persists in the lie.

MARGE

Nancy, trust your mother for once -- you'll feel better as soon as you sleep!

NANCY shoots a hard humorless laugh, holding up her slashed arm.

NANCY

You call this feeling better?
Or should I grab a bottle and veg out with you -- avoid everything happening to me by just getting good and loaded --

MARGE slaps her hard.

MARGE

(losing it)

Fred Krueger can't be after you,
Nancy -- he's dead!

The room falls silent, both women staring at the other.

MARGE (CONTD)

(low, raw)

Fred Krueger is dead. Dead and gone. Believe me, I know. Now go to bed. I order you, go to bed.

MARGE snatches the hat away. NANCY is furious, betrayed.

NANCY

You knew about him all this time, and you've been acting like he was someone I made up!

MARGE pulls away.

MARGE

You're sick, Nancy. Imagining things. You need to sleep, it's as simple as that.

NANCY wheels and smashes MARGE'S bottle of gin in the sink.

NANCY

Screw sleep!

MARGE (CONTD)

Nancy!

But NANCY runs past her mother for the front door.

MARGE (CONTD)

Nancy -- it's only a nightmare!

NANCY turns in the doorway.

NANCY

That's enough!

On the door SLAM, we

CUT TO

121. EXT. SHAKESPEARE BRIDGE. DAY.

121.

ANGLE ON A NEIGHBORHOOD STREET. We hear GLEN'S VOICE and PAN UP to REVEAL NANCY and GLEN high above, two tiny figures walking across this strange white bridge in old Los Angeles. CAMERA BEGINS A SLOW ZOOM.

GLEN

Whenever I get nervous I eat.

NANCY

And if you can't do that, you sleep.

GLEN

Used to. Not anymore.

GLEN jams more Big Mack into his face. By now our ZOOM reveals he's attacking a huge bag of Big Macks, and furtively eyeing

NANCY. The girl's hair is startlingly white in the sunlight. She's reading a book, hardly paying attention.

GLEN (CONTD)

You ever read about the Balinese way of dreaming?

NANCY

No.

GLEN

They got a whole system they call 'dream skills'. So, if you have a nightmare, for instance like falling, right?

NANCY

Yeah.

GLEN

Instead of screaming and getting nuts, you say, okay, I'm gonna make up my mind that I fall into a magic world where I can get something special, like a poem or song.

(grins hopefully)

They get all their art literature from dreams. Just wake up and write it down. Dreamskills.

He stops, seeing the look on NANCY's face. Our ZOOM is much closer now, a wide medium, and still coming in on the kids.

NANCY

And what if they meet a monster in their dream? Then what?

GLEN

They turn their back on it.

(grins hopefully)

Takes away its energy, and it disappears.

NANCY

What happens if they don't do that?

GLEN

(shrugs)

I guess those people don't wake up to tell what happens.

NANCY

Great.

She leans over the railing, poking her face back into her book.

GLEN tips its cover and reads its title. OUR ZOOM IS STILL MOVING CLOSER, a MEDIUM CLOSE UP NOW.

GLEN

'Booby Traps and Improvised
Anti-personel Devices'!

NANCY

I found it at this neat survivalist bookstore on Ventura.

GLEN

(shocked)

Well what you reading it for?

OUR ZOOM LOCKS IN ON A TIGHT TWO ON THEIR FACES, NANCY's grimly determined.

NANCY

I'm into survival.

She walks away, OUT OF FRAME, leaving GLEN watching after her in astonishment.

GLEN

She's starting to scare the living shit out of me.

122. EXT. ELM STREET/NANCY'S HOME/EVENING

122.

ANGLE ACROSS NANCY'S "TREE LAWN", the grass between the sidewalk and the street, in the general direction of GLEN's home. This ANGLE doesn't quite reveal Nancy's house.

FOREGROUND is a utility truck in which a half dozen Hispanic WORKERS are loading tools, extension cords and hardware. They look like they've put in one hell of a hard day's work.

MARGE appears and hands a check to the FOREMAN of the crew, a white guy in clean coveralls and a gold chain. He scrutinizes it.

FOREMAN

And the other...

MARGE forks over a wad of cash, hands trembling in her half-drunk, helpless rage.

MARGE

Where's your mask and gun?

The FOREMAN counts the money swiftly.

FOREMAN

Don't bust my chops, lady.
If the city found out I put 'em in without inside releases
I'd loose my license.

He shoves the money in his pocket and climbs in his truck. MARGE
EXITS FRAME for her house.

PAN WITH THE TRUCK as it pulls away, THEN PICK UP NANCY, walking across the street from the corner. Alone. Dispirited. She lifts her eyes to her home and stops in her tracks.

NANCY

Oh gross...

123. WIDENING TO REVEAL THE HOUSE as NANCY walks across her front 123. yard. Every single window has been covered with brand-new ornamental iron bars, bolted deeply into their frames.

CLOSER, AT A WINDOW. NANCY gives a set of bars a powerful shake. They don't budge. Then girl looks up and sees even the window to her second floor bedroom is barred. And the rose trellis has been ripped down and heaped at the foundation in a tangle of wood, thorns and broken flowers.

124. INT. MARGE'S ROOM. EVENING. 124.

ANGLE ON THE DOORWAY INTO THE HALL. Easy listening MUSIC wafts through the air. NANCY appears in the doorway.

NANCY (OS)

Mom, what's with the bars!?

125. REVERSE to MARGE, propped against the headboard of her bed, a 125. crooked shadow in the gloom. A fresh bottle of Gin glints in her hand.

NANCY

Oh, Mom...

The girl crosses and reaches gently for the bottle. MARGE snatches it away.

MARGE

'S'mine...

She rocks the bottle in her arms.

NANCY

What's with the bars?

MARGE

S'curity.

NANCY sits on the bed, a surprising compassion entering her voice.

NANCY

Mom, I want to know what you know about Fred Krueger.

MARGE

Dead and gone.

NANCY

I want to know how, where -- if you don't tell me, I'm going to call daddy.

MARGE gives a laugh -- a rasping chachination from deep in her chest.

MARGE (CONTD)

Your father the cop. That's a good one.

(colder)

Forget Fred Krueger. You don't want to know, believe me.

NANCY

I do want to know. He's not dead and gone -- he's after me and if I sleep he'll get me!
I've got to know!

MARGE blinks at her a moment, then cracks a terrible, crooked grin.

MARGE

All right.

126. INT. NANCY'S CELLAR/NIGHT

126.

MARGE drags NANCY headlong down the cellar stairs and across the room with a crazy fury, twisting her down near the foundation.
And she thrusts her face so close to her daughter's that NANCY reels from the alcohol.

MARGE

You want to know who Fred Krueger was? He was a filthy child killer who got at least twenty kids, kids from our area, kids we all knew. It drove us all crazy when we didn't know who was doing it -- but it was even worse when they caught him.

MARGE draws herself up with a shake.

MARGE (CONTD)

Oh lawyers got fat and the judge got famous, but someone forgot to sign the search warrant in the right place, and Fred Krueger was free, just like that.

NANCY

So he's alive?

MARGE smiles grimly.

MARGE

He wouldn't've stopped. The bastard would've got more kids first chance he got -- they found nearly ten bodies in his boiler room as it was. But the law couldn't touch him.

At the mention of "boiler room", NANCY gives a shake. MARGE misses this, too busy taking a pull on the bottle that's never left her hand.

MARGE (CONTD)

What was needed were some private citizens willing to do what had to be done.

She reels slowly, looking at NANCY is defiance.

NANCY

(hushed)

What did you do, mother?

MARGE cradles the bottle.

MARGE

Bunch of us parents tracked him down after they let him go. Found him in an old boiler room, just like before. Saw him lying there in that caked red and yellow sweater he always wore, drunk an' asleep with his weird knives by his side...

NANCY

(dreading it)

Go on...

MARGE reaches over and taps a dusty two-gallon jug of gasoline near the lawn mower.

MARGE

We poured gasoline all around the place, left a trail out the

She mimes striking a match --

MARGE (CONTD)

WHOOSH!!!

Her arms shoot up and her eyes go wide with the light of that fire. There's awe in her voice. Then she drops her arms.

MARGE (CONTD)

(hushed, remembering)

But just when it seemed not even the devil could live in there any more -- he crashed out like a banshee, all on fire
-- swinging those fingerknives every which direction and screaming he... he was going to get us by killing all our kids...

She stops with a sudden quake and drinks for a long moment. But the intake doesn't hide the image. Her face bathed in tears, she looks at her daughter and shakes her head.

MARGE (CONTD)

There were all those men, Nancy, even your father, oh yes, even him. But none could do what had to be done -- Krueger rolling and screaming so loud the whole state could hear -- no one could take your father's gun and kill him good and proper except me.

She sweeps her hand across the air in a terrific slash, then stops, her hand shaking, her voice hoarse and terrified. She looks at her daughter, begging.

MARGE (CONTD)

So he's dead Nan. He can't get you. Mommy killed him.

For someone who started this film at a very young seventeen, NANCY's now the battle-tempered veteran as she takes her mother in her arms and rocks her.

NANCY

Who was there? Were Tina's parents there? Were Rod's?

MARGE sags back.

MARGE

Sure, and Glen's. All of us.
But that's in the past now, baby. Really. It's over.

(slyly)

We even took his knives.

The woman twists around and opens the door on an old furnace -- a furnace unused since the newer gas one nearby was put in. She fishes inside the cavity -- as then we hear a touch of the familiar 'SCRRIITCH'. Next moment she pulls out an object wrapped in rags, opens it and displays the long, rusted blades and their glove-like apparatus.

MARGE (CONTD)

See?

NANCY stares at the damn things, chilled.

NANCY

All these years you've kept those things buried down here? In our own house?

MARGE (CONTD)

Proof he's declawed. As for him, we buried him good and deep.

MARGE shoves the knives into their hiding place, closes the little iron door.

MARGE (CONTD)

So's okay, you can sleep.

She lurches up and staggers upstairs.

NANCY shivers and looks down at her arm. The cut beneath her bandage has begun to bleed again. And from inside the furnace, as if from deep below, the PULSING of the boundless nightmare-boiler room can be faintly heard.

127. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

127.

WIDE ON THE STREET AND BOTH HOUSES, GLEN's on the right, NANCY's on the left. A TELEPHONE RINGS. ZOOM IN ON GLEN'S UPSTAIRS BEDROOM WINDOW.

128. INT. GLEN'S & NANCY'S BEDROOMS - INTERCUT. NIGHT.

128.

129. GLEN, yawning, crosses and picks up his telephone.

129.

GLEN

Hello?

NANCY (telephone)

Hi.

GLEN

Oh. Hi, how y'doing?

NANCY looks out the window and touches her hair.

NANCY (CONTD)

Fine. Stand by your window so I can see you. You sound a million miles away.

In the lighted window across the way, she can SEE GLEN move into sight. In his shot, we can SEE NANCY step into her window behind the bars.

NANCY (CONTD)

Much better.

GLEN

I heard your ma went ape at the security store today. You look like the Prisoner of Zenda or something. How long's it been since you slept?

NANCY

Coming up on the seventh day. It's okay, I checked Guinness. The record's eleven, and I'll beat that if I have to.

(beat)

Listen, I... I know who he is.

GLEN

Who?

NANCY

The killer.

GLEN

You do?

NANCY

Yeah, and if he gets me, I'm pretty sure you're next.

GLEN is appalled.

GLEN

Me!? Why would anyone want to kill me?!

NANCY

Don't ask -- just give me some help nailing this guy when I bring him out.

GLEN pales.

GLEN

Bring him out of what?

NANCY

My dream.

GLEN

How you plan to do that?

NANCY

Just like I did the hat. Have a hold of the sucker when you wake me up.

GLEN

Me?

(switching back to a more comfortable reality)

Wait a minute, you can't bring someone out of a dream!

NANCY

If I can't, then you all can relax, because it'll just be a simple case of me being nuts.

GLEN

I can save you the trouble.
You're nutty as a fruitcake.
I love you anyway.

NANCY

Good, then you won't mind cold-cocking this guy when I bring him out.

GLEN

What!?

NANCY

(simplicity itself)

You heard me. I grab him in the dream -- you see me struggling so you wake me up. We both come out, you cold cock the fucker, and we got him. Clever, huh?

GLEN

You crazy? Hit him with what?

NANCY

You're a jock. You must have a baseball bat or something.
Come to my window at midnight.
And meanwhile...

GLEN

(weakly)

NANCY

Meanwhile whatever you do don't fall asleep. Midnight.

She hangs up. GLEN's eyes bug out.

GLEN

Holy shit! Midnight. Baseball bats and boogemen. Unfucking real.

130. OMIT

OMIT 130.

131. EXT. THE VALLEY AND HILLS. NIGHT.

131.

HIGH, WIDE SHOT. The moon is above the horizon. A cool wind slides a bank of white fog inland. The valley and its lights stretch forever, an endless net of illumination and darkness. A coyote HOWLS on the dark hill.

132. EXT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

132.

A palm frond scuttles across the center of the parking lot. LT
THOMPSON arrives in an unmarked car.

COP (passing)

Lieutenant Thompson -- what you doing in at this time?

LT THOMPSON

Can't sleep, thought I'd come break up the poker game.

The COP laughs and goes his way. THOMPSON's smile evaporates.

133. INT. POLICE STATION. NIGHT.

133.

THOMPSON enters and checks the log. Nearby, SGT GARCIA pours coffee.

SERGEANT GARCIA

If it was any more quiet we could hear owls farting.

LT THOMPSON

Is quiet, isn't it?

SERGEANT GARCIA

(too casually)

How's your girl?

THOMPSON looks at the Desk sergeant a moment, then tosses down the log.

LT THOMPSON

She's sensible. She'll sleep sooner or later.

134. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

134.

The neighborhood is utterly still, most of the homes already dark. But not NANCY's. Or GLEN's.

ZOOM TO GLEN'S LIGHTED LIVING ROOM WINDOW.

135. INT. GLEN'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

135.

GLEN's father watches eleven o'clocks news, a dreary FILM CLIP (STOCK) of war and refugees in a far-away land.

MR LANTZ takes a pull on his Bud.

MR LANTZ

You'd think they'd have something 'bout the Lane kid hanging himself.

MRS LANTZ walks through the room, drying her hands on a dishtowel.

MRS LANTZ

Maybe we're all making more out of it than we should.

She heads upstairs. MR LANTZ pops the automatic tuner. CARSON blinks ON.

CARSON (TV)

I wouldn't touch that line with a ten foot pole.

ED MCMAHON and the AUDIENCE laugh in delight.

136. INT. GLEN'S HOUSE/UPSTAIRS CORRIDOR. NIGHT.

136.

MRS LANTZ comes along the upstairs hall and knocks gently at a closed door.

MRS LANTZ

Glen? you all right?

She puts her ear to the door and listens.

MRS LANTZ (CONTD)

Glen honey?

No answer.

137. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT.

137.

GLEN lies sprawled across the bed, long legs flung over the end, head not visible.

His mother enters. She looks at the boy, turns off the TV.

Looks at him again.

From this angle she can see his head, earphones crammed over it rasping their tinny noise. But no movement from the kid at all. MRS LANTZ crosses and pokes him in the ribs. GLEN lurches up, arms windmilling.

GLEN

Whuu?

He refocuses his eyes, takes off his earphones.

MRS LANTZ

How can you listen to Carson and a record at the same time?

GLEN swings his legs over the edge of the bed and shakes his head to clear the cobwebs.

GLEN

Wasn't listening to the tube, just watching. Miss Nude America's supposed to be on tonight.

MRS LANTZ

Well how you gonna hear what she says?

GLEN

Who cares what she says?

The mother gives up.

MRS LANTZ

You should get to sleep soon,
Glen. It's almost midnight.
Goodness knows we've all had enough of a time the last few days...

GLEN

I will, Mom...in a while.
You guys turning in?

MRS LANTZ

Pretty soon.

His MOTHER sighs and goes out, closing the door behind her. GLEN flips the TV back on and glances at the clock.

138. INSERT OF CLOCK. It's 11:42. 138.

139. TIGHT ON GLEN's face. He clamps the earphones back on, and turns 139.
the volume up high. The MUSIC is so loud we can hear it resonating inside his skull.

CAMERA MOVES PAST GLEN to his window, then ZOOMS through to:

140. EXT. ELM STREET / NANCY'S HOUSE. NIGHT. 140.

CONTINUE ZOOMING into the LIGHTED window of NANCY's barred second floor bedroom and

CUT TO:

141. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT 141.

CLOSE ON MARGE, weaving on the edge of NANCY's bed, stroking the girl's hair. NANCY's still something of a wreck, but less than MARGE.

MARGE

We'll go away, take a vacation.
Get your hair colored nice, the way it was. No one will ever know.

(sniffs)

This whole room smells of coffee,
y'know?

She gathers up NANCY's coffee cups and empty NoDoz boxes, leans down and kisses her.

MARGE (CONTD)

It's all over now, baby. The nightmare's over. Please.

NANCY nods her head, half stubborn, half sadly. She can barely keep her eyes open now.

NANCY

Okay.

She scrunches into her pillow. MARGE smiles haggardly and shuts off the light, taking the coffee pot with her as she leaves.

NANCY (CONTD)

Night-night.

MARGE smiles, relieved. The girl pulls the blanket around her shoulders. Her eyes flutter closed, her breathing becomes regular and deep. Once again she's the little girl MARGE fantasizes she is.

The mother tiptoes out of the room, closing the door behind her.
HOLD ON NANCY's sleeping face as the DOOR CLOSES. Her eyes remain closed another beat, then open wide.

She quietly jumps out of bed and shakes herself savagely to scatter the sleep settling so quickly.

Still in the dark, she fishes a full electric coffepot from under her bed and pours herself a fresh fix into a mug she digs from beneath her pillow. The face illuminated by the neon light on the pot is set in absolute determination.

NANCY drains the cup, then crosses to her closet, retrieves a pitcher of ice water from behind a heap of clothes and splashes her eyes and the back of her neck. That done she eases open her window and presses her face to the bars, sucking in cool night air until every shred of sleep is gone from her brain.

Then she starts pulling on clothes.

142. INT. NANCY'S HOUSE/DOWNSTAIRS. NIGHT. 142.

ANGLE ON MARGE as she checks the lock on the backdoor. Firm.

143. ANGLE IN THE LIVING ROOM as she pads through the darkened house, 143. feels her way to a wall of shelves and takes down a book. Then another, and a third. Then reaches in and fishes out a bottle of gin.

144. EXT. NANCY'S HOUSE AND ELM STREET. NIGHT. 144.

The sky has gathered in greater darkness. LOW, DISTANT THUNDER rolls around the horizon like a great drum.

ANGLE ON NANCY'S HOUSE from across the street. The moon glints off the barred windows. CAMERA ZOOMS to NANCY's window. The imprisoned girl hovers in the darkness behind the grill like a ghost, her eyes turned towards GLEN's. Then she switches to something much CLOSER TO CAMERA ANGLE, and she draws back.

145. REVERSE ON GLEN's father, standing on the front porch of his 145. home, also in the shadows, looking straight across and up at NANCY. He draws on his cigarette; his face glows red.

146. NANCY pulls down the shade. 146.

147. GLEN's father grinds the cigarette beneath his shoe. 147.

MRS LANTZ

Shouldn't stare.

As the man turns our SHOT WIDENS TO REVEAL MRS LANTZ.

MR LANTZ

Know what I think? I think

The woman spoons more sweetness into her mouth and rubs her forehead.

MRS LANTZ

Shouldn't say such a thing about the poor child. If you mean the bars, Marge's just being cautious, her being alone and Nancy acting so nervous lately.

The woman rises and pulls him gently towards the living room. As he goes inside he takes one last look.

MR LANTZ (CONTD)

Well, she ain't gonna hang around our boy no more.

Once the two are inside, the door is locked.

148. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

148.

CLOSE ON NANCY's face. VERY CLOSE. Her eyes stare ahead, red-rimmed, anxious. She picks absently at the thick bandage covering her forearm. The long cuts from Fred Krueger's fingers are bleeding again, but she doesn't even care anymore. Too late to sweat the small stuff. She crosses the room.

On the bedside table with the nearly empty Pyrex coffee maker, the empty cup and the empty box of No-Doz, is her old fashioned alarm clock, and a phone.

NANCY pours herself the last of the coffee and drinks it to the dregs, then looks to the clock.

INSERT CLOCK -- ten minutes to midnight.

NANCY'S eyes go to the door.

WIDER. Fully clothed and in a jacket now, she creeps to the door and cracks it, just to make sure. Then freezes.

149. INT. HALLWAY OUTSIDE NANCY'S DOOR.

149.

IN NANCY'S POV through the door we see MARGE, rummaging around in the linen closet not fifteen feet away. There's no way NANCY can get past her. The woman pulls out a full bottle of gin in satisfaction and begins fumbling with its cap.

150. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

150.

NANCY eases the door closed again and sinks to the key hole, watching through it with a sinking heart.

NANCY

(very quiet, very intense)

Hang on GLEN...

151. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT. 151.

GLEN, coat now on, goes to his window, checking.

152. INT. ELM STREET. NIGHT. 152.

GLEN'S POV -- NANCY'S porch is deserted; front door closed, lights out. No sign of NANCY.

153. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT. 153.

GLEN shrugs, takes off his jacket and plops back onto his bed.

GLEN

Well, I'm not gonna risk sneaking out until she does.

He puts the earphones back on.

154. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT. 154.

Absolutely frustrated, NANCY turns from the keyhole to the window. She opens the blind and eases back the curtain.

155. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

IN NANCY'S POV THROUGH THE BARS we ZOOM directly across to GLEN's window.

156. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT. 156.

GLEN lies on his bed, fully clothed, earphones over his ears, CARSON droning from the TV. And the boy's eyes begin to droop.

157. INT. NANCY'S BEDROOM. NIGHT. 157.

NANCY picks up her phone, bites her lip, then begins dialing.

158. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT. 158.

TIGHT ON PHONE as it begins RINGING loudly.

WIDER SHOT, revealing GLEN asleep BACKGROUND, the MUSIC still LOUD in his earphones.

159. INT. GLEN'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

159.

RINGING here, too, just as MR LANTZ is turning out the lights for bed. He stops in the dark, scowling.

MR LANTZ

Who at this hour?

He refuses to turn the light back on. His wife picks her way to the telephone.

MRS LANTZ

Hello?

(listens, frowns slightly)

Oh... Hold on.

(covers the mouthpiece)

It's her. She wants to talk to
Glen.

The father crosses to the telephone, suspicious.

MR LANTZ

(whispering)

About what?

MRS LANTZ

(into phone)

What's this about, Nancy?

She listens, covers up again.

MRS LANTZ (CONTD)

She says it's private. Very private and very important.

MR LANTZ grabs the telephone from his wife and barks into it.

MR LANTZ

Glen's asleep. Talk to him tomorrow!

He SLAMS down the telephone with a grunt of satisfaction to his wife.

MR LANTZ (CONTD)

Just got to be firm with kids, is all.

Then as a refinement he takes the phone off the hook and lays it on the table.

160. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

160.

NANCY dials again. This time she gets a BUSY SIGNAL. She slams the phone down in frustration and looks out the window.

NANCY

Glen. Don't fall asleep...

She goes and sits on the bed, propping her chin on her fists.

161. Yawns. The TELEPHONE RINGS.

161.

NANCY snatches it up.

NANCY

Glen?

TIGHT ON HER, ZOOMING EVEN CLOSER ON HER EAR AND THE EARPIECE as we HEAR the awful SCRITCHING SCRAPE of STEEL FINGERKNIVES.

NANCY slaps the phone down as if it were diseased -- then, in pure rage, rips the thing's cord from the wall.

Spent instantly, she puts the receiver back on the cradle and lays it on her bed, chiding herself.

NANCY

Brilliant. Now what if Glen calls?

She wraps the phone cord around the useless machine and puts it on her bed, then sneaks back to the door. This time she gives an expression of relief, and opens the door. MARGE is gone.

Then the TELEPHONE RINGS again.

CAMERA MOVES IN ON NANCY as she turns slowly.

162. REVERSE IN HER POV. THE TELEPHONE RINGS again, despite the fact that the end of its janked-out cord is clearly visible. The NIGHTMARE MUSIC THEME slips right up our spines. 162.

BACK ON NANCY. She starts to shake. She goes to the telephone as we WIDEN, unwraps it as it RINGS even louder. She's shaking so hard by now she can barely manage to lift the receiver. MOVE IN CLOSE ON HER, so close we can HEAR her teeth chattering as she brings the phone to her ear.

NANCY (CONTD)

Hello?

The unmistakeable VOICE of FRED KRUEGER comes over the phone, garbled by time and unknown dimensions, but clear enough.

KRUEGER (FILTER)

(triumphant)

I'm your boyfriend now...

CLOSE ON THE MOUTHPIECE. It's changed from a normal telephone mouthpiece to an actual mouth -- Fred Krueger's mouth -- and his long, slick tongue flicks out and darts into the startled girl's mouth!

WIDER -- as NANCY explodes from her micro-dream -- absolutely mad. She jerks the telephone away from her and smashes it against her wall, then attacks it with her feet and hands, smashing it to smithereens.

ANGLE ON THE TELEPHONE PIECES. Normal pieces of a normal telephone.

She pinches herself hard -- until tears come and her flesh is nearly bleeding.

NANCY

I'm awake, I am awake. This is not a dream! I am --

She stops, realizing what Krueger meant.

NANCY (CONTD)

My boyfriend...!

163. INT. NANCY'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

163.

NANCY barrels down the stairs and across the darkened living room to the front door.

It takes her a moment of tugging and fumbling to realize the deadbolt is locked from inside. And there's no key in it now.

She races to a porch window and throws it open, shaking and banging on the bars like a mad woman. But there's no getting through. She staggers back, stymied and furious. Then somebody moves behind her in the dark.

VOICE (OS)

Locked.

NANCY jumps around in shock. Her mother has posted herself on the couch with her bottle.

NANCY

(furious)

Give me the key, mother.

MARGE

I don't even have it on me, so forget it.

The word is final. NANCY runs past the woman to the back door, to one window after the other, shaking bars and slamming locks and SCREAMING in teenage fury. But it's no good. The house is her prison.

MARGE (CONTD)

(drunk satisfaction)

Paid the guy damn good to make sure you stayed put. You ain't goin' nowhere, kid. You're gonna sleep tonight if it kills me.

NANCY clenches her fists and screams at the top of her lungs, a heart-wrenching, eardrum-breaking cry of love in despair --

NANCY

GLEEEENNNNNN!

SMASH CUT TO:

164. INT. GLEN'S ROOM. NIGHT.

164.

CLOSE ON GLEN'S FROM DIRECTLY ABOVE. The MUSIC is tinny from the earphones, the TV SOUND DISTANT AND ECHOED. The boy is breathing deeply now, slowly and gently. Then, unmistakably, he begins to SNORE. Very faintly, far in the background, we can hear NANCY.

NANCY (OS)

Glen!! Don't fall asleeeeeeeep!

CAMERA PULLS BACK AND STRAIGHT UP as the SNORES merge with a weird, unsettling MUSIC CUE. The boy lies sprawled, still clothed, in the middle of his bed. Save for the bedside lamp, the room is dark.

FULL WIDE ANGLE FROM THIS HIGH SPOT looking down at him as from the eyes of some great fly hung on the ceiling. THE MUSIC REACHES A TERRIFYING PITCH OF ANTICIPATION -- THEN STOPS ABRUPTLY.

There's a heartbeat's pause. Then with tremendous force, two powerful arms shoot up beneath the red and yellow bedspread and grab GLEN around the waist!

Next moment the young man's body is dragged straight down into the bed, as if some huge beast had grabbed him and heaved him down! His feet and his arms shoot up -- there's another hauling yank -- and the boy disappears except for his hands and fingers -- down into the pit in the middle of the bed! His hands are last to go, clawing for a hold. But soon they vanish as well, dragging blankets and bedsheets, wires and stereo across the caved-in bed and into the abyss.

There's HIDEOUS SCREECHING of MUSIC jamming in with GLEN's
ECHOING SCREAMS -- then an unholy, sudden silence.

Next moment what's left of GLEN is vomited up from the pit of the nightmare bed...a horrible mess of blood and bone and hair and wires...streaming out and over the bed. Then the pit in the bed is gone as if it were never there.

Drawn by the terribly screams and struggle, GLEN's mother bursts into the room. The woman stares for one moment of horrified disbelief, then reels back and lets out the most god-awful SCREAM imaginable. The cry splits the night.

165. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

165.

The SOUND of the SCREAM CROSS-FADES WITH the WAIL of the AMBULANCE as it screeches to a halt at the curb, followed by two BLACK AND WHITES and an UNMARKED CAR. Uniformed POLICEMEN spill out FOREGROUND.

LT THOMPSON and PARKER exit the unmarked car. By habit or by premonition THOMPSON glances at the house that was his home. His eye is caught by a movement; his daughter is at her upstairs window, white-haired, hollow-eyed, looking down on him through her bars. She gives a little wave.

Unnerved, THOMPSON waves back, then walks rapidly for GLEN's home. MR LANTZ, pale as a ghost himself, waits on the porch; we can hear the mother's WAILING inside.

166. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

166.

CLOSE ON NANCY'S BIG OLD WINDUP ALARM CLOCK. Its big and little hands sweep together at midnight.

BURN ON:

THE NINTH DAY

There's a BABBLE of POLICE RADIOS, SIRENS WINDING DOWN, RUNNING FOOT-STEPS, SHOUTS, NEIGHBORHOOD KIDS and DOGS BARKING as CAMERA LIFTS TO NANCY'S FACE. Set. Unafraid. Ruthless.

The girl pulls the window shade on it all, then looks at her bed.

NANCY

Okay, Krueger, you bastard.
We play in your court.

167. INT. GLEN'S LIVING ROOM/NANCY'S KITCHEN -- INTERCUT. NIGHT.

167.

168. LT THOMPSON is halfway across the living room when he stops. Something dark and red is welling from a crack in the ceiling. One of his men is rigging a bucket beneath to catch the leaking. The telephone rings and PARKER picks it up.

168.

PARKER

Lieutenant. It's your daughter.
Says it's urgent.

THOMPSON turns away from the dripping.

LT THOMPSON

(low)

Tell her I'm not here, tell her...

PARKER

Uh, she just saw you, sir...

THOMPSON nods, crosses and picks up the telephone. SCREEN
SPLITS; we see both.

LT THOMPSON (CONTD)

Hello Nancy.

NANCY

Hi daddy. I know what happened.

LT THOMPSON

Then you know more than I do --
I haven't even been upstairs.

NANCY

(guessing)

You know he's dead though, right?

THOMPSON debates, then admits it.

LT THOMPSON

Yeah, apparantly he's dead.
How the hell'd you know?

A tear coarses down NANCY's cheek, but her voice remains firm.

NANCY

I've got a proposition for
you. Listen very carefully, please.

LT THOMPSON

Nan, I --

NANCY

Please. I'm gonna go get the guy who did it and bring him to you. I just need you be right there to arrest him.
Okay?

LT THOMPSON

Just tell me who did it and
I'll go get him, baby.

NANCY

Fred Krueger did it, Daddy, and only I can get him. It's my nightmare he comes to.

The detective flinches at the name.

LT THOMPSON

Where'd you hear about Krueger --

NANCY presses, very firm, very rational.

NANCY

-- I want you to come over here and break the door down exactly twenty minutes from now -- can you do that?

LT THOMPSON

Sure, but...

NANCY

That'll be exactly half past midnight. Time for me to fall asleep and find him.

LT THOMPSON

Sure, sure, honey. You just do that -- get yourself some sleep -- that's what I've been saying all along.

NANCY

And you'll be here to catch him, right?

PARKER

Lieutenant -- they're waiting upstairs.

THOMPSON waves curtly, still speaking to NANCY.

LT THOMPSON

Sure, okay, I'll be there.
Now you just turn in and get some rest, sweetheart. Please.
Deal?

NANCY

Deal.

NANCY hangs up. LT THOMPSON starts upstairs. But then he stops, and as an afterthought he could never really explain, turns to
PARKER.

LT THOMPSON (CONTD)

Get outside and watch her house.
If you see anything funny call me.

PARKER

'Anything funny' like what?

THOMPSON shakes his head, embarrassed.

LT THOMPSON

I don't know -- but one thing for sure, I don't want her coming over here. She's way too far gone to be able to to handle this.

As PARKER exits, ANGLE CUTS TO NANCY'S KITCHEN as the girl hangs up and sinks back against the wall, trapped by her own resolution. She looks at her watch.

169. INSERT -- five past midnight. NANCY switches modes to stopwatch and sets the COUNTDOWN going at twenty-five minutes. 169.

170. INT. GLEN'S BEDROOM. NIGHT. 170.

LT THOMPSON steps into GLEN's room, anxious to be done with it. He hits a wall of stench and horror even before he takes it in with his eyes, and as soon as he sees the bed he claps his hand over his mouth, pivots and walks right back into the hallway.

171. INT. HALLWAY. NIGHT. 171.

He sags against the wall, unable to look at the COPS who hover there.

COP

(faint)

What the hell did that,
Lieutenant? There ain't even a head left.

LT THOMPSON

Goddamed if I know.
(tries to straighten)
What's the Coronor say?

COP

He's in the john puking since he saw it.

172. INT. CELLAR. NIGHT. 172.

NANCY pulls tools and hardware out with grim resolution. Hammer, nails, spools of wire, an old square of heavy fishnetting, some old shot gun shells, a file -- referring only once to the booklet in her hand.

173. INT. NANCY'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT. 173.

Barely able to control her shaking hands, NANCY starts stringing off the spool of wire across the living room, crying and swearing at the same time.

DISSOLVE TO HER HANDS wrapping bare lamp wire around two thumbtacks stuck into the insides of the pinchers of a common wooden clothespin. The wire goes OFF SCREEN.

ANOTHER ANGLE as she inserts a Lifesaver between the two prongs. One end of the fishline is tied to the lifesaver. The whole now is stretched taut about three inches off the living room carpet.

ON NANCY carefully filing a hole in a LIGHTBULB.

OH HER pouring powder and shot from shotgun shells into the opening in the bulb until it's full, then sealing it with tape.

DISSOLVE TO HER screwing the bulb back into the floor lamp, and placing the thing near the foot of the stairs.

SC 174 (DELETE)

175. INT. NANCY'S UPSTAIRS HALLWAY. NIGHT. 175.

-- NANCY completes installing a sturdy sliding bolt to the outside of her own bedroom door.

-- NANCY screws a hinge into the wall directly above her door. Attached to the hinge is the shank of something -- some kind of tool. We can't see what it is because CAMERA never quite frames the whole thing.

-- NANCY tiptoes to her mother's door and peeks in.

176. INT. MARGE'S BEDROOM. NIGHT. 176.

MARGE lies propped in her bed looking back at NANCY. Her drunkenness has been altered by the SIRENS and BABBLE outside into a sort of comatose clarity.

MARGE

Guess I should'n'a done it.

NANCY

Just sleep now, Mom.

MARGE

Just wanted to protect you,
Nan. Just wanted to protect you...

MARGE slides over on her side. NANCY smooths her hair, covers her as she would a child, then exits the room.

DELETE SC 177

178. INT. NANCY'S ROOM. NIGHT.

178.

The girl enters, turns out her bedside light, slips out of her dress and puts on her nightgown. Then she kneels by her bed.

NANCY (quietly)
Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.

She gets into bed and pulls the blankets to her chin.

CLOSE ON NANCY's face. She stares straight up at the ceiling for a long moment, then closes her eyes.

CUT TO:

179. INT. GLEN'S LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

179.

LT THOMPSON trudges down the stairs and confronts GLEN'S FATHER.

LT THOMPSON
I know it's hard to think at a time like this, Walter, but can you think of anyone who could've done such a thing?

The father stares away, his voice low and dull.

MR LANTZ
He done it.

THOMPSON looks at the man, baffled.

LT THOMPSON
Who? Who did that?

MR LANTZ
Krueger.

LT THOMPSON
Krueger?

The father gives him the strangest look.

MR LANTZ
Had to've done it. No one else was in there.

LT THOMPSON
How you know that?

MR LANTZ

Cause I thought Glen was gonna sneak out to see your lunatic daughter, that's why.
So I locked him in his room!
(getting control)
Sorry. Anyways, the door was still locked when we heard the screams.

He blinks.

MR LANTZ (CONTD)

Maybe god's punishing us all...

LT THOMPSON

(much lower and hard)

Keep your head -- this is a fucking flesh and blood killer we're talking about.

MR LANTZ

Like Rod Lane?

A voice calls down from upstairs.

COP (OS)

Lieutenant Thompson. Coronor wants to show you something.

THOMPSON gives MR LANTZ one final look, then heads upstairs.

CUT TO:

NOTE: These rewrites of scenes 180 and 180 A replace NANCY walking through the 'dream streets' at night, and NANCY approaching the huge deserted building at night, prior to her entering the Boiler Room the final time.

180. INT. DOWNSTAIRS, NANCY'S HOUSE. NIGHT.

180.

LOW ANGLE UP STAIRS as NANCY appears at head. As she comes downstairs, CAMERA MOVES WITH HER through the hallway to the cellar door. She opens the door.

180A. INT. NANCY'S CELLAR. NIGHT.

180A.

NANCY appears at top of these stairs, hesitates, then comes down.

WIDER as NANCY approaches center of room, stops in CU, then turns eyes. We HEAR the distant SOUND of the boiler room now, faint but unmistakeable. NANCY MOVES, and CAMERA PANS HER to the cellar's side WALL, where another, new doorway is REVEALED. NANCY opens this door and looks down. FIRELIGHT is on NANCY'S face now, and the SOUND of the Boiler Room is very clear. NANCY goes through the door.

180B. INT. BOILER ROOM.

180B.

NANCY descends like Orpheus into hell, but without weapon save her wits.

She descends a steel stair to the lowest level, then hears the SOUND of the knives from down another shaft. She sees there's an even deeper place down there. She starts down.

Again, and then again, NANCY descends, each ladder narrower or more twisting, each level deeper, wetter, darker, more airless. Soon she's gasping for air, but still she pushes herself on. She doesn't stop until she breaks out at last at the very bottom of the place, a wet, firelit sump deep in the bowels of the place.

CAMERA NOW PANS AROUND WITH HER, and for the first time we SEE the vast maul of the empty boiler behind her.

She stares at it. It's seething with some dark WIND that soughs and whines like a huge dying dog.

NANCY crosses to it, touching the pile of old, coal-dusted dirt at its base. It looks almost like an old grave.

She turns suddenly, listening. Then, hearing nothing, she looks down.

NANCY'S POV as she picks up GLEN's earphones.

WIDER as she suddenly drops them, staring at her fingers. They're dripping blood.

There's another BEEP.

180C. INSERT ON NANCY'S WATCH -- the COUNT-DOWN a blur of black digits counting down to zero. They've just crossed the ten minute warning. 180C.

180D. CLOSE ON NANCY'S FACE. She speaks into the night. 180D.

NANCY

(quietly)

Come out and show yourself, you bastard.

No sooner are these words off her lips than the huge bulk of FRED KRUEGER lurches up behind her! The man is even more hideous hatless, his bald head and tormented face veiled in skeins of ruined flesh, his ragged teeth barred, the great spider of razor-blades flashing from his fingertips.

He leaps, but the girl leaps just as fast, a fierce jump, that sends her out over black space and down into a huge, dark sump of blackness.

180E. EXT. THE HEAVENS. NIGHT.

180E.

CLOSE ANGLE ON NANCY as she curves like a swan through her apogee, and begins falling, diving, planing through black air, the wind ripping at her hair and eyes. Suddenly the complex, glittering skein of light that is the San Fernando Valley seen from the air slides INTO FRAME, and we see she's falling from high, high over the earth.

NANCY falls, falls in slow motion against the spinning lights, free as a sky diver freefalling -- a giddy, acrophobic plunge.

181,182,183,184 OMITOMIT 181,182,183,184

185. EXT. ELM STREET/NANCY'S HOUSE. NIGHT.

185.

NANCY crashes suddenly out of the night and into a hedge just outside her own front door, rolling out at its bottom scratched and bloodied. If she were in any normal reality she'd be a mass of broken bones -- but somehow she's able to claw her way up and look at her watch once more.

INSERT. Just a few seconds from zero.

She staggers for her house's front door -- but a moment later KRUEGER crashes down atop her! NANCY struggles to her knees just as the man lunges with that godawful handful of blades. But instead of running, she ducks inside the deadly grab and seizes him in a desperate bearhug!

The surprise move sends him pitching backwards, her still on him --and they fall into the jumble of torn-down trellis of roses beneath her window. Almost at that very second we HEAR the jarring, deafening RINGING of NANCY's alarm clock!

SMASH CUT TO:

186. INT. NANCY'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

186.

NANCY sprawls out of her bed onto the floor, twisting from the jabs of the already vanished thorns, briars and brush. Gasping, she takes a second to get her bearings

ANGLE ON THE BED as she recovers quick as she can, snatching up the net, ready for an assault from any direction.

But the room is empty.

Hardly able to catch her breath, her hair tangled, her nightgown torn, she drops the net. She sits on the bed, turns on the bedside lamp and re-examines her room. No one there but herself.

It's a terrible blow, despite the fact that she's safe. Her face is covered with tears, she's shaking and breathless. She rattles her head in confusion and despair, realizing her own madness.

NANCY

I'm crazy after all...

At that very instant FRED KRUEGER leaps up from the far side of the bed with an EXPLOSIVE SHOUT of rage!

He lunges across the table for her, missing by inches as NANCY pitches backwards and scrambles for the window. But she's stopped by the bars.

KRUEGER, incredibly fast, regains his feet and leaps again -- the girl wheels and shatters the coffeepot over his head. As he crashes backwards NANCY flings open the door of her room and dives through -- only to rebound off someone on the other side --

187. INT. HALLWAY. NIGHT.

187.

MARGE, knocked flying by NANCY'S charge, hits the floor hard, knocking the wind out of herself. NANCY sees what she's done, jumps over the body and slams the door and throws the new bolt home. Next instant she gingerly ties a string to the door's knob, a string that trails down from the ceiling, attached to something up there that's still just barely out of sight.

Next instant she's dragging her MOTHER towards the woman's bedroom as fast as she can.

KRUEGER is already splintering the doorway behind her as NANCY dips and makes it into MARGE's room, SLAMMING the DOOR behind her and locking it in a flash.

The MANIAC breaks the bolt and rips open the door.

But the in the very act of doing this he of course unknowingly pulls the string attached to the outside doorknob with terrific force.

CLOSE ANGLE ON THE CEILING. The string jerks against a single-edged razor, which in turn cuts a tight wind of cord holding a heavy wedge of steel to the ceiling.

WIDER as the thing falls free, pivoting at the hinge at the far end of its handle, and drives straight into KRUEGER'S groin with a terrific blow. As he catapults backwards with an incredulous shriek, the twenty pound sledge hammer swings back and reveals to camera just what it is!

ANGLE DOWN ON KRUEGER, clawing his way up despite his agony, lurching and cursing forward like an enraged bull.

WIDER ANGLE IN THE HALLWAY as KRUEGER roars out -- only to immediately strike the length of WIRE strung across the hallway, catching it just above the thigh. He cartwheels head-over-heels and lands flat on his back!

Instantly the DOOR to NANCY's MOTHER's bedroom flies open and NANCY brings a brass lamp down over KRUEGER's head with all her might! It sounds like a line-drive caroming off a metal flagpole.

NANCY SLAMS the DOOR as KRUEGER struggles up, clutching his head.

Enraged, the huge man CRASHES against the door with terrific force, and rears back and starts smashing against the door like the utter homicidal lunatic that he is.

CUT TO:

188. EXT. ELM STREET/NANCY'S HOME. NIGHT. 188.

HIGH ANGLE at the second floor level. NANCY jerks open the window to her MOTHER's bedroom and jams her face to the bars. The AMBULANCE is pulling away with a tremendous WAIL of its SIREN as NANCY SCREAMS down, trying to make herself heard.

NANCY

Help! Hey -- Daddy -- I got him trapped! Where are you!?

189. ANGLE ON the street. PARKER, assigned to guard the house, sees 189.
NANCY -- hair white, eyes wide -- pounding on the bars and screaming like a lunatic. But her meaning is utterly lost in the noise of the ambulance next to him.

PARKER

(yelling up at her) Everything's going to be all right! Everything's under control!

ANGLE at the window. Close on NANCY's face, incredulous at his response.

NANCY

Get my father, you asshole!

PARKER does a little take. That almost sounded sane.

PARKER (OS)

You heard what I said! Now get back inside or I'll tell your dad!

191. Behind her the DOOR SPLINTERS. NANCY whirls around just in time 191.
to see KRUEGER bull in! NANCY's eyes go wide -- she's trapped against the bars and has nowhere to go. The man bunches his knives into a single thick blade and rushes her, stabbing. NANCY closes her eyes --

Then from OUT OF FRAME Marge leaps between the two.

MARGE

No!

She blocks the charge perfectly -- blocking the knives. Both she and NANCY are slammed backwards against the bars behind. Drunk though she is, is hanging onto KRUEGER'S weapon hand, keeping the knives inside herself, away from her daughter!

MARGE

Nancy -- for god's sake's run!

But NANCY turns to the window instead, screaming for her father.

NANCY

Daddy! Where are you!

192. EXT. ELM STREET. NIGHT.

192.

PARKER, just about to turn back to the business at GLEN's house, sees NANCY and SOMEONE else fall just inside the window. Something begins to dawn on the man. Just a little.

PARKER

Poor woman's got her hands full with that kid. Maybe I better tell the lieutenant.

He turns and jogs towards GLEN's house.

193. INT. MARGE'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

193.

ANGLE ON KRUEGER, hauling MARGE up in rage, knocking her senseless across her bed and climbing after her with his knives raised. NANCY wheels behind him and whams him in the kidneys with her fists, spilling him back off the bed, then running past him for the door. She makes it to safety, then turning back. She flips the monster the bird, her eyes wild with pain and fury.

NANCY

Hey fuckface -- can't catch me!

The bait works -- KRUEGER leaves MARGE and howls after NANCY.

194. INT. UPSTAIRS HALLWAY. NIGHT.

194.

As NANCY clears the hall and makes the stairs, KRUEGER lurches through the shattered doorway after her.

The girl careens down the stairs, across the room and to the front door, banging against it with terrified fury.

NANCY

(screaming)

Come on -- he's in here!

Daddy! Don't let him kill me too!

Behind her the huge MAN is thumping down the stairs, KNOCKING THINGS OVER, SCRAPING his LONG STEEL FINGERNAILS along the wall with a horrible sound!

NANCY flings a heavy ash tray through the porch window and screams through the bars.

NANCY (CONTD)

HEELLLPPP!!! Daddyyyyyyy!!!!

KRUEGER, bloody and spewing threats, staggers for her -- NANCY dives behind the couch.

CLOSE ON KRUEGER'S FEET as they hit another wire.

CLOSE ON the Lifesaver jerking out -- the clothespin snapping together, completing the circuit with a CRACKLING SPARK.

WIDER ON THE EXPLOSION that rips out of the floor lamp next to KRUEGER and knocks him sprawling across the room.

NANCY peeks out from behind the couch. The man lies in a smoking heap. NANCY runs to the windows and screams out again.

NANCY (CONTD)

Hey -- Daddy! Hey! I got the bastard!

KRUEGER roars up behind her -- she throws herself sideways -- he crashes into the window frame, smashing glass and wood to bits.

NANCY turns SCREAMING and runs deeper into the house.

She careens down the stairs, throwing on the lights, the man thundering after her.

ANGLE AT THE FAR END OF THE CELLAR. NANCY brakes at the wall. Nowhere left to hide.

THE SCRAPPING of the blades against brick turns her to see the huge killer holding his knife-laden fingers up for her.

KRUEGER

Ready for these?

198. ON NANCY -- she ducks behind the furnace -- comes out the other side with the big jug of gasoline and lets KRUEGER have it straight over the head. The heavy container shatters, showering its contents over every square inch of the man. 198.

He staggers backwards with a ROAR of fury, NANCY screaming after him with a box of kitchen matches. Before the man can realize what she's up to, she ignites the whole box and throws it in KRUEGER's face.

There's a blinding WHOOSH -- and KRUEGER goes up in a terrific BALL OF FIRE. Faster than a flash the girl runs past the howling maniac and makes for the stairs, KRUEGER after her in full pyrrhic rage.

199. INT. NANCY'S KITCHEN. NIGHT. 199.

NANCY holds the heavy door until the precisely right moment. Just as the burning, blind monster tops the stairs, NANCY brings the heavy oak door round with all her might and catches him in a great RINGING CONCUSSION. It sends him windmilling backwards and down the stairs in an ass-over-teakettle sprawl of sparks and flames.

NANCY slams the door and throws the deadbolt home.

No sooner does she accomplish this than the man is SLAMMING again and again against the door from the cellar.

The terrible SCREAMS and CURSES PEAK, THEN GROW WEAKER AND MORE GARBLED. Then there's just silence.

NANCY staggers, half blind, from the kitchen.

As the room begins seething SMOKE from every pore, we

CUT TO:

200. INT. GLEN'S UPSTAIRS HALLWAY. NIGHT. 200.

The CORONER steps out of the bathroom peeling bloody rubber gloves. Pale and sweating.

CORONER

Found you something, Donald.
Should remind you of something...

The man shoves out his hand to LT THOMPSON. THOMPSON stares at it without touching it. A long, thin steel blade, razor sharp, attached to some sort of ring and armature -- broken off...

The CORONER gives a sweaty, grim smile.

CORONER (CONTD)

Only place I ever heard of such a thing before was ten years ago. Remember that fucker
Fred Krueger?

LT THOMPSON has just knocked PARKER sprawling in his race to the stairs.

PARKER

Hey -- your daughter's acting kinda -- !
(THOMPSON'S gone)
Strange...

201. EXT. NANCY'S HOME. NIGHT.

201.

CRASH as NANCY breaks another window and presses against the bars. The house shudders and glows orange behind her. She sees her father bursting out the front door of Glen's house!

NANCY

DAD! GET US OUTTA HERE!

LT THOMPSON

Oh, Jesus -- Nancy!
(to his men)
Hey! We got a fire!

202. ANGLE ON NANCY'S FRONT DOOR. Many MEN batter the door down as black smoke pours from the windows and NANCY's SCREAMS and SHOUTS fill the air. Within moments they've destroyed the door and LT THOMPSON has pulled his daughter into the safety of his arms. But NANCY immediately fights free and darts right back to the front door -- beckoning him to follow -- gesturing like a wild woman.

202.

NANCY

I got him -- I got Fred Krueger!

THOMPSON stares at his wild little girl in astonishment, then runs in after her. The others follow, coughing and choking.

203. INT. LIVING ROOM. NIGHT.

203.

THOMPSON collides with NANCY as she brakes, frozen. THE SMOKE IS BELCHING OUT OF THE CELLAR, but whoever was locked in there certainly isn't now. The door is flat on the kitchen floor.

LT THOMPSON

What the hell are you talking about,
Nancy?

NANCY wheels without answering. A series of tiny, isolated fires burn across the living room and up the stairs. Firesteps.

NANCY (CONTD)

He's after Mom! Come on!

She darts across the living room, following the flaming footprints of FRED KRUEGER up the stairs before THOMPSON can stop her.

LT THOMPSON

NANCY!

204. INT. MARGE'S BEDROOM. NIGHT.

204.

NANCY STOPS IN THE SPLINTERED DOORWAY -- a ragged gold-red light splashing her horrified face.

205. REVERSE IN HER POV -- FRED KRUEGER, literally a man of fire, has a screaming MARGE pinned to the bed and is crawling all over her! NANCY gives a banshee's howl, snatches up a chair and brings it down over the back of the firey beast, stunning him. 205.

By the time LT THOMPSON races into the room NANCY'S seized a heavy blanket has thrown over both of them, fighting the flames. The father joins his daughter without a second thought, heaving another blanket over the bed and smothering the last of the flames.

NANCY

He's under there! Watch it!

206. THOMPSON pushes the girl back -- yanks out his .38 and pulls off the first cover. No movement. He pulls back a second one, ready to fire. But the only thing he sees is the blackened half-skeleton of his ex-wife, smoking and seething and sinking into the fluid-like mattress, sinking right down through it as if she were sinking into a lake. A blackened, gnarled hand goes last, then the bed solidifies over the place she's disappeared. And it's as if no one was ever there. 206.

NANCY turns and looks at LT THOMPSON, her face white as her ghostly hair. THOMPSON shoves his .38 back in its holster and finds a cigarette, his hands shaking so badly he can barely manage.

NANCY

Now do you believe me?

PARKER barges in. The room is filled with smoke, the bed is stripped, but other than that, the place seems normal.

PARKER

You find him?
(looking closer at THOMPSON)

Sir?

LT THOMPSON just walks by him. PARKER chases after.

PARKER (CONTD OS)

(fading)

Sir -- here, let me light that for you -- Lieutenant? What happened?

(gone)

WIDER, ON NANCY alone in the room. She turns and looks at the bed. MUSIC slips in and builds. The bed has changed color.
It's now an ash-darkened red and yellow.

207. CLOSER ON NANCY from the direction of the bed. MUSIC SUDDENLY 207.
STOPS, and the surface of the red and yellow bed gets a bump in its center that keeps raising, raising until it's a hump that's a head and shoulders, still raising until it looms over NANCY.

Then FRED KRUEGER's entire shape sweeps up into the yellow and red mass -- and the garish head, smoking and seething, pops through.

NEW ANGLE -- KRUEGER, a burned, sizzling black hump of a killer, clumps onto the floor between NANCY and the door.

NANCY falls absoltely still, and her face goes through a strange, almost sublime transformation.

NANCY

(quietly)

I know you're there, Krueger.

She turns and faces him.

FREDDIE

You think you was gonna get away from me?

NANCY shakes her head.

NANCY

I know you too well now,
Freddie.

KRUEGER smiles bitterly. Coming closer.

FREDDY

And now you die...

There's a SLICKERING RATTLE at his side, and he raises the only thing on him not charred -- the gleaming steel talons.

208. NANCY simply shakes her head again, as if seeing a light at the 208.
end of her long, long tunnel. And the way she says the words, they might be appearing on the inside of her eyes.

NANCY

It's too late, Krueger. I know the secret now -- this is just a dream, too -- you're not alive -- the whole thing is a dream -- so fuck off!
I want my mother and friends again.

KRUEGER grins insanely, confused and amused at the same time.

FREDDIE

You what?

NANCY

(even, firm)

I take back every bit of energy I ever gave you.
You're nothing. You're
shit.

And then she turns her back on him. KRUEGER bunches his fingers, producing a single ragged bundle of razor talons and raises his hand over the back of her head and neck.

NANCY closes her eyes and steps to the door.

CLOSE ON HER HAND, touching the door knob.

CLOSE ON KRUEGER'S KNIFE-FINGERS poised.

MUSIC BUILDS then SHRIEKS as KRUEGER stabs down, right through NANCY -- as if she were an optical illusion -- losing his balance and falling down, down, down... And he's gone.

CUT TO:

209. EXT. ELM STREET. DAY.

209.

CLOSE ON NANCY'S FRONT DOOR AS NANCY jerks it open and blinks in the bright, diffused light. The MUSIC FADES on a transitional note, into light.

We hear BIRDS.

CHILDREN playing.

Early morning SOUNDS.

NANCY

(to herself)

God, it's bright.

MARGE sticks her head out, squinting, and nods. Sober.

MARGE

Gonna burn off soon or it wouldn't be so bright.

NANCY turns and looks her mother over.

NANCY

Feeling better?

MARGE

They say you've bottomed out when you can't remember the night before.

(shakes her head)

No more drinking, Baby, suddenly
I just don't feel like it any more.

She touches NANCY.

MARGE (CONTD)

Didn't keep you up last night, did I? You look a little peeked.

NANCY smiles.

NANCY

Nah. Just slept heavy.

The girl gives a wave and goes off. MARGE calls after.

MARGE

See ya.

NANCY turns and waves.

NANCY

See ya.

210. WIDER ON NANCY as she walks to the curb. The whole scene is wrapped in an unseasonal tule fog, bright yet diffuse. We notice that NANCY's house no longer has bars on its windows. Then we see a familiar convertible pull up at the curb, top down. TINA and ROD are in the back seat. They all wave to MARGE as NANCY climbs in. 210.

GLEN

(calling)

You believe this fog?

MARGE

(laughs)

I believe anything's possible.

TINA slaps five with NANCY.

TINA

Lookin' good, girl!

ANGLE INSIDE THE CONVERTIBLE. GLEN slips into the seat next to NANCY. Someone else is driving, it seems. NANCY looks up to the DRIVER. The big MAN turns and grins at NANCY, a terrible, scarred, hideous leer of a grin -- FRED KRUEGER'S grin!

ANGLE BACK OUTSIDE THE CONVERTIBLE as its top clamps over the kids within -- a bright red and yellow top that closes as fast and hard as a beartrap! NANCY'S frightened face flies to the window, pressing against the thick glass as the car roars away from the curb and into the thick fog.

211. CAMERA PANS TO a group of LITTLE GIRLS, half-hidden by the fog, jumping rope and singing gayly. 211.

GIRLS

One two --
Freddy's coming for you!
Three four --
Better lock your door!
Five six --
Get your Crucifix
Seven eight --
Gonna stay up late!
Nine ten --
Never sleep again!

MUSIC CROSSFADES WITH THIS SONG, expanding the simple tune to symphonic, boundless dimensions as the little girls fade into thin air, and we

FADE TO BLACK

ROLL END TITLES.

UAT: Artificial LifeArtificial Life Degree Learn, Experience, Innovate www.ALifeDegree.com

Ads by Google

Final Draft ScriptsFinal Draft - Just Add Words The Industry
Standard. Buy it
Now!
FinalDraft.com/Products

bgColor=#ffffff>

Search IMSDb Alphabetical# A B C D E F G H
I J K L M N O P Q
R S T U V W X Y ZGenreAction Adventure Animation
Comedy Crime Drama
Family Fantasy Film-Noir
Horror Musical Mystery
Romance Sci-Fi Short
Thriller War WesternSponsor*A.I. : Artificial IntelligenceThe Complete Dialogue

Have You Checked Your Credit Score This Month?

FreeScore.com

TransUnion
310 340 450 550 650 750 840
688

Experian
310 340 450 550 650 750 840
669

EQUIFAX
310 340 450 550 650 750 840
635

Find Out INSTANTLY!

Ben Stein, Economist and Financial Expert

A.I. : Artificial Intelligence

The
Complete Dialogue

Part TwoSLEAZY MOTEL ROOM

PATRICIA
I'm afraid...

JOE
Of me? That I will hurt you?

PATRICIA
Yes...

TV Transcripts

Futurama
Seinfeld
South Park
Stargate SG-1
Lost
The 4400

Movie Software

Blu-Ray ripper

Save the seals

JOE
Is this your first time... with something like me?

PATRICIA
I've never been with mecha.

Latest Comments

Inglourious Basterds	10/10
Relic, The	10/10
Miami Vice	8/10
Resident Evil	10/10
Hangover, The	6/10

JOE
That makes two of us.

PATRICIA
I'm afraid it will hurt.

Movie Chat

JOE
Patricia...once you've had a lover robot, you'll never want a real

Whoohooo!!!! Draco M

chaching!
How come the only rec

GREENY

Name

Message

 Yell !

man...again.
Are these the wounds of passion?

*Singer: Are the stars out tonight?
I don't know if it's cloudy or bright.
I only have eyes for you, dear!*

PATRICIA
Do you...do you hear that music?

ALL SCRIPTS

*Singer: (note: this is played over Joe's next line)
The moon may be high,
But I can't see a thing in the sky,
'Cause I only have eyes for
you,
Yeah...I only have eyes for you!*

JOE
You... are a goddess, Patricia. You wind me up inside. But you deserve much better in your life. You deserve... me.

*Chorus: 'Cause I only have eyes for you.
The moon may be high,

but I can't see a thing in the sky
'Cause I only have eyes for you!*

CITY STREET

JANE
Hey, Joe, whaddaya know?

JOE
Hey, Jane, how's the game?

AT THE HOTEL

FRONT DESK CLERK
Hey, Joe, whaddyaknow?

JOE
Hello, Mr. Williamson. Place a DND on room one-oh-two, please.

MR. WILLIAMSON
Sure thing. (Exhales) 'ere ya go.
Here y'are.

Oh! Joe! Uh, when you're finished here, crack your collar. Show off your operating license. The, uh, flesh fair's in Barn Creek, and the hounds are out hunting for strays.

JOE
It's a good thing I ran into you. Thanks Mr. Williamson.

MR. WILLIAMSON
Sure thing.

JOE
Mustn't keep a lady waiting.

IN ROOM 102

JOE
Ms. Bevins. It's Joe. At your service. I've been counting the seconds since last we met.
Have you been crying, Samantha? I found a tear.

MR. BEVINS
Hey Joe, whatdya know?
How many seconds has it been, the last time the two of you were together?

JOE
Two hundred and fifty five thousand, one hundred and thirty three.

MR. BEVINS
Goodbye, Sam. And never forget, you killed me first.

JOE
I'm in bad trouble.

IN THE WOODS

DAVID

If I am a real boy, then I can go back. And she will love me then.

TEDDY

How?

DAVID

The Blue Fairy made Pinocchio into a real boy. She can make me into a real boy. I must find her, so I can become real. There must be someone in the whole world who knows where she lives.

ROADSIDE DUMP/WOODS

JUNKYARD MECHA #1 -

Moon on the rise!

DAVID

What is it?

JUNKYARD MECHA #2 -

It's a Flesh Fair. They destroy us on stage. I've been there.

DAVID

What do we do?

TEDDY

We run now.

FLESH FAIR BALLOON

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Any old iron? Any old iron? Any old iron? Any old iron? Expel your mecha. Purge yourselves of artificiality. Come along now, let some mecha loose to run, any old unlicensed iron down there? Hey, see that? Could be a human thing.

BALLOON OPERATOR

No, he's scanning cold. No expiration date, no ID.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

What's a new model doing loose and unregistered?

BALLOON OPERATOR

Sir, it's a late generation lover mecha.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Well, there's a relief from all this antique iron.

You are certain he's not a man? I wouldn't want a repeat of the Trenton incident.

BALLOON OPERATOR

Sir, he's free range mecha, running hot.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Let's reel him in, boys. Sic the hounds on the rest.

Shake down Shantytown.

HOUSE IN SHANTYTOWN

MECHA NANNY

What's your name?

DAVID

My name is David.

MECHA NANNY

Hello David! How old are you?

DAVID

I don't know.

MECHA NANNY

Do you need someone to take care of you? Would you like a nanny? I have many good references.

DAVID

Do you know where the Blue Fairy lives?

HANGING IN THE NET

MECHA NANNY
Don't be afraid, David.
Dodo, l'enfant do,
L'enfant
dormira bien vite
Dodo, l'enfant do,
L'enfant dormira bientôt...

TEDDY
I'll break, David.

MECHA NANNY
...Une poule blanche
Est là dans la grange...

TEDDY Ow!

MECHA NANNY
...Qui va faire un petit coco
Pour l'enfant qui va faire dodo...

THE FLESH FAIR

FRONT GATE ATTENDANT
Hello. Anybody lose this? Hello? This your dog?

TEDDY
Grr-rrrr...

FRONT GATE ATTENDANT
Take it to lost and found for me, okay?

CREW MEMBER #1
Hey, Allen! Lost and found!

TEDDY
Do you know David?

CREW MEMBER #2
Where's the off switch?

TEDDY

Where's David? Can you help me find David? I have to find David. Are you taking me to David?

THE ARENA

MECHA COMEDIAN

Can you shoot me OVER the propeller thing? Yea, I don't need to go through it. Ahhh, I was considering it, but I changed my mind.

RINGLEADER

Gentlemen! Start... your... engines! Ten, nine, eight, seven, six, five, four, three, two, one.
What about us?!

CROWD

What about us!

RINGLEADER

What... about... us?!

CROWD

What about us!

RINGLEADER

We are alive, and this is a celebration of life! And this is commitment to a truly human future!

LITTLE GIRL (to TEDDY)

What's your name?

DAVID

Hello, Teddy.

TEDDY

Hello, David.

CONTROL BOOTH

PAPA

Take it! Take it. Backgrounds rolling...

LITTLE GIRL

Papa?

PAPA
Not on the...

TECHNICIAN
...biker helm.

LITTLE GIRL
Papa?

PAPA
Amanda, go on back outside, honey. It's too smoky in here.

AMANDA
There's a boy in the cage.

PAPA
What'd you say?

AMANDA
There's a boy the cage.

PAPA
A boy?

AMANDA
A real boy. He's stuck in the cage.

PAPA
In the pen, honey?

AMANDA
In the jail place...

TECHNICIAN
Random crowd reaction-

PAPA
Hey, Russell, will you get a remote near the pig pen? Bring it up on VT1. Lemme see what she's talking about.

RUSSELL
Move it up on one.

TECHNICIAN
Push in.

RUSSELL
What are you looking for?

PAPA
Amanda said she saw a little boy in there.

TECHNICIAN
Push in!
Denny, let's go wide on the shot - wide on the shot.

PAPA
Honey, how do you know about this?

AMANDA
The bear told me.

TEDDY
I told her.

THE PIG PEN

JUNKY MECHA #1
Would you be so kind and shut down my pain receivers?

DAVID
Why is this happening?

TAXI MECHA
History repeats itself. It's the rite of blood and electricity.

GRUMPY MECHA
So, when the opportunities avail themselves, they pick away at us, cutting away our numbers so they can maintain numerical superiority!

JUNKY MECHA #1
My time... is it up already? Goodbye everyone.

DAVID
Keep me safe! Keep me safe! Keep me safe! Keep me safe!

CREW MEMBER

Not yet! Just this one here!

DAVID

Keep me safe. Keep me safe. Keep me safe...

FEMALE CREW MEMBER

Mike, security? Mike! Do you have any reports of any missing kids, any missing children? Alright, thanks.

PAPA

How'd you get in there? Boy! You, boy! Hey, what's your name? I won't bite ya. Come on over where I can see ya. Hey hey, it won't hurt ya. I just need to see.

You're a machine.

DAVID

I'm a boy.

AMANDA

Is he a toyboy?

DAVID

My name is David.

PAPA

Impossible.

THE ARENA

JUNKY MECHA #1

I still work, don't I? I can still work in the dark, but my lamp is broken. My lamplight will not work. I hit my lamp on a girder overhead.

THE PIG PEN

NANNY MECHA

Goodbye, David.

PAPA

No one builds children. No one ever has. What would be the point?

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Aye, he could be a custom job. Some rich, and lonely, scaredy pusses pretend child.

GRUMPY MECHA

I'm a custom job. 75 years ago I was Time Magazine's mecha of the year!

PAPA

Eh, this work is first rate. A lot of love went into him. David! You are one of a kind, you know that? Who made you?

DAVID

My mommy made me.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Her womb was your factory, eh? One of those built to aspire to the human condition. What is the name of your maker? Serve U.S., E.Z.
Living, Robbyville? Simulate-City, Santern, Cybertronics, Sidekicks--

DAVID

Monica is my mommy.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Can I speak with you for a moment? You thinking of not putting him in the show?

PAPA

Something as original as this you don't toss out with the rest of the garbage!

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Yeah, well, I say originality without purpose is a white elephant, but if money is your purpose, then here's your refund-- my compliments.

PAPA

What are you going to do with him?

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Put him where he belongs-- in show business.

JOE

It was certainly my good fortune running into you!

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Let go of him.

JOE

Let go of me.

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON
I said let go of him.

JOE
I'm trying!

DAVID
Don't let go. Keep me safe! Don't let go!

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON
Suit yourselves.

THE ARENA

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON
Ladies and gentlemen. Girls and boys and children of all ages! What will they think of next?! See here: a bitty box, a tinker toy, a living doll. 'Course we all know why they made them. To seize your hearts. To replace your children! This is the latest iteration to the series of insults to human dignity. An underground scheme to phase out all of God's little children. Meet the next generation of child designed to do just that!

Do not be fooled by the artistry of this creation. No doubt there was talent in the crafting of this simulator. Yet with the very first strike, you will see the big lie come apart before your very eyes!

DAVID
Don't burn me! Don't burn me! I'm not Pinocchio! Don't make me die!
I'm David, I'm David, I'm David!

WOMAN IN CROWD
Mecha don't plead for their lives! Who is that? He looks like a boy...

DAVID
Don't make me die...don't make me die! I'm David!

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON
Built like a boy to disarm us! See how they try to imitate our emotions, now!

DAVID
I'm David, I'm David, I'm David...

LORD JOHNSON-JOHNSON

Whatever performance this sim puts on, remember we are only demolishing artificiality! Let he who is without 'sim' cast the first stone.

CROWD

He's just a boy... He's just a boy, Johnson...You're a monster!... (hubbub)

PAPA

Get them out of there before they tear this place apart.

HOBBY'S OFFICE

ASSISTANT #1

We found him.

HOBBY

Where?

ASSISTANT #1

Flesh Fair outside Haddonfield.

HOBBY

Is he alive?

ASSISTANT #2

Yes. He's in one piece.

IN THE WOODS

TEDDY

I see the moon.

DAVID

Is it real?

TEDDY

I don't know, David.

DAVID

Is it coming?

TEDDY

I can't tell yet.

DAVID

Let's not walk this way.

JOE

Where are we going?

DAVID

This way now.

JOE

Are you in bad trouble, have you run away from someone?

DAVID

My mommy told me to run away.

JOE

Why did she say that?

DAVID

I guess...because Henry didn't like me.

JOE

Why was that?

DAVID

Martin came home.

JOE

And who is he?

DAVID

Martin is Mommy and Henry's REAL son. After I find the Blue Fairy, then I can go home. Mommy will love a real boy. The Blue Fairy will make me into one.

JOE

Is Blue Fairy mecha, orga, man, or woman?

DAVID

Woman.

JOE

Woman. I know women! They sometimes ask for me by name. I know all about women. About as much as there is to know. No two are ever alike, and after they've met me, no two are ever the same! And I know where most of them can be found.

DAVID

Where?

JOE

Rouge City. Across the Delaware. Too far for our feet. We'll need help to get there. And, it is not without peril. We will have to journey....towards the moon.

DAVID

Are there many women in Rouge City?

JOE

As there are stars at night.

DAVID

And how will we find just one?

JOE

We will ask Dr. Know! There is nothing he doesn't. Exactly what name do you give this woman?

DAVID

She is...just Blue Fairy.

JOE

Blue Fairy. In the world of Orga blue is the color of melancholy, yet the services I provide will put a blush back on anyones cheek. I will change the color of your fairy for you. She will scream out in the moonlight...'Ah, oh yes, oh god, oh yes, oh god, oh god'...she will make you a real boy for I will make her a real woman and all will be right with the world, because you held my hand and saved my brain. So once again my customers may ask for my by name 'Gigolo Joe, whatdoyaknow'!

DAVID

Why do you do that?

JOE

That's just what I do. Now follow me, and don't fall behind. All roads lead to Rouge! Don't they say that, eh? Don't they just....

ON THE ROADSIDE

JOE

There are girls your age who are just like me. We are the guiltless pleasures of the lonely human being. You're not going to get us pregnant, or have us over for supper with mummy and daddy. We work under you, we work on you, and we work for you. Man made us better at what we do than was ever humanly possible. If you can manage us a lift to Rouge City, all this, and much, much more, can be yours.

TEENAGER

Get in!

IN THE CAR

JOE

Everybody say 'Ah!'

JOE & TEENS

AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!

ROUGE CITY PLAZA

JOE

Over there is 'Here, Kitty Kitty'. That's where the agency held my trial when I was made new. That's 'Tails'...very 'hoity-toity'. Only sunrise gents and sunset ladies. Strictly sierra class robots who have no idea how to live. Can't even speak English, all made in Sweden. Couldn't tell a joke from a poke.

That's Mildred! I have to show you inside Mildred!

DAVID

Are you her?

JOE

That's Our Lady of the Immaculate Heart. The ones who created us are always looking for the ones that created them. They go in, look around their feet, sing songs, and when they come out, it's usually me they find. I've picked up a lot of business here.

DAVID

Joe, where's Blue Fairy?

JOE

That's what we'll find out when we find Dr. Know. It's where everyone goes who needs to know.

Meet the good doctor!

DOCTOR KNOW'S SHOP

DR.KNOW

Starving minds, welcome to Dr. Know! Where fast-food for thought is served up 24 hours a day, in 40,000 locations nationwide. Ask Dr. Know, there's nothing I don't!

DAVID

Tell me where I can find the Blue Fairy.

DR.KNOW

Question me you pay the fee, two for five you get one free!

JOE

He means two questions cost five Newbucks with a third question on the house. In this day and age, David, nothing costs more than information.

DAVID

That's everything!

JOE

Ten Newbucks and a ten copper comes to 7 questions for Dr. Know.

DAVID

That should be enough!

JOE

He's a smooth operator. He'll test our limits, but try we must.

DR.KNOW

Greetings colleagues. On author, factual text or fictionalized text, 1st or 3rd person, usual literacy range from primal level to the post doctoral, usual span of styles from fairy tale to religious, who's who, or where's where - or, flat fact.

DAVID

Flat-fact?

DR.KNOW

Thank you for question number one. 'Flat-fact' is a term demanding an equal answer with interpretive speculation... merely not the... and what you are saying is basically that is what you-

DAVID

That shouldn't count, that wasn't my question!

JOE

You must take care not to raise your voice up at the end of a sentence.

'Flat-fact'.

Dr.KNOW

You have 6 more questions!

DAVID

Where is Blue Fair-REE?

DR.KNOW

In the Garden. Vascostylis blue fairy. Blooms twice annually with bright blue flowers on a branched inflorescence. A hybrid between Ascola Meda Arnold. You have 5 more questions.

DAVID

Who is Blue Fair-REE?

DR.KNOW

Are you sad, lonely, looking for a friend? 'Blue Fairy Escort Service' will find a mate for you! You have 4 more questions.

DAVID

Joe. Try fairy tale.

JOE

New category. A fairy's tail.

DAVID

No! Fairy tale!

JOE

No. Fairy tale.

DAVID

What is Blue Fairy?

DR.KNOW

Pinocchio, by Carlo Collodi. At the signal, there was a rustling as flapping of wings, and a large falcon flew to the windowsill. What are your orders, beautiful fairy, he asked...

DAVID

That's her.

DR.KNOW

...For you must know that the child with blue hair was no other than the good hearted fairy who had lived in that wood for more than a thousand years...

JOE

David! David!

DAVID

That's her!

JOE

It was an example of her. But I think we're getting closer.

DAVID

But if a fairy tale is real, wouldn't it be a fact? A flat fact?

DR.KNOW

...then the dream ended, and Pinocchio awoke, full of amazement...

JOE

Say no more. New category, please. Combine Fact with Fairy Tale. Now. Ask him again.

DAVID

How can the Blue Fairy make a robot into a real, live boy?

DR.KNOW

Come away,O human child!
To the waters and the wild
With a fairy, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping then you can understand.

Your quest will be perilous
Yet the reward is beyond price.
In his book
'How Can A Robot Become Human', Professor Allen Hobby writes of the power which will transform Mecha into Orga.

DAVID

Will you tell me how to find her?

DR.KNOW
Discovery is quite possible.
Our blue fairy does exist
in one place, and one place only,
At the end of the world
Where the lions weep.
Here is the place dreams are born.

JOE
Many a mecha has gone to the end of the world... never to come back!
That is why they call the end of the world 'MAN-hattan'.

DAVID
And that is why we must go there!

HALLWAY OUTSIDE DR. KNOW'S SHOP

JOE
Wait! What if the blue fairy isn't real at all, David? What if she's magic? The supernatural is the hidden web that unites the universe. Only orga believe what cannot be seen or measured. It is that oddness that separates our species. Or what if the Blue Fairy is an electronic parasite that has arisen to hold the minds of artificial intelligence? They hate us, you know? The humans...They'll stop at nothing.

DAVID
My Mommy doesn't hate me! Because I'm special, and...unique! Because there has never been anyone like me before! Mommy loves Martin because he is real and when I am real, Mommy's going to read to me, and tuck me in my bed, and sing to me, and listen to what I say, and she will cuddle with me, and tell me every day a hundred times a day that she loves me!

JOE
She loves what you do for her, as my customers love what it is I do for them. But she does not love you David, she cannot love you. You are neither flesh, nor blood. You are not a dog, a cat or a canary. You were designed and built specific, like the rest of us. And you are alone now only because they tired of you, or replaced you with a younger model, or were displeased with something you said, or broke. They made us too smart, too quick, and too many.
We are suffering for the mistakes they made because when the end comes, all that will be left is us. That's why they hate us, and that is why you must stay here, with me.

DAVID
Goodbye, Joe.

ROUGE CITY PLAZA

POLICE OFFICER
You're in big trouble.

TEDDY
Be careful David, this is not a toy.

AMPHIBICOPTER Destination?

JOE
MAN-hattan.

MANHATTAN

AMPHIBICOPTER
Mecha Restricted Area.
Manhattan. Destination
Achieved.

JOE
Man-hattan, the sunken city at the end of the world.

DAVID
Where the lions weep.

TEDDY Grrrrrr...

DAVID
Turn around, Joe.

JOE
We're not going to give up yet, David.

TEDDY Grrrrrr...

DAVID
Turn around. Turn all the way around.

TEDDY Grrrrrr...

CYBERTRONICS PENTHOUSE ENTRANCE

DAVID
Professor Hobby? Professor Hobby?

JOE
Come away, O human child!
To the waters and the wild
With a
Faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than you can understand.

PENTHOUSE LIBRARY

DAVID
Professor Hobby? Professor Hobby? Hello? Hello?
Is this the place they make you real?

DAVID II
This is the place they make you read.

DAVID
Are you real?

DAVID II
I guess.

DAVID
Are you me?

DAVID II
I'm David.

DAVID
You're not.

DAVID II
Yes, I am! I'm David!

DAVID

So am I.

DAVID II
Hello, David. -
Can you read? Can you sit down, and we can read together? Let's be friends.

DAVID
You can't have her.

DAVID II
I can't hear you.

DAVID
She's mine. And I'm the ONLY one.
I'm David! I'm David! I'm
David! I'm David! I'm...(pause), I'm David! I'm David! I'm David! I'm special!
I'm unique! I'm David! You can't have her!
I'm David...I'm David...I'm
David...

HOBBY
David? David!

DAVID
I'm David...I'm David...

HOBBY
Yes, you are David.

DAVID
Professor Hobby?

HOBBY
Yes David, I've been waiting for you.

DAVID
Dr. Know told me you'd be here. Is Blue Fairy here, too?

HOBBY
I first heard of your Blue Fairy from Monica. What did you believe the Blue Fairy could do for you?

DAVID
She would make me a real boy.

HOBBY
But you are a real boy. At least as real as I've ever made one which by all reasonable accounts would make me your Blue Fairy.

DAVID

You are not her. Dr. Know told me she would be here at the lost city in the sea at the end of the world where the lions weep.

HOBBY

And that's what Dr. Know needed to know in order to get you to come home to us. And it's the only time we intervened; the only help that we gave him to give to you, so you could find your way home to us.

Until you were born, robots didn't dream, robots didn't desire, unless we told them what to want. David! Do you have any idea what a success story you've become? You found a fairy tale and inspired by love, fueled by desire, you set out on a journey to make her real and, most remarkable of all, no one taught you how. We actually lost you for a while. But when you were found again we didn't make our presence known because our test was a simple one: Where would your self-motivated reasoning take you? To the logical conclusion? The Blue Fairy is part of the great human flaw to wish for things that don't exist. Or to the greatest single human gift - the ability to chase down our dreams. And that is something no machine has ever done until you.

DAVID

I thought I was one of a kind.

HOBBY

My son was one of a kind. You are the first of a kind.
David?

DAVID

My brain is falling out.

HOBBY

Would you like to come meet your real mothers and fathers? The team is anxious to talk to you. I want you to wait here and I'll gather them up. We want to hear everything about your adventure. We want thank you, and tell you what's in store for you next.

OUTSIDE LEDGE OF CYBERTRONICS BLDG.

DAVID

Mommy.

IN THE AMPHIBICOPTER

DAVID

I saw it Joe, I saw it! The place where she lives! She's right down there, Joe!

JOE

She is?

DAVID

She's waiting for me, we have to go!

JOE

Uh-oh.

When you become a real boy, remember me to the ladies when you grow up!

DAVID

Good-bye Joe.

JOE

Good-bye David.

I am...I was!

UNDER WATER

TEDDY

David, please, be careful.

STOPPED

DAVID

The Blue Fairy's all right!

TEDDY

What happened?

DAVID

I'm don't know.

TEDDY

We are in a cage.

DAVID

Blue Fairy? Please...please, please make me into a real live boy.

Please...Blue Fairy? Please...please...make me real. Blue Fairy? Please, please make me real. Please make me a real boy. Please, Blue Fairy, make me into a real boy. Please...

NARRATOR

And David continued to pray to the Blue Fairy there before him, she who smiled softly, forever...she who welcomed forever. Eventually the floodlights dimmed and died, but David could still see her palely by day, and he still addressed her, in hope. He prayed until all the sea anemones had shriveled and died, he prayed as the ocean froze and the ice encased the caged amphibicopter, and the Blue Fairy too, locking them together where he could still make her out - a blue ghost in ice - always there, always smiling, always awaiting him. Eventually he never moved at all, but his eyes always stayed open, staring ahead forever all through the darkness of each night, and the next day...and the next day...

Thus, 2000 years passed by.

A.I. : Artificial Intelligence

The Complete Dialogue

Part Three

THE END

A.I.

Writers : Ian Watson Brian Aldiss Steven Spielberg

Genres : Sci-Fi Adventure Drama

User Comments

Index | Submit | Links | Link to us | RSS Feeds | Disclaimer | Privacy policy

A CLOCKWORK ORANGE

Screenplay

by

Stanley Kubrick

Based on the novel by

Anthony Burgess

FADE IN:

INT. KOROVA MILKBAR - NIGHT

Tables, chairs made of nude fibreglass figures.

Hypnotic atmosphere.

Alex, Pete, Georgie and Dim, teenagers stoned on their milk-plus, thier feet resting on faces, crotches, lips of the sculptured furniture.

ALEX (V.O.)

There was me, that is Alex, and my three droogs, that is Pete, Georgie and Dim and we sat in the Korova milkbar trying to make up our rassoodocks what to do with the evening. The Korova Milk Bar sold milkplus, milk plus vellocet or synthemesc or drenchrom which is what we were drinking. This would sharpen you up and make you ready for a bit of the old ultra-violence. Our pockets were full of money so there was no need on that score, but, as they say, money isn't everything.

INT. PEDESTRIAN UNDERPASS TUNNEL - NIGHT

A Tramp lying in tunnel, singing.

TRAMP

In Dublin's fair city
Where the girls are so pretty
I first set my eyes on sweet Molly Malone
As she wheeled her wheelbarrow
Through streets wide and narrow...

Shadows of the boys approaching fall across Tramp.

TRAMP

Crying cockless and mussels alive,
Alive O...
Alive, alive O... Alive, alive O...
Crying cockless and mussels alive,
Alive O...

ALEX (V.O.)

One thing I could never stand is to see a filthy, dirty old drunkie, howling away at the filthy songs of his fathers and going blerp, blerp in between as it might be a filthy old orchestra in his stinking rotten guts. I could never stand to see anyone like that, whatever his age might be, but more especially when he was real old like this one was.

The boys stop and applaud him.

TRAMP

Can you... can you spare some cutter, me brothers?

Alex rams his stick into the Tramp's stomach. The boys laugh.

TRAMP

Oh-hhh!!! Go on, do me in you bastard cowards. I don't want to live anyway, not in a stinking world like this.

ALEX

Oh - and what's so stinking about it?

TRAMP

It's a stinking world because there's no law and order any more. It's a stinking world because it lets the young get onto the old like you done. It's no world for an old man any more. What sort of a world is it at all? Men on the moon and men spinning around the earth and there's not no attention paid to earthly law and order no more.

The Tramp starts singing again.

TRAMP

Oh dear land, I fought for thee and brought you peace and victory.

Alex and gang move in and start beating up on old Tramp.

INT. DERELICT CASINO - NIGHT

Billyboy gang on stage tearing clothes off a screaming Girl.

ALEX (V.O.)

It was around by the derelict casino that we came across Billyboy and his four droogs. They were getting ready to perform a little of the old in-out, in-out on a weepy young devotchka they had there.

Alex and gang step out of the shadows.

ALEX

Ho, Ho, Ho... Well, if it isn't stinking Billygoat Billyboy in poison. How are thou, thou globby bottle of cheap stinking chip oil? Come and get one in the yarbles, if you have any yarbles, you eunuch jelly thou.

Billyboy snaps open a switchblade knife.

BILLY BOY

Let's get 'em boys.

The fight begins, chains, knives, kicking boots. Police siren.

ALEX

The Police... come on, let's go... come on.

Alex and the boys rush out of casino.

EXT. / INT. CAR - NIGHT - FAST DRIVING SHOTS

Swerving car, forcing other cars off the road, trying to hit pedestrians, etc.

ALEX (V.O.)

The Durango-95 purred away real horrorshow - a nice, warm vibraty feeling all through your guttiwuts. Soon it was trees and dark, my brothers, with real country dark. We fillied around for a while with other travelers of the night, playing hogs of the road. Then we headed west, what we were after now was the old surprise visit, that was a real kick and good for laughs and lashing of the ultra-violent.

EXT. "HOME" - NIGHT

A cottage on its own, on outskirts of a village.

Bright moonlight. Cheery light inside.

Car pulls to stop.

Alex shushes his giggling boys and gets out of the car.

INT. "HOME" - NIGHT

Mr. Alexander typing. Bell rings.

MR. ALEXANDER

Who on earth could that be?

MRS. ALEXANDER

I'll see.

Mrs. Alexander, a good-looking red head in a red jumper suit.

MRS. ALEXANDER

Yes? Who is it?

ALEX

Excuse me, Mrs... will you please help, there's been a terrible accident.

She opens the door on the chain and peeps out.

ALEX

My friend's lying in the middle of the road bleeding to death. Could I please use your telephone for an ambulance?

MRS. ALEXANDER

I'm sorry, but we don't have a telephone. You'll have to go somewhere else.

ALEX

But Mrs... it's a matter of life and death.

From inside the sound of clack clacky clack clack clackity clackclack of Alexander typing stops.

MR. ALEXANDER

Who is it, dear?

MRS. ALEXANDER

There's a young man here. He says there's been an accident. He wants to use the telephone.

MR. ALEXANDER

Then you'd better let him in.

MRS. ALEXANDER

Wait a minute.

ALEX

Thank you, Mrs.

Mrs. Alexander opens door, saying...

MRS. ALEXANDER

I'm sorry, we don't usually let people in in the middle of the night.

Alex and boys have put on their masks and rush into house, carrying and dragging Mrs. Alexander along with them.

INT. HOME - NIGHT

They go roaring in.

Mr. Alexander is kicked in the face and goes down. Georgie leaps on him. Pete jumps up and down and the settee. Dim grabs hold of Mrs. Alexander. Alex whistles piercingly.

ALEX

Right, Pete. Check the rest of the house.

Alex turns to Dim who holds the struggling Mrs. Alexander.

ALEX

Dim...

Dim sets her down but holds her firmly. Alex starts to sing -
"Singin' in the Rain", accompanying it with a kind of tap dance.

ALEX
(singing)
I'm singing in the rain...

He kicks Mr. Alexander accenting the lyrics.

ALEX
(singing)
Just singing in the rain...

He clubs Mr. Alexander with stick, in the time to the music.

ALEX
(singing)
What a glorious feeling, I'm happy again.

He pushes a rubber ball into Mrs. Alexander's mouth and binds it with sellotape.

ALEX
(singing)
I'm laughing at clouds so dark up above.
The sun's in my heart and I'm ready for love.
Let the stormy clouds chase...

He kicks Mr. Alexander again.

ALEX
(singing)
... everyone from the place.
Come on with the rain...

He puts ball in Mr. Alexander's mouth and sellotapes it.

ALEX
(singing)
... I've a smile on my face.
I'll walk down the lane... to a happy refrain.
I'm singing... just singin' in the rain.

He knocks down the book cases and moves to Mrs. Alexander being held by Dim. Starts to repeat on song as he cuts slowly up each leg of her cat suit, until she is naked. This coincidences with the song finishing.

He turns to Mr. Alexander.

ALEX
Viddy well, my little Brother. Viddy well.

INT. KOROVA MILKBAR - NIGHT

The boys enter yawning..

ALEX (V.O.)

We were all feeling a bit shagged and fagged and fashed, it having been an evening of some small energy expenditure, O my brothers, so we got rid of the auto and stopped off at the Korova for a nightcap.

Dim moves over to milk machine and speaks to the statue of the nude girl.

DIM

Hello Lucy, had a busy night?

Puts money in machine.

DIM

We've been working hard too.

Takes glass.

DIM

Pardon me. Luce.

He raises glass to breast, pulls red handle between her legs. Milk spurts into glass.

Dim joins the others. Alex looks at a party of tourists.

ALEX (V.O.)

There was some sophistos from the TV studios around the corner, laughing an govoreeting. The Devotchka was smecking away, and not caring about the wicked world one bit. Then the disc on the stereo twanged off and out, and in the short silence before the next one came on, she suddenly came with a burst of singing, and it was like for a moment, O my brothers, some great bird had flown into the milkbar and I felt all the malenky little hairs on my plott standing endwise, and the shivers crawling up like slow malenky lizards and then down again. Because I knew what she sang. It was a bit from the glorious 9th, by Ludwig van.

Dim makes a lip-trump followed by a dog howl, followed by two fingers pronging twice in the air, followed by a clowny guffaw.

Alex brings his stick down smartly on Dim's legs.

DIM

What did you do that for?

ALEX

For being a bastard with no manners and not a dook of an idea how to comport yourself publicwise, O my Brother.

DIM

I don't like you should do what you done.
And I'm not your brother no more and wouldn't want to be.

ALEX

Watch that... Do watch that, O Dim, if to continue to be on live thou dost wish.

DIM

Yarbles, great bolshy yarblockos to you I'll meet you with chain, or nozh or britva, any time, not having you aiming tolchocks at me reasonless. It stands to reason, I won't have it.

ALEX

A nozh scrap any time you say.

Dim weakens.

DIM

Doobidoob... a bit tired maybe, everybody is. A long night for growing malchicks... best not to say more. Bedways is righthways now, so best we go homeways and get a bit of spatchka. Right, right.

INT. ALEX'S FLATBLOCK - MAIN LOBBY ENTRANCE - NIGHT

Alex passes a mural in the hall. Nude men and women. Their massive stylized bodies embellished and decorated by handy pencil and ballpoint.

The elevator door is buckled.

INT. ALEX'S FLAT - NIGHT

Alex pees in toilet.

Alex goes into his room. Tosses his loot into a drawer, full of money, wristwatches, cameras, etc.

Fifty small loudspeakers cover one wall.

He puts his pet boa constrictor on tree branch mounted on the wall, above four Christ figures who have their arms intertwined like a chorus line.

He puts a cassette into the tape player.

A heavy shockwave of sound - Beethoven's 9th.

ALEX (V.O.)

It had been a wonderful evening and what I needed now to give it the perfect ending was a bit of the old Ludwig van.

Music starts.

ALEX (V.O.)

Then, brothers, it came. O bliss, bliss and heaven, oh it was gorgeousness and georgeosity made flesh. The trombones crunched redgold under my bed, and behind my gulliver the trumpets three-wise, silver-flamed and there by the door the timps rolling through my guts and out again, crunched like candy thunder. It was like a bird of rarest spun heaven metal or like silvery wine flowing in a space ship, gravity all nonsense now. As I slooshied, I knew such lovely pictures. There were weeks and ptitsas laying on the ground screaming for mercy and I was smecking all over my rot and grinding my boot into their tortured litsos and there were naked devotchkas ripped and creeching against walls and I plunging like a shlaga into them.

INT. ALEX'S FLAT - DAY

He is asleep. The boa curled up at his feet. There is a knock on the door.

ALEX

What d'you want?

EM

It's past eight, Alex, you don't want to be late for school, son.

ALEX

Bit of pain in the gulliver, Mum. Leave us be and I'll try to sleep it off... then I'll be as right as dodgers for this after.

EM

You've not been to school all week, son.

ALEX

I've got to rest, Mum... got to get fit, otherwise I'm liable to miss a lot more school.

EM

Eeee... I'll put your breakfast in the oven. I've got to be off myself now.

ALEX

Alright, Mum... have a nice day at the factory.

INT. KITCHEN - DAY

Pee sitting at breakfast table.

Em enters.

EM

He's not feeling too good again this morning, Dad.

PEE

Yes, I heard. D'you know what time he got in last night?

EM

No I don't know, luv, I'd taken my sleepers.

PEE

I wonder where exactly is it he goes to work of evenings.

EM

Well, like he says, it's mostly odd things he does, helping like... here and there, as it might be.

INT. EM'S BEDROOM - DAY

Alex comes out of his room and finds P.R. Deltoid sitting on bed in parent's room.

ALEX

Hi, hi, hi there, Mr. Deltoid, funny surprise to see you here.

DELTOID

Ah, Alex boy, awake at last, yes? I met your mother on the way to work, yes? She gave me the key. She said something about a pain somewhere... hence not at school, yes?

ALEX

A rather intolerable pain in the head, brother, sir. I think it should be clear by this afterlunch.

DELTOID

Oh, or certainly by this evening, yes? The evening's a great time, isn't it, Alex boy?

ALEX

A cup of the old chai, sir?

DELTOID

No time, no time, yes. Sit, sit, sit.

Alex sits next to him.

ALEX

To what do I owe this extreme pleasure, sir? Anything wrong, sir?

Deltoid "playfully" grabs Alex's hair.

DELTOID

Wrong? Why should you think of anything being wrong, have you been doing something you shouldn't. Yes?

He shakes Alex's hair.

ALEX

Just a manner of speech, sir.

DELTOID

Well, yes, it's just a manner of speech from your Post Corrective Advisor to you that you watch out, little Alex.

He puts his arm round Alex's shoulder.

DELTOID

Because next time it's going to be the barry place and all my work ruined. If you've no respect for your horrible self, you at least might have some for me who'se sweated over you.

He slaps Alex on the knee.

DELTOID

A big black mark I tell you for every one we don't reclaim. A confession of failure for every one of you who ends up in the stripy hole.

ALEX

I've been doing nothing I shouldn't, sir.
The millicents have nothing on me,
brother, sir, I mean.

Deltiod pulls Alex down on the bed.

DELTOID

Cut out all this clever talk about milicents. Just because the Police haven't picked you up lately doesn't, as you very well know, mean that you've not been up to some nastiness. There was a bit of a nastiness last night, yes. Some very extreme nastiness, yes. A few of a certain Billyboy's friends were ambluenced off late last night, yes. Your name was mentioned, the word's got thru to me by the usual channels. Certain friends of yours were named also. Oh, nobody can prove anything about anybody as usual, but I'm warning you, little Alex, being a good friend to you as always, the one man in this sore and sick community who wants to save you from yourself.

Deltoid makes a grab for Alex's joint but finds his hand instead. Alex laughs. Derisively and rises. Deltoid distractedly reaches for a glass of water on the night table, and fails to notice a set of false teeth soaking in them. He drinks from the glass. The clink of the teeth sounding like ice-cubes.

DELTOID

What gets into you all? We study the problem. We've been studying it for damn well near a century, yes, but we get no further with our studies. You've got a good home here, good loving parents, you've got not too bad of a brain. Is it some devil that crawls inside of you?

ALEX

Nobody's got anything on me, brother, sir. I've been out of the rookers of the milicents for a long time now.

DELTOID

That's just worries me. A bit too long to long to be reasonable. You're about due now by my reckoning, that's why I'm warning you, little Alex, to keep your handsome young proboscis out of the dirt. Do I make myself clear?

ALEX

As an unclouded lake, sir. Clear as an azure sky of deepest summer. You can rely on me, sir.

Deltoid drinks again but this time sees the teeth in the glass. He groans and retches.

INT. MUSIC BOOTICK - DAY

Alex enters. Two pretty micro-boppers, Marty and Sonietta, sucking phallic ice sticks.

ALEX

Pardon me, brother. I ordered this two weeks ago. Could you see if it's arrived.

CLERK

OK. I'll see if it's in.

Clerk exits. Alex turns to the girls.

ALEX

Pardon me, ladies

He steps in between them and goes through the motions, looking through.

ALEX

Enjoying it then, my darling?... A bit cold and pointless isn't it, my lovely... What's happened to yours, my little sister?

Marty giggles.

MARTY

Who you gotten bratty, Goggly Gogol? Johnny Zhivago? The Heaven Seventeen?

ALEX

What you got back home, little sister, to play your fuzzy warbles on? I bet you got little save pitiful portable picnic players. Come with Uncle and hear all proper. Hear angel trumpets and devil trombones. You are invited.

INT. ALEX'S BEDROOM - DAY

The two girls, naked, jumping up and down on Alex's still unmade bed zonked by the booming, all engulfing sound of Alex's incredible Hi-Fi.

INT. ALEX'S FLATBLOCK - LOBBY HALL - DAY

Alex finds the gang waiting for him.

ALEX

Hi, hi, hi, there

ALL THREE

Well, hello.

DIM

He are here! He have arrived! Hooray!

ALEX

Welly, welly, welly, welly, welly, welly, well. To what do I owe the extreme pleasure of this surprising visit?

Georgie rises.

GEORGIE

We got worried. There we were waiting and drinking away at the old knify Moloko and you had not turned up and we thought you might have been like offended by something or other, so around we come to your abode.

ALEX

Appy polly loggies. I had something of a pain in the guliver so had to sleep. I was not awakened when I gave orders for awakening.

DIM

Sorry about the pain. Using the guliver to much like, eh? Giving orders and disciplining and that perhaps, eh? You sure the pain's gone? You sure you'll not be happier back up in bed.

ALEX

Lets get things nice and sparkling clear. This sarcasm, if I may call it such, does not become you, O my brothers. As I am your droog and leader, I am entitled to know what goes on, eh? Now then, Dim, what does that great big horsy gape of a grin portend?

GEORGIE

All right, no more picking on Dim, brother. That's part of the new way.

ALEX

New way? What's this about a new way? There's been some very large talk behind my sleeping back, and no error. Let me hear more.

GEORGIE

Well, we go round shop crasting and the like, coming out with a pitiful rookerful of money each.

DIM

Pitiful rookerful...

GEORGIE

And there's Will the English in the Musclemans coffee mesto saying he can fence anything that anything that any malchick tries to crast.

DIM

Yeah... Pete the English.

GEORGIE

The shiny stuff. The Ice. The big, big, big money is available's what Will the English says.

DIM

Big, big money.

ALEX

And what will you do with the big, big, money? Have you not everything you need?
If you need a motor-car, you pluck it from the trees. If you need pretty polly, you take it.

GEORGIE

Brother, you think and talk sometimes like a little child. Tonight we pull a mansize crast.

ALEX

Good. Real horrorshow. Initiative comes to them as waits. I've taught you much, my little droogies. Now tell me what you have in mind, Georgie Boy.

GEORGIE

Oh, the old moloko-plus first, would you not say

DIM

Moloko-plus.

GEORGIE

Something to sharpen us up, you especially. We have the start.

EXT. FLATBLOCK MARINE - DAY

The gang come out of the flatblock and walk along the marina.

ALEX (V.O.)

As we walked along the flatblock marina, I was calm on the outside but thinking all the time, so now it was to be Georgie the General, saying what we should do and what not to do, and Dim as his mindless, grinning bulldog. But, suddenly, I viddied that thinking was for the gloopy ones and that the oomny ones use like inspiration and what Bog sends, for now it was lovely music that came to my aid and I viddied at once what to do. There was a window open with the stereo on.

IN SLOW MOTION

Alex clubs Georgie into water with his stick. Dim swings chain.
Alex ducks. Dim goes into water.

Alex kneels, hands behind back, takes knife from sword stick, offers hand to help Dim, and slashes Dim when he gets it.

Dim falls back into the water.

Alex laughs.

INT. DUKE OF NEW YORK PUB

The four boys sit round table.

ALEX (V.O.)

I had not put into any of Dim's main cables and so, with the help of a clean tashtook, the red, red kroovy stopped, and it did not take long to quieten the two wounded soldiers, down in the snug in the Duke of New York. Now they knew who was Master and Leader. Sheep, thought I, but a real leader knows always when like to give and show generous to his unders.

ALEX

Well, now we're back to where we were.
Yes? Just like before and all forgotten?
Right, right, right.

ALL BOYS

Right. Right. Right.

ALEX

Well, Georgie Boy. This idea you've got for tonight. Well, tell us all about it then.

GEORGIE

Not tonight - not this nochy.

ALEX

Come, come, come, Georgie Boy. You're a big strong chelloveck like us all. We're not little children, are we, Georgie Boy?
What, then, didst thou in thy mind have?

Confrontation. Georgie backs down.

GEORGIE

It's this Health Farm. A bit out of the town. Isolated. It's owned by this like very rich ptitsa who lives there with her cats. The place is shut down for a week and she's completely on her own, and it's full up with like gold and silver and like jewels.

ALEX

Tell me more, Georgie Boy.

INT. CATLADY'S HOUSE

Catlady doing yoga exercises.

Room is full of cats. Doorbell rings.

CATLADY
(softly to herself)

Oh shit.

She goes to the door.

EXT. CATLADY'S HOUSE

CATLADY
Who's there?

ALEX
Excuse me, missus, can you please help?
There's been a terrible accident. Can I please use your telephone for an ambulance?

CATLADY
I'm frightfully sorry. There is a telephone in the Public House about a mile down the road. I suggest you use that.

ALEX
But, missus, this is an emergency. It's a matter of life and death. Me friend's lying in the middle of the road bleeding to death.

CATLADY
I... I'm very sorry, but I never open. I'm very sorry but I never open the door to strangers after dark.

ALEX
Very well, madam. I suppose you can't be blamed for being suspicious with so many scoundrels and rouges of the night about.

Alex walks away from door, then ducks into the bushes where the others are hiding. They put on their maskies and follow Alex round to the rear of the house.

ALEX
Dim, bend down.
(Alex points to an upstairs window)
I'm gonna get in that window and open the front door.

He climbs up drain-pipe to the bathroom window.

INT. CADLADY'S HOUSE

The Catlady enters and dials a number.

CATLADY

Hullo, Radlett Police Station. Good evening. It's Miss Weathers at Woodmere Health Farm. Look, I'm frightfully sorry to bother you but something rather odd has just happened... Well, it's probably nothing at all, but you never know... Well, a young man rang the bell asking to use the telephone... He said there had been some kind of accident. The thing that caught my attention was what he said - the words he used, sounded exactly like what was quoted in the papers this morning in connection with the writer and his wife who were assaulted last night... Well, just a few minutes ago... Well, if you think that's necessary, but, well, I'm quite sure he's gone away now. Oh... alright. Fine. Thank you very much. Thank you.

She puts phone down, turns and nearly jumps out of her leotard when she sees Alex in the doorway.

ALEX

Hi, hi, hi there, at last we meet.

CATLADY

What the bloody hell d'you think you're doing?

ALEX

Our brief goverreet thru the letter hole was not, shall we say, satisfactory, yes?

CATLADY

Now listen here, you little bastard, just you turn around and walk out of here the same way as you came in.

Alex eyes a giant white, fibreglass phallic sculpture on the table beside him.

ALEX

Naughty, naughty, naughty, you filthy old soomaka.

CATLADY

No! No! Don't touch it. That's a very important work of art. What the bloody hell do you want?

ALEX

You see, madam, I am part of an international student's contest to see who can get the most points for selling magazines.

CATLADY

Cut the shit, sonny, and get out of here before you get yourself in some very serious trouble.

He rocks the giant phallus which has a special weight swinging inside causing it to swing up and down an eccentric motion.

CATLADY

I told you to leave it alone. Now get out of here before I throw you out, wretched slummy bedbug. I'll teach you breaking into real people's houses. Get out!

She grabs up a bust of Beethoven and rushes at Alex. He grabs the giant phallic sculpture.

Circling, Alex fends off her mad rushes with skilful jabs of the giant phallus.

She ducks under and clobbers him with the heavy bust of Beethoven.

He goes down, pulling her off balance and they both wind up the floor.

In the struggle, Alex bashes her with the phallus.

Distant Police sirens.

He exits.

EXT. CATLADY'S HOUSE - NIGHT

Alex rushes out. Dim and the others are waiting.

ALEX

Come on. Let's go, the police are coming.

DIM

One minoota, droogie.

Dim smashes Alex in the face with a full milk bottle. He goes down. The others run away, laughing.

ALEX

(screaming)

You bastards... bastards.

INT. POLICE HQ - NIGHT

Inspector takes out cigarette and lights up.

INSPECTOR

Right. Right , Tom, we'll have to our little friend, Alex, here that we know the law, too, but that knowing the law isn't everything.

He nods to Fatneck.

FATNECK

That's a nasty cut you've got there, little Alex. Spoils... all your beauty.
Who gave you that then... eh... eh...

He presses Alex's nose, inflicting great pain. Alex sinks to his knees.

ALEX

Ow... what's that for, you bastard?

FATNECK

That was for your lady victim. You ghastly wretched scoundrel.

Alex grabs his balls.

Alex is beaten by the other Cop.

Inspector exits to outside office where Sergeant sits, sipping a cup of tea.

Deltoid has just entered.

INSPECTOR

Sergeant.

SERGEANT

Sir.

INSPECTOR

Ah, good evening, Mr. Deltoid.

DELTOID

Evening, Inspector.

SERGEANT

Would you like your tea now, sir?

INSPECTOR

No, thank you, Sergeant. We'll have it later. May I have some paper towels, please.

SERGEANT

Yes, sir.

INSPECTOR

We're interrogating the prisoner now.
Perhaps you'd care to come inside.

DELTOID

Thank you very much

They move into Interrogation Room.

Alex is on the floor in the corner covered with blood.

DELTOID

Evening, Sergeant. Evening, all. Dear, dear, this boy does look a mess, doesn't he? Just look at the state of him.

FATNECK

Love's young nightmare like.

INSPECTOR

Violence makes violence. He resisted his lawful arrestors.

DELTOID

Well, it's happened, Alex boy, yes. Just as I thought it would, yes. Dear, dear, dear. Well, this is the end of the line for me... the end of the line, yes.

ALEX

It wasn't me, brother, sir. Speak up for me, sir, for I'm not so bad. I was led on by the treachery of others, sir.

INSPECTOR

Sings the roof off lovely, he does that.

ALEX

And where are my stinking traitorous droogs. Get them before the get away. It was all their idea, brothers. They forced me to do it. I'm innocent.

DELTOID

You are now a murderer, little Alex. A murderer, yes.

ALEX

Not true, sir. It was only a slight tolchock. She was breathing, I swear it.

DELTOID

I've just come back from the hospital. Your victim has died.

ALEX

You try to frighten me, sir, admit so, sir. This is some new form of torture. Say it, brother, sir.

DELTOID

It will be your own torture. I hope to God it will torture you to madness.

FATNECK

If you'd care to give him a bash in the chops, sir. Don't mind us. We'll hold him down. He must be a great disappointment to you, sir.

Deltoid spits in Alex's face.

HELICOPTER VIEWS OF PRISON

ALEX (V.O.)

This is the real weepy and like tragic part of the story beginning, O my brothers and only friends. After a trial with judges and a jury, and some very hard words spoken against your friend and humble narrator, he was sentenced to 14 years in Staja No. 84F among smelly perverts and hardened prestoopnicks, the shock sending my dad beating his bruised and kroovy rookas against unfair Bog in his Heaven, and my mom, boohooing in her mother's grief as her only child and son of her bosom, like letting everybody down real horrorshow.

INT. PRISON CHECK-IN ROOM - DAY

A bell rings and a Warden goes and unlocks first a wooden door and then a barred door.

GUARD

Morning. One up from Thames, Mister.

WARDER

One in from Thames, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Right. Open up, Mister.

WARDER

Yes, sir.

He opens door and steps back. Alex and another Warden move to Reception desk.

WARDER

Good morning, sir. Committal sheet.

CHIEF GUARD

(who shouts everything)

Thank you, Mister.

He signs sheet.

GUARD

Name?

ALEX
Alexander de Large.

CHIEF GUARD
You are now in H.M. Prison Parkmoor and from this moment you will address all prison officers as sir! Name?

ALEX
Alexander de Large, sir.

CHIEF GUARD
Crime?

ALEX
Murder, sir.

CHIEF GUARD
Right. Take the cuffs off him, Mister.

The cuffs are removed.

CHIEF GUARD
You are now 655321 and it is your duty to memorise that number.

He hands clipboard back to Warder.

CHIEF GUARD
Thank you Mister. Well done.

WARDER
Thank you, chief.

CHIEF GUARD
Let the officer out.

Officer exits.

CHIEF GUARD
Right. Empty your pockets!

Alex moves to desk and leans forward.

CHIEF GUARD
Are you able to see that white line painted on the floor directly behind you, 655321?

ALEX
Yes, sir.

CHIEF GUARD
Then your toes belong on the other side of it!!!

ALEX
Yes sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Right carry on.

Alex tosses a bar of chocolate on the desk.

CHIEF GUARD

Pick that up and put it down properly.

Alex does so, and continues to empty his pockets.

CHIEF GUARD

One half bar of chocolate. One bunch of keys on white metal ring. One packet of cigarettes. Two plastic ball pens - one black, one red. One pocket comb - black plastic. One address book - imitation red leather. One ten penny piece. One white metal wristlet watch, "Timawrist" on a white metal expanding bracelet. Anything else in your pockets?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Right. Sign here for your valuable property.

Alex signs.

CHIEF GUARD

The chocolate and cigarettes you brought in - you lose that as you are now convicted. Now go over to the table and get undressed.

Alex walks to table and undresses. Chief Guard moves to table with his clipboard.

CHIEF GUARD

Now then, were you in Police custody this morning?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One jacket - blue pinstripe.

CHIEF GUARD

Prison custody?

ALEX

Yes, sir On remnd, sir.

CHECK-IN

One neck tie - blue.

CHIEF GUARD

Religion?

ALEX

C of E, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Do you mean Church of England?

ALEX

Yes, sir, Church of England, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Brown hair, is it?

ALEX

Fair hair, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Blue eyes?

ALEX

Blue eyes, yes, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Do you wear eye glasses or contact lenses?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One shirt - blue, collar attached.

CHIEF GUARD

Have you been receiving medical treatment for any serious illness?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One pair of boots - black leather, zippered, worn.

CHIEF GUARD

Have you ever had any mental illness?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Do you wear any false teeth or false limbs?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One pair of trousers - blue pinstriped.

CHIEF GUARD

Have you ever had any attacks of fainting or dizziness?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One pair of socks - black.

CHIEF GUARD

Are you an Epileptic?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHECK-IN

One pair of underpants - white with blue waistband.

CHIEF GUARD

Are you now, or ever have been, a homosexual?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Right. The mothballs, Mister.

CHECK-IN

Mothballs, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Now then. Face the wall. Bend over and touch your toes.

Chief Guard inspects Alex's anus with a penlight.

CHIEF GUARD

Mmmmmmm... any venereal disease?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Crabs?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Lice?

ALEX

No, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Through there for a bath.

ALEX

Yes, sir.

INT. PRISON CHAPEL - DAY

Priest in pulpit big rough state-proper type.

Convict audience.

Alex sits apart tending an overhead projector.

PRIEST

I ask you friends. What's it going to be then? Is it going to be in and out of institutions like this? Or more in then out for most of you? Or are you going to attend the divine word and realise the punishment that awaits unrepentant sinners in the next world as well as this. A lot of Idiots you are, selling your birthright for a saucer of cold porridge. The urge to live easy. I ask you friends, is it worth it? When we have undeniable proof - yes, my friends, incontrovertible evidence that Hell exists. I know, I know, my friends. I have been informed in visions that there is a place darker than any prison, hotter than any human flame of fire, where unrepentant criminals, sinners like yourselves...

A convict burps.

All laugh.

PRIEST

Don't you laugh, damn you, don't you laugh. I say like yourselves - scream in endless and unendurable agony. Their nostrils choked with the smell of filth, their mouths crammed with burning ordure. Their skins rotting and peeling. A fireball spinning in their screaming guts. I know... oh yes, I know.

A convict lets rip some lip music - prrrrrrrrp. There is laughter. Chief Guard moves forward - points.

CHIEF GUARD

I saw you, 920537. I saw you.

CONVICT

Up yours, mate.

CHIEF GUARD

Just you wait, 744678. One on the turnip coming up for you.

PRIEST

Quiet, my friends. Quiet. Quiet, I say. We will now sing Hymn 258 in the Prisoner's Hymnal.

Piano starts up and Alex starts up overhead projector which displays the words of the hymn.

CHIEF GUARD

Show a little reverence, you bastards.
Quiet!

Convicts and all start to sing.

SINGING

I was a wandering sheep.
I did not love...

CHIEF GUARD

Sing up damn you. Louder, sing up.

SINGING

... the fold
I did not love my shepherd's voice.
I would not be controlled.

CHIEF GUARD

Come on, sing up, damn you.

SINGING

I was a wayward child
I did not love my home
I did not love my father's voice
I loved afar to roam.

ALEX (V.O.)

It had not been edifying, indeed not, being in this hell hole and human zoo for two years now, being kicked and tolchocked by brutal warders, and meeting leering criminals and perverts ready to dribble all over a luscious young malchick like your story-teller.

INT. PRIEST'S LIBRARY - DAY

Alex reading the Bible.

ALEX (V.O.)

It was my rabbit to help the prison charlie with the Sunday service. He was a bolshy great burly bastard, but he was very fond of myself, me being very young, and also now very interested in the big book.

Priest walks by and nods pleasantly.

ALEX (V.O.)

It had been arranged by the prison charlie, as part of my further education to read him the Bible. I didn't so much like the latter part of the book which is more like all preachy talking, than fighting and the old in-out. I liked the parts where these old yahoodies tolchock each other and then drink their Hebrew vino and, then getting on to the bed with their wives' handmaidens. That kept me going.

BIBLE FANTASY - FIGHTING - DAY

Biblical fighting shot. Alex slashing away. Blood spurting.

HANDMAIDEN FANTASY IN TENT - DAY

Alex lying with three semi-nude handmaidens.

EXT. BIBLICAL STREET

Christ being whipped on by Alex, dressed as a Legionary.

ALEX

Move on there. Move on.

ALEX (V.O.)

I read all about the scourging and the crowning with thorns and all that, and I could viddy myself helping in and even taking charge of the tolchocking and the nailing in, being dressed in the height of Roman fashion.

BACK TO THE LIBRARY

Alex sits with his eyes closed.

Priest comes over and squeezes his shoulder.

Alex looks up at him and smiles.

PRIEST

(reading from Alex's Bible)

Seek not to be like evil men, neither desire to be with them, because their minds studieth robberies and their lips speak deceits.

ALEX

If thou lose hope being weary in the days of distress, thy strength shall be diminished.

PRIEST

Fine, my boy, fine, fine.

ALEX

Father, I have tried, have I not?

PRIEST

You have, my son.

ALEX

I've done my best, have I not?

PRIEST

Indeed.

ALEX

And, Father, I've never been guilty of any institutional infractions, have I?

PRIEST

You certainly have not, 655321. You've been very helpful, and you've shown a genuine desire to reform.

ALEX

Father - may I ask you a question in private?

PRIEST

Certainly, my son, certainly. Is there something troubling you, my son? Don't be shy to speak up. Remember, I know all the urges that can trouble young men deprived of the society of women.

ALEX

No Father. It's nothing like that, Father. It's about this new thing they're all talking about. About this new treatment that you out of prison in no time at all and makes sure you never get back in again.

PRIEST

Where did you hear about this? Whose been talking about these things?

ALEX

These things get around, Father. Two Warders talk as it might be, and somebody can't help overhearing what they say. Then somebody picks up a scrap of newspaper in the workshops and the newspaper tells all about it. How about putting me in for this new treatment, Father?

PRIEST

I take it you are referring to the Ludovico Technique?

ALEX

I don't know what it's called, Father, all I know is that it gets you out quickly and makes sure that you never get in again.

PRIEST

That's not proven, 655321. In fact, it is only in the experimental stage at this moment.

ALEX

But it is being used, isn't it, Father?

PRIEST

It has not been used yet in this prison. The Governor has grave doubts about it and I have heard that there are very serious dangers involved.

ALEX

I don't care about the danger, Father. I just want to be good. I want for the rest of my life to be one act of goodness.

PRIEST

The question is weather or not this technique really makes a man good. Goodness comes from within. Goodness is chosen. When a man cannot chose, he ceases to be a man.

ALEX

I don't understand about the whys and wherefores, Father. I only know I want to be good.

PRIEST

Be patient, my son, and put your trust in the Lord.

ALEX

Instruct thy son and he shall refresh thee and shall give delight to thy soul.

PRIEST

Amen.

They cross themselves.

EXT. PRISON YARD - DAY

Prisoners walking in circles.

INT. PRISON CORRIDOR

Guards stand either side of cell doors.

Chief Guard with Governor, Minister and entourage.

CHIEF GUARD

Mister.

GUARD

All present and correct, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Right. All present and correct, sir.

GOVERNOR

Very good, Chief.

They inspect cells.

CHIEF GUARD

Leave to carry on, sir, please?

GOVERNOR

Carry on, Chief.

CHIEF GUARD

Sir.

EXT. PRISON YARD

Chief Guard comes out of door.

CHIEF GUARD

Right, pay attention. I want you in two lines. Up against that wall facing this way. Go on move! Hurry up about it and stop talking.

The men line up. Chief Guard moves back to door and comes to attention.

CHIEF GUARD

Ready for inspection, sir.

He stands back and salutes as Governor, Minister and entourage enter and walk along line of men.

MINISTER

How many to a cell?

GOVERNOR

Four in this block, sir.

MINISTER

Cram criminals together and what do you get - concentrated criminality... crime in the midst of punishment.

GOVERNOR

I agree, sir. What we need are larger prisons. More money.

MINISTER

Not a chance, my dear fellow. The Ggovernment can't be concerned any longer with outmoded penological theories. Soon we may be needing all of out prison space for political offenders. Common criminals like these are best dealt with on a purely curative basis. Kill the criminal reflex that's all. Full implementation in a year's time. Punishment means nothing to them, you can see that... they enjoy their so-called punishment.

Alex seizes his chance as they pass by.

ALEX

You're absolutely right, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

Shut your bleedin' hole!!!

MINISTER

Who said that?

ALEX

I did, sir.

MINISTER

What crime did you commit.

ALEX

The accidental killing of a person, sir.

CHIEF GUARD

He brutally murdered a woman, sir, in furtherence of theft. 14 years... sir!

MINISTER

Excellent. He's enterprising, aggressive, outgoing. Young. Bold. Viscous. He'll do.

GOVERNOR

Well, fine... we could still look at C-Block.

MINISTER

No, no, no. That's enough. He's perfect. I want his records sent to me. This vicious young hoodlum will be transformed out of all recognition.

ALEX

Thank you very much for this chance, sir.

MINISTER

Let's hope you make the most of it, my boy.

GOVERNOR

Shall we go to my office?

MINISTER

Thank you.

INT. GOVERNOR'S OFFICE - DAY

Governor seated at his desk. There is a knock on the door.

GOVERNOR

Come in.

Door opens. Chief Guard enters with Alex.

CHIEF GUARD

Sir, 655321, sir.

GOVERNOR

Very good, Chief.

Chief Guard turns to Alex.

CHIEF GUARD

Forward to the white line, toes behind it.
Full name and number to the Governor.

Chief Guard closes door.

ALEX

Alexander de Large, sir. 655321, sir.

The Governor takes off his glasses.

GOVERNOR

I don't suppose you know who that was this morning, do you? That was no less a personage than the Minister of the Interior and what they call a very new broom. Well, these new ridiculous ideas have come at last, and orders are orders, though I may say to you in confidence that I do not approve. An eye for an eye, I say, if someone hits you, you hit back, do you not? Why then should not the State very severely hit by you brutal offenders not hit back also? But the new view is to say no. The new view is that we turn the bad into good. All of which seems to be grossly unjust. HMMMMMMMM.

ALEX

Sir...

CHIEF GUARD

Shut your filthy hole, you scum!!!

GOVERNOR

You are to be reformed. Tomorrow you go to this man, Brodsky. You will be leaving here. You will be transferred to the Ludovico Medical Facility. It is believed that you will be able to leave State custody in a little over a fortnight. I suppose that prospect pleases you?

CHIEF GUARD

Answer when the Governor asks you a question you filthy young swine!

ALEX

Oh yes, sir. Thank you very much, sir. I've done my best here I really have, sir. I'm very grateful to all concerned.

GOVERNOR

Sign this - where it's marked.

Alex turns the paper to read it.

CHIEF GUARD

Don't read it - sign it!

GOVERNOR

It says that you are willing to have the residue of your sentence commuted to the Ludovico treatment.

Alex signs. Governor gathers up papers.

Alex dots the last "i" and smiles.

INT. LUDOVICO CENTRE RECEPTION DESK - DAY

ALEX (V.O.)

The next morning I was taken to the Ludovico Medical Facility, outside the town centre, and I felt a malenky bit sad having to say goodbye to the old Staja, as you always will when you leave a place you've like gotten used to.

Chief Guard briskly leads the way for Alex and escort. They move into reception hall where the Doctor stands.

CHIEF GUARD

(shouting like an RSM)

Right. Halt the prisoner. Good morning, sir, I'm Chief Officer Barnes. I've got 655321 on a transfer from Parkmoor to the Ludovico Centre, sir!

DOCTOR

Good morning, we've been expecting you. I'm Dr. Alcott.

Chief Guard checks the name from his clipboard.

CHIEF GUARD

Yes, Dr. Alcott. Are you prepared to accept the prisoner, sir?

DOCTOR

Yes, of course.

CHIEF GUARD

Well, I wonder if you'd mind signing these transfer documents, sir.

Doctor signs.

CHIEF GUARD

Thank you, sir. There, sir... there, and there, sir... and there. Thank you, sir. Prison escort move forward. Halt. Excuse me, sir. Is that the officer that is to take charge of the prisoner, sir?

Doctor nods. Officer steps forward.

CHIEF GUARD

If I might offer a word of advice, Doc. You'll have to watch this one. A right brutal bastard he has been, and will be again. In spite all his sucking up to the prison Chaplain and reading the Bible.

DOCTOR

Oh, I think we can manage things. Charlie, will you show the young man to his room now.

CHARLIE

Right, sir. Come this way, please.

Alex exits with Officer.

INT. ALEX'S ROOM - LUDOVICO CENTRE - DAY

Alex finishing breakfast tray in bed.

Room bright and cheery.

Dr. Branom, a tall woman in her fifties, enters with nurse carrying a sterile tray.

DR. BRANOM

(very briskly)

Good morning, Alex, my name is Dr. Branom. I'm Doctor Brodsky's assistant.

ALEX

Good Morning, Missus. Lovely day, isn't it?

DR. BRANOM

Indeed it is. May I take this

She removes his tray.

DR. BRANOM

How're you feeling this morning?

ALEX

Fine... fine.

DR. BRANOM

Good. In a few minutes, you'll meeting Dr. Brodsky and we'll begin your treatment. You're a very lucky boy to have been chosen.

ALEX

I realise all that, Missus, and I'm very grateful to all concerned.

DR. BRANOM

We're going to friends now, sir.

ALEX

I hope so, Missus.

She inserts a needle into the medicine vial.

ALEX (CONT'D)

What's the hypo for then? Going to send me to sleep?

DR. BRANOM

Oh no, nothing of the sort.

ALEX

Vitamins will it be then?

DR. BRANOM

Something like that. You are a little undernourished, so after each meal were going to give you a shot. Roll over on your right side please, loosen your pajama pants and pull them half-way down.

He does, somewhat reluctantly. She gives him a shot in the bum.

ALEX

What exactly is the treatment here going to be then?

DR. BRANOM

It's quite simple really. Were just going to show you some films.

ALEX
You mean like going to the pictures?

DR. BRANOM
Something like that.

ALEX
Well, that's good. I like to viddy the old films now and again.

INT. AUDIO VISUAL LUDOVICO CENTRE - DAY

Auditorium setting. Alex is bound in a examination chair in front of a large video screen. A white-coated Technician is strapping Alex's head to a medical device.

He then carefully attaches the eyelid locking to Alex's eyes.

ALEX (V.O.)
And viddy films I would. Where I was taken to, brothers, was like no cine I'd been in before. I was bound up in a straight-jacket and my guliver was strapped to a headrest with like wires running away from it. Then they clamped like lidlocks on my eyes so I could not shut them no matter how hard I tried. It seemed a bit crazy to me, but I let them get on with what they wanted to get on with. If I was to be a free young malchick in a fortnight's time,
I would put up with much in the meantime,
my brothers.

At the back of the auditorium are ten or fifteen solemn medical Professionals in white coats watching the proceedings and occasionally taking notes. A film begins showing on the screen.

The Technician drops eyedrops into Alex's eyes.

VIOLENCE FILM

Man being beaten by four toughs wearing white.

Punches, kicks, grunts, blood.

ALEX (V.O.)
So far the first film was a very good professional piece of cine, looked like it was done in Hollywood.

Screams, moans, kicks, punches.

ALEX (V.O.)

The sounds were real horroshow. You could slooshy the screams and moans very realistic and you could even get the heavy breathing and panting of the tolchocking malchicks at the same time. And then, what do you know, soon our dear old friend, the red, red vino on tap. The same in all places like it's put out by the same big firm, began to flow. It was beautiful. It's funny how the colors of the real world only seem really real when you viddy them on a screen.

More kicks, punches, groans, thumps.

Girl being beaten, raped by six toughs.

Screams, music, laughing, grunts, heavy breathing.

ALEX (V.O.)

Now all the time I was watching this, I was beginning to get very aware of like not feeling all that well, but I tried to forget this, concentrating on the next film, which jumped right away on a young devotchka, who was being given the old in-out, in-out, first by one malchick, then another, then another. This seemed real, very real, though if you thought about it properly you couldn't imagine lewdies actually agreeing to having all this done to them in a film, and if these films were made by the good, or the State, you couldn't imagine them being allowed to take these films, without like interfering with what was going on.

Girl being raped.

ALEX (V.O.)

When it came to the sixth or seventh malchick, leering and smecking and then going into it, I began to feel really sick. But I could not shut my glazzies and even if I tried to move my glazballs about I still not get out of the line of fire of this picture.

Alex squirming and retching.

Dr. Brodsky clears his throat and quietly addresses his colleagues seated in the back of the room.

DR. BRODSKY

Very soon now the drug will cause the subject to experience a death-like paralysis together with deep feelings of terror and helplessness. One of our earlier test subjects described it as being like death, a sense of stifling and drowning, and it is during this period we have found the subject will make his most rewarding associations between his catastrophic experience and environment and the violence he sees.

Alex retching violently and struggling against his strait jacket.

ALEX

Let me be sick... I want to get up. Get me something to be sick in... Stop the film... Please stop it... I can't stand it any more. Stop it please... please.

INT. ALEX'S ROOM - LUDOVICO - DAY

DR. BRANOM

Well, that was a very promising start. By my calculations, you should be starting to feel alright again. Yes? Dr. Brodsky's pleased with you. Now tomorrow there'll be two sessions, of course, morning and afternoon.

ALEX

You mean, I have to viddy two sessions in one day?

DR. BRANOM

I imagine you'll be feeling a little bit limp by the end of the day. But we have to be hard on you. You have to be cured.

ALEX

But it was horrible.

DR. BRANOM

Well, of course, it was horrible. Violence is a very horrible thing. That's what you're learning now. Your body is learning it.

ALEX

I just don't understand about feeling sick the way I did. I never used to feel sick before. I used to feel like the very opposite. I mean, doing it or watching it, I used to feel real horrorshow. I just don't understand why, how or what.

DR. BRANOM

You felt ill this afternoon because you're getting better. You see, when we're healthy we respond to the presence of the hateful with fear and nausea. You're becoming healthy that's all. By this time tomorrow you'll be healthier still.

INT. AUDIO VISUAL LUDOVICO CENTRE - DAY

Alex retching and screaming - restrained again by a straight-jacket.

ALEX (V.O.)

It was the next day, brothers, and I had truly done my best, morning and afternoon, to play it their way and sit like a horrorshow co-operative malchick in the chair of torture, while they flashed nasty bits of ultra-violence on the screen.; though not on the soundtrack, my brothers. The only sound being music. Then I noticed in all my pain and sickness what music it was that like cracked and boomed. It was Ludwig van - 9th symphony, 4th movement.

ALEX

Stop it... stop it, please!!! I beg of you!!! It's a sin!!! It's a sin!!! It's a sin, please!!!

Brodsky leans forward and turns down the sound.

DR. BRODSKY

What's all this about sin?

ALEX

That!... Using Ludwig van like that! He did no harm to anyone. Beethoven just wrote music.

DR. BRANOM

Are you referring to the background score?

ALEX

Yes!!!

DR. BRANOM

You've heard Beethoven before?

ALEX

Yes!!!

DR. BRODSKY

You're keen on music?

ALEX

Yes!!!

DR. BRANOM

(quietly)

What do you think about that, Dr. Brodsky?

DR. BRODSKY

(softly)

It can't be helped. Here's your punishment element perhaps. The Governor ought to be pleased... I'm sorry, Alex, this is for your own good, you'll have to bear with us for a while.

ALEX

You needn't take it any further, sir. You've proved to me that all this ultra-violence and killing is wrong and terribly wrong. I've learned my lesson, sir. I see now what I've never seen before I'm cured, praise Bog!

DR. BRODSKY

You're not cured yet, my boy.

DR. BRODSKY

You must take your chance boy. The choice has been all yours.

ALEX

But, Sir... Missus... I see that it's wrong! It's wrong because it's like against like society. It's wrong because everybody has the right to live and be happy without being tolchoked and knifed.

DR. BRODSKY

No, no, boy. You really must leave it to us, but be cheerful about it. In less than a fortnight now, you'll be a free man.

INT. AUDITORIUM - DAY

VIP audience including Minister, Junior Minister, Prison Governor, Priest, Dr. Branom, Dr. Brodsky.

Dressed in street clothes Alex enters led by a white-coated Technician.

He is led onto stage and left standing there, blinking into lights.

The Minister rises and walks to the front of the auditorium.

MINISTER

Ladies and Gentlemen, at this point, we introduce the subject himself. He is, as you will perceive, fit and well nourished. He comes straight from a night's sleep and a good breakfast, undrugged, un hypnotized. Tomorrow, we send him with confidence out into the world again, as decent a lad as you would meet on a May morning. What a change is here, Ladies and Gentlemen, from the wretched hoodlum the state committed to unprofitable punishment some two years ago, unchanged after two years. Unchanged, do I say - not quite. Prison taught him a false smile, the rubbed hands of hypocrisy, the fawning, greased, obsequious leer. Other vices prison taught him as well as confirming him in those he had long practiced before. Our party promised to restore law and order and to make the streets safe for the ordinary peace loving citizen. This pledge is now about to become a reality. Ladies and Gentlemen, this is an historic moment. The problem of criminal violence is soon to be a thing of the past. But enough of words - actions speak louder than. Action now. Observe all.

He returns to his seat and leans close to his Junior Minister.

JUNIOR MINISTER

Our necks are out a long way on this, Minister.

MINISTER

I have complete faith in Brodsky. If the polls are right, we have nothing to lose.

Lights are dimmed. Enter Lardface, an elegantly dressed fag.

LARDFACE

Hello, heap of dirt. Pooh, you don't wash much do you, judging by the horrible smell.

ALEX

Why do you say that, brother? I had a shower this morning.

LARDFACE

Oh, he had a shower this morning. You trying to call me a liar?

ALEX

No, brother. What d'you want?

LARDFACE

What do I want?

ALEX

Sorry, brother. I didn't mean any offence.

LARDFACE

Oh. Oh, you're sorry are you, well you must think I'm awfully stupid.

He slaps Alex in the face.

ALEX

Why did you do that, brither? I've never done wrong to you.

LARDFACE

You want to know why I did that, well you see - I do that...

He stamps on Alex's foot.

LARDFACE

... and this...

He pulls Alex's nose.

LARDFACE

... and that...

He pulls Alex's ear, pushes him off balance and plants his foot on his chest.

LARDFACE

... because I don't like you horrible type, do I, and if you want to start something... if you want to start... go on... well, you just start. Please do.

Alex retching.

ALEX

I'm gonna be sick.

LARDFACE

You're gonna be sick are you?

ALEX

I wanna be sick.

LARDFACE

You wanna be sick?

ALEX

Let me get up.

LARDFACE

You wanna get up? Well, you've gotta you see... well I want you to lick it. Go on... Lick it.

Alex, gagging and coughing, licks the sole of his shoe.

LARDFACE

... And again... Go on!!! Again! There's a good boy.

ALEX (V.O.)

And, O my brothers, would you believe your faithful friend and long suffering narrator pushed out his red yahzik a mile and a half to lick the grahzny, vonny boots. The horrible killing sickness had wooshed up and turned the like joy of battle into a feeling I was going to snuff it.

Minister rises.

MINISTER

Enough! That will do very well. Thank you.

Lardface does leading-man-bows. A smattering of applause.

LARDFACE

Thank you very much, Ladies and Gentlemen... Thank you.

Alex on floor - still retching.

A beautiful nude Girl enters.

Alex looks up slowly.

ALEX (V.O.)

She came towards me with the light like it was the like light of heavenly grace, and the first thing that flashed into my gulliver was that I would like to have her right down there on the floor with the old in-out, real savage. But quick as a shot came the sickness, like a detective that had been watching around the corner and now followed to make his arrest.

Alex retching. Minister rises.

MINISTER

Thank you very much. Thank you my dear.

Girl bows and exits to loud applause.

MINISTER

Not feeling too bad now are you?

ALEX

(pulling himself together)

No, sir, I feel really great.

MINISTER

Good.

ALEX

Was I alright, sir? Did I do well, sir?

MINISTER

Fine. Absolutely fine. You see, Ladies and Gentlemen our subject is, you see, impelled towards good by paradoxically being impelled toward evil. The intention to act violently is accompanied by strong feelings of physical distress. To counter these, the subject has to switch to a diametrically opposed attitude. Any questions?

Priest rises and moves to Alex.

PRIEST

Choice! The boy has no real choice, has he? Self interest, fear of physical pain drove him to that grotesque act of self abasement. Its insincerity was clearly to be seen. He ceases also to be a creature capable of moral choice.

MINISTER

Padre, these are subtleties. We are not concerned with motive, with the higher ethics; we are concerned only with cutting down crime. And with relieving the ghastly congestion in our prisons... He will be your true Christian, ready to turn the other cheek. Ready to be crucified rather than crucify, sick to the very heart at the thought even of killing a fly. Reclamation, joy before the angels of God. The point is that it works!

Applause.

EXT. FLATBLOCK

Alex walking carrying his prison parcel wrapped in brown paper.

INT. ALEX'S FLAT

Ma, Pa and Joe the Lodger reading newspapers. Headlines - all Alex.

Alex enters quietly. Loud radio music from sitting room prevents anyone from hearing him. He enters his won room which is the first off the hall.

ALEX

Hi. Hi. Hi, there my Pee and Em.

All three look up startled.

EM

Alex.

ALEX

(to his mother)

Hullo love, how are you?

(kisses her)

Nice to see you, Dad.

PEE

Hullo lad. What a surprise, good to see you.

ALEX

Keeping fit then?

PEE

(very ill at ease)

Fine, fine.

ALEX

Well, how are you then?

PEE

Oh fine, fine. Keeping out of trouble, you know.

ALEX

Well - I'm back.

PEE

(with feigned enthusiasm)

Aye. Glad to see you back, lad.

EM

Why didn't you let us know what was happening, son?

ALEX

Sorry, Em, I wanted it to be like... a big surprise for you and pee.

PEE

Well, it's a surprise all right, a bit bewildering too.

EM

We've only just read about it in the morning papers.

PEE

Aye. You should have let us know, lad, not that we're not very pleased to see you again. All cured too, eh?

ALEX

That's right, Dad they did a great job on my gulliver, I'm completely reformed.

PEE

Aye.

ALEX

(looks in the kitchen)

Well, still the same old place then, eh?

PEE

Oh, aye, aye.

ALEX

(fake whisper)

Hey, Dad, there's a strange fella sitting on the sofa there munchy-wunching lomticks of toast.

PEE

Aye, that's Joe. He... ummmm, lives here now. The lodger. That's what he is... he... he rents your room.

Alex confronts Joe.

ALEX

How do you do, Joe? Find the room comfortable, do you? No complaints?

JOE

I've heard about you. I know what you've done. Breaking the hearts of your poor grieving parents. So you're back? You're back to make a life of misery for your lovely parents, is that it? Well, over my dead corpse you will, because you see, they've let me be more like a son to them than like a lodger.

Alex cocks his fist and starts to retch violently, almost at the same moment Joe drops back on the couch next to Em.

EM

Joe! Joe! Don't fight here boys!

Alex burps and retches.

JOE

Oh, please. Do put your hand over your mouth, it's bloody revolting.

Alex violently ill.

PEE

Well, what's the matter lad, are you feeling alright?

EM

Dad... It's the treatment.

More retching.

JOE

Well, it's disgusting. It puts you off your food.

EM

Leave him be, Joe. It's the treatment.

PEE

D'you think we should do something?

EM

Would you like me to make you a nice cup of tea, son?

ALEX

No thanks, Mum. It'll pass in a minute...
(after a pause)
... What have you done with all my own personal things?

PEE

Well. That was all took away, son, by the Police. New regulation about compensation for the victim.

ALEX

What about Basil? Where's my snake?

PEE

Oh well, he met with like an accident. He passed away.

Alex becomes a bit weepy.

ALEX

What's gonna happen to me then? I mean that's my room he's in - there's no denying that. This is my home also. What suggestions have you, my Pee and Em, to make?

PEE

Well, all this needs thinking about, son. I mean we can't very well just kick Joe out... Not just like that, can we? I mean Joe is here doing a job. A contract it is, two years. Well, we made like an arrangement, didn't we Joe? You see, son, Joe's paid next month's rent already so, well, whatever we do in the future, we cant just say to Joe to get out, now can we?

JOE

No, there's much more than that, though. I mean I've got you two to think of. I mean you're more like a mother and father to me. Well, it wouldn't be fair now, would it, for me to go off and leave you two to the tender mercies of this young monster who's been like no real son at all. Look, let him go off and find a room somewhere. Let him learn the errors of his way, and that a bad boy like he's been don't deserve such a good mum and dad as he's had.

ALEX

Alright. I see how things are now. I've suffered and I've suffered, and I've suffered and everybody wants me to go on suffering.

JOE

You've made others suffer. It's only fair that you should suffer proper. You know I've been told everything you've done, sitting here at night round the family table, pretty shocking it was to listen to. It made me real sick, a lot of it did. Now look what you've gone and done to your mother.

Em bursts into tears.

ALEX

So that's the way it is then, eh? That's the way it is. Right, I'm leaving now, you won't ever viddy me no more. I'll make my own way. Thank you very much. Let it lie heavy on your consciences.

Alex exits.

PEE

(shouting after him)

Now don't take it like that son.

Em boohooohoos, Joe comforts her.

EXT. AMBANKMENT - DAY

Alex walks along the Thames embankment still holding his paper parcel.

Tramp enters. The same man beaten by Alex and his gang earlier in the film.

TRAMP

Can you spare me some cutter, me brother?
Can you spare some cutter, me brother?

Alex, without looking at him, reaches in his pocket and gives him some money.

TRAMP

Oh, thankyou, your honour.

The Tramp takes a second look at Alex.

TRAMP

Jamey Mack! Be the hokey fly! Holy Mother of God! All the Holy Angels and blessed saints in Heaven preserve us.

Alex breaks away but the Tramp toddles alongside him.

TRAMP

I never forget a face! I never forget any face, be God!

ALEX

Leave me alone, brother. I've never seen you before.

Tramp shouts to other Meths drinkers and Tramps.

TRAMP

This is the poisonous young swine that near done me in. Him and his friends beat me and kicked me and thumped me.

Alex breaks away again.

TRAMP

Stop him! Stop him!

A leg is stuck out and Alex goes down. The tramp swarm all over him.

TRAMP

They laughed at me blood and me moans. This murderous young pig is a prize specimen of the cowardly brutal young. He is in our midst and at our mercy. Give it to him. That's it.

Old Tramps begin to beat at Alex.

ALEX (V.O.)

Then there was like a sea of dirty, smelly old men trying to get at your humble Narrator, with their feeble rookers and horny old claws. It was Old Age having a go at Youth and I daren't do a single solitary thing, O my brothers, it being better to be hit at like that, than want to be sick and feel that horrible pain.

The Tramp crowd round Alex, shouting.

TRAMPS

Young hooligan... Vagabound... Kill him...
Villain... Toad... Bastard... Kick his teeth in... Near killed poor old Jack, he did.

Police move in and push off crowd.

FIRST POLICEMAN

Alright, stop it now.

SECOND POLICEMAN

Alright, stop it now. Alright! Come on.
Stop breaking the State peace. You naughty boys. Alright, that's enough.

Alex looks up.

ALEX

Oh, no.

DIM

Well, well, well, well, well, well, well, if it isn't little Alex. Long time no viddy, droog. How goes? Surprised are you?

ALEX

Impossible... I don't believe it.

GEORGIE

Evidence of the old glazzies. Nothing up our sleeves. No magic, little Alex? A job for two, who are now of job age. The police.

EXT. COUNTRY ROAD - DAY

Police Landrover drives up.

Alex is pulled out by Georgie and Dim and hustled up a deserted lane.

DIM

Come on, Alex. Come for walkies.
Hahahahaha.

ALEX

Come, come, my little droogies. I just don't get this at all. The old days are dead and gone. For what I did in the past I've been punished.

DIM

Been punished, yeah?

ALEX

I've been cured.

DIM

Been cured, yeah, that was read out to us.
The Inspector read all that out to us. He said it was a very good way.

ALEX

I just don't get this all. It was them that went for me, brothers. You're not on their side and can't be. You can't be Dim.
It was someone we fillied with back in the old days... Trying to get his own malenky bit of revenge after all this time. You remember, Dim?

DIM

Long time, is right. I don't remember them days too horrorshow. Don't call me Dim no more, either. Officer, call me.

GEORGIE

Enough is remembered though, little Alex.

Dim and Georgie laugh.

They drag Alex to a low water through.

DIM

This is to make sure you stay cured.

Georgie hits Alex in the stomach with his blackjack. Then, they push his head under the water and methodically start to beat him with their blackjacks.

After a full minute of this, they drag him out, halt-drowned,

DIM

(laughing)

Be viddyng you some more, some time Alex.

EXT. "HOME" - NIGHT - HEAVY RAIN

Alex stumbles up the road to the entrance gate.

ALEX (V.O.)

Where was I to go, who had no home and no money. I cried for meself, Home, Home, Home. It was Home I was wanting and it was Home I came to, brothers, not realising in the state I was in, where I was and had been before.

Alex stumbles and crawls to the door.

INT. "HOME" - NIGHT

Mr. Alexander at his typewriter.

Julian a 6'4" - heavyweight weight-lifter lies across an exercise bench working with bar-bells.

The door bell rings.

MR. ALEXANDER
Who on earth could that be?

JULIAN
I'll see who it is.

He goes to the door.

JULIAN
Yes, what is it?

No reply. He opens the door. Alex falls into the hall.

ALEX
(barely audible)
Help. Help me... Help me... Police.

Julian picks him up like a child and carries him into the living room.

INT. "HOME" - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

ALEX (V.O.)
And would you believe it, O my brothers and only friends, there was your faithful Narrator being held helpless, like a babe in arms, and suddenly realising where I was and why HOME on the gate had looked so familiar. But I knew I was safe. I knew he would not rememeber me for, in those carefree days, I and my so-called droogs wore our maskies which were like real horrorshow disguises.

JULIAN
Frank, I think this young man needs help.

MR. ALEXANDER
Dear, dear, dear. Whatever happened to you, my boy?

Mr. Alexander, now confined to a wheelchair, pushes himself away from his desk, and rolls up to Julian. The water drips off Alex's clothes. They look at each other.

ALEX
The police... The horrible ghastly Police.
They beat me up, sir. The Police beat me up, sir.

Mr. Alexander stares at him. It becomes aparent he is insane.

MR. ALEXANDER

I know who you are! Isn't it your picture in the newspapers? Didn't I see you this morning on the video? Are you not the poor victim of this horrible new technique?

ALEX

Yes, sir, that's exactly who I am, sir... and what I am... a victim, sir.

Mr. Alexander becomes frenzied as the speech progresses.

MR. ALEXANDER

Then, by God, you have been sent here by providence. Tortured in prison, then thrown out to be tortured by the Police. My heart goes out to you, poor, poor boy. Oh, you are not the first to come here in distress. The Police are fond of bringing their victims to the outskirts of this village. But it is providential that you, who are also another kind of victim, should come here. But you're cold and shivering. Julian, draw a bath for this young man.

JULIAN

Certainly, Frank.

He carries Alex off.

ALEX

Thank you very much, sir. God bless you, sir.

Alexander bites his hand.

INT. "HOME" - BATHROOM

Alex soaks, eyes closed, in a hot tub.

After a while he begins softly singing to himself: "Singin' in the Rain".

INT. "HOME" - LIVING ROOM - DAY

Mr. Alexander is hunched over the phone, talking in hoarse whipsers. The door to the bathroom is right behind him. While he speaks Mr. Alexander throws nervous glances over his shoulder.

MR. ALEXANDER

I tell you, sir, they have turned this young man into something other than a human being. He has no power of choice any more. He's committed to socially acceptable acts, a little machine capable only of good... He can be the most potent weapon imaginable to ensure that the Government is not returned at the next election. The Government's great boast, as you know sir, is the way they have dealt with crime in the last few months. Recruiting brutal young roughs into the police, proposing debilitation and will-sapping techniques of conditioning. Oh, we've seen it all before in other countries. The thin end of the wedge. Before we know where we are we shall have the full apparatus of totalitarianism. This young boy is a living witness to these diabolical proposals. The people - the common people - must know... must see! There are rare traditions of liberty to defend. The tradition of liberty means all. The common people will let it go! Oh, yes - they will sell liberty for a quieter life. That is why they must be led, sir, driven... pushed!!! Thank you very much, sir. He'll be here.

Trembling with excitement and madness, Mr. Alexander hangs up the phone. His eyes, shiny with anticipation. Then, suddenly, he becomes aware of Alex's voice coming from the other side of the door.

INT. "HOME" - BATHROOM

Alex in bath, singing.

ALEX

I'm singing in the rain,
Just singing in the rain...

MR. ALEXANDER

His face horribly distorted in a Homeric rage.

INT. "HOME" - NIGHT

Alex, alone, in complete silence. Eating a large plate of spaghetti. The giant, Julian, appears, carrying Mr. Alexander in his wheelchair. He deposits him at the table.

ALEX

Good evening, sir.

MR. ALEXANDER
(very weird)
Good evening.

ALEX
It was very kind of you to leave this out for me, sir. There was no-one around when I finished my bath, so I started. I hope that's alright, sir.

MR. ALEXANDER
(too loud - voice out of control)
Of course. Food alright?

ALEX
Great, sir. Great.

MR. ALEXANDER
Try the wine!

ALEX
Thank you very much, sir. Cheers

Suddenly the thought occurs to Alex that the wine may be drugged or poisoned.

ALEX
Won't you join me, sir?

MR. ALEXANDER
No, my health doesn't allow it.

ALEX
(to Julian)
And you, sir?

JULIAN
No thank you.

Alex, stalling for time, reaches for bottle and reads the label.

ALEX
1960, Chateau, Saint Estephe, Medoc, very good brand, sir.

He doesn't get a penny's change for his remarks from Alexander and Julian.

He holds the glass up to the light.

ALEX
Very good colour, sir. Smells mice, too. Very good number, sir. Very good.
Here's to it.

He downs the glass.

ALEX
Very refreshing, sir, very refreshing.

MR. ALEXANDER
(very arch)
I'm so pleased you appreciate good wine.
Have another glass!

ALEX
Thank you, sir.

MR. ALEXANDER
My wife...

Alex freezes.

MR. ALEXANDER
... used to do everything for me and leave me to my writing.

ALEX
Your wife, sir? Has she gone away?

MR. ALEXANDER
No. She's dead!

ALEX
I'm sorry to hear about that, sir.

His face contorted in rage.

MR. ALEXANDER
She was very badly raped, you see. We were assaulted by a gang of vicious young hooligans in this house, in this very room you're sitting in now. I was left a helpless cripple. The doctors said it was Pneumonia, because it happened some months later during the 'flu epidemic. The doctors told me it was Pneumonia, but I knew what it was. A victim of the modern age, poor, poor girl.

Suddenly his mood changes. He wheels right up to Alex.

MR. ALEXANDER
And now you, another victim of the modern age. But you can be helped. I phoned some friends while you were having a bath.

ALEX
Phoned some friends, sir?

MR. ALEXANDER
Yes. They want to help.

ALEX
Help me, sir?

MR. ALEXANDER
Help you.

ALEX
Who are they, sir?

MR. ALEXANDER
They're very, very important people and they're interested in you.

Bell rings. Julian rises,

MR. ALEXANDER
Julian. This will be these people now.

Alex gets up.

ALEX
Look, sir. I'm sorry to have troubled you.
I think I ought to be going, sir.

Julian bars the way.

MR. ALEXANDER
No, no my boy. No trouble at all.

Alex slowly sits.

MR. ALEXANDER
Have another glass of wine.

He pours. Alex picks up glass and takes a drink.

INT. "HOME" - NIGHT

Dolin and Rubinstein enter with Julian.

DOLIN (genial) Hullo, Frank.

MR. ALEXANDER
Good evening, sir.

RUBINSTEIN
Frank.

DOLIN
So this is the young man?

ALEX
How do you do, sir?

DOLIN
Hullo.

ALEX
Missus. Very pleased to meet you.

RUBINSTEIN
Hullo.

DOLIN

I hope you forgive us for coming over at this ungodly hour, but we heard from Frank that you were in some trouble so we came over to see if we could be of any help.

ALEX

Very kind of you, sir. Thank you very much.

DOLIN

I understand that you had a rather unfortunate encounter with the Police tonight.

ALEX

Yes, sir. I suppose you might call it that, sir.

DOLIN

Hahaha, and how are you feeling now?

ALEX

Much better, thank you, sir.

DOLIN

Feel like talking to us. Answering a few questions?

ALEX

Fine, sir, fine.

DOLIN

Well, as I've said, we've heard about you. We are interested in your case. We want to help you.

ALEX

Thank you very much, sir.

DOLIN

But first we'd like to find out a few things about you.

ALEX

What would you like to know, sir?

DOLIN

Well, shall we get down to it?

ALEX

Yes, sir.

Rubinstein takes out a notebook.

RUBINSTEIN

The newspapers mentioned that in addition to your being conditioned against acts of sex and violence, you've inadvertently been conditioned against music.

ALEX

Well, er, I think that was something that they hadn't planned for, you see, Missus, I'm very fond of music and always have been, especially Beethoven, Ludwig van... Beethoven. B... E... E...

He leans over and looks at her writing in notebook.

RUBINSTEIN

It's alright, thank you.

ALEX

And it just so happened that while they were showing me a particularly bad film, of like a concentration camp, the background music was playing Beethoven.

RUBINSTEIN

So now you have the same reaction to music as you do to sex and violence?

ALEX

Oh well, it's... it's not all music you see, Missus. It's just the 9th.

RUBINSTEIN

You mean Beethoven's 9th Symphony?

ALEX

That's right. Er... I can't listen to the 9th any more at all. When I hear the 9th, I get like this funny feeling.

RUBINSTEIN

When you say this funny feeling, you mean the state of mind brought on by the treatment they gave you?

ALEX

That is correct, sir. And then all I can think about is like trying to snuff it.

RUBINSTEIN

I beg your pardon?

ALEX

Snuff it, sir... um... death, I mean, missus... Er... I just want to die peacefully like with no... pain.

RUBINSTEIN

Do you feel that way now?

ALEX

Um... oh no, sir, not exactly, I still feel very miserable, very much down in spirits.

RUBINSTEIN
Do you still feel suicidal?

ALEX
Um... well, put it this way... I feel very low in myself. I can't see much in the future, and I feel that any second something terrible is going to happen to me.

He pitches forward, face into the plate of spaghetti.

RUBINSTEIN
Well done, Frank. Julian, get the car, will you please?

INT. HI-FI ROOM - DAWN

Alexander sits looking up. Rubinstein, Julian and Dolin also listening to Beethoven played loudly on tape recorder.

INT. DOLIN'S HOUSE - PRISONER BEDROOM - DAY

The 9th Symphony booming up through the floor.

Alex slowly regains consciousness.

ALEX (V.O.)
I woke up. The pain and sickness all over me like an animal. Then I realised what it was. The music coming up from the floor was our old friend, Ludwig van and the dreaded 9th Symphony.

He staggers to the door. It is locked. He kicks and tugs the door.

ALEX
Open the door... turn it off... turn it off.

CUT TO:

THE BILLIARD ROOM BELOW

Hi-Fi gear laid out on the table. Large speakers facing upwards.
Mr. Alexander trembles and twitches. He is now completely mad. The others merely wait, coolly.

INT. DOLIN'S HOUSE - PRISONER BEDROOM - DAY

Alex on his knees. His hands cupped over his ears, banging his head on the floor.

Then he stops and slowly straightens up, staring at the window.

ALEX (V.O.)

Suddenly I viddied what I had to do, and what I had wanted to do - and that was to do myself in, to snuff it, to blast off forever out of this wicked cruel world.
One moment of pain perhaps and then sleep
- forever and ever and ever.

EXT. WINDOW - DAWC

Alex leaps out of the window.

INT. HOSPITAL WARD

Alex in bed. Camera slowly tracks along length of his body.
Everything is bandages and plaster splints, wire cages, blood drips.

ALEX (V.O.)

I jumped, O my brothers, and I fell hard but I did not snuff it, oh no. if I had snuffed it, I would not be here to tell what I have told. I came back to life, after a long, black, black gap of what might have been a million years.

We hear Alex moan, and then another moan. Alex and the other - a few times.

Suddenly, some curtains which have been drawn around another bed in the ward are parted, and a nurse hurries to Alex, hastily buttoning up her uniform. She is trailed by a young Intern fumbling with his trousers.

NURSE

Oh, he's recovered conscienceness, Doctor.

INT. HOSPITAL - DAY

Em and Pee sitting around the bed.

PEE

Hullo, lad.

EM

Hullo, son, how are you?

PEE

Are you feeling better?

ALEX

What gives, O myee P and Em, what makes you think you are welcome?

Em sobs. Pee comforts her.

PEE

There, there mother, it's alright. He doesn't mean it. You were in the papers again, son. It said they had done great wrong to you. It said how the Government drove you to try and do yourself in... and when you think about it, son... maybe it was our fault too in a way... your home's your home when it's all said and done, son.

Em sobs.

INT. HOSPITAL

Psychiatrist wheels trolley to Alex's bed. He is sitting up.

ALEX

Good morning, Missus.

DR. TAYLOR

How are you feeling today?

ALEX

Fine. Fine.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. I'm doctor Taylor.

ALEX

I haven't seen you before.

DR. TAYLOR

I'm your Psychiatrist.

ALEX

Psychiatrist? Huh, do I need one?

DR. TAYLOR

Just part of hospital routine.

ALEX

What are we going to do? Talk about me sex life?

DR. TAYLOR

No... I'm going to show you some slides and you are going to tell me what you think about them Alright?

ALEX

Ohhh... jolly good. Perhaps you can explain me something to me first.

DR. TAYLOR

Yes?

ALEX

Well, when I was all like ashamed up and half awake and unconscious like, I kept having this dream like all these doctors were playing around with me gulliver. You know... like the inside of me brain. I seemed to have this dream over and over again. D'you think it means anything?

DR. TAYLOR

Patients who've sustained the kind of injuries you have often have dreams of this sort. It's all part of the recovery process.

ALEX

Oh.

DR. TAYLOR

Now then, each of these slides needs a reply from one of the people in the picture. You'll tell me what you think the person would say. Alright?

ALEX

Righty, right.

The doctor reads aloud the dialogue printed in the cartoon balloon - a peacock.

DR. TAYLOR

Isn't the plumage beautiful?

ALEX

I just say what the other person would say?

DR. TAYLOR

Yes. Yes, well don't think about it too long, just say the first thing that pops into your mind.

ALEX

Right... Knickers... Cabbages... It doesn't have a beak.

Alex laughs. Slide of woman speaking to boy.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. The boy you always quarrelled with is seriously ill.

ALEX

That's right and I'll smash your face for you, yarblockos.

Slide of watch shop.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. It wa your fault... you sold me a crummy watch. I want my money back.

ALEX

Bollocks. You know what you can do with that watch? You can stick it up your arse.

Slide of nude woman in bed, a man at the window.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. What do you want?

ALEX

Excuse me, missus. No time for the old in-out, I've just come to read the meter.

Slide of bird's nest with eggs.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. You can do whatever you like with these.

ALEX

Eggiwegs. I would like to smash 'em. Pick up th elot and f... owww...

He slams his hand down and cries out with pain.

ALEX

Fucking hell...

DR. TAYLOR

Fine. Well, that's all there is to it. Are you alright?

ALEX

I hope so. Is that the end then?

DR. TAYLOR

Yes.

ALEX

I was quite enjoying that.

DR. TAYLOR

Good. I'm glad

ALEX

How many did I get right?

DR. TAYLOR

It's not that kind of a test. But you seem well on the way to a complete recovery.

ALEX

And when do I get out of here then?

DR. TAYLOR

I'm sure it won't be long now.

INT. HOSPITAL - DAY

Alex sitting up, being fed by Nurse.

ALEX (V.O.)

So I waited and, O my brothers, I got a lot better munching away at eggielegs, and lomticks of toast and lovely steakiweaks and then, one day, they said I was going to have a very special visitor.

Doctor enters followed by Minister and Matron.

MINISTER

Good evening, my boy.

ALEX

Hi, hi, hi there, my little droogies.

DOCTOR

Well, how are you getting on today, young man?

ALEX

Great, sir. Great.

DOCTOR

Can I do anything more for you , Minister?

MINISTER

I don't think so, Sir Leslie. Thank you very much.

DR. TAYLOR

Then I'll leave you to it. Nurse.

They exit. Minister moves to Alex.

MINISTER

You seem to have a whole ward to yourself, my boy.

ALEX

Yes, sir, and a very lovely place it is too, sir, when I wake up in the middle of the night with my pain.

MINISTER

Yes... well good to see you on the mend. I've kept in constant touch with the hospital, of course, and now I've come to see you personally to see how you're getting along.

ALEX

I've suffered the tortures of the damned. The tortures of the damned, sir.

MINISTER

Yes I can... Oh look, let me do that for you, shall I?

ALEX

Thank you, sir.

MINISTER

I can tell you that I... and the Government of which I am a member are deeply sorry about this, my boy. Deeply sorry. We tried to help you. We followed recommendations had been made to us that turned out to be wrong. An enquiry will place the responsibility where it belongs. We want you to regard us as friends. We've put you right, you're getting the best of treatments. We never wished you harm, but there are some that did and do, and I think you know who those are. There are certain people who wanted to use you for political ends. People who would have been glad to have you dead because then they would have been able to blame it all on the Government. I think you know who those are. There is also a certain man - a writer of subversive literature - who has been howling for your blood. He's been mad with desire to stick a knife into you, but you're safe from him now, we've put him away. He found out that you had done wrong to him - at least he believed you had done wrong. He had formed this idea in his head that you had been responsible for the death of someone near and dear to him. We put him away for his own protection... I'm sorry, I thought you were ready.

ALEX

Where is he now, sir?

MINISTER

We put him away where he can do you no harm. You see we are looking after your interests. We are interested in you, and when you leave here you will have no further worries. We shall see to everything... a good job on a good salary.

ALEX

What job and how much?

MINISTER

You must have an interesting job at a salary which you would regard as adequate. Not only for the job which you are going to do and in compensation for what you believe you have suffered, but also because you are helping us.

ALEX

Helping you, sir?

MINISTER

We always help our friends, don't we?

(smiles)

It is no secret that the Government has lost a lot of popularity because of you, my boy. There are some that think that at the next election we shall be out. The press has chosen to take a very unfavorable view of what we tried to do.

ALEX

Well, who can bame them, sir?

MINISTER

Mmmmm, possibly. Yes. But public opinion has a way of changing and you, Alex, if I may call you, Alex?

ALEX

Certainly, sir. What do they call you at home?

MINISTER

My name is Frederick. As I was saying, Alex, you can be instrumental in changing the public verdict. Do you understand, Alex? Have I made myself clear?

ALEX

As an unmuddied lake, Fred. As clear as an azurw sky of deepest summer. You can rely on me, Fred.

MINISTER

Good... good boy. Oh yes, I understand you're fond of music. I have arranged a little surprise for you.

ALEX

Surprise?

MINISTER

One I think you will like... as a, how shall I put it, as a symbol of our new understanding. An understanding between two friends.

ALEX

Thank you, Fred. Thank you.

Minister turns and signals.

Door opens and a crowd of cameramen and reporters rush in.

Aides push two 6-foot loudspeakers and a Hi-Fi on a trolley.

ALEX (V.O.)

And what do you know, my brothers and only friends, it was the 9th, the glorious 9th of Ludwig van. Oh, it was gorgeosity and yummy yum yum. I was cured.

CLOSE SHOT ALEX

ALEX (V.O.)

As the music came to ist climax, I could viddy myself very clear, running and running on like very light and mysterious feet, carving the whole face of the creeching world with my cut throat britva. I was cured all right.

THE END

All Types of Doors

rolling steel, overhead, warehouse exit, entrance, parking lot, retail www.citygatesusa.com

Ads by GoogleAffordable Home Builder

We Build Custom
Homes & Additions.
Free Design
Consult. SF Bay Area.
www.AJStoneBuilders

Asbuilts - Floor Plans

Measured Drawings
Existing Conditions Drafting, LLC
www.ExistingConditic

ABSOLUTE POWER

Written by WILLIAM GOLDMAN

Based on the book by DAVID BALDACCI

May 1996 Draft

Search IMSDb

Alphabetical

A B C D E F G H
I J K L M N O P Q
R S T U V W X Y Z

Genre

Action Adventure Animation
Comedy Crime Drama
Family Fantasy Film-Noir
Horror Musical Mystery
Romance Sci-Fi Short
Thriller War Western

SponsorFOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES ONLY*FADE IN:

1 INT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

1

The saddest eyes you ever saw.

We are looking at an El Greco drawing. It is a study for one of his paintings.

PULL BACK TO REVEAL --

A bunch of art students are doing sketches of the eyes, the elongated fingers, the slender hands El Greco drew so brilliantly.

Most of the students are around 20. A couple of suburban housewives are there too.

And one older man.

This is LUTHER WHITNEY. Mid 60s, very fit, neatly dressed. At quick glance, he seems as if he might be a successful company executive.

As we watch him draw we can tell he is capable of great concentration. And patient. With eyes that miss nothing: He has pilot's eyes.

We'll find out more about him as time goes on, but this is all you really have to know: Luther Whitney is the hero of this piece. As we watch him draw --

Luther's sketchbook. He is finishing his work on the eyes, and he's caught the sadness: It's good stuff.

Luther. It's not good enough for him. He looks at his work a moment, shakes his head.

GIRL STUDENT

Don't give up.

LUTHER

TV Transcripts

Futurama
Seinfeld
South Park
Stargate SG-1
Lost
The 4400

Movie Software

Blu-Ray ripper

Save the seals

Latest Comments

Inglourious Basterds	10/10	2
Relic, The	10/10
Miami Vice	8/10
Resident Evil	10/10
Hangover, The	6/10

Movie Chat

ALL SCRIPTS

She's indicated his sketchbook. He nods. She starts thumbing through.

The sketchbook as the pages turn.

Detail work. Eyes and hands. The eyes are good. The hands are better. Very skillful.

(CONTINUED)

) B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 2.

1 CONTINUED: 1

The GIRL hands it back. Impressed.

GIRL STUDENT

You work with your hands, don't you?

CLOSEUP - LUTHER

An enigmatic smile. Now, from that --

2 EXT. RED'S BAR - DAY 2

A nice working class part of town. Nothing fancy here but there's a pleasant feel. The streets are clean, the houses neat and well tended.

Luther, carrying his sketchbook, walks along. It's afternoon now. Up ahead is a local bar: RED'S.

3 INT. RED'S BAR - DAY 3

Luther walks in. Nothing fancy here. Strictly working class. And relatively empty. An overweight bald man Luther's age works behind the bar. This is RED. They are good enough friends not to ask each other questions.

LUTHER

(as they nod to each other)

Redhead.

RED

Luther.
 (as Luther hands him a videotape)
 Your life would be a whole lot simpler if you could learn to operate a V.C.R.

LUTHER

My only failing.

As he turns --

4 EXT. NEIGHBORHOOD - LUTHER'S HOUSE - DAY 4

A street of small row houses. Clean, well tended. Luther walks toward one. Later in the afternoon. He carries half a dozen small shopping bags, from the market, the hardware store, the drug store, the cleaners.

3.

5 EXT. LUTHER'S HOUSE - DAY

5

A terra cotta planter to the right of the front door. Luther shifts his packages, tilts the planter slightly, bends down, pulls out a key, inserts it in the front door.

6 INT. LUTHER'S HOUSE - KITCHEN - DAY

6

as he enters. Neat, tidy. A Cuisinart, a cheese slicer, lots of other nice equipment. As he begins putting food away --

7 INT. LUTHER'S HOUSE - DINING AREA - NIGHT

7

Evening now. Table set for one. A single candle. Beside the candle is Luther's sketch pad. Now Luther himself moves INTO VIEW, carrying a tray. He puts it down.

A gorgeous omelet is on a fine china plate, parsley sprinkled neatly on top. An elegant green salad is on another plate, covered with thinly sliced parmesan cheese. An expensive water pitcher, a lovely glass. Clearly, a great deal of thought has gone into dinner.

Luther lights the single candle. We are now aware of a photograph nearby. The picture is old. A pretty little girl stands in the center, smiling. Her mother stands alongside, smiling too. A man is with them, looking at them happily. It's Luther. When he was young.

Luther studies the photo a moment. Then he turns, looks out the window.

8 POV SHOT - SLIVER OF MOON

8 is visible. Lovely. Peaceful.

9 LUTHER

9

Now Luther opens the sketch pad, quickly flips past the hands and eyes and faces --

-- we are looking at something totally different: a mansion.

HOLD ON Luther's drawing of the mansion.

KEEP HOLDING.

PULL BACK to reveal --

4.

10 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT

10

In the moonlight -- it looks exactly like his drawing.

But no drawing could convey the size of the place -- we are looking at ten thousand square feet. Wealth and power.

We're in rolling hill country. The mansion is dark.
Totally deserted. Silence.

Now a sound - TIRES ON GRAVEL. A car comes rolling INTO VIEW. The motor of the car has been turned off. The lights of the car have been turned off. The car slides to a stop. Again, silence...

HOLD ON mansion, a couple of hundred yards away. There is a small field between the car and the estate. Now --

11 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION/INT. LUTHER'S CAR - NIGHT

A man holds binoculars, studying the place. He wears dark clothes, tennis shoes. He puts down the binoculars, begins to smear his face with black camouflage cream --

-- it's Luther, and he's been a professional thief his entire life. He's a three-time loser, but his last sentence was so long ago and his skills are now so vast, so refined, that it is unlikely he will ever get caught again.

12 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - GROUNDS - NIGHT

The grounds as Luther glides through it. He wears a backpack.

The night is cool.

He stops. All that separates him from the mansion now is a stretch of gorgeous lawn. Except for Luther, it isn't gorgeous -- it's no-man's land.

One final check of his surroundings -- then he sets off, in graceful motion, long strides eating up the ground. He makes no sound at all.

13 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - FRONT DOOR - NIGHT

Thick wood with reinforced steel.

Luther stops by the door, takes off his backpack, opens it. He puts on plastic gloves that have a special layer of padding at the fingertips and palms. Now he takes a key, inserts it in the front door, turns it, and the instant he pushes the door open -- ZOOM TO:

5.

14 INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - FOYER - NIGHT

The infrared SECURITY DETECTOR -- it immediately starts to BEEP and you can see the seconds being counted down: forty, thirty-nine, thirty --

CUT TO:

15 LUTHER

-- in his hands now is an automatic screwdriver, no more than six inches long --

-- he sets to work on the security panel that is inside in the foyer next to the front door.

The screwdriver undoes the first screw, the second --

CUT TO:

16 SECURITY DETECTOR 16

Thirty-one, thirty, twenty --

CUT TO:

17 SCREWDRIVER 17

Now the third and fourth screws are in hands and he lifts the security panel away.

The BEEPING sound is constant -- -- and getting louder.

A tiny device, no bigger than a pocket calculator. It has two wires protruding from it. It is, we are about to find out, a tiny computer. Luther holds it like a baby.

CUT TO:

18 SECURITY DETECTOR 18

Eighteen, seventeen --

CUT TO:

19 LUTHER 19

probing with the wires into the heart of the security panel.

(CONTINUED)

6.

19 CONTINUED: 19

The BEEPING is LOUDER still.

The security panel. Luther is attempting delicate work and it's dark so it isn't easy but he continues to probe with the wires and --

CUT TO:

20 SECURITY DETECTOR 20

Eleven, ten --

CUT TO:

21 LUTHER 21

and he's got it attached!

22 COMPUTER 22

Now the face of the tiny computer is alive with numbers -- they fly by much too fast for us to make them out clearly.

CUT TO:

23 SECURITY DETECTOR 23

Four, three, two --

CUT TO:

24 FACE OF TINY COMPUTER 24

as five numbers lock -- 7 -- 13 -- 19 -- 8 -- 11 --

The BEEPING sound dies.

CUT TO:

25 LUTHER 25

A glance across the foyer -- the lights of the security detector go from red to a warm looking green.

Safe.

(CONTINUED)

7.

25 CONTINUED: 25

He allows himself to exhale. Then he's busy again, unhooking the computer. His fingers, as always, work quickly, precisely.

25A INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - FOYER - NIGHT 25A

The foyer as Luther, once again carrying his backpack, moves across it. Behind him, the front door is again shut, the security panel back on, screws all in place.

It's as if he hadn't been there at all...

26 INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - STAIRCASE - NIGHT 26

Luther walks quickly up -- and here we get a sense of the vast size of the place -- it feels bigger inside than it looked in the moonlight.

A Van Gogh at the head of the stairs. Luther moves past it, then stops, goes back, studies the painting. It's a late one, when the madness had him and things were sliding away. Very sad.

Luther looks at it admiringly for another moment --

-- then surprisingly he raises his hand, and for just an instant traces the lines of the painting in the air, as if trying to figure out how the magic was done, as if getting ready for his next museum session --

-- then almost grudgingly, he moves on, up toward the third floor.

27 INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - THIRD-FLOOR LANDING - NIGHT 27

Here's a Hopper. One of the great ones, filled with an overpowering sense of being alone --

-- Luther stares at it almost in awe, whispers "wow," moves on.

28 INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - HALLWAY - NIGHT

28

Luther, walking down the third-floor corridor.

The corridor walls. No paintings here -- instead we see a series of framed photographs. The first is of a baby girl, the next one of the same child at three.

We watch the child grow up in these photos. At ten she is already pretty. At fifteen a stunner.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

8.

28 CONTINUED:

28

Not a classic beauty by any means, she is turning into, if you will a latter-day Ann-Margret. The kind of girl you ached for in high school. The perfect cheerleader.

These are pictures, we will come to know, of Christy Sullivan. A high school graduation shot at eighteen, a shot in front of a Burger King at twenty.

CLOSEUP - WEDDING PHOTOGRAPH

*

Christy, looking just fabulous, is 24 and smiling happily. We can only see her face and the wedding veil here. Now --

PULL BACK to reveal --

A glorious and expensive white wedding dress. Christy holds a bouquet of flowers. Breathtaking.

KEEP PULLING BACK.

And now we can see the groom. Walter Sullivan. Walter is smiling too, one arm proudly around his lovely bride.

Walter, it might be noted, is eighty years old.

Luther, staring at the photo, shakes his head. Now he moves on.

29 INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

29

Luther opens the DOOR. It SQUEAKS. He goes inside, closes the door firmly. Next, he puts his backpack down, takes out a low-power non-glare work light, sets it up. Now he looks around. A huge room, a gigantic canopied bed.

A nightstand alongside, which contains a small silver clock, three Danielle Steel novels piled neatly one atop the other, several more photos of the happy couple --

-- and an antique silver-plated letter opener with a thick leather handle.

Luther. He studies himself in front of a very large full-length mirror across from the canopied bed.

Now we realize something -- he isn't studying himself, he's studying the mirror itself.

He turns, goes to the sitting area where there are chairs and a sofa and a large TV and VCR.

(CONTINUED)

9.

29 CONTINUED:

29

Three remotes on a side table. Luther carefully picks up the middle one, crosses the room with it, points it at the large mirror, clicks once --

-- and the mirror swings silently open.

A room is revealed. All we can see of it so far is this:
There is an armchair in the middle facing where the mirror had been.

Luther turns back toward the sitting area, the remote held in his hand.

The side table. Luther puts the remote down -- very carefully. In the exact position it had been. Now he takes a moment, blows on his hands, rubs them together.

Then -- Luther takes a collapsible duffel bag out of his backpack, moves with the work light into the revealed room --

30 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - VAULT - NIGHT

30

It's a vault! And it's FULL! There's cash, naturally, piles of the stuff. Plus all kinds of other valuables we'll get around to.

Luther's a little stunned -- it's more than he hoped for.

He glances at the armchair -- there is a remote on it that is identical to the one he replaced at the side table.

Now he opens his duffel all the way and sets to work.
First the cash goes in -- all neatly bundled. Large denominations. Lots of bundles. Next are a series of slender boxes --

The first box as Luther opens it.

Jewelry.

Into the duffel it goes.

Luther, emptying more jewelry boxes into the duffel. And still more. As he continues to do this --

31 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

31

All is quiet. High on a wall, the security light beams a friendly green.

Now, from somewhere, a distant sound. LAUGHTER? Was it laughter? Doesn't matter, it's gone.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 10.

32 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 32

Luther has moved deeper into it -- he's finished with the jewelry. Now he's examining piles of bonds.

Into the duffel they go.

He takes a breath, glances around. Perfect.

Coins. Antique ones. They disappear into the duffel.

Stamp books. Gone into the swelling duffel.

Luther as he hears now the DISTANT LAUGHTER. Not so perfect.

33 INT. MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 33 *

He moves quickly out of the vault, takes a step toward the door -- the GIGGLING is getting LOUDER, closer. Two people. A man and a woman.

Luther stops, mutters "shit!" -- glances around -- No place to hide. Luther, grabbing his backpack, moves into the vault, turns off his work light, and shuts the door with the remote. The DOOR CLICKS --

34 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 34

-- Luther is alone in the darkness.

A burst of LAUGHTER now. Growing nearer still.

Luther moves into the back of the vault, crouches down, doing his best to hide behind the armchair. Trapped, Luther waits in silence, trying not to breathe...

Now he can hear a SQUEAK -- the BEDROOM DOOR has opened.

HOLD.

35 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 35

Dark -- except for a slant of light from the hall outside the open bedroom door.

Two people are briefly visible as they enter, a MAN and a WOMAN. The CLINK of GLASS. Stifled LAUGHTER.

The Woman closes the bedroom door.

Darkness again.

And now the LAUGHING sound increases. GIGGLING, really.

11.

36 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 36

Luther in the pitch-black vault. The GIGGLING is MUTED but it is there. He is starting to perspire.

37 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 37

The woman flicks on the lights and as she does --

38 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

38

Luther as the burst of light hits him like a fist -- and it's over.

Luther blinks, confused, looks around --

-- because it isn't over, he hasn't been caught.

The door to the vault is suddenly gone. Luther is staring straight into the goddamn bedroom.

Because the door is a two way mirror. Now it's as if he was watching the bedroom on a giant TV screen.

Just a few feet away, just outside the door.

Where things are clearly starting to heat up.

Luther moves to the armchair, sits. There is nothing to do now but wait. He settles in.

39 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

39

They are staring at each other.

We have seen the woman already -- she's CHRISTY SULLIVAN. But the pictures in the corridor did not do her justice.

This is a fabulous-looking twenty-five-year-old woman. Long, golden hair, a round face that sets off her deep blue eyes, a tanned, curving body. A bare-shouldered black dress. An expensive necklace.

One more thing: she is staggering drunk.

The man is ALAN RICHMOND, wealthy, successful, handsome and fit. Mid-forties. He wears an elegantly-cut suit.

Two additional points: (1) Richmond is clearly not the husband in the wedding photo. (2) He is drunker than she is.

(CONTINUED)

12.

39 CONTINUED:

39

Richmond carries a vodka bottle and two tumblers. He fills them, gives one to her.

They touch glasses. Down the hatch. Tight laughter.

He looks at her.

She looks at him. There's a lot of sexual tension in the air.

But now he begins looking around, checking things out. She spots this.

CHRISTY

(drunk)

It's okay -- I told him I was sick -- anyway, he's gone -- relax...

He nods then, more at ease. And he blows her a kiss.

She catches it -- and now she starts to parade for him.
Her body moving very slowly.

He pours himself another shot, chugs it, watches. Now --

40 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 40

Luther suddenly terrified and we find out why.

41 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 41

Christy, fumbling with her necklace, looks across the room --

What she's looking at: the side table with the remote that opens the vault.

42 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 42

Luther, frozen, as Christy starts toward the table.

43 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 43

The table and the remote waiting there.

44 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 44

Luther, mouth dry...

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 13.

45 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 45

Richmond, reaching out for her, then as she passes him;
he takes her by the hand --

-- and now they are dancing, their bodies pressed together. They move slowly. She hums. He tries to get fancy, spin her with one arm --

-- no good. They're too drunk for it, starts to lose balance, separate.

They giggle. Smile at each other. Now Christy manages to unhook her necklace, and as she starts to drop it in the drawer of the nightstand --

*
*

46 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 46

Luther. A genuine sigh of relief --

-- which suddenly dies --

47 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 47

Christy, as she spins toward the table again, still with the necklace in her hand.

48 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 48

Luther, and there's nothing he can do now but watch.

49 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 49

Richmond, watching too, emptying the vodka bottle into his tumbler, chugging it down and now...

The table as Christy reaches out, grabs a remote, turns.

50 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 50

Luther dead in the water because --

51 CHRISTY'S 51

pointing the goddam thing at him --

-- and as she CLICKS it --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 14.

52 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 52

Luther, and for a moment, he's like a goddam deer caught in the headlights --

-- but now here comes another sigh of relief and we find out why.

53 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 53

Suddenly there's ROMANTIC MUSIC PLAYING -- she's turned the STEREO ON. Christy starts humming, replaces the clicker, drops the necklace in the drawer. *

Then they are into each other's arms. Their bodies press. Their bodies sway. He moves a hand to her breasts --

-- Christy breaks loose, shakes a finger at him, as if to say, "naughty, naughty" --

-- then with one hand, she pulls a zipper down. The dress falls off her body. Her breasts spring free. She is wearing only her panties now and high heels. And a smile.

She is stunning looking and she knows it and men have always gone nuts over her and she knows that too. And Richmond can't resist her either, goes to her, bends her back, caresses her neck, begins sucking her nipples. Christy moans.

54 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 54

Luther, in the chair, embarrassed, averting his eyes.

But the MOANING from the other room GROWS LOUDER, more insistent.

55 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 55

Christy, pulling away for a moment, starting to work at Richmond's tie, shakes him out of his suit jacket, reaches for his belt, loosens it. She is working at his shirt buttons now and their breathing is audible and in a moment he is down to his boxer shorts and then her panties are off, her shoes kicked away and they are near the vault mirror now. As they approach it, they stare at themselves.

56 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 56

Luther, moving farther back in his chair as their faces are just a couple of feet away --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 15.

57 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - CLOSEUP - CHRISTY - NIGHT 57 as Richmond's hands move across her wondrous body and she is hot and drifting into drunken fantasy and her eyes close and --

CLOSE ON RICHMOND

*

as his eyes are open --

-- the look on his drunken face is scary.

58 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 58

Luther, transfixed by that look, transfixed and worried.

59 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - CHRISTY AND RICHMOND IN CLOSEUP - NIGHT 59

looking at each other now, and she is smiling happily and looking at him and he is smiling happily and looking at her, and whatever was on his face just before has gone.

60 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 60

Luther, watching as they turn for the gigantic canopied bed.

61 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 61

The bed as they stop alongside it and kiss -- it's their first. And her arms go around his neck and she holds him like that, her eyes shut tight --

62 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT 62

Luther -- watching because Richmond's eyes are not shut, they are wide open and they stare at the mirror and the awful look from before is back, only worse, and then without warning, he grips her buttocks roughly --

-- and slaps her hard on the ass, over and over and Christy is shocked, surprised, pulls away. Richmond smiles at her sweetly.

Christy. Shaking her head.

Richmond. He continues to smile, makes a courtly gesture, kissing her fingertips in apology.

(CONTINUED)

16.

62 CONTINUED:

62

Christy. She smiles in acknowledgement and they move onto the bed. She pushes him down and straddles him.

Richmond, from her POINT OF VIEW -- a wonderfully-handsome man.

Christy, from his POINT OF VIEW. A glorious, vibrant young woman. She smiles, touches her lips to a finger, reaches out, touches the finger to his mouth.

It's a sweet moment.

They smile.

Then he reaches up, and without a word, grabs her breasts and squeezes and twists them brutally and Christy is shocked and she tries to make him stop but he won't, and she cries out in pain but he still won't stop so she slaps him in the face. He slaps her back, viciously, right in the mouth and now there is blood mixing with her lipstick and she rolls off the bed onto the floor.

Christy sits there stunned.

CHRISTY

(slurred)

You fucking bastard.

And on that --

Richmond, standing now, reaches down to help her up. Christy hesitates, finally takes his hand and as soon as she is on her feet --

Christy, kicking him with all she has, in the stomach.

63 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

63

Luther, silently applauding.

64 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

64

Richmond, the air momentarily out of him, falling drunkenly to the floor, stunned for just a moment and clearly in pain, but he is a big man and he is strong and he grabs her ankle, yanks, and then both are laboring on the floor and Christy kicks him again and again --

-- but he will not release her ankle. Each kick only inflames his drunken rage.

(CONTINUED)

17.

64 CONTINUED:

64

RICHMOND

(very slurred --)

You little whore --

And now they both try and stand.

Neither one does it gracefully, neither one does it quickly, but Richmond gets there first and as soon as he is on his feet he begins to strangle her.

Christy, gasping, terrified, she claws at his arms, her fingers scratching deeply --

-- but he will not let go.

She twists and jerks her body --

-- no good -- he continues to tighten his grip on her throat --

-- and spreads his legs for better balance.

The bed table, as Christy, beyond desperation reaches around for something, anything -- her fingers finally close on the letter opener and in one wild stroke, she slashes his right arm.

Now he lets go. And stares, stunned, at his bleeding arm.

Then he crunches her flush in the mouth, a brutal blow, and blood pours from her nose and mouth and if she weren't so scared, maybe it would have stopped her, but it doesn't -- because somehow she manages to maintain balance --

-- and knees him all she has, in the nuts.

It's over -- Richmond falls to the floor, helpless. He lies on his back, holding his crotch.

But it isn't over. Christy, blood pouring down her face, stands over him, the letter opener still tight in her hand.

And in her eyes you can see it, the homicidal rage --

-- and she drops to her knees beside him --

-- and Richmond can only lie there, watching her --

-- and she gets a better grip on the letter opener --

-- and Richmond still only lies there, watching her --

(CONTINUED)

18.

64 CONTINUED: (2)

64

-- and she raises the letter opener slowly very high above her head, the point aimed at his heart --

-- and Richmond screams one time --

-- and as Christy starts to kill him, two well-dressed men in business suits burst through the bedroom doorway, GUNS in their hands, and they BLOW HER BRAINS OUT before the opener reaches Richmond's heart...

65 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

65

Luther, in SLOW MOTION and this is what he does --

-- he reels back in the chair, eyes wide, jaw slack, mouth open --

-- this is a man who has seen everything but nothing has prepared him for this --

-- his arms flop over the arms of the chair, his body loses strength, he tries to look away, can't --

-- and this is what he sees --

66 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

66

Christy, fighting for another instant of life --

-- no chance --

-- the two bullets have shattered her brain, her eyes roll up into her head, the letter opener drops to the rug, she collapses like a rag doll --

-- and blood is everywhere.

67 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

67

Luther. Back in regular motion now. Pale, barely able to breathe.

68 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

68

The two well-dressed men in business suits.

BILL BURTON is the more formidable. Mid-40s, he looks like a retired tight end. No body fat. Intimidating. But right now he is shaking and he can't stop it. He puts his gun away, goes to Richmond.

(CONTINUED)

19.

68 CONTINUED:

68

TIM COLLIN is closing in on 30. Handsome. In wonderful shape. Burton is more physical, Collin more lethal. He puts his gun away, goes to Christy.

Richmond is trying to sit. He is as drunk as before but now he is also close to shock. He reaches over, manages to pick up the bloody letter opener.

RICHMOND

Kill her?

Collin, by the body, nods.

BURTON

No choice in the matter.

His words are efficient but clearly, he has been rocked.

Richmond, staring stupidly at the letter opener. He drops it back to the floor, tries to stand, can't. Burton helps him back to the bed. Which is when he passes out cold.

Burton and Collin look at each other now.

BURTON

Jesus, Tim, what did we do?

COLLIN

(echoing Burton)

No choice in the matter.

69 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

69

Luther, staring at it all. The shock is still there but so is something new: anger. And on that --

70 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

70

GLORIA RUSSELL moving through the bedroom door.
Russell's 40, well-dressed, attractive and very smart.
Now she sees what's happened, stops dead.

Now she moves forward, looks at Burton and Collin. It's very clear from the outset: these three are not friendly.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

20.

70 CONTINUED:

70

RUSSELL

(to Burton and Collin)

Do you realize what a shitstorm we're in?

(beat)

Go on -- tell me.

COLLIN

Nothing to tell. He screamed.

RUSSELL

And you heard no sounds of violence 'til then?

BURTON

(beat)

Nothing we haven't heard before.

Richmond, on the bed, out. Russell studies his face as Burton moves toward the telephone.

BURTON

Maybe I should call the police now.

CLOSEUP - RUSSELL

★

RUSSELL

(soft)

Bill? Why don't you think about that?

(beat -- starting to move toward him)

Take a second and just think about that.

(closing in on Burton, furious)

Think... real... fucking... hard.

BURTON

★

He is strong enough to snap her neck with one hand.

BURTON

(backing away)

Probably not a good idea.

RUSSELL

(taking charge)

Okay -- here's what happened tonight -- poor Christy came home alone and interrupted a burglary.
That sound logical?

21.

71 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

71

Luther in the closet. He nods.

72 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

72

Burton and Collin nod, too.

RUSSELL

We're going to have to sanitize this place.

(shaking Richmond)

Alan, did you have sex with her?

Richmond, eyes barely open.

RICHMOND

... Don'... 'member...

RUSSELL

Bill, you're going to have to examine her.

BURTON

I'm no gynecologist.

RUSSELL

(she takes nothing from nobody)

I just made you one.

End of discussion.

73 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT (LATER)

73

A clock on the side table beside the three clickers.

There is the sound of a VACUUM -- it's later now.

The place is incredibly changed. Christy is lying as before -- except now she is fully dressed. The bed has been made with clean sheets. There is a large black garbage bag that Collin shoves the sheets in, dumps in Christy's jewelry. Burton is VACUUMING the rug.

Richmond is visible, still in terrible shape, finishing putting his clothes on in the open master bedroom.

Everyone wears gloves.

Everything that is incriminating is gone --

(CONTINUED)

22.

73 CONTINUED:

73

-- except the letter opener, which has been put in a clear plastic bag. Collin reaches for it, starts to dump it in along with the sheets and the jewelry.

RUSSELL

I'll take that.

COLLIN

(surprised)

It's got their prints on it.

RUSSELL

(she holds out her hand)

Thanks for sharing.

Collin glances at Burton, shrugs, hands it over. Russell puts it in her handbag, puts the handbag on the bed table when suddenly --

Richmond, careening into the room, wide-eyed, crying out --

RICHMOND

Gloria -- I killed her --

Russell, turning, shocked as Richmond bears down --

-- she holds out her arms for him, but he is staggering and he collides hard with her, spins against the wall, uses the bed table to try to steady himself.

74 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

74

Luther, stunned, staring.

75 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

75

What he's staring at: the letter opener has spilled from her open purse and fallen behind the bed, out of sight.

Russell, calm, going to Richmond, starting to lead him from the room --

RUSSELL

It's all going to be fine, Alan.

RICHMOND

... But she's dead...

(CONTINUED)

23.

75 CONTINUED:

75

RUSSELL

... I'll take care of everything just like I always do.

(to Burton and Collin)

Gentlemen?

She gestures to leave.

Burton and Collin finish up -- Collin grabs the large plastic bag. Burton glances around one final time and backs toward the door, vacuuming carefully. Then -- Collin stops dead. He stares across at the bed table.

76 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

76

Luther, holding his breath.

77 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - BURTON AND COLLIN - NIGHT 77

COLLIN

Shit.

BURTON

What?

In reply, Collin dashes back toward the bed table, grabs Russell's purse, snaps it shut, tucks it under one arm and leaves.

Burton flicks the light out, closes the door.

The room is lit by moonlight now. Christy looks beautiful and still. HOLD for a moment.

78 EXT. MANSION - FRONT DOOR - NIGHT

78

It's open and Russell leads a staggering Richmond outside. Two dark Towncars are parked in the driveway.

Burton is behind them, turning off all lights. Collin is last, with Russell's purse, the garbage bag. As he follows them outside, he closes the front door firmly -- it makes a loud, solid sound.

79 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - LUTHER - NIGHT

79

The sound is barely audible. He has been looking at his watch --

(CONTINUED)

24.

79 CONTINUED:

79

The watch face is illuminated in the darkness. The second hand is fifteen seconds away from the top.

Luther takes a deep breath, waits in silence.

The WATCH face: the sound is loud, like "60 Minutes."

80 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - DRIVEWAY - NIGHT

80

Burton and Russell moving with Richmond toward one of the cars. Burton takes the man in his arms, leaving Russell free to open the back door.

Collin dumps the plastic bag into the trunk, shuts it, moves quickly so that he can get a decent view of the road.

The road in front of the house. Empty. Collin hurries to the Towncar where Burton is struggling to get Richmond comfortably stretched out on the back seat.

81	INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT	81
	The second hand on Luther's watch hits the top and he moves into action. -- He points the clicker at the door -- -- the door starts to swing open -- -- Luther, backpack in hand, strides quickly into the bedroom, turns, points the clicker again and as the door starts to swing shut -- Luther carefully tosses the clicker back inside.
82	INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - ARMCHAIR - NIGHT	82
	as the clicker lands -- dead-solid perfect --
83	INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT	83
	Luther, in the bedroom, moving to the nightstand, carrying his backpack -- -- he slows as he circles the body of Christy Sullivan, looks sadly down at her, continues on as we MOVE TO... (CONTINUED)
)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96	25.
83	CONTINUED:	83
	The bed table. First, Luther opens the drawer and pockets the necklace. Tense, he kneels, probes behind the table, reaches farther and then -- the letter opener! In the plastic bag. Luther grabs it. He rises, opener in hand, and goes to the far window that has a view of the front of the house. He looks out, grimaces.	* *
84	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - DRIVEWAY - NIGHT	84
	The cars are still there. Burton is visible helping Russell in. Collin hands over her purse, closes the door. He and Burton move to the front doors.
85	INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT	85
	Luther, going to the rear window. He opens the window slowly and silently. He ties one end of the rope around the leg of a heavy, wooden chest of drawers -- -- now he carefully plays the knotted rope out the window.
86	EXT. SULLIVAN DRIVEWAY - TOWNCAR - NIGHT	86
	Collin heads to one of the Towncars. In the other Burton and Russell are getting settled in the front. Richmond lies in a stupor, stretched along the rear seat. Russell --

-- a moment of relief. She breathes deep. And as Russell starts to open her purse --

87 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - KNOTTED ROPE - NIGHT 87 as it snakes down the brick mansion -- it reaches the ground.

88 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 88

Luther, putting his backpack on securely.

The window -- Luther glances out and down.

89 HIS POV - GROUND OUTSIDE SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT 89

Forty feet below. And it's dark.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 26.

90 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 90

Luther -- he doesn't much like this -- but taking hold of the rope, he puts one leg out the window -- only the damn backpack makes it complicated and he's caught for a moment, clumsily trapped with one leg in, one leg out and the backpack wedged against the corner of the window --

-- and at that moment, there is a SCREAM.

91 EXT. SULLIVAN DRIVEWAY/INT. TOWNCAR - NIGHT 91 *

Gloria Russell, as every nightmare she has ever had comes true -- the fucking letter opener isn't in her purse and as she screams again --

92 EXT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - WINDOW - NIGHT 92

Luther, cursing to himself, forcing his way out the window and it isn't easy, but he makes it and then the rope slips in his hands and for one precarious moment, he is in serious trouble and...

93 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - DRIVEWAY - NIGHT 93

The Towncar doors bursting open as Burton and Collin come barrelling out.

94 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT 94

Luther, getting his grip on the nylon rope again, starting to go down -- but it's difficult going for him.

95 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - FOYER - NIGHT 95

Burton and Collin tearing into the house, Collin in the lead.

96 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT 96

Luther in the night, thirty feet up, and he can hear

COMMOTION inside the house and he tries to go faster --

-- but it's not easy; the man is, after all, in his 60s and he's dangerously high and his visibility is rotten, so he's doing the best he can, but he isn't exactly flying.

27.

97	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - DRIVEWAY - NIGHT	97
	Russell, standing by the Towncar, staring in at the house and from the look on her face, you know she thinks her life might be over.
98	INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - STAIRCASE - NIGHT	98
	Burton and Collin, racing up the second floor staircase toward the top.
99	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT	99
	Luther, halfway down.
100	INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - HALLWAY - NIGHT	100
	Burton and Collin, tearing along the third floor corridor.
101	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT	101
	Luther, ten feet off the ground now.
102	INT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT	102
	The bedroom door, flying open.
103	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT	103
	Luther, six feet to go, three, and he lets go, drops the rest of the way, hits the ground running.
104	INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT	104
	Burton, racing toward the window, Collin goes to the night table.
105	EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - NIGHT	105
	Luther, at the end of the house, turning a corner.
106	INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT	106
	Burton, staring out the window and Luther is gone.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 28.

106 CONTINUED: 106

BURTON

Shit!

Collin, looking around the table and the letter opener is gone.

COLLIN

Shit!

And without another word, they bolt out the door.

107 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - GROUNDS - NIGHT 107

Luther, crashing through the field. He is in wonderful shape --

-- for a man his age.

And he gives it all he has but is it going to be enough?

108 EXT. SULLIVAN DRIVEWAY - NIGHT 108

The Towncar as Collin yanks something out of the glove compartment, and then he is racing off into the night after Burton who is a few steps ahead.

109 EXT. SULLIVAN DRIVEWAY/INT. TOWNCAR - NIGHT 109 *

Russell staring after them -- in the back seat, Richmond is in a half-slumber.

110 EXT. SULLIVAN MANSION - GROUNDS - NIGHT 110

Luther, bursting out of the underbrush --

-- up ahead is the most dangerous place for him --

-- one hundred yards of open field. He runs on.

111 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - BURTON AND COLLIN - NIGHT 111

as Collin catches up to the other man, tosses what he took from the glove compartment.

Thermal goggles.

They put them on, on the fly and...

29.

112 THERMAL POV 112

The world ahead of them as they see it: their FIELD OF VISION now resembles a rough computer game. THERMAL IMAGES register in red, everything else is dark green.

113 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - OPEN AREA - LUTHER - NIGHT 113

Beginning to tire now -- and he's only halfway through the open field and...

Burton and Collin, behind him, can't see him yet, but they are moving faster --

-- and Burton could probably destroy anyone in a fight --

-- but Collin can fly.

And he begins to leave Burton behind.

Luther, and twenty yards ahead of him are some woods that spur him on, he pumps his arms, his body straining and his breath coming in gasps and...

Collin, graceful and young and in fabulous shape and just ahead is the open field and as he starts into it --

114 THERMAL POV 114

What Collin sees: a THERMAL figure; a man running out of the open and then disappearing into the woods.

115 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - OPEN AREA - NIGHT 115

The sight of the figure is enough to kick Collin into overdrive and he has never run this fast as he crosses the open area.

116 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - WOODS - NIGHT 116

Luther, running through the woods -- he can hear THEM now, and he knows they're closing on him and he glances back --

-- and smashes into a fucking tree!... hard... and it rocks him, drops him to his knees --

117 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - OPEN AREA - NIGHT 117

Collin and he could be jet propelled.

30.

118 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - WOODS - NIGHT 118

Luther, forcing himself back to his feet and running again, giving it everything he has left and he's dodging through the trees now.

119 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - NEAR WOODS - NIGHT 119

Burton, behind Collin, but he draws his gun anyway --

Collin, in the woods, and his gun's drawn too --

Luther, out of the woods and now his car is visible --

Collin, in the woods but they're coming to an end.

120 THERMAL POV 120

The figure up ahead is approaching a car.

121 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - LUTHER'S CAR - NIGHT 121

Luther, throwing the car door open, ripping off his backpack, tossing it inside, jumping in behind the wheel.

122 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - WOODS - NIGHT 122

Burton. Pulling up, gasping terribly. He sinks to one knee.

Collin, out of the woods! -- Still amazingly without the least sign of tiring --

-- and now there is a sound: a CAR MOTOR STARTING.

123 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - LUTHER'S CAR - NIGHT 123

Luther in his car, wheels spinning.

124 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - WOODS - NIGHT 124

Collin has his pistol ready but it's impossible to hit anything when you're running like this.

125 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS/INT. LUTHER'S CAR - NIGHT 125

Luther, in the car, GUNNING AWAY.

31.

126 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - WOODS - NIGHT 126

Collin. Slowing.

127 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - LUTHER'S CAR - NIGHT 127

The car. A swirl of dust.

The dust clears.

The car rounds a corner, is gone.

128 EXT. SULLIVAN GROUNDS - NIGHT 128

Collin. He stands there, rips off his thermal goggles --

-- and surprisingly, he smiles.

Burton, getting to his feet, his breath still not steady. He takes his goggles off too as Collin approaches.

COLLIN

(still the smile)

I got his license number.

Now on that --

129 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT 129

Russell -- back in the bedroom, with Burton and Collin who are moving around constantly, checking the place out. Things are just amazingly tense.

RUSSELL

(close to losing it)

Gee, guys, maybe it was the bogeyman -- don't forget to check under the bed --

(exploding)

-- You may have buried us! --

COLLIN

-- relax, I got his license number, remember? --

RUSSELL

(whirling on him)

-- you think he's going to just sit around waiting for us? -- Asshole --

COLLIN

-- take it easy, Miss Russell --

(CONTINUED)

32.

129 CONTINUED:

129

BURTON

(trying for calm)

-- everybody shut up, all right?

He is staring at his reflection in the big mirror. He crosses to it, goes to his knees, studies the rug.

The rug -- indentations in the expensive carpet.

BURTON

Oh boy...

Burton and Collin with a crowbar, working at the mirror.

The MIRROR; there is a TEAR and a POP and it swings open.

130 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - NIGHT

130

All three going inside, looking around. The chair, the looted shelves. The truth thuds home.

Russell turns, looks out at the bedroom through the door.

RUSSELL

(dead)

A two-way mirror.

Silently, they move out into the bedroom.

131 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - NIGHT

131

COLLIN

-- I better get cracking on that license number --

RUSSELL

(no anger now)

-- it's all we've got -- and he's got the letter opener -- blood, fingerprints -- Jesus, think what he can do --

BURTON

(a powerful man who speaks softly)

-- the man is a thief -- a thief who witnessed a murder --

(MORE)(CONTINUED)

33.

131 CONTINUED:

131

BURTON (CONT'D)

(gesturing around)

-- it looks like he stole a whole bunch of money -- I'll tell you what he's going to do.

(beat)

He's going to run like hell.

And on that --

132 INT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

132

The saddest eyes you ever saw.

It's the next morning and Luther is back at the same old stand, looking at El Greco. The other art students are there too. So are the suburban housewives.

Everything is as it was -- calm and peaceful --

-- now a museum guard moves into the doorway, scanning the room.

Luther -- a quick glance over, then back to his sketchbook -- and from that glance it's clear all is not calm and peaceful.

The guard checks the room again.

Edgy, Luther still works away.

The guard leaves.

Luther gets set to do the same.

133 INT. RED'S BAR - DAY

133

Red, alone in his empty bar, sipping coffee. It's before the place has opened for the day.

Luther comes in the back. Red slides the videocassette over, Luther pockets it.

RED

Jordan beat us at the buzzer.

LUTHER

Bad night.

And as he turns, goes --

34.

134 EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING AREA - DAY

134

A YOUNG WOMAN parking her car -- a high rocky area above the Potomac. Below, a jogging path is visible, full of runners.

The Young Woman gets out, locks her car, starts down a narrow walk toward the joggers.

She's in her mid-thirties. A good face. And there's something familiar about her.

135 EXT. JOGGING PARK - DAY

135

Luther, standing by the edge of the jogging path, studying the runners. Now he registers something: and smiles.

The Woman in her mid-thirties as she comes jogging along.
She runs well.

Luther. An imperceptible straightening of his clothes.

The jogger. We realize who she is: the little girl in the photo on Luther's dining room table. All grown up.
Now her face registers something: his presence. Her eyes go down to the path, she increases her speed.

Luther. Waving, calling out.

LUTHER

Kate.

(as she runs on)

Kate.

She slows, hesitates, stops.

Kate, hands on hips, breathing deeply, moving to the edge of the path as he approaches. The river flows behind them. Runners pass by.

Beat.

LUTHER

Probably too late for me to take it up.

She says nothing -- he gestures toward the path.

LUTHER

The jogging.

KATE (YOUNG WOMAN)

Ahh.

(CONTINUED)

35.

135 CONTINUED:

135

Beat.

LUTHER

Dumb way to start this, I guess.

Beat.

LUTHER

Wanted to talk to you.

KATE

About?

LUTHER

Believe it or not, the weather.

(as she waits)

Nights are starting to get cold.

KATE

That happens this time of year.

Luther speaks quickly now, his voice low.

LUTHER

I was thinking of maybe relocating. Someplace with a kinder climate.
(nothing shows on her face)
I just wanted to check it out with you first...
(still nothing)
... you're the only family I've got.

And on that --

Kate speaks quickly now, her voice low.

KATE

Luther, you don't have me.

The last words in this world he wanted to hear, but you can't tell from his face.

LUTHER

Kate --

KATE

-- you know what it's like being the only kid in show and tell who got to talk about visiting day?

(CONTINUED)

36.

135 CONTINUED: (2)

135

LUTHER

This move -- I'm talking permanent, you understand.

KATE

We don't see each other anyway -- we haven't seen each other since Mom died and that's a year.
(a step toward him)
Look, you chose your life. You had that right. You were never around for me. Fine. But I have no plans to be around for you.

And now she stops, turns away toward the path --

-- Luther can say nothing, watches her --

-- then she spins back --

KATE

(louder now)
-- wait a minute -- you're lying about something, aren't you? --

LUTHER

-- no --

KATE

-- are you active again? -- is that why you're here now?

LUTHER

-- no --

Kate moves in close now --

KATE

-- I don't believe you --

(big)

-- Christ, Father, what have you done?

And on those words --

136 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - DAY136

Christy Sullivan's body.

We're back in the master bedroom but now there is a lot of police activity -- people work around the corpse. The place is covered with black fingerprint powder.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

37.

136 CONTINUED:136

SETH FRANK moves into the room -- Bogart at 40. Chief Homicide Detective of Middleton County, Virginia but he had a decade of top work in New York City. Bright, funny, and tough enough for anything you want to throw at him.

He kneels beside the body next to an older man. This is the MEDICAL EXAMINER, fat and bored. Seth studies Christy; sadly shakes his head.

SETH

Christy Sullivan?

MEDICAL EXAMINER

(nods)

Wife of Walter -- most likely came home and stumbled onto a burglary --

WOMAN (O.S.)

-- some burglary.

LAURA SIMON. Laura is early 30s, and the best lab technician Seth has ever known, and he knew some good ones in New York.

LAURA SIMON

I wish my carpets were this clean.
And I can't find a single decent fingerprint.

*

SETH

You serious, Laura?

LAURA SIMON

(bewildered)

It's like Mary Poppins was here.

SETH

Could someone have let him in?

LAURA SIMON

Sorry, Seth, but the entire

Sullivan household went to Barbados two days ago.

SETH

Thank you for your support.

(CONTINUED)

38.

136 CONTINUED: (2)

136

LAURA SIMON

Wait -- it gets worse --
(moving to the door)
-- the shots came from here. If she interrupted a burglary, she should have been here -- (moving to the bed now)
-- she was killed where she is -- all the blood patterns indicate that. But she was looking toward the bed -- what in hell was she looking at?

137 INT. SULLIVAN VAULT - DAY

137

Seth says nothing as he and Laura go in the vault. Seth stares at the chair.

LAURA SIMON

Looks like someone sat here -- but I couldn't find any prints.
(lowering her voice -- indicating the one-way mirror)
You think Sullivan holed up in the chair and watched his wife perform?

SETH

I hope not --
(shakes his head)
-- he's such a great man.

He moves back into the bedroom.

138 INT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - DAY

138

Another cop is working on the wall by the bed table where a hole the size and shape of a bullet is visible.

SETH

(as he moves past)
Careful digging that out.

The cop nods.

MEDICAL EXAMINER

Looks like he tried to strangle
her.

(CONTINUED)

39.

138 CONTINUED:

138

SETH

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

So he tried to strangle her, then went to the door and shot her from behind?

MEDICAL EXAMINER

He also inspected her vagina.

Seth. Stunned.

SETH

He did what? Why?

LAURA SIMON

Maybe he couldn't remember if he fucked her.

SETH

(has to laugh)
A strong burglar with a weak mind
-- obviously another open and shut case...

As he stares around, baffled.

139 EXT. LUTHER'S SAFE HOUSE APT. BUILDING - DAY

139

A high rise. It's in a different part of Washington than we've seen thus far. Afternoon now.

An old salesman type is trudging into the building. He's slumped, carries heavy salesman type suitcases. He wears a battered hat. As he goes inside --

140 INT. BUILDING - FOYER/MAIL AREA - DAY

140

The salesman is opening a mail slot with the name
"Hawthorne" on the outside. A good bit of mail, most of it unsolicited. Hawthorne pockets it, unlocks the foyer, heads toward the elevator.

141 INT. BUILDING - HALLWAY - DAY

141

The elevator and Hawthorne slowly getting out, heading toward a corner apartment, taking out some keys --

-- there are three locks on the door... he takes out keys --

40.

142 INT. LUTHER'S SAFE HOUSE APARTMENT - DAY

142

Hawthorne walks in, puts the suitcases down, flings his hat toward a long sofa --

-- it's Luther and this, we will come to learn, is what he keeps as his safe house. It's neatly furnished, modern and clean.

Now he moves quickly --

-- first he opens a suitcase -- it contains his full backpack from the robbery --

-- then he opens a locked closet door, revealing a very large and sophisticated safe. As he begins to work the dial --

143 INT. LUTHER'S SAFE HOUSE APARTMENT - DAY (LATER) 143

-- the TV ON in the living room as he slides the video cassette Red gave him into his machine. Everything has been put away.

The TV as Michael Jordan is introduced to the crowd --

Luther sits, nurses a beer, watches intently...

144 INT. MORGUE - DAY 144

An old man silently weeping.

This is WALTER SULLIVAN, one of the giants of the era. A self-made billionaire. Remarkably, the man has few enemies.

At 80, his body may be betraying him -- he was once handsome -- but his mind is that of a young man.

We've seen him before -- in the wedding picture on the wall of his mansion. With his young bride Christy.

He is with her again now, at the morgue. A sheet covers her body. The toe tag is visible. Walter, shattered and desolate, stares at her once joyous face.

PULL BACK to reveal --

145 INT. MORGUE - OBSERVATION ROOM - DAY 145

Seth Frank, studying Walter THROUGH a two way mirror. Seth is moved at depth of the old man's grief. Anyone would be. Walter slowly rises -- 41.

146 INT. MORGUE - DAY 146

SANDY LORD waiting in an anteroom as Walter enters...

Sandy Lord is Walter Sullivan's lawyer. He is 60, abrasive, powerful.

Sandy moves to Walter, gestures toward the front door. Seth appears through another door, intercepts them.

SETH

 Mr. Sullivan? -- I'm Seth Frank, senior homicide detective for Middleton County --

SANDY LORD

 (protectively)

 -- my client is in no mood for conversation, sir.

WALTER SULLIVAN

 It's all right, Sandy --

 (looks at Seth)

 -- you're in charge of the case?

SETH

 (nods)

 I have to ask some questions, but it can be tomorrow.

WALTER SULLIVAN

You want what, positive identification? Yes, that was my wife. Anything else?

SETH

(notebook in hand)

You'd been in Barbados for two days?

WALTER SULLIVAN

(nods)

I took the entire staff down -- always do this time of year.

SETH

But Mrs. Sullivan didn't come.

WALTER SULLIVAN

She was, had it all planned, but you know women, they change their minds.

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

42.

146 CONTINUED:

146

WALTER SULLIVAN (CONT'D)

(to Seth, softly)

I'd been married to my Rebecca for forty-seven years and when she died, I decided I never wanted that pain again. One thing I knew about Christy: she was going to outlive me.

SANDY LORD

I think that's enough for today.

Takes Walter's arm.

SETH

(beat)

I have to ask about the vault.

And on that -- Walter. Holds to Sandy for a moment, then lets go.

WALTER SULLIVAN

You mean the contents of the vault of course --

(turns to Sandy)

-- Sandy, you go on, I'm all right.

(as Sandy looks at him a moment)

Really. Go to the reception -- obviously I can't make it, but I'm sure everyone will understand.

Sandy nods, exits. Seth and Walter are alone.

Beat. Then --

WALTER SULLIVAN

I know it's not the contents -- (as Seth embarrassed, stands there)

You mean the chair. You have to ask about the chair.

SETH

(soft)
Yessir, I do.

WALTER SULLIVAN

But why? Are they connected?

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

43.

146 CONTINUED: (2)

146

SETH

I think someone sat in it -- and I think that someone may have been involved in the murder.

(beat)

You were my father's hero, Mr. Sullivan, I promise you this won't make my highlight reel.

CLOSEUP - WALTER

★

Humiliated.

WALTER SULLIVAN

I'd hoped I could satisfy her... but you know... she had needs and she didn't want to go behind my back... she suggested the chair... she hoped I might get to like sitting there...

(beat)

... I didn't...

(takes a breath)

I've tried for eighty years to live a decent life. I've given a billion dollars to charity. If this comes to trial, none of that will be remembered -- I'll just go out as the joke of the world.

Seth. He closes his notebook.

SETH

I understand, sir; I'll do what I can.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(beat)

Will you listen to me whine? Please forgive me, Mr. Frank. Just do your job.

(beat)

And I'll do mine.

Walter slowly moves to the door. Seth watches him. Sadly...

147 EXT. WHITE HOUSE - MAGIC HOUR

147

A gorgeous SHOT of a very famous place. The sun is setting. It all looks magical.

148 INT. WHITE HOUSE - NORTH PORTICO - NIGHT

148

A room filled with well-dressed men and women. Formal attire. The rich and the famous. But the only one we recognize is Sandy Lord, deep in conversation with several other men. Now, someone says his name.

MAN (O.S.)

Sandy.

(as Sandy turns)

Is there anything I can do?

SANDY LORD

Mr. President.

And on those words -- The 44th President of the United States. He has all the natural charm in the world. He is remarkably bright, with a phenomenal memory. He is, also, at this moment, one of the most popular men in American history, three years into a brilliant first term, a shoo-in for re-election when that ritual comes.

His name, by the way, is Alan Richmond, and we've seen him before, most recently lying drunk in the back seat of a dark Towncar.

RICHMOND

Take a walk with me.

He and Sandy start out of the room. A well-dressed woman moves with them. She is Chief of Staff and her name is GLORIA RUSSELL.

Two men in suits follow behind. Burton and Collin are their names and they are the best the Secret Service has to offer.

149 INT. WHITE HOUSE - CORRIDOR - NIGHT

149

The group, as they leave the room, come to a wide corridor.

RICHMOND

Tell me about Walter -- how is he?

SANDY LORD

Eighty and alone, Mr. President.

RICHMOND

He understands officially my hands are tied?

SANDY LORD

Mr. President, he's touched at your concern.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

45.

149 CONTINUED:

149

RICHMOND

Any news of the killer?

(as Sandy indicates

"no")

Well, why isn't there? Who's in charge of the case?

SANDY LORD

Top man -- eight years homicide work in New York. But I understand how you feel -- it's hard to be patient.

RICHMOND

(terribly upset)

No one understands how I feel --
I'm supposed to have all this power but I can't help my oldest friend -- you know and I know that more than any man alive Walter Sullivan put me here -- and now when he most needs me, he must feel abandoned.

CLOSEUP - RICHMOND

*

On fire --

RICHMOND

-- I'll hold a press conference -- and I'll have Walter come -- and I will embrace him before the world.

Sandy. Listening. Moved.

SANDY LORD

He'll treasure that, Mr.
President. What a generous gesture. Thank you. Thank you.

And he reaches out, shakes Richmond's hand, squeezes Richmond's arm and -- Richmond -- suddenly screaming in pain -- Sandy pulls back, shocked. Richmond looks embarrassed.

RICHMOND

(quick smile)

Damn tennis elbow is killing me.

And on that --

46.

150 INT. HALLWAY OUTSIDE OVAL OFFICE - NIGHT

150

Richmond, immediately after, and he sure isn't smiling now -- he storms toward the Oval Office, Russell, Burton and Collin hurrying to keep up.

151 INT. OVAL OFFICE - NIGHT

151

Burton opens the door for them, closes it once they're inside.

RICHMOND

(throws off his jacket, turns on Russell)

This thing's worse, Gloria. I need to see a doctor.

RUSSELL

The country would have to be informed, Mr. President.

RICHMOND

What happened to my right to privacy?

(rolls up his sleeve, studies his cut)

I think she nicked a tendon.

RUSSELL

Burton says it's a flesh wound --

RICHMOND

(to Burton)

-- when did you become such an expert, Bill? -- Ever been wounded? --

BURTON

(quietly)

Yes, sir. Many times.

The fireplace. Richmond goes to it, rubs his arm, stares at the flames.

RUSSELL

Are you serious about that press conference, Alan?

RICHMOND

Of course I am -- Walter's been like a father to me.

RUSSELL

Shall I bring Mrs. Richmond home for it?

(CONTINUED)

47.

151 CONTINUED:

151

Richmond, turning from the fire now, quietly.

RICHMOND

I think Mrs. Richmond's mission to help the poor in Asia should not be interrupted.

(takes a breath,
starts to button his shirt)

We know anything yet?

RUSSELL

We checked his license plate -- he stole the car from a police impoundment lot.

RICHMOND

We're not dealing with a fool
here.

(gestures toward his jacket, as Russell helps him into it)

Has he initiated contact?

RUSSELL

Burton doesn't think he will.

RICHMOND

I agree.

(checking himself in a mirror)

Sorry about my behavior -- won't happen again; think of it as a blip on the screen. And as far as I'm concerned, so is he.

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

RUSSELL

He could be a little more than that, Alan -- he saw.

Richmond. Big.

RICHMOND

He saw nothing -- a drunk woman who liked rough sex too much. And he's a burglar. Who's going to believe him?

(beat)

After all, it's not as if he had evidence or anything...

And on those words --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 48.

152 INT. LUTHER'S SAFE HOUSE APARTMENT - LETTER OPENER - NIGHT 152

Luther holds it. It's the middle of the night. Luther turns the weapon over and over in his big hands...

153 EXT. WHITE HOUSE REAR GATE - NIGHT (LITTLE LATER) 153 *

Burton is alone in his car, exiting the gate and driving home. He turns onto the main road. *

154 EXT. STREET NEAR WHITE HOUSE/INT. BURTON'S CAR - NIGHT 154

He picks up speed. Glances around -- no cars are following.

Burton reaches into his pocket, takes out a MICRO-CASSETTE RECORDER, flicks it ON.

RICHMOND (V.O.)

What happened to my right to privacy?

(beat)

I think she nicked a tendon.

Burton clicks the cassette off, puts it back into his pocket. Drives into the night...

155 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - TINY KITCHEN - DAY 155

A stove with one burner on high. A tea kettle is over the flame.

It is morning and Kate is clearly not fully awake. She is finishing making instant coffee with lowfat milk and Sweet 'n Low; next she goes to the front door of her apartment, opens it, picks up the morning Washington Post.

She unfolds the paper as she starts back to the kitchen --

INSERT - WASHINGTON POST

Huge headlines -- as big as you can get without a war.

WALTER SULLIVAN'S WIFE MURDERED

(CONTINUED)

49.

155 CONTINUED:

155

BACK TO SCENE

Kate looks at it only a moment, shakes her head, then starts to turn her attention to another section of the paper --

-- she doesn't get that far.

Kate: she has seen something she didn't catch before --

The front page again. And the headline is still there --

-- but there is a smaller headline beneath it:

Jewel Thief Sought

Kate sits down hard. Trying for control. Entering a nightmare. She stares at the paper.

The front page. Pictures of the mansion, of Walter smiling on his wedding day, of Christy.

But Kate's eyes keep coming back to the smaller headline:

Jewel Thief Sought

She tries to sip coffee, spills. She closes her eyes -- in the kitchen, the pot of WATER starts to SHRIEK. Kate does not move.

156 EXT. VALERIE'S MIDDLE CLASS NEIGHBORHOOD - DAY
(EARLY AFTERNOON)

156

Kids riding bicycles. Very Norman Rockwell.

157 INT. VALERIE'S BASEMENT - DAY

157

A bald man. There is the sound of a CLICK. We realize after a moment that the bald man is Luther.

Another SHOT of Luther looking very different -- full beard. Again, a CLICK.

Luther again -- elegant beard this time. CLICK.

PULL BACK to reveal --

We are in the basement game room of one of the suburban homes.

But our attention is on a whole string of Polaroids of Luther.

(CONTINUED)

50.

157 CONTINUED:

157

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

Two people are present: Luther and VALERIE. Valerie is very small, and doesn't miss much.

She has been photographing him, and as the last photo slides out of the camera, she blows on it, puts it alongside the others.

VALERIE

(as they study the pictures)

You always did disappear good, Luther.

LUTHER

You mean I've got a weak face. Thanks, Val.

VALERIE

You're lucky is all -- some of my customers, they stand out no matter what.

An order form book. Valerie licks a pencil with her tongue.

VALERIE

How many passports you need?

LUTHER

(thinks)

Four should cover it.

VALERIE

(writes this down)

Now you'll want different looks, and matching international driver's licenses -- I'll throw in some dummy credit cards, seeing it's you. How the rugs I made you holding up?

LUTHER

They're good. Beards and mustaches, too.

VALERIE

(pleased)

I try to give value for money. Leaving the country permanent?

LUTHER

It may come to that.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

51.

157 CONTINUED: (2)

157

VALERIE

Matter where you've been? -- I hate doing those goddam Asian passport stamps.

LUTHER

Europe's fine. Maybe the Caribbean for winters. When can I pick up?

VALERIE

Usually takes some time, but for

LUTHER

Thanks, Val. I've always been able to count on you.

Valerie puts the order book down, studies him.

LUTHER

What?

VALERIE

I don't want to know what you're into, but leaving forever...

LUTHER

Finish it.

VALERIE

I never figured you for a runner
-- thirty percent of my runners kill themselves within five years.

LUTHER

(kisses her forehead)
Five years doesn't sound so bad to me just now.

And as he heads out --

158 INT. POLICE HEADQUARTERS - CRIMINAL LAB - DAY

158

Seth and Laura in the good-sized criminal lab. Loaded with up-to-date equipment.

Seth has drawn a picture of the crime scene. Words like "Bedroom Door," "Exit Window," "Vault," "Bed," "Victim" are written neatly to scale. He holds a sheaf of papers.

*

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

52.

158 CONTINUED:

158

It's late afternoon and things are already getting crazed. NOISE in the b.g. throughout.

SETH

See if any of this makes sense.

Seth mimes opening the "bedroom door," stepping inside, closing it. He makes a click with his tongue.

SETH

I am Christy Sullivan and I walk in and surprise a burglar.

Seth moves to the "vault door," mimes closing that, makes a grunt.

LAURA

Now you're the burglar coming out of the vault and being surprised.

SETH

Gold star.

(aims his finger like a pistol)

I draw my gun --

LAURA

(cutting in)

-- then why do you bother to strangle her when you could just shoot?

SETH

That's nothing -- why do I bother to have her strip and then put her clothes back on?

LAURA

There I can help you -- see, before you were a burglar you were a dry cleaner and you still love beautiful clothes.

SETH

And I dress her because?

LAURA

She was a good customer and you didn't want her embarrassed when the police came.

(CONTINUED)

*

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

53.

158 CONTINUED: (2)

158 *

CLOSEUP - SETH

Frustrated.

SETH

She had a point-21 blood alcohol level. -- she was too drunk to drive. I've checked every cab and limo company in the area and not one of them knows anything.
Someone drove her home. Goddamit, who? And why haven't they come forward?

LAURA

Maybe whoever drove her home killed her.

SETH

You saying the burglar drove her home?

(pissed)

I hate this case.

An open door behind them. A TELEPHONE REPAIRMAN appears.
Nice looking kid with a dazzling smile.

TELEPHONE REPAIRMAN

Lieutenant? -- sorry to bother you
--

(as Seth turns)

I've got your phone working again, shouldn't give you any more trouble.

SETH

Good service, thanks.

TELEPHONE REPAIRMAN

(dazzling smile as he goes)
Part of the job.

Seth and Laura. Seth's lost his train of thought. Then --

SETH

Oh yeah -- remember that bullet hole in the wall? Had the lab dig out the slug -- guess what -- no slug -- why does the burglar take the time to do that?

LAURA

Different from the one in her body?

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 54.

158 CONTINUED: (3) 158 *

SETH

(getting more and more upset)
Oh I like that a lot -- two different guns means two different burglars. Two guys broke in? And they both went out the window?
Bullshit.

(big)

And oh, by the way, why does he -- or they -- go out the window in the first place when he -- or they -- got in by breaking a zillion-dollar security system? --

COP (O.S.)

-- Seth?

SETH

(whirling)
What?

COP

(in doorway)
A Bill Burton of the Secret Service in the parking lot.

SETH

(gives papers to Laura)
Here, you solve the goddam thing.
(as he starts away)
Did I mention that I hate this case? I really truly hate this case -- you cannot imagine how much I hate it --

159 EXT. POLICE HEADQUARTERS - PARKING LOT - DAY 159

Burton waits by his car as Seth walks up.

BURTON

(as they shake)
Bill Burton, hi --

SETH

-- hi, Seth Frank --

BURTON

-- I know you must be going crazy
-- but the boss is very interested in your progress. Maybe we can help each other.

(CONTINUED)

55.

159 CONTINUED:

159

SETH

What did you have in mind?

BURTON

You know how close he and Sullivan are?

(as Seth nods)

The minute anything breaks, if you'd call me, I'd tell the President. That way, he'd be the first to alert Mr. Sullivan -- it would mean a lot to him. And any red tape you want cut -- done.

(as he takes out card)

Here are my numbers.

He turns, opens his front car door.

BURTON

(getting in)

Leads?

SETH

Still trying to figure out what might have happened --

BURTON

-- I loved playing Sherlock Holmes.

SETH

(surprised)

You Secret Service guys do that?

BURTON

I was State Trooper here ten years ago before the Government got me.

Seth. It just pops out.

SETH

You're that Bill Burton.

Burton. Embarrassed.

BURTON

I was younger and dumber then.
(quickly)
Keep in touch.

Seth waves as Burton drives away.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

56.

160 EXT. STREET NEAR POLICE HEADQUARTERS - DAY

160

Burton. He drives alertly along, turns a corner. Up ahead, a telephone repair truck has stopped. The Repairman leans out. He has a dazzling smile. He and Burton wave to each other...

161 INT. SULLIVAN DINING ROOM - NIGHT

161 *

Quietly elegant. Two men are finishing dinner. Walter Sullivan we know.

MICHAEL McCARTY, his dinner companion, is 35, fit, handsome, beautifully dressed. He is, at present, torn by a silver tray of small French pastries.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(noting McCarty's temptation)

The chef makes them especially for me -- I promise you they're sinful.

McCarty grabs one, downs it, grins sheepishly.

McCARTY

You're a salesman, Mr. Sullivan.

Sullivan nods as they rise.

162 INT. SULLIVAN LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

162 *

Tastefully appointed, as one would expect.

WALTER SULLIVAN

This is a new arena for me, but from what I'm told, you have a flawless reputation, Mister McCarty -- which is why I need to employ you.

McCARTY

Understood.

WALTER SULLIVAN

I have no idea who I'm after. Until I do, you will have to wait in Washington for instructions.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

57.

162 CONTINUED:

162

McCARTY

Out of the question, I'm afraid.
(explaining as they walk)

Mine isn't particularly creative work -- I only do it because I enjoy living beyond my means. I can't afford to just sit around.

A sofa. Walter gestures for them to sit.

WALTER SULLIVAN

When I was 10 my father died -- he was a miner and lung disease killed him. I became rich at 25 and the first thing I did was purchase that mine, close it, and give every miner there fifty thousand dollars to retire on.

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

(beat; staring at McCarty now)

You will come to Washington, Mr.
McCarty. You will put one million dollars expenses into the Swiss bank account of your choosing.

(beat)

And, when the time comes, two million dollars a bullet.

McCARTY

(smiles, nods)

You are a salesman, sir.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Selling sin is easy...

Now, sharply...

CUT TO:

163 INT. SETH'S OFFICE - CLOSEUP - OLD MUG SHOT OF LUTHER - DAY 163

PULL BACK to reveal...

... Seth and Laura, in his office.
his desk, along with some folders.

The mug shot is on Seth beckons to her.

LAURA

(studying photo)

Who is he?

(CONTINUED)

58.

163 CONTINUED:

163

SETH

Luther Whitney --

(beat)

-- one of the great thieves of the world.

Seth. The words pour out.

SETH

Been going nuts with this thing, up all night and I remembered your notion how it might be two burglars, and around dawn I thought, wait, what if it wasn't two burglars but what if it was one guy trying to throw us off by making it look like two?

(faster)

Called a buddy at the Bureau -- they keep track of this stuff internationally -- he says maybe only a half a dozen guys alive could have pulled off the Sullivan job -- I'm tracing all six --

(beat)

-- but Whitney's the only one lives in Washington.

Laura. Looking at Seth now. Starting to get excited, too.

LAURA

Why haven't I ever heard of him?

SETH

Because he hasn't been arrested in thirty years.

LAURA

(indicating mug shot)

This his graduation picture from Harvard?

SETH

(waving her off)

Ancient history -- he wasn't a jewel thief back then. Just a kid, just part of a gang, a three-time loser. But since he got out the last time, he's only worked alone --

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

59.

163 CONTINUED: (2)

163

SETH (CONT'D)

(beat)

-- and no one's touched him.

(shakes his head)

He gets questioned whenever anything big comes up. But nothing sticks.

LAURA

(really excited now)

Seth -- we can make this stick -- I'll bet you anything this is our guy -- a local? -- can't ask for more --

SETH

(makes a face)

We've got a problem.

LAURA

-- what? --

SETH

Whitney hasn't killed anyone in 45 years.

Laura doesn't get it.

SETH

Korea.

LAURA

Big deal, so he's a veteran.

SETH

Not just a veteran -- a wounded veteran.

(indicating folder)

Got his combat record here.

Battles, commendations, decorations up the kazoo.

Lives alone on his disability.

★
★
★
★

★
★
★

Says he does anyway.

(glum)

And I don't do war heroes...

*
*
*

CUT TO:

164 EXT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

164

Luther -- it's a beautiful morning now and he's walking up the steps to the art museum. He seems in a terrific mood as he goes inside --

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

59A.

164 CONTINUED:

164

-- HOLD.

Seth has been on the steps of the museum, watching him. Now quickly --

165 INT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

165

Luther, inside, peering back out at Seth. And he doesn't seem in as terrific a mood now. He hesitates, keeps on going.

60.

166 EXT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

166

Seth. Outside -- and he knows Luther was watching.

167 INT. WASHINGTON MUSEUM - DAY

167

El Greco. The usual group has gathered, sketching away. Luther is deeply engrossed in his labors.

Seth enters the room, casually taking it all in. He approaches the group, ends up behind Luther who is intent on getting the hands right.

LUTHER

(not looking)

Boy, you must be smart.

SETH

(really taken aback)

Sorry?

LUTHER

Usually takes a week for you guys to get to me.

(turns, smiles)

You look just like your picture, Seth. I'm Luther Whitney.

He reaches out to shake a surprised Seth's hand --

168 INT. MUSEUM - COFFEE SHOP - DAY

168

They walk in, go to the food line. There is, throughout, a bantering tone. Not that it matters, but these two, in a different world, would like each other -- they're both, in their own ways, deeply moral men.

LUTHER

So, do you want my confession now or after coffee?

As Luther draws some coffee from an urn --

SETH

(doing the same)

Before I send you away for life, I should probably check out your alibi.

(CONTINUED)

61.

168 CONTINUED:

168

LUTHER

Watched the Bullets game with Red Bransford. Prison buddy of mine -- runs a bar -- want to question me about the game? I'm probably lying.

They each give the cashier some money and we see a quiet table in the corner as they head for it.

SETH

You been following the case?

LUTHER

(nods vigorously)

I love true crime --

SETH

-- F.B.I. feels only a few guys could have handled something as hard as the Sullivan job.

(touches his notebook)

I've got a list here; you're on it.

LUTHER

(nothing shows)

I wish it was true.

(shakes his head)

Your robber actually went in the front door but came out down a rope in the dark in the middle of the night?

(as Seth nods;

Luther sighs)

If only I could do stuff like that
-- I'd be the star of my A.A.R.P. meetings.

Luther and Seth as they sit. Seth smiles, looks at Luther.

SETH

(beat)

Luther? Why was this so hard?

Luther. Now he's surprised. He kind of smiles.

LUTHER

You want me to help solve your case?

62.

168 CONTINUED: (2)

168

SETH

Just looking for insight. How would you -- scratch that -- how would one go about it? What kind of person do you think I should be looking for?

LUTHER

(like a shot)
Older fella. Like me.

SETH

(now he smiles)
Because?

LUTHER

Need patience. The secret is just research, research, research -- from everything I've read.

Seth. This hasn't gone at all the way he thought -- and he's starting to get fascinated.

SETH

Research for what?

LUTHER

Well, from what I can tell on the tube, it's not a small house.
(as Seth nods)
There had to be an architect, right? You'd be able to tell which one from public records in the library. And once you know the office, you could break in and find the plans and Xerox them, get them back before morning.

SETH

Not just steal them?

LUTHER

Seth -- breaking in isn't hard -- what's hard is breaking in so no one knows you've been there. Now, after the architect, next you'd want the contractor's office -- and the security company's office.

(beat)

You know the skill involved breaking the security of a security company?

(shakes his head)

I wonder how those guys do it?

(CONTINUED)

63.

168 CONTINUED: (3)

168

SETH

Why go to all that trouble?

LUTHER

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

Papers said he kept the money in a vault, yes?

(as Seth nods)

Well, I'm guessing there was probably some secret way to open it --

SETH

(casually)

-- clicker --

LUTHER

(fascinated)

-- explain --

SETH

-- gizmo -- looked like a V.C.R. remote --

LUTHER

(shaking his head)

-- amazing --

(beat)

-- must have been a lot of money inside.

SETH

(sipping casually;
a pause)

Five million.

And on those words --

Luther, more than he thought, a lot more -- but of course nothing shows -- instead he breaks out laughing.

SETH

Why's that funny?

LUTHER

The way you said it -- as if you were trying to surprise me.

SETH

(smiles)

I was trying to surprise you.

LUTHER

(smiles back)

There you go.

(CONTINUED)

64.

168 CONTINUED: (4)

168

Seth sips his coffee, takes out his notebook, opens it.

SETH

Would the burglar use a disguise?

LUTHER

Seth, you've got to get with the program you expect to catch this guy -- most likely it is a guy, am I right? Some kind of weird loner?

SETH

Maybe like you.

LUTHER

(couldn't agree more)
I'm the perfect prototype.
(sipping away)
But you see any face often enough, you'll start putting things together. That's why these top guys disguise themselves. I read a great article a couple of years back -- damn, I wish I could remember where -- anyway, it was about these makeup experts some of them use -- wigmakers, people like that.

SETH

(flipping a page)
Go on about the wigmakers.

LUTHER

(glancing at his watch)
I'd love that but I'm late as it is -- got to get my pacemaker checked.
(he likes Seth)
-- all this excitement, you understand.

SETH

(and he likes Luther)
A) You don't have a pacemaker, and
B) I'll be back tomorrow.

LUTHER

Tomorrow is promised to no one.

HOLD ON Luther.

65.

169 INT. LUTHER'S SMALL HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

169

Luther is throwing clothes into a suitcase while talking on the phone --

LUTHER

Not 'til morning?
(makes a face)
-- I'll be by early --

He hangs up, shuts the suitcase, takes off out the door --

170 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

170

A place we've seen briefly before. Dark. Moonlight through the windows.

The sound of a KEY IN the DOOR.

Luther enters, takes out a tiny flashlight. We're in one largish room, books all over. The home of someone who doesn't care a whole lot about their home.

171 INT. KITCHEN - NIGHT

171

Luther enters. He opens the fridge. Disaster -- still water, sparkling water, carrot sticks.

LUTHER

(sadly, muttering)

Katie darling, you've gotta try real food sometime.

He closes the door, moves back into the room --

172 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

172

A graduation photo of Kate. Luther touches it with a fingertip, moves on through the silence.

173 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - BEDROOM - NIGHT

173

Luther by the bed now, he flashes his light around --

-- what the light illuminates: a bed table full of law books. Expected. A phone/answering machine. The mandatory lamp.

And photographs. A proud mother and daughter picture. The daughter is Kate. The mother is a fine-looking woman with a kind face.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

66.

173 CONTINUED:

173

Half a dozen more shots as Kate grew up, the mother grew older. Mother and daughter, mother and daughter. Nothing unusual here at all.

So why is Luther so sad?

HOLD.

174 EXT. MIDDLETON COUNTY COURTHOUSE - DAY

174

10 A.M. A white-brick, weather-beaten building, Old Glory fighting the breeze.

RICHMOND (V.O.)

I am having this press conference here because...

Richmond, speaking on a podium. The press corps stands in front of him, TV crews of all kinds, CNN the most noticeable.

RICHMOND

... it is here, at this courthouse, that Christine Sullivan's killer will be tried for his crime.

*

Burton and Collin, in the b.g., scanning the crowd. Gloria Russell stands behind them.

175 INT. AIRPORT LOUNGE - DAY

175

The same shot -- only now it's grainy -- we're watching it on a TV SCREEN. CNN ON the TUBE.

A BARTENDER cleaning glasses; otherwise, not a whole lot going on.

Now Luther enters, dressed for travel. He goes to a stool, orders a ginger ale, puts his passport and ticket on the bar, glances toward the TV.

LUTHER

Turn that off, okay?

BARTENDER

(finishing up the glasses)

In a sec.

67.

176 EXT. MIDDLETON COUNTY COURTHOUSE - DAY

176

Richmond at his press conference. He speaks without notes and he speaks beautifully.

RICHMOND

As you know, I came from an impoverished family in an impoverished town -- but we lived with our doors unlocked.

Russell watching, listening; she loves hearing him talk.

RICHMOND (O.S.)

We all lock our doors now, but that is not what concerns me...

Burton and Collin, scanning the crowd.

RICHMOND (O.S.)

... we are also locking our hearts... that is the sadness, that is the loss.

Richmond, and suddenly he's like a Southern minister.

RICHMOND

We are locking our hearts to the cries of the weary, we are locking our hearts to the poor and their pain...

An old man, standing behind Russell. We realize it's Walter Sullivan.

RICHMOND (O.S.)

... Sisters and brothers, we are locking our hearts to ourselves.

177 INT. AIRPORT LOUNGE - DAY

177

Walter Sullivan. Rainy now. CNN. He has aged shockingly in the past couple of days.

Luther staring sympathetically at the devastated old man.

-- Sullivan's image suddenly is gone --

-- The Bartender has TURNED OFF the TELEVISION.

LUTHER

(politely)

Put it back on.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

68.

177 CONTINUED:

177

BARTENDER

(starting to argue)

You said --

LUTHER

(cutting through)

Do it --

CNN. Walter Sullivan is still there.

RICHMOND (V.O.)We feel savagery and violence must be allowed a place at table.

(beat)

That is wrong. That is not America. I shall fight that battle.Luther, staring at the image of Walter Sullivan, who is heartsick and beaten. Luther is simply transfixed ---- Richmond on CNN and now he has turned and is beckoning for Walter Sullivan to join him.Sullivan for a moment is uncertain. He points to himself -- "do you mean me?" Richmond nods, opens his arms out wide. Sullivan gets up, comes forward.Luther, as he gets up too, also comes forward, leaving the stool, walking close to the television.Richmond and Sullivan, grainy on CNN as Richmond embraces Sullivan, holds him in a loving embrace.RICHMOND (V.O.)Dear friend, old friend, we shall fight that battle.

Sullivan, too overcome by the moment, can only nod.

RICHMOND (V.O.)Who can explain the ways of chance? If we had never met, I would not be President. If Christine had not taken ill, she would be with you in Barbados even now. Oh, Walter, you've always been like a father to me.
I would give the world to lessen your pain.*
*
*

69.

178 EXT. MIDDLETON COUNTY COURTHOUSE - DAY

178

The press corps. Subdued, saddened.

Richmond and Walter. They turn, face the cameras. The president's arm is still around the old man; they both blink back tears and now -- -- here it comes ! --

179 INT. AIRPORT LOUNGE - EXTREME CLOSEUP - LUTHER - DAY

179

Tears of rage in his eyes. A rage so deep it shocks him --

LUTHER

You -- heartless -- prick -- (building)
 -- you -- fucking -- bastard --

The Bartender, surprised, turning toward Luther. He starts to say something, stops; something tells him to shut up and he does.

180 EXT. MIDDLETON COUNTY COURTHOUSE - DAY 180

Richmond, wiping away tears, alone on camera.

181 INT. AIRPORT LOUNGE - DAY 181

Luther, wiping away tears, in the bar.

A SHOT of the two of them, Luther and Richmond, one on CNN, one in reality, because Luther has moved so close to the TV he and Richmond could almost be staring at each other.

LUTHER

(whispered now)
 I'm not running -- not from you.
 (beat)
 I'm going to bring you down...

HOLD ON the two men.

182 INT. WHITE HOUSE - NORTH PORTICO - DAY 182

Seventy very excited people we've never seen before. They stare around at their surroundings -- they are in the White House. On a guided tour.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 70.

182 CONTINUED: 182

A bright late morning of what's going to be a beautiful day. A guide leads the people through a doorway. They troop happily along.

Luther is with them; he seems happy too.

183 INT. WHITE HOUSE - NORTH PORTICO AREA - DAY 183

The guide leads the people through. They look around, chat with their friends, follow the guide out.

Luther follows the guide out too.

HOLD ON the room.

All is as it was.

Except a large envelope has been dropped on a side table.

MOVE IN ON the envelope --

-- it's addressed to Gloria Russell.

184 INT. WHITE HOUSE - GLORIA RUSSELL'S OFFICE - DAY

184

Gloria Russell. Terrified.

Her doors are closed, Russell is at her desk. Burton stands alongside. Collin, silent, sits in a corner.

And on her desk, half out of the envelope, is a photograph of the letter opener.

RUSSELL

He was in the building -- he took a guided tour.

Burton pulls the picture all the way out, studies it.

RUSSELL

I've never dealt with blackmail --

BURTON

(trying for calm)
-- he doesn't want money --

RUSSELL

(exploding)
-- you a mind reader too?

*

(CONTINUED)

71.

184 CONTINUED:

184

BURTON

(under control)
No, I just looked on the back -- (shows her)
-- see? --

Luther has written something.

RUSSELL

(reading)
'I don't want money.'

Russell is more upset. Burton almost smiles.

LUTHER

(admiringly)
This guy sure has the guts of a burglar. Wish we had him.

Collin laughs.

RUSSELL

You finished your recruiting speech? Because I'd like to know how I handle this.

BURTON

Like you handled the letter opener?

Russell. She studies Burton. Then --

RUSSELL

Gee, Bill, that could be construed as criticism. Do you really want me as an enemy?

Burton stands there, massively powerful. His voice, when he speaks, is his usual voice: polite, considerate.

BURTON

Miss Russell, I should have called the police that night. But I was weak. You convinced me to stay silent. I regret that.

(another pause)

Know this: every time I see your face I want to rip your throat out.

Russell. Silence.

(CONTINUED)

72.

184 CONTINUED: (2)

184

RUSSELL

Fine -- you win the pissing contest --

(then suddenly almost like a little girl)

-- what should I do?

BURTON

Nothing -- because he's making a terrible mistake, he thinks he has time -- he doesn't -- Seth Frank's too good. He'll bring him in.

RUSSELL

Then what?

COLLIN

(his first words)

Then I kill him.

Now, from them --

185 INT. KATE'S OFFICE - DAY

185

She is, we will find, a top prosecutor for the Commonwealth of Virginia. Her office is a zoo.

On her desk, a baby picture of Kate and her mom smiling -- but there is something a little different about it.

Seth enters and they shake. He glances around -- -- sees the photograph, glances away.

Kate has risen now -- and in the silence it's clear that even though they are both standing still, they are both circling.

SETH

(trying for a smile)

For a tough prosecutor, you don't resemble your reputation, Miss Whitney.

KATE

(the same)

Is that good or bad?

(CONTINUED)

73.

185 CONTINUED:

185

KATE (CONT'D)(before Seth can reply)

Look, Lieutenant -- I told you on the phone, I'm simply not involved with my father, so this may not be a waste of time for you, but it sure is for me.

SETH

What would you do if I just turned around and left?

KATE

Report you as an incompetent.

SETH

(a real smile now)
You're exactly like your reputation, Miss Whitney --

As they head out --

186 INT. LOUNGE OUTSIDE KATE'S OFFICE - DAY

186

They enter. It's empty.

SETH(the instant they're alone)

I'm assuming your father's a big part of you --

KATE

-- what? --

SETH

-- You think it's all coincidence?
He's a thief and you just happen to be the toughest prosecutor in the area?

KATE

(just amazed)

Wow -- that never crossed my mind
-- you think there might be some connection? -- Like maybe I'm somehow compensating? -- I better write that down.

SETH

-- Luther disappeared.

(CONTINUED)

74.

186 CONTINUED:

186

No reaction.

A banged-up couch. Kate sits, shrugs.

SETH

I think you can help me.

KATE

Lieutenant -- I don't know the man -- he was in jail when I was a kid, when he got out my mother and I went off to live by ourselves. We don't make contact. He doesn't care about me. I've seen him all of once this past year.

SETH

When?

KATE

Couple days ago. He said he might be going away. There. I just helped you. Can I go back to work now?

SETH

(shakes his head)

Any idea where he might have gone?

Seth and Kate realize something: In a different world, under different circumstances, they'd probably be starting an affair.

KATE

(snappishly)

Quit wasting my time -- if he doesn't want you to find him, you're not going to find him.

SETH

You saying he's left town, skipped the country, what?

KATE

I'm saying you won't recognize him. I'm saying he could be just around the corner -- he always kept a safe house --

SETH

(cutting in)

-- where? --

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

75.

186 CONTINUED: (2)

186

KATE

He never said --

SETH

-- Then where'd you hear this?

CLOSEUP - KATE

★

KATE

-- my mother loved him, all right?
-- Even after she left him -- even when she was dying she always talked about him -- 'If only he hadn't this,' 'if only he could have that' --

She stops.

Seth, watching her.

SETH

And?

KATE

I meet a lot of asshole cops like you -- guys who O.D.'d on Columbo --

SETH

-- Lady, I may be an asshole cop but you don't know me well enough to call me one --

KATE

-- There's something else, isn't there? Something you want me to do? -- But you won't say ---

Seth. There is. But he won't say.

Kate. For the first time now, apprehension. Now --

187 EXT. LUTHER'S HOUSE - DAY

187

The row of small, neat houses -- where Luther lived.

Kate and Seth get out of his car, go to the front door.

KATE

How long did he live here?

(CONTINUED)

76.

187 CONTINUED:

187

SETH

Years.

KATE

Never been.

188 EXT. LUTHER'S FRONT DOOR - DAY

188

Seth stoops, gets the key from under the terra cotta planter.

SETH

Strange place for a thief to leave a key, don't you think?

KATE

(quick memory)
He always did that...

189 INT. LUTHER'S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

189

They enter. It's surprisingly tidy.

Seth and Kate as they move along. Seth is watching Kate who suddenly stops dead.

The mantle. A large blowup of the same picture Kate had in her office, the one of Kate and her mom --

-- with one startling change: Luther is in this shot, standing there proud and smiling. She has ripped his presence out of her photo.

Seth, silently watching Kate. She turns sharply away. He gestures for her to follow.

190 INT. LUTHER'S BEDROOM - DAY

190

They enter. Clothes tossed all over.

SETH

He sure took off in a hurry. What scares a professional thief like that?

Kate. No reply. She has seen something across the tiny room and is drawn to it --

Luther's bed table --

-- and here it is!

(CONTINUED)

77.

190 CONTINUED:

190

Call it a montage, call it a collage, call it what you will, we are looking at dozens of photographs --

-- all of them featuring Kate.

Many of them we saw in her apartment -- only here, as in the photo over the mantle, Luther is there with Kate and her mom.

We are looking at a shrine!

And there are newer photos too -- Kate at her college graduation, Kate at her law school graduation, Kate and her mother coming out of an elegant restaurant, Kate alone on the steps of Middleton County Courthouse --

-- these are not posed shots.

She looks wonderful and alive in all of them --

Kate. She looks dead now. All energy gone. She sits heavily down on the bed.

KATE

(fighting tears)
... but he wasn't at those places...

(pointing to the grown-up photos)
... college graduation; law school graduation; the night Mom and I celebrated when I got a job; and me alone on the steps? -- I'd just won my first case, I was so proud...

(still fighting)
... I used to think... sometimes

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

I'd come home and I'd sense he'd been in my apartment, checking the fridge, shaking his head because he never thought I ate right...
 It's crazy but I just knew Daddy was watching over me...

And now she loses it, starts crying silently.

Seth kneels alongside her, gives her a handkerchief.

SETH

You can do a good thing, Kate --
 (beat)
 -- help me bring him in. Just leave a message on his phone machine, you're worried about him.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

78.

190 CONTINUED: (2)

190

KATE

... No...

SETH

It's the truth -- you are worried about him -- this isn't your normal case -- his life may be in danger -- you can save him, make the call --

KATE

... He won't come...

SETH

(indicating the pictures)

Of course he'll come. You're all he has.

Kate, staring at the photos, trying to get control.

SETH

(moving in)

Kate, he's on the run and he's scared and he's right to be scared because he's going to get caught
 -- you don't know the heat on this.

*

KATE

He's not a murderer.

*

*

SETH

Maybe you're right. Maybe he is innocent. If so I'll have him home and dry in a few hours. But what happens if some hotshot who's trying to make a reputation tracks him down?

*

*

*

*

(beat)

I can guarantee his safety. You make the call, I make a promise:
 You'll have your father, home and dry...

Kate alone. Totally wiped out. She is on the phone with Seth. Outside, the sun is dying.

KATE

I left a message on his machine, he called back within an hour;
we're meeting tomorrow afternoon.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 79.

192 INT. SETH'S OFFICE - LATE AFTERNOON 192

Seth, taking it down.

SETH

Where?

KATE (V.O.)

An open-air place near my office, the Cafe Alonzo --

Seth's excited.

193 INT. TREASURY BUILDING - BURTON'S OFFICE - BURTON - 193 *

LATE AFTERNOON taking it down.

KATE (V.O.)

Four o'clock -- it's deserted then.

Burton's excited too. HOLD.

194 EXT. SKY - MOON - NIGHT 194 high in the sky -- middle of the night now.

195 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - KATE - NIGHT 195

Wired. Pacing across her small apartment, back and forth, back and forth.

196 INT. SETH'S OFFICE - SETH - NIGHT 196 alone in his office, going over plans, sipping coffee to stay awake.

197 INT. BURTON'S BEDROOM - BURTON - NIGHT 197 alone in his bed, staring at the ceiling, a nearly empty Scotch bottle in one hand.

198 OMITTED 198

199 INT. LUTHER'S SAFE HOUSE APARTMENT - LUTHER - NIGHT 199

listening to the PHONE MACHINE. We hear KATE'S VOICE.
"Daddy... I miss you... I'm worried... call me..."

A CLICK. Luther hangs up, immediately dials again. We hear the message start over. "Daddy... I miss you..." As he continues to listen -- 80.

200 EXT. FIRING RANGE - DAY (EARLY MORNING) 200

-- on what's going to be a gorgeous day.

Burton, yawning, blowing into a steaming paper cup of coffee. Collin, wide awake, moves alongside. Collin is carrying a rifle.

-- we are at a government firing range.

Collin squints into the morning sun.

Burton, putting down the coffee cup, picking up a pair of binoculars.

Burton and Collin staring out --

-- A distant target is being raised.

Collin. He strokes the barrel of his high-powered rifle.

CUT TO:

201 TARGET

201

A long way off.

CUT TO:

202 BURTON

202 as he has focused the binoculars --

203 BINOCULAR POV - TARGET

203 seen through the binoculars as it comes clear -- the bull's eye is small.

CUT TO:

204 COLLIN

204 with his rifle. His fingers still move along the barrel. No hurry whatsoever --

-- and then it all goes fast, and in one motion he is aiming and FIRING and FIRING again and the sound explodes and -- Burton, dazed.

CUT TO:

81.

205 TARGET

205

-- the bull's eye has been totally blown away.

CUT TO:

206 OMITTED

206

207 INT. DOWNTOWN MEN'S STORE - DAY

207

Luther and a SALESMAN are engaged in conversation.

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

Luther is buttoning a new raincoat to the throat. The Salesman holds several hats. Luther picks one, tries it on.

LUTHER

I need to look really good today.

He doesn't like the hat.

SALESMAN

Business?

(as Luther tries the other hat -- very rakish, he likes it)

It's a woman, I can tell.

(as Luther nods)

Never too late, is it?

Luther. Beaming.

LUTHER

You got that right.

Now, from his happy face --

208 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - THREE CURSING WORKMEN - DAY 208

PULL BACK to reveal the workmen are on a scaffolding two stories up, struggling to replace a glass panel that has cracked.

The glass panel is heavy and bulky and the workmen are having a bitch of a time with it.

The entire front of the building is glass panels. It mirrors the area across the street -- a bunch of dilapidated brownstones.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 82.

209 EXT. BROWNSTONES ACROSS FROM CAFE ALONZO - DAY 209

They are empty and, according to a sign, are due for demolition. All the windows of the brownstones are closed -- except one. On an upper story.

210 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 210

Inside the window. Michael McCarty, who we last met at Walter Sullivan's, is there. He looks out.

*
*

211 HIS POV 211

The glass building and the struggling workmen and, on the ground floor, a few tables are set outside, with large umbrellas alongside each.

There is a sign: CAFE ALONZO.

212 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 212

McCarty. Beside him is a leather case. He opens it.

The case. A very high-powered rifle. McCarty begins to expertly assemble it, taut and businesslike.

213 INT. POLICE HEADQUARTERS DEBRIEFING ROOM - DAY 213

Seth, taut and businesslike, stands by a blown-up map of the Cafe Alonzo area. The restaurant is circled -- and around it are marked places for policemen to wait -- Seth is giving instructions to those policemen now --

-- fifty of them. And no one's smiling.

214 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - DAY 214

Kate. Dressed and ready. Lying on her bed. Afternoon
now. She gets up, makes it halfway to the front door --

-- can't do it -- she turns, goes back to bed, lies down again, frozen.

215 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 215

The cursing workmen. The glass panel is so damn cumbersome they are having a miserable time.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 83.

216 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 216

An elderly couple sits at one of the half dozen outdoor tables.

The place is empty.

217 EXT. POLICE HEADQUARTERS - PARKING LOT - DAY 217

Seth, outside headquarters now, giving instructions to police officers. Behind them: two dozen unmarked cars.

CUT TO:

218 SUN 218

Later in the afternoon.

219 EXT. POLICE HEADQUARTERS - PARKING LOT - DAY 219

Burton, getting out of his car at Seth's Police Headquarters.

Seth, finishing instructing a dozen motorcycle cops. *

Burton moves up behind Seth, waits quietly. As Seth is done, he sees Burton, they nod, start toward Seth's car.

BURTON

The Boss is very grateful.
Thanks.

SETH

Figured he'd like an eyewitness report of the capture. This is our guy -- if he's innocent, he sure took off awful fast.

220 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 220

The three workmen. Making some headway with the bulky glass panel --

221 GUNSCOPE POV 221

-- now crosshairs cover them and we --

PULL BACK to reveal --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 84.

222 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 222

McCarty, staring out the window of the brownstone, the rifle pointed -- very relaxed, he pulls the trigger -- the RIFLE'S not loaded yet -- and the STACCATO "CLICK" is all we hear.

223 INT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - LOBBY 223

Seth and Burton moving quickly into the lobby of the glass office building that adjoins the Cafe Alonzo -- the lobby has a clear view of the outdoor part of the cafe.

Around and behind them, dozens of cops get in position.

224 EXT. STREET - CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 224

Around the corner from the glass building -- unmarked cars.

225 EXT. ANOTHER STREET - NEAR THE CAFE BUILDING - DAY 225 *

Motorcycles, waiting in shadow, out of sight.

226 INT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - LOBBY - DAY 226

Seth and Burton. They've both seen a lot -- which doesn't mean they're not tense. Burton takes out some Tums, offers them to Seth. Seth shakes his head, brings out Tums of his own.

CUT TO:

227 SUN 227

Starting down.

228 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 228

The three workmen and they hate their job. One of them glances down.

229 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 229

Empty.

Now, from the workmens' angle, a woman moves to one of the tables. It's Kate. They don't pay much attention.

85.

230 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 230

Kate. She hesitates, then decides on the front table.
She takes a breath. Sits. Motionless.

CUT TO:

231 GUNSCOPE POV - CLOSEUP ON KATE 231

-- now crosshairs cover her face and we --

PULL BACK to reveal --

232 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 232

McCarty as before, with his weapon. He pulls the trigger again and again, there is the "CLICK" -- now he flicks away a grain of dust from the barrel --

-- then he puts the weapon down, reaches out and --

ONE BULLET. It's supersonic ammo. McCarty picks it up, blows on it gently. He might be holding a child.

233 INT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - LOBBY - DAY 233

Burton and Seth. They can see Kate sitting alone in the late afternoon.

SETH

(mutters)

Fuck...

-- And a goddamn WAITER has appeared and is walking out toward Kate. He is Asian and very young.

234 EXT. CAFE ALONZO 234

Kate, startled as the Waiter calls out from behind her.

WAITER

Miss?

(as she spins around)

What you want please?

His English could be a lot better.

KATE

Nothing, thank you.

(CONTINUED)

86.

234 CONTINUED: 234

WAITER

Got to.

KATE

Pardon?

WAITER

(gesturing)

You sit you eat please.

235 INT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - LOBBY - DAY 235

Seth and Burton. Stunned.

SETH

This is not part of my brilliant master plan.

More Tums.

BURTON

Unfuckingbelievable.

They both crunch away.

236 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY

236

McCarty, watching the Waiter and Kate. He's not happy either. He points a finger at the Waiter, goes "Boom."

237 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY

237

Kate, and it's almost four o'clock and she's not at her best.

KATE

(gesturing around)
I'm waiting for someone.

WAITER

He must eat too, please.

KATE

Oh he will, we both will -- we'll order half the menu -- but just not now --

The Waiter nods, finally he turns, starts off.

Kate. Trembling.

(CONTINUED)

87.

237 CONTINUED:

237

The Waiter returning.

WAITER

Cheesecake gone.

KATE

Thank you so much.

The Waiter nods again, and this time he does go.

Kate, watching him, making sure. Now she sits straight --

238 CLOSEUP - KATE

238

Very shaky, trying to hold it together. And now crosshairs cover her face as we PULL BACK to reveal --

239 EXT./INT. UNMARKED VAN ON STREET NEAR CAFE BUILDING - DAY

239

Collin. He holds a very high-powered weapon. It looks like it could kill from a thousand yards away.

Where he is -- and it's not a thousand yards away -- he's in an unmarked van on the street, even closer than McCarty.

Collin, loading his weapon. His movements are skilled.
His concentration is total.

240 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 240

McCarty, glancing out at the office building area. The three workmen on the scaffolding are fighting to right the glass panel. One of them grabs a rope connected to a block and tackle.

He pulls on the rope. Slowly, the piece begins to rise.

241 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 241

Kate, sitting alone, studying her hands.

242 INT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - LOBBY - DAY 242

Seth and Burton. The waiting is agony.

88.

243 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 243

Kate. It's worse for her. She glances around -- -- nothing, no one.

244 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 244

McCarty. All the time in the world.

245 INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY 245

Collin. Blows on his weapon slightly.

246 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 246

Kate, and it's a question of how much longer she can take it. Her trembling is almost out of control -- she glances around again and --

-- and there he is!

Luther Whitney himself, and he looks splendid in his new raincoat and hat --

-- he moves along in the shadow of the office building, toward the cafe, walking with his usual grace -- Luther always seems to glide.

247 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 247

McCarty in the window. Spotting Luther -- -- totally controlled.

248	INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY	248
	Collin does the same.
249	INT. LOBBY - DAY	249
	Seth and Burton, and the instant Luther is visible, Seth gestures toward the policemen: Get ready.
250	INT. BROWNSTONE - McCARTY - DAY	250 raising his rifle.
	89.
251	INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY	251
	Collin, raising his.
252	EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY	252
	The three workmen, raising the glass panel.
253	EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY	253
	Kate. Watching her father come closer.
	Luther. It's hard to suppress a smile as he walks towards his daughter.
	Kate, still watching.
	Luther, almost there. Speaks softly.
	LUTHER
	I did not kill that woman, Kate.
254	INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY	254
	McCarty, flipping off the safety.
255	INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY	255
	Collin, doing the same.
256	EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY	256
	Luther and Kate, and he starts to sit --
257	INT. LOBBY - DAY	257
	Seth, right hand raised -- he's about to start it all in motion.
258	INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY	258
	McCarty, his finger floating to the trigger.
259	INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY	259

Collin, doing the same.

90.

260 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 260

Luther, seated now and as at last, he reaches out for his daughter's hand --

261 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 261

-- The three workmen, and for a moment the glass panel slips and tilts and as it catches the afternoon sun --

262 INT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 262

-- McCarty, blinded as the red reflection hits his eyes but he FIRES.

263 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 263

Luther and Kate as suddenly the umbrella at their table is severed and starts to topple.

264 INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY 264

Collin, startled, and he FIRES too.

265 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 265

Luther, instantly diving toward Kate as the second BULLET EXPLODES in the pavement close by.

266 INT. LOBBY - DAY 266

Seth, stunned, because this is crazy and Burton, stunned, eyes wide.

267 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 267

Luther, taking Kate down to the sidewalk, protecting her body with his body and --

Madness! -- because all goes nuts now as there are shouts and screams and people running this way, that way --

268 INT. LOBBY - DAY 268

-- Seth is in the center of it all, shouting instructions, racing with Burton out of the building --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 91.

269 EXT. STREET/CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY 269

-- unmarked cars fill the street --

-- a hundred uniformed policemen charge --

-- MOTORCYCLES ROAR in from everywhere --

270 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY 270

-- Kate lies dazed -- staring at the chaos -- here come thirty uniformed policemen --

*

-- and here come thirty more --

*

271 EXT. REAR OF BROWNSTONE - DAY

271

-- McCarty races out of the back of the building, leaps into a SPORTSCAR, GUNS away --

272 INT. UNMARKED VAN - DAY

272

-- Collin disassembles his rifle, scrambles from the van --

273 INT. LOBBY - DAY

273

-- Burton stays close to Seth, watching it all --

274 EXT. CAFE ALONZO BUILDING - DAY

274

-- The three workmen look down at it all -- then they look at each other in total confusion -- what the fuck is going on? --

-- because what they see is that the recently-deserted plaza is now stuffed with cops and more cops and vehicles and here come more and here come even more --

275 EXT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY

275

And Kate sits now, staring around, looking for Luther --
-- and Seth in the middle of it all stares around, looking for Luther --

-- because where the hell is he?

A black police lieutenant, shouting for his men to spread out.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

92.

275 CONTINUED:

275

Burton, turning, turning, trying to make sense of it all.

Three police sergeants on MOTORCYCLES, GUNNING through the crowd.

Kate, standing now, looking down -- and then she sees it
-- on the ground where Luther was: a new raincoat and a new hat and --

Seth, and it's all gone wrong and it's all going crazy and there is noise and there are shouts and there are whistles.

The black police lieutenant, breaking into a run, chasing after someone we can't quite make out.

276 INT. CAFE ALONZO - DAY

276

*

A tall uniformed police lieutenant, entering Cafe Alonzo --

-- he passes a couple of guys in chef's hats and the Chinese waiter who just gapes out toward what was his service area --

-- the tall uniformed police lieutenant moves gracefully past --

-- it's Luther.

He goes to the front door of the place, glances back toward where the NOISE is still mounting -- shakes his head -- out the door and gone!

277 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

277

The door to Kate's apartment opening and Seth coming in with Kate. Evening. Kate is as drained as you'd expect.

KATE

(glancing around)

Messy.

SETH

I like that in a woman.

She doesn't smile.

Seth, giving her back her keys and a piece of paper. His voice is raw from all the shouting.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

93.

277 CONTINUED:

277

SETH

Top number's local police -- (as she nods)

-- other two are my office and home.

(off another nod)

I live alone, too, call anytime.
Want me to get someone to spend the night?

KATE

I just need some sleep.

SETH

I've got surveillance outside.
And I'm keeping it on 'til this is over. I've got a feeling he's going to try and contact you.

KATE

You're on a hot streak, I guess.

SETH

Listen, I'm sorry.

Kate. Nothing to say.

SETH

Anything unusual, call me right away -- not a bother, I live alone.

KATE

You said.

SETH

(he knows that)

Feeble, huh?

She nods. They look at each other. Then he starts toward the door. Slowly.

*

KATE

Anything for the road? I've got water and water.

SETH

Deal.

278 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - KITCHEN - NIGHT278

They enter and she opens the fridge --

(CONTINUED)94 .*278 CONTINUED:*278

-- and it's full of food: milk and fruit and cookies.
Kate stares, then quickly glances at Seth. He just points to a bottle.

SETH

Pelligrino would be great.
(off Kate, who can't help it, breaks out laughing)
What's funny, I say it wrong?

KATE

Tired is all.

As she hands him a bottle.

279 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT - FRONT DOOR - NIGHT279

as they move toward it. He opens it.

SETH

I don't think I've told you this,
but I live alone.
(and this time, as she does smile, and he does go)
Lock it behind me.

KATE

(LOCKING it loudly)
How's that?

SETH (O.S.)

Real good. Try and sleep.

His FOOTSTEPS get softer, DISAPPEAR.

KATE

(still facing door, her back to her apartment)

I betrayed you, Luther. You better know that now.

LUTHER (O.S.)

You're not the first.

As Kate turns, Luther, standing there, is looking at her.

KATE

Why'd you come?

(CONTINUED)

95.

279 CONTINUED:

279

LUTHER

You have to know I'm not a murderer.

KATE

No, this afternoon. To the restaurant. Why'd you come then?
You must have suspected something, or you wouldn't have been prepared.

LUTHER

(simply)

My daughter wanted to see me.

He points to the couch -- as Kate sits. Luther, and before she's even seated, he's into it.

LUTHER

The robbery went fine 'til they came in. They were drunk. I hid in the vault. Sex got rough. He was going to kill Christy, but she turned the tables, was going to kill him. Two guys came in, shot her dead.

KATE

The same two guys who tried for you this afternoon?

LUTHER

Probably only one of them. I think Walter Sullivan might have hired the other.

KATE

Pretty powerful enemy; good going.

LUTHER

Not as powerful as the President of the United States.

Kate just looks at him.

Dead silence.

LUTHER

Richmond was drunk. The two guys are Secret Service. Chief of Staff Russell planned the coverup.

Kate just looks at him.

) B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

96.

279 CONTINUED: (2)

279

Dead silence.

Luther. Studying her. Not a great reaction.

Kate. Little shake of the head.

LUTHER

Every word true.

KATE

You're saying you're innocent of the murder? Why in the world should I believe you?

*

CLOSEUP - LUTHER

*

Long pause.

LUTHER

Because I swear on Mattie's grave.

KATE

*

Rocked --

Luther, going to her.

LUTHER

On your mother's grave, Kate -- you know I'd kill myself before
I'd lie about that.

Kate. Looking at him. Because he wouldn't lie, not about that.

Everything he's told her, all true.

The air goes out of her.

Silence.

KATE

(soft) Jesus, Luther.

LUTHER

I know.

KATE

They'll kill you.

(CONTINUED)

) B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

97.

279 CONTINUED: (3)

279

LUTHER

I know.

KATE

Can you run?

Luther as he sits beside her on the couch.

LUTHER

I was set to. At the airport.
All the money I'd ever need.

CLOSEUP - LUTHER

★

LUTHER

But I saw that bastard using Sullivan on the T.V. -- maybe I couldn't have saved that woman,
Kate. But I didn't even try.
(beat)
I know what you think of me and I know what we've been to each other --
(beat)
-- haven't been to each other.
And it's not the time to try and explain my life --

★

KATE

★

watching his face now.

LUTHER

-- but I've never robbed anyone couldn't afford it and I've never stiffed a waitress.
(beat)
And Alan Richmond has to pay.

KATE

What can you do?

LUTHER

Not much, maybe -- but I only went to jail when I had partners.
(beat)
People betray each other, Kate -- nowadays, when there's a group, someone wants to write a book --
(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

98.

279 CONTINUED: (4)

279

LUTHER (CONT'D)

(beat)
-- these people hate each other.
And if I can drive them just a little bit nuts, who knows how they'll react under pressure?
(rises and looks at her)
Glad for the talk, wish we'd had
more.

Luther crosses to the door, turns.

LUTHER

This is probably it; you understand that.
(as she does, he still looks at her. Then --)

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

I was never going to tell you this, but I watched you argue a case last year -- thank God you got your brains from your mother.

Kate standing now, too -- they're across the room from each other.

KATE

It's dangerous outside.

LUTHER

It always is --

(beat)

-- and I may not make you proud,
Kate --

(soft)

-- but I'm not going down alone...

And on that...

280 EXT. RUSSELL APARTMENT BUILDING - DAY

280

An elegant high-rise in Washington. Crisp, cool afternoon. A DOORMAN stands outside, enjoying the day.

A well-dressed man rounds the corner; he holds a small, beautifully-wrapped package with a small envelope attached. He moves to the Doorman.

(CONTINUED)

99.

280 CONTINUED:

280

WELL-DRESSED MAN

(it's Luther)

For Miss Gloria Russell.

He hands it over.

DOORMAN

(taking it)

Want me to sign anything?

LUTHER

(shakes head)

I trust you.

And he turns, walks quickly away as we --

281 INT. RUSSELL'S APARTMENT - DAY

281

The envelope being opened. It's early evening now. The message inside is short and clear --

"Gloria,

Thanks for the rescue.

AR"

Russell smiles, and as she opens the package --

282 INT. WHITE HOUSE - EAST ROOM - NIGHT

282

A beautiful necklace. Antique mostly likely. And tasteful -- we hear the sound of an ORCHESTRA PLAYING WALTZES.

PULL BACK to reveal Gloria Russell, looking just splendid, the necklace around her throat, entering a large and very impressive White House dinner-dance. Clearly an important affair of state.

We've never seen Russell quite like this -- relaxed, secure in her femininity. She nods distantly to Burton and Collin who are, as always, close the President. For the first time now, we realize something: Gloria Russell is hot for Alan Richmond.

Richmond, on the edge of the dance floor, chatting with some elderly couples, several of them European, all of them wealthy.

RICHMOND

(as Russell approaches)

You're a vision this evening, Miss Russell.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 100.

282 CONTINUED: 282

RUSSELL

Thank you, Mr. President.

(beat)

And thank you, Mr. President.

RICHMOND

(doesn't understand)

For?

(off her, radiant, indicating the necklace)

Come again?

This time she touches it -- he bends close to her.

RUSSELL

(whispering)

You sent it to me this afternoon.

Long pause -- then...

CLOSEUP - RICHMOND

★

So happy.

RICHMOND

Well, of course.

(now, to the others)

Excuse me, all -- I am overcome with the desire to dance with my Chief of Staff.

★

A hand to her -- Russell, beaming, moves out onto the dance floor with him.

Everyone at the gathering, watching them.

Richmond and Russell, very much aware that all eyes are on them --

-- what we don't know is this: they are both wonderful dancers. And they seem to be reveling in their moves --

-- because throughout this, they never stop smiling.

RICHMOND

What is this nonsense? I'm hoping there's an explanation.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

101.

282 CONTINUED: (2)

282

RUSSELL

(surprised)
Your gift, Alan -- I was overwhelmed -- and your note was so gratifying --

RICHMOND

(cutting in)
-- I sent a note?

RUSSELL

Yes, yes, you think I don't know your writing? I assumed you wanted me to wear it tonight.

The necklace. He looks at it as they spin gracefully.

RICHMOND

It is lovely, Gloria -- and you know what else?

They do a perfect dip.

RUSSELL

What, Alan?

RICHMOND

Christy Sullivan wore it the night
she was killed.

*
*

Russell, a quick glint of panic, a gentle peal of feminine laughter.

Richmond and Russell -- he bends her back, their mouths are close.

RICHMOND

You realize what this means?
Whitney's been heard from.

CLOSEUP - RUSSELL

*

They spin and glide. Long pause. Then --

RUSSELL

It's not precisely the first time,
Mr. President.

*

The MUSIC is BUILDING TO CLIMAX now. Their movements become more grand.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

102.

282 CONTINUED: (3)

282 *

RICHMOND

(so happy)
 You've been keeping things from me?

RUSSELL

Only because you have so much on your plate, Alan; we wanted to spare you.
 (beat)
 He sent me a Polaroid of the letter opener yesterday.

CLOSEUP - RICHMOND

★

A kick in the teeth --

-- he summons all his control, goes into even more complicated movements.

★

The crowd of elegant men and women, it's really wonderful dancing they're seeing -- they start to applaud.

Richmond and Russell, hearing the sound. Richmond acknowledges it with a smile as they come to climax.

RICHMOND

Well, now --
 (a final flourish)
 -- I need time to think -- come see me in my office in the morning --
 (beat)
 This will certainly make for an interesting chapter in my memoirs.

And as they bow...

The crowd applauding louder, while on the dance floor, the President of the United States and the Chief of Staff applaud happily back. As the sound builds --

283 EXT. BURTON'S HOUSE - ROOF - NIGHT283

Luther in the night. Silence.

He is moving across the rooftop of a home. He carries a briefcase -- Luther's making business calls.

Ahead is an attic window -- as he slides it open --

103.284 INT. BURTON'S HOUSE - ATTIC - NIGHT*284

Luther, slipping inside. Some stairs are just across.
 He goes down them, opens the door --

285 INT. BURTON'S HOUSE - HALLWAY - NIGHT285

Luther stepping into the main part of the dark house. He stops. No noise at all except that of someone BREATHING DEEPLY, coming from an open bedroom door.

Luther passes by -- for an instant we can see that Burton is asleep, an empty bottle by his head.

286 INT. COLLIN'S HOUSE - NIGHT286

Luther rounding a corner --

-- and we can tell immediately he's in a different house now. Burton's had only old furnishings, these are modern and new.

Luther pauses, listening. Nothing.

He moves forward then, turns another corner --

287 INT. RUSSELL'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

287

-- and now we can tell he's someplace else -- this is an apartment with a large window looking out on the city.

Luther doesn't stop to admire the view. He moves silently on...

HOLD ON the window.

And suddenly: Dawn -- the sun is starting to rise.

PULL BACK to reveal --

288 INT. RUSSELL'S APARTMENT - BEDROOM - DAWN

288

Gloria Russell, as the ALARM GOES OFF. She sits --

-- she stretches --

-- then she stares -- something has been taped to her lamp. We are looking at an issue of the Washington Post -- Russell's photo smiles out -- there is a headline that says simply: RUSSELL TO BE CHIEF OF STAFF.

Written across her picture are the words: "This shitstorm is your fault -- if we go down, you go down!" Russell takes the paper down, stares at it. Furious.

104.

289 INT. BURTON'S HOUSE - KITCHEN - MORNING

289

Burton, hung over, staggering into the kitchen of his home, stopping dead. A newspaper is set beside his coffee pot.

A front page of the Washington Post. Years back. The lead article reports that a siege has been successfully broken --

-- Burton, bloody and wounded, is being carried to an ambulance. A hero. Across the top these words have been written:

HOW DID THIS HAPPEN, YOU GUTLESS FUCK?

Burton stares. Steaming.

290 INT. COLLIN'S HOUSE - BATHROOM - MORNING

290

Collin, yawning, going into his bathroom --

-- across his mirror is taped a large white piece of paper, across which is written in thick black marker -- "If you could shoot for shit, we'd be out of this."

Collin angrily rips it down.

291 EXT. DOWNTOWN NEWSSTAND - MORNING

291

A bunch of commuters and businessmen are buying papers.

The newspapers. Washington, New York, Philadelphia -- and they're all different front pages, of course, but one photo in all of them is the same --

-- every one of them is running the mug shot of Luther.
And the sense of the stories is the same too:

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?

CUT TO:

292 COMMUTERS

292 crowded around, making their purchases. Some of them are young, some of them are half asleep. One of them is in his 60's and very wide awake --

-- it's Luther --

-- as he buys a paper, looks at the headline -- fascinated.

105.

292A INT. BURTON'S OFFICE

292A

Still early morning -- Collin is going through Burton's desk hurriedly --

-- when Burton surprises him --

BURTON

(pissed)

What are you doing?

COLLIN

(closes the desk, shrugs)

Needed a pen.

BURTON

(pointing to his desktop)

There's pens --

(moving in)

-- you don't trust me? --

COLLIN

(pissed)

-- I don't answer to you, asshole

--

Russell in the doorway now, glaring at them.

RUSSELL

You're both assholes, now move --

And on that --

293 INT. OVAL OFFICE - DAY

293

The note that was sent to Russell and the Polaroid of the letter opener.

PULL BACK to reveal --

The Polaroid and the note are on Richmond's desk. He studies them. Russell, Burton and Collin stand silently watching him, their hatred of each other clear.

The smell of death's in the room.

RICHMOND

(holding the note now, his voice is, when he speaks, calm; to Burton)
Any idea who could have forged it?

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

106.

293 CONTINUED:

293

BURTON

I talked to Seth Frank -- apparently Whitney learned how in prison.

RICHMOND

Very gifted man.

The window as he walks to it, looks out.

RICHMOND

And are we close to stopping him?

RUSSELL

We're working round the clock.

RICHMOND

Good to know that.

BURTON

He'll make a mistake.

RICHMOND

Good to know that too.

CLOSEUP - RICHMOND

*

With more meaning than the words convey --

RICHMOND

There is one other thing you'll want to take care of.

The other three, looking at Richmond.

BURTON

You're sure you want to do that?

RICHMOND

(nods)
She's a young prosecutor, prosecutors ask questions -- she might know what he knows...
(a reassuring smile)
Let's get cracking, shall we?
(beat)
Show you love your country.

On those words --

107.

294 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT BUILDING HALLWAY - DAY 294

Kate Whitney, getting into the elevator. Off to work.
She pushes for the lobby.

The doors close and the elevator starts down.

295 INT. ELEVATOR - DAY 295

Kate checks her purse to see if she has everything.

296 INSERT - ELEVATOR BUTTON 296

The "L" is lit --

-- but when the elevator gets there, it does not stop but goes straight on down to the basement.

297 INT. ELEVATOR - KATE - DAY 297

That's strange. She instinctively moves to the rear of the car.

ODD SOUNDS from the basement. Kate's just the least bit tense.

298 INT. ELEVATOR IN BASEMENT - DAY 298

The ODD SOUNDS are LOUDER.

And the doors don't open when they should.

299 INT. ELEVATOR - KATE - DAY 299

and now she's starting to get a little scared.

300 INT. BASEMENT - ELEVATOR DOORS - DAY 300

The doors sliding open and the Super standing there with tools.

SUPER

(smiling)

Sorry, Miss Whitney, but this thing's giving us a little trouble.

Kate nods, smiles back, relieved.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 108.

301 EXT. KATE'S APARTMENT BUILDING - DAY 301

Kate, leaving her building, going toward her car, getting in.

Down the block is a police car. Two surveillance cops inside. Kate starts to drive -- and so do they.

Kate turns a corner --

-- and so do they --

-- and as they do, they pass Luther, parked on the corner. Watching. Satisfied, he drives off in another direction.

302 EXT. OUTER CITY ROAD (WASHINGTON) - DAY 302

Luther, heading out of the city. The sun is higher in the sky.

303 EXT. COUNTRY ROAD - DAY 303

Several cars. Traffic is moving slowly. Luther continues to drive.

304 EXT. KATE'S OFFICE BUILDING - DAY 304

Kate, coming out of her office building, hurrying along the sidewalk. Lunch hour.

She goes past some brownstones -- the two cops walk behind --

*
*

-- the window of one of the brownstones is open, shadowy movement from inside --

-- Kate hurries past, not paying attention... Cops don't either.

305 EXT. BROWNSTONE - DAY 305

Now a figure begins to appear in the window --

The figure holds something long and thin, like a rifle barrel --

-- it's a large woman with a long mop -- as she shakes it --

Afternoon and the sun is strong.

109.

306 EXT. SULLIVAN MASTER BEDROOM - DAY 306

Sunlight, streaming in an open bedroom window. Whose bedroom, though?

Two maids are cleaning it --

-- and now we realize where we are: Walter Sullivan's bedroom, but it's all been changed, different rug, different fabrics, different furnishings.

The maids work silently and well. A final sweep of a dust rag here, a last tug at the bedspread there.

Done. They go to the door, take a last look around.

Perfect.

They go.

HOLD ON the empty room.

Keep HOLDING.

Now, silently, the vault door opens -- a gardener steps out, clicker in hand.

The gardener -- it's Luther -- he clicks it, tosses it back inside --

-- the door starts to close --

-- but before it shuts, we can see he's returned what he took the night of the robbery.

And as he moves silently toward the door.

307 EXT. GAS STATION (WASHINGTON CITY LIMITS) - DAY 307

The outskirts of Washington. Mid-afternoon now.

Luther's at a pay phone.

308 INT. SETH'S OFFICE - DAY 308

Seth, as he picks up the phone --

LUTHER (V.O.)

Kate okay?

SETH

Where are you?

110.

309 EXT. PAY PHONE - DAY 309

Luther. Fast.

LUTHER

I'm not staying on long enough for you to track this, just answer me.

310 INT. SETH'S OFFICE - DAY 310

SETH

She couldn't be in better hands -- talk about catching a break, Secret Service called me. They're taking over surveillance --

311 EXT. PAY PHONE - DAY 311

The telephone swinging back and forth --

-- and in the b.g., a car MOTOR ROARING away.

312 INT. KATE'S APARTMENT BUILDING - ELEVATOR - DAY 312

Kate, coming down the elevator again -- in her jogging clothes now. She has pushed the lobby button.

The elevator stops suddenly on the second floor --

-- The Super gets in, smiles.

SUPER

Got it working fine, Miss Whitney.

Kate nods, smiles back --

312A	EXT. WASHINGTON STREET - DAY	312A
	Luther, driving like crazy through the city.
312B	EXT. KATE'S APARTMENT BUILDING - DAY	312B
	Kate, getting into her car in front of her building, driving off -- no one is behind her.
312C	EXT. WASHINGTON - ANOTHER STREET - DAY	312C
	Luther, HONKING his HORN as he barrels around a corner, scattering traffic.
)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96	111.
312D	EXT. JOGGING PARK ENTRANCE - DAY	312D *
	Kate drives into the park past a sign reading: "PARKING LOT."	* *
312E	EXT. ROAD NEAR JOGGING PARK - DAY	312E
	Luther, gunning along -- up ahead the park is visible now.
312F	EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING LOT - ENTRANCE ROAD - DAY	312F
	Kate, following an arrow that leads to the parking lot.
	Luther, in the park, now, suddenly shouting "Shit" as we --
312G	EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING LOT - DAY	312G
	A "DETOUR" sign.
	Kate, entering the parking lot.
312H	EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING LOT AREA - DAY	312H
	Luther, out of his car now, running like crazy through the park. Ahead is a sign saying: "JOGGING PATH."
313	EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING AREA - DAY	313
	Not many other cars so she gets a space in front, overlooking the river, and as she stops, takes out her keys --
314	BURTON AND COLLIN	314
	Collin at the wheel, ROARING in behind her, rear-ending her hard.
	-- there is a SCREECH of BRAKES and a SCREAM --
314A	EXT. JOGGING PARK - TRAIL - DAY	314A

Luther as he hears the terrible sound, keeps running.

315 EXT. PARKING LOT - INT. KATE'S CAR - DAY 315

Kate in her car as it teeters at the edge and then starts its long fall to the jogging path far below.

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 112.

316 EXT. JOGGING PARK - PARKING AREA - DAY 316

Burton and Collin in their car, driving like hell away.

316A EXT. JOGGING PARK - TRAIL - DAY 316A

Luther, running INTO VIEW, stopping dead, helpless now, staring at the worst thing in the world --

317 OMITTED 317

318 EXT. JOGGING PARK CLIFF - DAY 318 *

Kate's car, careening against a rocky ledge, then cart wheeling the rest of the way down, landing horribly, spinning, finally coming to rest upside down and --

CUT TO:

319 EXT. BOTTOM OF CLIFF - DAY 319 *

Luther running to the car; hands shaking, he manages to pull front door open and reach inside --

-- now there are cries as other joggers stop and stare and --

Kate, as Luther pulls her body out of the wreckage.

LUTHER
(terrified)
... Kate...?

-- no response -- it's impossible to tell if she's alive --

-- in the distance now, the sound of an AMBULANCE.

320 EXT. WASHINGTON HOSPITAL EMERGENCY ENTRANCE - EVENING 320

The AMBULANCE, SIREN SCREAMING.

PULL BACK to reveal --

Early evening now, getting dark, and the ambulance braking in front of the emergency room of a large city hospital --

-- as doctors and attendants with gurneys come pouring out -- 113.

321 INT. WASHINGTON HOSPITAL - KATE'S ROOM - NIGHT 321

A private room. Later. Kate is bandaged and attached to a bunch of equipment --

-- but however faintly her breathing, it's still breathing and it's steady. She's alone for the moment in the semi-darkened room.

322 INT. HOSPITAL CORRIDOR - NIGHT 322

Empty. A doctor comes walking along -- it's Collin.

323 INT. HOSPITAL - KATE'S ROOM - NIGHT 323

Kate in her room, sleeping. Another doctor is with her now, checking her charts.

324 INT. HOSPITAL CORRIDOR - NIGHT 324

Collin. He sees what's going on, stops, pulls out a small notebook, pretends to read it, all the while glancing toward Kate's room with the one doctor still there --

-- now from around the corner, NOISE, COMING CLOSER -- SEVERAL PEOPLE APPROACHING, perhaps more.

Collin turns away from the sound, curses, then stops --

-- The doctor is done with Kate's charts.

From around the corner now, the group coming closer still.

Kate's doorway as the doctor exits and Collin enters -- they pass each other --

325 INT. HOSPITAL - KATE'S ROOM - NIGHT 325

-- Collin moves a step further into the room --

-- and now there is something in his hand --

-- a hypodermic needle.

Kate. Out of it. Lying there, eyes closed.

Collin, the needle ready, moving silently toward the bed.

Kate is barely breathing.

(CONTINUED)

114.

325 CONTINUED: 325

And now suddenly Collin is barely breathing --

-- because the other doctor's arms have viced around Collin's neck, forcing the air out of him.

Collin, stunned, trying to struggle --

The doctor jerking Collin's body into the air -- his feet are dangling now -- the hypodermic needle drops to the bed as the struggle goes on --

-- and Collin's in fabulous shape. He's young and power-

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

ful and he's been in terrible situations before and he knows how to fight and he's been taught to defend himself and --

-- tough shit --

-- the doctor -- it's Luther -- relentlessly increases the pressure against Collin's throat --

-- Collin can't even gasp now --

-- his feet can't kick anymore --

-- his body starts to go limp --

-- his eyes start to slide up into his head --

-- silence in the room --

-- it's almost over --

-- which is when suddenly Luther lets go.

Collin, eyes flickering open as Luther lays him down on the floor. All this next is whispered.

LUTHER

Scream. Go on. Which do you want most, for me to kill you or life in jail forever?

He has gone across the room to the bed. Collin tries to move, can't.

The hypodermic needle as Luther picks it up carefully, starts back to Collin.

LUTHER

Going to guess this wasn't to pep her up.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 115.

325 CONTINUED: (2) 325

COLLIN

(staring, eyes wide)
... you're not going to kill me...

LUTHER

... why do you think that...?

COLLIN

... you could have but you didn't...

Luther. Kneeling by Collin now.

LUTHER

That's because you didn't know your crime, prick.

-- and now he jams the needle against Collin's neck. *

Collin tries to cry out, but Luther covers his mouth.

LUTHER

(kneeling close, almost whispering into Collin's ear)

I didn't mind you tried to shoot me at the restaurant -- I wouldn't have minded if you'd nailed me at Sullivan's -- part of the job --
(beat)
-- but you fucked with blood.

Collin. Terrified.

*

COLLIN

... mercy...

Luther, bending over him. Luther pushes the plunger.

*

LUTHER

I'm fresh out.

Collin dying now. His breathing is getting strange, his body starting to stiffen. And on that --

*

*

KATE (O.S.)

... Daddy...?

Kate, eyes barely open. From her position Luther is simply kneeling, nothing else is visible...

LUTHER

... go to sleep, honey...

(CONTINUED)

116.

325 CONTINUED: (3) 325

She tries to stay awake, can't make it, drifts off.

Kate. She closes her eyes.

Collin. Luther closes his eyes for him. Now --

326 INT. HOSPITAL HALLWAY - NIGHT 326

A gurney with a figure on it being pushed by a doctor.

327 EXT. HOSPITAL - NIGHT 327

A dumpster outside --

-- the gurney is there --

-- the figure isn't --

-- the sound of a CAR GUNNING into the night and we --

328 INT. SETH'S BATHROOM - NIGHT 328

Seth coming out of the shower. He puts a towel around him, wipes the steam off the mirror, cries out --

-- Luther is standing there.

LUTHER

I need one answer -- when you interviewed Walter Sullivan, did he say why Christy didn't go to Barbados?

SETH

(shakes his head)

Just that she changed her mind.

(studying Luther)

You know who did it, don't you?

LUTHERSo will you -- check your phones --SETH

(incredulous)

-- who'd tap a police officer?

No reply -- Luther's already headed for the door as we --

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 117.

329 EXT. GEORGETOWN MANSION - NIGHT 329Walter Sullivan, getting into his limousine in front of a Georgetown mansion. Later in the evening. The car starts to move. Walter looks frail and very old now.
And somehow smaller.330 EXT. GEORGETOWN/INT. LIMO - NIGHT 330Walter huddled in the back seat, as the street lights illuminate him. He might even be ill. In any case, a sad figure.331 EXT. GEORGETOWN - NIGHT 331

The limousine, turning a corner.

332 INT. LIMO - NIGHT 332

Walter. Blinking.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Is this a shortcut, Tommy? *

CHAUFFEUR

(turns; it's Luther)

I'm your replacement driver for the evening, sir. Don't worry, Tommy's fine. WALTER SULLIVANVery unusual -- what do I call you?LUTHER

Luther, sir.

WALTER SULLIVANAnd are you familiar with how to get to my home, Luther?LUTHERI know the way, sir -- I'm the man who robbed you --

Sullivan says nothing; stares unsmiling.

LUTHER

-- and you're the man who tried to

(CONTINUED)

118.

332 CONTINUED:

332

WALTER SULLIVAN

-- I'm sorry I missed -- I believe in the Old Testament, sir -- there is nothing wrong with an eye for an eye when a terrible deed has been done.

(ice)

A deed such as yours.

LUTHER

You want to believe that, don't you? -- Makes your life a lot simpler if you believe that, isn't that right?

(big now)

What do you think I gain being here?

Sullivan. Contempt.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Have no idea -- you going to rob me again? --

LUTHER

I don't need your money, Mr.
Sullivan. Look in your vault lately?

WALTER SULLIVAN

(he has)

I'm afraid we're a little late for an attempt at leniency.

333 EXT. GEORGETOWN - STREET - NIGHT

333

The CAR. A SCREAMING TURN.

334 INT. LIMO - NIGHT

334

LUTHER

Shit's coming down tonight, Mr.
Sullivan, do you want to be a player or not?

(bigger)

Do you want to know what happened, or not? I saw. Your call.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(beat)

I want to know.

(CONTINUED)

119.

334 CONTINUED:

334

LUTHER

Are you up to hearing about it? --
Do you want to hear how he beat the shit out of her and tried to strangle her -- you have enough left for that? --

WALTER SULLIVAN

(a nod)

-- I could walk through fire --

Luther, fast now.

LUTHER

I was in the chair when they came in.

(as Sullivan says nothing)

They were drunk -- at first he only wanted to bruise her -- she fought back, he went for the kill -- she turned the tables. Then he screamed for help.

Pause.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Who else was in my house?

LUTHER

Secret Service shot her.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(doesn't like it)

Nonsense.

LUTHER

Gloria Russell handled the cover up.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Stop this --

LUTHER

-- don't you want to know who the man was?

WALTER SULLIVAN

(desperate)

It was you.

LUTHER

We're too old to bullshit each other, Mr. Sullivan.

(CONTINUED)

) B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

120.

334 CONTINUED: (2)

334

WALTER SULLIVAN

(big)

Who was it then?

LUTHER

(bigger)

You know!

Sullivan, shaking his head as Luther roars on.

LUTHER

You fucking well do, don't shake your head at me -- when you're

Absolute Power Script at IMSDb.

alone at night, when the rage takes you and you think of what you'd do to revenge her, on those nights you put a face to your enemy.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(coming apart)

Stop the car --

LUTHER

-- we're going all the way,
Walter --

WALTER SULLIVAN

-- it's too terrible.

LUTHER

It sure is.

Walter Sullivan. A long, shaky moment, then --

WALTER SULLIVAN

... I know about Alan's reputation as a philanderer... but... he would never dream of betraying me... I gave him the Presidency.

Luther and Walter as Luther turns a sharp corner and the WHEELS SCREAM --

LUTHER

(pressing it)

The press conference -- remember?
-- he held you in his arms and said if only Christy hadn't gotten sick she would have been with you in Barbados --

*
*

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

121.

334 CONTINUED: (3)

334

LUTHER (CONT'D)

(bigger)

-- how do you think he knew she was sick? You didn't tell anybody. But he heard it, all right. He heard it from her.
That night. And I heard every word --

Walter. For a moment, no reaction. Then he sits back hard. The air's out of him. He just breathes quietly.
Then --

WALTER SULLIVAN

That's not real proof.

Luther. Handing something back.

LUTHER

And this?

Sullivan takes it --

-- it's the letter opener.

Sullivan leans back, shuts his eyes.

WALTER SULLIVAN

You could have stolen this.

LUTHER

I did steal it. But that isn't my blood and those aren't my prints.

CLOSEUP ON SULLIVAN

*

Eyes still shut --

-- and he's very old and you expect tears --

-- but he didn't get to be Walter Sullivan by crying --

-- HOLD ON Walter --

-- and this incredible shriek of rage explodes! --

Luther, suddenly stopping the car --

335 EXT. WHITE HOUSE GATE - NIGHT

335

-- and we're at the rear of the White House.

*

122.

336 INT. LIMO - NIGHT

336

Walter. He sits in the back a moment.

Then he gets out.

337 EXT. WHITE HOUSE GATE/EXT. LIMO - NIGHT

337

Luther has gotten out too. They stand close to each other. They nod. Then Walter starts away.

WALTER SULLIVAN

(turns -- quiet now, at peace)

I did love her, you know.

And he walks away.

A White House SECURITY GUARD as Walter approaches.

WALTER SULLIVAN

Is he working late? I haven't an appointment but I'd like to see him if I might.

GUARD

You don't need an appointment, Mr.
Sullivan.

And as he waves him through --

Luther, standing there, watching the old man.

Walter, a final turn back, a nod of the head.

Luther. He nods back, returns to the car, gets in --

-- and now we begin a BLIZZARD OF CUTS.

338 EXT. WASHINGTON STREET/INT. LIMO - NIGHT 338

Luther driving through the night.

339 EXT./INT. NORTH PORTICO ENTRANCE - NIGHT 339

Walter entering the White House proper.

340 INT. WHITE HOUSE - BURTON'S OFFICE - NIGHT 340

Seth, with a bunch of other officers, standing in front of an office with the name "BILL BURTON" on a plaque -- he opens the door --

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 123.

340 CONTINUED: 340

-- Burton has blown his brains out. A note alongside reads: "I am so sorry." Alongside the note is a micro-cassette recorder and a dozen tapes.

341 EXT. WASHINGTON STREET/INT. LIMO - NIGHT 341

Luther. Driving faster.

342 INT. WHITE HOUSE HALLWAY - SECURITY AREA - NIGHT 342

Walter Sullivan approaching a METAL DETECTOR -- he starts to go through --

-- it GOES OFF --

Walter's embarrassed. He holds up his wrist, showing his watch.

The security guards smile, wave him to go ahead.

Walter continues on.

343 INT. LIMO - NIGHT 343

Luther, tense, ROARING along.

344 INT. RUSSELL'S - NIGHT 344

Gloria Russell -- Seth is with her -- he cuffs her, leads her out --

345 INT. AREA OUTSIDE OVAL OFFICE - NIGHT 345

Walter, by the door of the Oval Office. The letter opener is tight in his hand now.

The door opens.

Richmond, arms out, comes to embrace him, as he embraced him at the Press Conference.

346 EXT. HOSPITAL PARKING LOT - NIGHT 346

Luther pulling up into the parking lot of the hospital, getting out, passing the parking lot attendant who is listening transfixed to a small radio.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96 124.

346 CONTINUED: 346

RADIO ANNOUNCER #1 (V.O.) *

... in the greatest shock to the nation since the Kennedy assassination, President Alan Richmond's death has rocked...

Luther has moved past now; we can't hear the radio anymore.

346A INT. HOSPITAL RECEPTION AREA - NIGHT 346A

Luther enters. A number of people are present, all of them listening to a large radio, on the desk of the Information Clerk.

RADIO ANNOUNCER #2 (V.O.) *

... Richmond died violently in the Oval Office and Walter Sullivan...

Luther has moved past now; we can't hear the radio anymore.

347 INT. KATE'S HOSPITAL ROOM - NIGHT 347

She dozes. Luther sits alongside in a chair.

Outside, the moon is high in the sky.

Kate blinks, half opens her eyes, sees Luther.

KATE

... you're still here...?

LUTHER

Haven't budged.

She dozes again.

347A INT. HOSPITAL LOUNGE - NIGHT 347A

A coffee machine in a lounge. Empty. But a TELEVISION SET IS PLAYING SOFTLY.

Luther enters, gets some coffee.

The TV is SHOWING the PRESS CONFERENCE Richmond held. As we WATCH, Walter Sullivan moves down toward the President and they embrace.

(CONTINUED)

125.

347A CONTINUED: 347A

Now the Press Conference is over and we are LIVE AT the FRONT OF the North Portico of the WHITE HOUSE. A ton of reporters --

-- and Walter Sullivan, in their midst, beckoning for quiet.

REPORTER #1 (V.O.)

Mister Sullivan, have you no idea why the President took his own life?

Luther stops making coffee, looks at the screen.

WALTER SULLIVAN (V.O.)

(voice soft)

I know he's been feeling the pressure of office more than ever lately. We've talked about it a great deal.

REPORTER #2 (V.O.)

But why would he stab himself?

WALTER SULLIVAN (V.O.)

(sadly)

That's a question that will haunt me forever. Of course I tried to stop him --

(beat)

-- Alan was like a son to me...

Luther smiles, takes his coffee, leaves the room as we --

CUT TO:

347B INT. KATE'S HOSPITAL ROOM - NIGHT

347B

Kate sleeping. Seth stands there now. Luther enters with his coffee. Seth sees him and they both move to the door and confer silently --

-- Seth indicates Kate.

Luther crosses his fingers.

Seth says something we can't make out.

Luther nods.

Seth glances a final time at Kate, then leaves them.

Luther moves to Kate, studies her face.

(CONTINUED)

)B(ABSOLUTE POWER - Rev. 5/16/96

126.

347B CONTINUED:

347B

KATE

(eyes still closed)

... was that Seth...?

LUTHER

He was just checking in. When you're up to it, he said we might come over for dinner. He mentioned --

*
*

KATE

(eyes half open)

I know, he lives alone --

*

LUTHER

(smiles)

Watch it now.

He arranges her sheets.

KATE

... you don't have to fuss...

LUTHER

You were forever catching colds.

She nods, drifts and we --

CUT TO:348 MOON*348

starting to fall out of the sky now.

349 LUTHER349stands by the window, looking out. Soon, dawn. He stretches, crosses to her.KATE... am I going to be all right?....LUTHER

(long pause)

We'll be fine.

Kate nods, drifts.

Luther watches her.

Then he goes to his chair --

(CONTINUED)

127.

349 CONTINUED:349

-- reaches down --

-- pulls out his sketchbook.

He turns the pages.

Drawings of Kate.

He turns to a new page. Starts drawing her again. He's really getting good.

HOLD ON Luther and Kate.

FINAL FADE OUT.THE END

Absolute Power

Writers : David Baldacci William Goldman

Genres : Thriller Crime Drama

User Comments

Index | Submit | Links | Link to us | RSS Feeds | Disclaimer | Privacy policy

Abyss, The (1989)

by James Cameron.

Director's Revision. August 2, 1988.

More info about this movie on IMDb.com

TITLE: THE ABYSS -- ON BLACK, DISSOLVING TO COBALT BLUE

EXT. OCEAN/UNDERWATER -- DAY 3

Blue, deep and featureless, the twilight of five hundred feet down. PROPELLER SOUND. Materializing out of the blue limbo is the enormous but sleek form of an Ohio-class SSBN ballistic missile submarine.

INT. U.S.S. MONTANA -- DAY 4

In the attack center, darkened to womb-red, the crew's faces shine with sweat in the glow of their instruments. The SKIPPER and his EXEC crowd around BARNES, the sonarman.

CAPTAIN
Sixty knots? No way, Barnes... the reds don't have anything that fast.

BARNES
Checked it twice, skipper. It's a real unique signature. No cavitation, no reactor noise... doesn't even sound like screws.

He puts the signal onto a speaker and everyone in the attack room listens to the intruder's acoustic signature, a strange THRUMMING. The captain studies the electronic position board, a graphic representation of the contours of the steep-walled canyon, a symbol for the Montana, and converging with it, an amorphous trace, representing the bogey.

CAPTAIN
What the hell is it?

EXEC
I'll tell you what it's not, it's not one of ours.

BARNES

Sir! Contact changing heading to two-one-four, diving. Speed eighty knots! Eighty knots!

EXEC

Eighty knots...

BARNES

Still diving, depth nine hundred feet. Port clearance to cliff wall, one hundred fifty feet.

FRANK

(simultaneously)

Still diving, depth nine hundred feet. Port clearance to cliff wall, one hundred fifty feet.

Tension builds in the attack room as the Montana surges to intercept the intruder. The exec tensely watches the vector-graphic readout for the side-scan sonar array. The sub is running uncomfortably close to the cliff walls.

EXEC

(low, to Captain)

It's getting tight in here.

CAPTAIN

We can still give him a haircut. Helm, come right to oh six niner, down five degrees.

HELMSMAN

Coming right to oh six niner, sir. Down five degrees.

NAVIGATOR

Port side clearance one hundred twenty feet narrowing to seventy-five. Sir, we have a proximity warning light.

EXEC

That's too damn close! We've gotta back off.

BARNES

Range to contact, two hundred. Contact junked to bearing two six oh and accelerated to... one hundred thirty knots, sir!

EXEC

(really freaked now)

Nothing goes one thirty!

Suddenly the control room lights dim almost to blackness.

EXT. U.S.S. MONTANA

5

We see only the effect, not the source, as a large diffuse light passes rapidly under the sub's hull. Moments later a shockwave, like an underwater sonic boom, impacts the sub, slamming it sideways.

INT. U.S.S. MONTANA

6

The bride crew are knocked off their feet, as the ship is buffeted.

EXEC
Turbulence! We're in its wake!

SIRENS. Everyone shouting at once. The power flickers low.

CAPTAIN
Helm, all stop! Full right rudder!

HELMSMAN
All stop. Full right rudder. Hydraulic failure.
Planes are not responding, sir!

Power returns in time for the sonarman to get a glimpse at the side-scan display... AS THE SHEER CLIFF WALL LOOM BEFORE THEM.

HELMSMAN
Hydraulics restored, sir.

EXT. U.S.S. MONTANA

7

The cliff wall materializes out of the blue limbo off the port bow with nightmarish slow-motion. The sub slams into it with horrific force, scraping along and bouncing off. One tail stabilizer is sheared off and the big screw prangs the wall with an earsplitting K-K-KWANG!

INT. PORT TO TORPEDO ROOM

8

With the outer tube-doors torn off, seawater slams in, busting the inner hatches. Two-foot thick columns of water, like fire-hoses of the gods, blast into the room. Everything vanishes instantly in white spray.

INT. CONTROL RM/ATTACK CENTER

9

Everyone is hurled off his feet. The planesman flights to recover control of the yoke.

CAPTAIN
Collision alarm! Collision alarm! Lighten her up, Charlie!

NAVIGATOR
The torpedo room is flooded, sir!

CAPTAIN
Blow all tanks! Blow everything!

HELMSMAN
Passing twelve hundred feet...

EXEC
Blowing main tanks!

HELMSMAN
Twelve hundred fifty feet...

EXT. MONTANA

10

The great sub is being hauled down by the mass of its flooded bow section, its flanks rushing past us like a freight train headed for Hell.

INT. MONTANA CONTROL ROOM

11

The command crew fights futility for control, everyone shouting and terrified.

EXEC
Main forward tanks ruptured!

HELMSMAN
Passing thirteen hundred feet...

EXEC
Too deep to pump auxiliaries!

CAPTAIN
All back full! All back full!

HELMSMAN
Answering all back full. Passing thirteen hundred fifty feet... fourteen hundred... fourteen fifty...

The Captain locks eyes with the Exec amid the din...

CAPTAIN
We're losing her. Launch the buoy!

The Exec opens the door to a small box and punches a button. A red light comes on. The Captains takes a deep breath.

EXT. MONTANA 12

A tiny transmitter is ejected from the sub's hell and begins its long ascent to the surface. A second later the sub slams down like a piledriver onto a ledge, tearing open its pressure hull.

INT. MONTANA 13

VARIOUS QUICK CUTS, just flashes and impressions, as...
Seawater blasts down the corridors --
Explodes across the control room, hurling men like dolls --
Floods the cavernous missile bay in seconds --
Bursts through hatches into the reactor room -- Blasts men OUT OF FRAME in a micro-second.

EXT. OCEAN/UNDERWATER 14

In the cobalt twilight we see the Montana slide down the sea cliff, its hull SCREECHING like the death agonies of some marine dinosaur. Descending in an avalanche of silt, it finally disappears into the blackness below... a blackness which continues almost straight down, 20,000 feet to the bottom of the Cayman Trough. The abyss.

EXT. OCEAN SURFACE -- DAY 15

Above, in the world, the Caribbean rolling gray under a stormy sky. The Montana's emergency buoy pops to the surface, transmitting.

CUT TO:

EXT. OCEAN/20 MILES AWAY -- DAY 16

LONG LENS SHOT: three massive Navy Sea King helicopters thundering straight at us, FILLING FRAME.

REVERSE, as they barrel OVER CAMERA toward a lone civilian ship... an ugly but very sophisticated deep-sea drilling support ship, the BENTHIC EXPLORER.

It is a twin-hulled monstrosity with a central opening in its deck, around which crouch enormous cranes, winches and other arcane equipment.

The first Sea King settles onto the helipad, disgorging a contingent of Naval officers, technicians, and a squad of armed seamen. A pantomime in the rotorwash, we see the Benthic Petroleum "company man" KIRKHILL greeting COMMODORE DEMARCO, the on-scene commander.

INT. BENTHIC EXPLORER/BRIDGE -- DAY

17

The bridge is state-of-the-art, with computers and sophisticated navigation and communications gear, looking like mission control with its bank of video monitors. The Drilling Operations Supervisor, LELAND MCBRIDE, and BENDIX, the crew chief, watch the invaders swarming the deck below.

MCBRIDE
Does not look good at all.

TIGHT ON VIDEO SCREEN (MINUTES LATER) showing divers working in total blackness around some sort of installation on the bottom of the ocean. They move through the harsh floodlights in dreamlike slow motion, looking like space-suited figures with their helmets and umbilical hoses.

DEMARCO (V.O.)
No light from the surface. How deep are they?

MCBRIDE (V.O.)
Seventeen hundred feet.

WIDER, showing the Navy contingent crowding the control room. DeMarco is hardcore military, brusque and efficient. Kirkhill is a small man with pinched features, wearing a shirt and tie, which on a drill ship means company man and/or dickhead.

DEMARCO
I need them to go to over two thousand.

KIRKHILL
They can do it.

(to McBride)
Get Brigman on the line.

CUT TO:

EXT. UNDERWATER -- DAY (TOTAL DARKNESS) 18

1700 FEET BELOW. A submersible oil-drilling platform, DEEPCORE II, an island of light in the vast blackness. Its main framework connects two "tri-modules" consisting of three cylinders each. These contain living and work areas in a pressurized environment. An umbilical cable, thick as a man's thigh, runs up from the oil rig into the darkness, to the Benthic Explorer at the surface. In a bubble-like dome port window we see the rig foreman, or "toolpusher," BUD BRIGMAN. He's talking (via headset) with two divers working outside... 'CATFISH' DE VRIES, AND LEW 'BIRD-DOG' FINLER.

BUD
Hey, you guys are milking that job.

CATFISH
(Kentucky drawl)
That's cause we love freezin' our butts off out here sooo much, boss.

OMITTED 19

INT. DRILL ROOM 20

Bud turns from the window and crosses the drill floor. The working heart of the rig. THUNDEROUS MECHANICAL ROAR. The drill crew, in hardhats and mud-plastered overalls, tend the massive spinning turn-table in the center of the chamber. The semi-automated system requires only five men to operate. The others are LUPTON MCWHIRTER, DWIGHT PERRY, JAMMER WILLIS, and TOMMY RAY DIETZ. Bud hears his names called above the din by Jammer, a massive roughneck/diver who stands a good head taller than the rest.

JAMMER
(yelling)
Bud! Hippy's on the bitch-box. It's a call from topside. That new company man.

BUD
Kirkhill? That guy doesn't know his butt from a rathole. Hey, Perry!

One of the roustabouts, a wiry Texan, turns to him.

BUD
Do me a favor and square away the mud hose and those cable slings. This place is starting to look like my apartment.

Perry chuckles and sets to the task cheerfully. Bud EXITS, ducking his head through a low watertight hatch.

INT. CORRIDOR/TOOLPUSHER'S OFFICE 21

Bud tromps down the narrow corridor, his work boots gonging on steel.

P.A. (HIPPY'S VOICE)
BUD, PICK UP THE TOPSIDE LINE URGENT.

BUD
I'm coming. Keep your pantyhose on.

He enters his office, a tiny cubicle with stacks of paperwork, dustgathering tech manuals and waterstained Penthouse fold-outs. He picks up the phone... punches down a line.

BUD
Brigman here. Kirkhill? What's going on?
(pause)
I am calm. I'm a calm person. Is there some reason why I shouldn't be calm?

HOLD ON Bud's expression, darkening, as he listens.

INT. CORRIDOR/CONTROL MODULE 22

The control module is a long narrow cabin like the inside of a Winnebago, packed with instrumentation. At the end is a small bay with multiple viewports. Outside, at a 'Christmas tree' pipe installation, a lone diver can be seen welding. He is accompanied by a large submersible, FLATBED, and by a Remotely Operated Vehicle, or ROV, call LITTLE GEEK. Little Geek is an underwater robot which operated on the end of a cable-like control TETHER.
It has a single video 'eye' in front, by which the operator pilots the little machine. The rig's ROV pilots is ALLEN 'HIPPY' CARNES, who stands by the window twiddling his joysticks and drinking coffee. His pet white rat, BEANY, crawls contentedly around his shoulders. The door BANGS OPEN.

Hippy jumps, slops his coffee. Bud strides in. Not calm.

BUD
Son of a bitch.

He kicks a chair out of the way and slams his palm down on a switch marked DIVER RECALL. A SIREN, blasting through the water from a big hydrophone loudspeaker.

BUD
All divers. Drop what you're doing. Everybody out of the pool.

EXT. DEEPCORE/CHRISTMAS TREE

A22

Flatbed's pilot, LISA 'ONE NIGHT' STANDING, can be clearly seen behind a bubble canopy. She is a no-nonsense lady who holds her own in the mostly male environment by being one of the best submersible drivers in the business. She controls a hydraulic manipulator arm, assisting the diver, ARLISS 'SONNY' DAWSON, in his work. Little Geek hovers around them like a tiny helicopter. One Night moves the Flatbed arm to Sonny and hands him the pipe.

ONE NIGHT
Here you go, hon'.

SONNY
Just in time, sugar.

They react to Bud's recall, looking toward him up in the control module.

ONE NIGHT
Dammit, we just got out here.

SONNY
There was a time when I would have asked why.

One Night makes a grab for his butt with the manipulator claw, which he narrowly avoids.

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEPCORE/UNDER SUB-BAY

23

Flatbed moves underneath the rig, a few feet above the seafloor, with Sonny riding on its top deck. It passes under a lit opening and rises toward the surface of the water in the chamber above. Little Geek follows like an obedient dog.

INT. SUB-BAY/MOONPOOL

24

The opening is called the moonpool, and Deepcore's submersibles are launched through it. From inside the sub-bay it looks just like a swimming pool. Flatbed surfaces, nearly filling it. The chamber also contains CAB ONE, a similar submersible. Jammer, Perry, and some of the other drill-room boys are helping the divers out of the water. The water at this depth is only about six degrees above freezing, and these folks are cold and prune-fingered. Finler pulls off his demand-helmet, revealing a round, boyish face.

FINLER

What's goin' on? How come we got recalled?

SONNY

Hell is I know.

One Night jumps 'ashore' from Flatbed's broad deck and joins them. Catfish is unzipping his bulky dry-suit.

CATFISH

Just follow standard procedure, will ya... flog the dog till somebody tells us what's happening.

JAMMER

Hey, Catfish, I'll sell you my October Penthouse for twenty bucks.

ONE NIGHT

Save you money, darlin'... the pages are all stuck together by now.

Bud enters, approaching the group.

JAMMER
What's goin' on, Boss?

BUD
Folks, I've just been told to shut down the hole and prepare to move the rig.

SONNY
She-hit.

BUD
We're being asked to cooperate in a matter of national security. Now you know exactly as much as I do. So just get your gear off and get up to control. There's some kind of briefing in ten minutes.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/COMMAND MODULE

25

The whole rig crew is somehow jammed into the room for the video briefing.
DeMarco is on the main monitor, with his aides and Kirkhill visible b.g.

DEMARCO
At 09:22 local time this morning, an American nuclear submarine, the USS Montana, with 156 men aboard, went down 22 miles from here. There has been no contact with the sub since then. The cause of the incident is not known.

PAN AROUND the reactions of the various drill crew members... shocked,
hushed, curious.

DEMARCO
Your company has authorized the Navy's use of this facility for a rescue operation. The code name is Operation Salvor.

ONE NIGHT
You want us to search for the sub?

DEMARCO
No. We know where it is. But she's in 2000 feet of water and we can't reach her. We need divers to enter the sub and search for survivors, if any.

Bud's scowl has been deepening since DeMarco started to talk.

BUD

Don't you guys have your own stuff for this type of thing?

DEMARCO

By the time we get our rescue submersible here the storm front will be right on us. But you can get your rig in under the storm and be on-site in fifteen hours. That makes you our best option right now.

Hippy, born suspicious and recently graduated to paranoid, leans forward...

HIPPY

Why should we risk our butts on a job like this?

KIRKHILL

I have been authorized to offer you all special-duty bonuses equivalent to three times normal dive pay.

CATFISH

Hell, for triple time I'd crawl through razor blades and shower off with lime juice.

FINLER

I'm here to tell ya', you could set me on fire and call me names.

BUD

Look, I don't know what kind of a deal you guys worked out with the company, but my people are not qualified for this... they're oil workers.

DEMARCO

A four-man SEAL team will transfer down to you to supervise the operation.

BUD

You can send down whoever you like, but I'm the toolpusher on this rig, and when it comes to the safety of these people, there's me... then there's God. Understand? If things get dicey, I'm pulling the plug.

KIRKHILL

I think we're all on the same wavelength, Brigman. Now let's get the wellhead uncoupled, shall we?

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/COMMAND MODULE AND CORRIDOR

26

Bud stands beside the hatchway as the others file out toward their tasks.

They comment gravely as they pass...

JAMMER

When Lindsey finds out about this, it's not gonna be a pretty sight.

ONE NIGHT

They're going to have to shoot her with a tranquilizer gun.

CUT TO:

EXT. OCEAN -- DAY

27

A single Navy Sea King churns through the rain under massive thunderheads.

The sea below is whipped by the storm.

INT./EXT. SEA KING

28

PANNING ALONG BOOTED FEET, four pairs of black military size twelves line up, onto... a pair of Charles Jourdans fives under shapely ankles.

WIDER, revealing the four-man team of Navy SEALs. And a slender woman in her early thirties. She's attractive, if a bit hardened, dressed conservatively in a skirt and jacket. Meet LINDSEY. Project Engineer for Deepcore. She's a pain in the ass, but you'll like her.

Eventually.

She's holding on grimly, sitting crammed in with the SEALs and a bunch of gear, getting tossed around by the storm. The SEALs are dressed alike in black fatigues. They are muscular, finely-tuned and extremely dangerous special-forces types. The leader of the SEAL team, LIEUTENANT COFFEY, makes his way forward to the cockpit.

The pilot is white-knuckling his stick, trying to hold the great beast of a helicopter in position. Through the windshield, the deck of the Benthic Explorer can be seen below, pitching in a violent sea.

PILOT
No way I'm putting her down. I shouldn't even be flying in this shit.

COFFEY
(cool)
Just hold it over the deck.

Coffey goes back to the crew deck, moving easily in the bucking craft. He nods to the others SEALs, MONK, WILHITE, and SCHOENICK. In the open side door, Wilhite clips a 100 foot nylon rope to the airframe and throws out the coil. One by one the shoulder the gear-bags, grab the rope, and step out. Lindsey stands swaying in the chopper door, watching the SEALs fast-rope to the deck. One, two, three. Coffey looks at her.

COFFEY
You want to be on that ship, there's only one way it's going to happen.

He's sure she won't go for it. It's his certainty that gets her. She sets her jaw. Opening her purse she takes out a small plastic bag, puts her shoes and purse in the bag, and grips the bag in her teeth. Then grabs the rope and slides down.

EXT. BENTHIC EXPLORER/HELIPAD

29

Swinging wildly in the wind like a human pendulum, Lindsey fast-ropes forty feet to the deck. She steps away an instant before Coffey hits behind her. Lindsey crosses the rainswept deck with athletic strides. Her nylons are ruined. An air-crewman in the chopper lowers two additional equipment cases using the rescue sling. The SEALs catch them as they swing radically across the deck. They Navy chopper banks and seems to scurry away before the mounting storm.

CUT TO:

EXT. OCEAN BOTTOM

30

BLACKNESS. Then shafts of light become visible, above a ridge of rock.

Flatbed appears, trailing two heavy two cables. Behind it, the mass of Deepcore emerges from the darkness, its forward lighting array blazing.
Flatbed is towing it like a tug, aided by Deepcore's own mighty stern thrusters.

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE 31

Bud, his feet propped up, uses joystick controls to 'fly' Deepcore, maneuvering against currents and around seafloor obstacles. He is guided by the side-scan sonar display, with Hippy assisting in the sonar shack.
Through the front viewport, Flatbed can be seen out ahead.

McBride appears on the bridge monitor, holding a sheet of weather-fax.

MCBRIDE (on screen)
Well, it's official, sportsfans. They're calling it Hurricane Frederick, and it's going to be making our lives real interesting in a few hours.

INT. EXPLORER BRIDGE -- DAY 32

Bud responds via video.

BUD
Fred, huh? I don't know. Hurricanes should be named after women.

McBride looks up as the bridge door opens. Lindsey enters in a blast of wind, wet as a wharf rat and twice as pissed off. Maybe Bud is right.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE 33

Bud is surprised to see Lindsey's face appear on the monitor screen.

LINDSEY
I can't believe you let them do this!

BUD
(unpreturbed, almost cheerful)
Hi, Lins. I thought you were in Houston.

LINDSEY
I was, but I managed to bum a ride on the last flight out here. Only here isn't where I left it, is it, Bud?

BUD
Wasn't up to me.

LINDSEY
We were that close to proving a submersible drilling platform could work. We had over seven thousand feet of hole down for Chrissake. I can't believe you let them grab my rig!

BUD
Your rig?

LINDSEY
My rig. I designed the damn thing.

BUD
Yup, a Benthic Petroleum paid for it. So as long as they're hold the pink slip, I go where they tell me.

LINDSEY
You wimp. I had a lot riding on this. They bought you... more like least rented you cheap--

BUD
I'm switching off now.

LINDSEY
Virgil, you wiener! You never could stand up to fight. You--

Bud hits the switch and the screen goes dead.

BUD
Bye.

Hippy looks over him, trying very hard not to crack up.

HIPPY
Virgil?

BUD
God, I hate that bitch.

HIPPY
Yeah, well you never should have married her then.

Bud nods fatalistically.

CUT TO:

Ten foot waves crash through the launch-well, sending up geysers of spray.

Next to the launch-well, crewman have attached a lifting cable to CAB THREE, eighteen feet of ugly yellow submersible. It slams violently in its steel cradle as the drill-ship rolls. Coffey and Schoenick hand the gear bags in to Wilhite and Monk though the hatch under the rear of the submersible.

Lindsey approaches, wearing a borrowed roustabout's coverall.

She looks down at the larger of the two equipment cases brought by the SEALs, lying on the deck. Stenciled on it are the words: F.B.S./DEEP SUIT/MARK IV.

Coffey and Schoenick push past her to pick it up.

LINDSEY

Let's go, gentlemen! We either launch now or we don't launch.

Coffey looks up in surprise as she nimbly climbs the side of Cab Three and grabs the lifting shackle, circling her raised hand to signal the crane man.

LINDSEY

Take her up, Byron!

Cab Three, with Lindsey riding its back, is pulled up out its cradle and starts to swing violently as Explorer pitches. The submersible is then swung out to the center of the launch well. It sways and gyrates above the furious water below. Lindsey drops into the upper hatch.

Kirkhill leans suddenly over the console to look out the window.

KIRKHILL

What the hell is she doing out there? Son of a bitch...

(into microphone)

Lindsey... get out of Cab Three. Bates is taking her down.

Lindsey pulls her headset as she dogs down the inside locking levers of the hatch.

LINDSEY
Bates is sick. Besides I've got more hours in this thing than he does.
(to Coffey)
A little change of plan.

The little sub is swinging like a pendulum on the cable, and the SEALs, jammed in with their equipment in the tiny space, are getting slammed into the walls. Lindsey is calmly flipping switches as she talks.

COFFEY
Lady, we better fish or cut bait.

LINDSEY
Just hold your water, okay?
(to Kirkhill)
So Kirkhill, we gonna do this or we gonna talk about it?

INT. EXPLORER BRIDGE/D.O.C. 37

The plug is pulled on DeMarco's patience.

DEMARCO
I don't care who drives the damn thing. Just get my team in the water.

KIRKHILL
Alright, alright. Christ Almighty!

He gestured dismissively to McBride.

MCBRIDE
Cab Three, you are clear to launch.

INT./EXT. CAB THREE 38

Lindsey reaches up a grabs a red lever.

LINDSEY Roger.
(to Coffey)
There's only one way it's going to happen...

She pulls the lever hard. CLUNK-CLANG! The shackle-release drops the sub.

It freefalls ten feet to the water with an enormous splash and keeps right on going after Lindsey floods the trim tanks. Coffey et al have been slammed hard.

LINDSEY
Touchdown. The crowd goes wild. Explorer...
Cab Three. We are styling.

MCBRIDE (filtered)
Roger, Cab Three.

Lindsey cuts on the floodlights and maneuvers the descending submersible so that the umbilical cable is a few feet ahead on her front port. Moving up through her lights, it will guide her down to the rig. Cab Three free-falls into increasing darkness. Soon it is a candle below us in the indigo.

EXT./INT. FLATBED

39

One Night is driving the tug one-handed, pouring coffee from a thermos and rocking out to the great truck-driving song "Willing" on the beat-box she's got propped up on the sonar rig. Fighting white-line fever in the best tradition.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

40

Bud and Hippy come in for a rousing chorus.

BUD/HIPPY
... I've been driving every kinda rig that's ever been maaaaade...

EXT. DEEPCORE

41

Lit up like a proud Peterbilt, the rig crossed the trackless wastes. We hear them singing, carried OVER.

EXT. OCEAN DEPTHS/CAB THREE

42

In total blackness, the submersible descends along the rigorous line of the umbilical cable. Two hundred feet below it, the lights of Deepcore resolve out of the darkness. Now we can see the rig crawling over the ocean bottom like some monster lawnmower.

LINDSEY (V.O.)
Deepcore, Deepcore... this is Cab Three on final approach.

HIPPY (V.O.)
Gotcha, Cab Three. Who is that? That You,
Lindsey?

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE 43

Bud stop singing and snaps around at the mention of her name.

LINDSEY (V.O.)
None other.

Bud's expression is nothing less than stricken.

BUD
Oh no... you gotta be kidding me.

EXT./CAB THREE/DEEP CORE 44

Lindsey executes a 180 degree turn and cruises over the control module, back through the A-frame toward the docking hatch. The flange of Cab Three's
lockout hatch settles over the pressure collar on the rig's back.
There is a CLUNK as it mates up.

INT. DEEPCORE/COMPRESSION CHAMBER/GAS CONTROL STATION 45

Lindsey drops down from the hatch into the small cylindrical pressure chamber.
The SEALS drop down behind her, passing their gear through handover-hand.
The chamber is spartan, with steel benches, a folding card table, breathing masks, and medical supplies. Catfish greets them through the tiny porthole at one end.

CATFISH
Howdy, y'all. Hey, Lindsey! I'll be damned!
You shouldn't be down here sweet thing, ya'll might run ya stockings.

LINDSEY
Couldn't stay away. You running mixture for us?
Good. Couldn't ask for better.

CATFISH

Okay, here we go. Start equalizing, y'all.

HISsss of intrushing compressed gas. The pressure in the chamber rises. The breathing mixture is composed of helium, oxygen and nitrogen. Catfish monitors it carefully from a station outside the chamber, watching the gauges with a practiced eye. Lindsey and the SEALs all grab their noses and start making funny faces... popping their ears with the familiar diver's 'equalization' technique. They continue as:

LINDSEY

Get comfortable. The bad news is we got six hours in this can, blowing down. The worse news is it's gonna take us three weeks to decompress back to the surface later.

COFFEY

We've been fully briefed, Mrs. Brigman.

LINDSEY

Don't call me that, okay... I hate that. Alright, from now on we watch each other closely for signs of HPNS...

MONK

(as if by rote)

High-Pressure Nervous Syndrome. Muscle tremors, usually in the hands first. Nausea, increased excitability, disorientation.

LINDSEY

Very good. About one person in twenty just can't handle it. They go buggo. They're no way to predict who's susceptible, so stay alert.

COFFEY

Look, we've all made chamber runs to this depth. We're checked out.

LINDSEY

Oh... chamber runs. Uh huh, that's good.

(Coffey turn away)

Well, hey... you guys know any songs?

They ignore her. Start going over some diagrams of the Montana's interior.

It's going to be a long six hours.

INT. GAS CONTROL STATION -- HOURS LATER

46

Catfish checks his watch, then reaches over and adjusts a value on the tri-mix manifold, watching the gauges. Satisfied, he leans over to the pressure window in the door, checking out the SEALs. Hippy has come down from the control deck for an advanced look are the interlopers. Jammer is in a chair, reading a Louis L'Amour paperback.

CATFISH
Those guys ain't so tough. I fought plenty of guys tougher'n them.

HIPPY
Now we get to hear about how he used to be a contender.

Catfish hold up one calloused fist up in front of Hippy's face.

CATFISH
You see this? They used to call this the Hammer.

JAMMER
Hippy wasn't born then.

INT. PRESSURE CHAMBER

47

It looks like the end of a long bus trip. Everyone silent... leafing through beat-to-hell magazines or just staring. Lindsey has her feet propped up on the smaller of the SEALs' two equipment cases. She casually toes open one of the latches, then the other. Glances at Coffey. He's reading. She begins to lift the lid with her toe. Gets a GLIMPSE INSIDE, of packing foam, and what looks like a SMALL BLACK METAL BOX. Then... WHAM! Coffey's foot comes down on the lid, slamming it shut. Startled, she looks up into his cool gaze.

COFFEY
Curiosity killed the cat.

CUT TO:

INT. GAS CONTROL STATION/CHAMBER DOOR -- LATER

48

TIGHT ON CATFISH'S hands... closing valves... spinning the wheel on the chamber hatch. CUT WIDER as it cracks open with a virgin's sigh and swings aside.

CATFISH
Y'all'er done to a turn and ready to serve.
Everybody okay?

The SEALs nod peremptorily and shoulder their gear. Lindsey exists first, followed by Monk, Wilhite, and Schoenick. Coffey bends to relatch the small equipment case. He is alone for one moment in the chamber. He raises his hand and stares at it. The fingertips are trembling the slightest bit. He clenches them into a fist and walks out.

INT. CORRIDOR

49

As Lindsey emerges into the main corridor of the rig, she bumps into a large, dark mass.

LINDSEY
Hey, was there a wall here before? I don't remember a wall here. Oh, Jammer! Hi.

The 'wall' grins down to her.

JAMMER
Howdy, there, little lady.

Coffey emerges behind them and, ignoring Lindsey, faces Jammer.

COFFEY
(to Jammer)
Show us the dive prep area. We need to check out your gear.

Jammer scowls, turns and leads the SEALs in the sub-bay. Catfish and Lindsey exchange a look.

LINDSEY
Those guys are about as much fun as a tax audit.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMAND MODULE

50

TIGHT ON HIPPY, bathed in the light of the sonar display. He is making kissing sounds at Beany, who has his inquisitive nose right up to Hippy's lips.

LINDSEY

Hippy, you're going to give that rat a disease.

WIDER, as Hippy and Bud to see Lindsey leaning in the doorway. She and Bud size each other up. He opts for a jovial approach, his eyes wary.

BUD

Well, well. Mrs. Brigman.

LINDSEY

Not for long.

Lindsey crossed past him, her eyes scanning the banks of equipment, almost unconsciously checking, checking... getting the pulse of her big iron baby.

BUD

You never did like being called that, did you?

LINDSEY

Not even when it meant something.

(looking through the front port)

Is that One Night up in Flatbed?

BUD

Who else?

Lindsey leans past Bud to the gooseneck mike on the console.

LINSEY

Hi, One Night, it's Lindsey.

INT. FLATBED

51

One Night mimes a puking motion, finger down her throat. Then she replies with sickening sweetness...

ONE NIGHT

Oh, hi, Lindsey.

INT. COMMAND MODULE

52

Lindsey fives the sonar shack the once-over. She tweaks some knobs.

BUD

I can't believe you were dumb enough to come down. Now you're stuck here for the storm... dumb, hot-rod... dumb.

LINDSEY

Look, I didn't come down here to fight.

She crosses past Bud and exits into the corridor. Bud bolts out of the chair to follow her and Hippy scrambles in to take over.

INT. CORRIDOR/LADDER-WELL/LEVEL ONE LANDING

53

Bud catches up with Lindsey in the corridor, and through the following keeps pace with her as she makes her inspection.

BUD

Then why'd you come down?

She stops abruptly to look at a leaky pipe. He almost slams into her. She moves on, climbing down the ladder to the lower level.

LINDSEY

You need me. Nobody knows the systems on this rig better than I do. What is something that would go wrong after the Explorer clears off? What would have you done?

BUD

Wow, you're right! Us poor dumb ol' boys might've had to think for ourselves. Coulda been a disaster.

On the lower level landing, Lindsey opens a hatch into one of the machine rooms. ROAR OF PUMPS AND COMPRESSORS.

INT. MACHINE ROOM

54

Lindsey enters and moves expertly through the dark labyrinth of pipes and roaring machinery. Her eyes rove constantly over fittings, gauges, circuit panels.

BUD

(yelling)

You wanna know what I think?

LINDSEY

Not particularly. Jeez, look where this is set! Morons.

She scowls at a pressure gauge and turn a valve minutely.

BUD
I think you were worried about me.

LINDSEY
That must be it.

Lindsey's on the move again, and Bud scrambles through the pipes to keep up.

BUD
No, I think you were. Come on, admit it.

LINDSEY
I was worried about the rig. I've got over four years invested in this project.

BUD
Oh, yeah, right... and you only had three years with me.

She looks up at him.

LINDSEY
You've got to have priorities.

CUT TO:

INT. BUD'S ROOM

55

Darkness. The door opens and Bud snaps on the light.

BUD
My bunk's the only one I can guarantee won't be occupied. You can grab a couple hours before we get there.

Lindsey slips past him into his tiny state-room, the only private bunk on the rig. Rank had its privileges. His hand on the door is just level with her eyes. She notices his wedding ring, a massive band of pure titanium (something your fiancée might have picked out if she had a degree from M.I.T.).

LINDSEY
What are you still wearing that for?

BUD
I don't know. Divorce ain't final. Forgot to take it off.

Bud stays in the doorway. Lindsey takes a heaps of Bud's cloths off the narrow bunk. Start unconsciously straightening the room.

LINDSEY
I haven't worn mine in months.

BUD
Yeah, what's-his-name wouldn't like it. The Suit.

LINDSEY
Do you always have to call him that? The Suit?
It makes you sound like such a hick. His name is Michael.

Lindsey takes off her borrowed tennies and socks.

Bud eyes her, sounding too causal.

BUD
So what about "Michael" then... Mr. Brooks Brothers... Mr. BMW. You still seeing him?

LINDSEY
No, I haven't seen him in a few weeks.

BUD
What happened?

LINDSEY
Bud, why are you doing this? It's not part of you life any more.

BUD
I'll tell you what happened... you woke up one day and realized the guy never made you laugh.

LINDSEY
You're right, Bud. It was just that simple. Aren't you clever? You should get your own show... Ask Dr. Bud, advice to the lovelorn from three hundred fathoms.

She closes the watertight door, forcing him out. Locks it. She turns and throws her shoe hard against the far wall.

LINDSEY AAAARRRGH!

She flops down on the bed, sitting... staring at the wall. Her armor is gone. She looks small and vulnerable. A long beat. She reaches over to the tiny sink. Amid the clutter is a bottle of Bud's aftershave. She unscrews it and takes a sniff. Catches herself. Tosses it.

LINDSEY
Shit.

INT. QUARTERS/HEAD

56

Bud barges into the tiny head and puts some soap on his ring finger. He pulls the ring off roughly and throws it into the toilet. He reaches forward to flush. Can't do it. Now really pissed off at himself, he reaches into the toilet bowl, wrist deep in the chemical-blue water, and salvages the ring. He puts it on and washes his hands. The right hand stays faintly blue no matter how hard he scrubs.

BUD
Shit.

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEPCORE

57

The platform is stopped, hovering in place. Like a great spacecraft setting down on a barren planet, the rig settles into the bottom ooze. Flatbed releases its tow lines and heads back to its berth inside.

CUT TO:

INT. SUB-BAY

58

CLOSE ON A PHOTOGRAPH, actually a computer-composited down-looking scan from a towed LIDAR (laser imaging sonar) rig. It shows a faint, blurry outline of the Montana lying on her side on a ledge part-way down the canyon wall. There is no detail. A finger points to a flat ledge nearby. An "X" has been put on with a grease pencil.

COFFEY (V.O.)
This is us. We're just on the edge of the Cayman

Trough. The Montana is here, on its side, 300 meters away and 70 meters below us. We think she slid down the wall, and lodged against this outcropping.

CUT WIDE, showing the rig crew gathered around a worktable in the sub-bay.

The divers, Bud, Catfish, Sonny, Finler, Jammer, and the four SEALs have their dry-suits on. The pre-dive briefing. Lindsey, One Night, and Hippy will crew the submersibles. Wilhite is going around clipping DOSIMETER BADGES on everybody.

SONNY

This tells us how much radiation we get?

HIPPY

Hey, whoah... I can't handle no radiation, man. Forget it! Include me out.

CATFISH

Hippy, you pussy.

HIPPY

What good's the money if your dick drops off in six months?

COFFEY

We'll take reading as we go. If the reactor's breached or the warheads have released radioactive debris, we'll back away. Simple.

BUD

Okay... Hippy's not going... McWhirter, you can run Little Geek.

Bud pats the top of a small ROV, sitting next to its larger brother, Big Geek.

HIPPY

No way! No way! He can't fly an ROV worth shit. I'll go. Shit!

COFFEY

(to all)

On the dive, you will do absolutely nothing without direct orders from me, and you will follow my instructions without discussion. Is this clear? Alright, I want everyone finished prep and ready to get wet in fifteen minutes.

The rig crew disperses, picking up helmets and diving gear. Some are studying the diagrams of the Montana's interior layout. Bud takes Coffey aside as the others prepare.

BUD

Look, it's three AM. These guys are running on bad coffee and four hours sleep. You better start cutting them some slack.

COFFEY

I can't afford slack, Brigman.

BUD

Hey, you come on my rig, you don't talk to me, you start ordering my guys around. It won't work. You gotta know how to handle these people... we have a certain way of doing things here.

COFFEY

I'm not interested in your way of doing things. Just get your team ready to dive.

End of discussion. Coffey is walking away. Burning, Bud crosses to his gear locker. Picks up his helmet. Finler is suiting out next to him.

FINLER

Hey, you know your hand is blue?

BUD

Shut up and get your gear on.

NEARBY, Monk comes over to pick his helmet up off the worktable. Hippy points to the heavy equipment case that says F.B.S. DEEP SUIT/MARK IV.

HIPPY

I've been meaning to ask you what this thing is.

Mink opens the case and shows them an unfamiliar diving suit, what looks like a space helmet, and a large backpack.

MONK

Fluid breathing system. We just got them. We use it if we need to go really deep.

HIPPY

How deep?

MONK

Deep.

(shrugs)

It's classified... you know. Anyway, you breathe liquid, so you can't be compressed. Pressure doesn't get to you.

Catfish is grappling with the concept.

CATFISH

You're saying you get liquid in your lungs?

MONK

Oxygenated fluorocarbon emulsion.

Monk take a clear plastic box full of O-rings off the shelf and dumps them out. He opens a valve on the backpack and allows some of the fluid inside it to drain into the box. Then he take Beany by the tail off Hippy's shoulder.

HIPPY

Hey!

MONK

Check this out.

He drops Beany in the box and, before Hippy can protest, closes the lid. Beany is forced under the surface. He struggled for a second, and bubbles come out of his mouth. Then he casually swims around in there, completely submerged... breathing liquid. Catfish and the others stare into the box, amazed.

MONK

See? He's diggin' it.

Monk takes Beany out and hold him by the tail for a few seconds to drain his lungs. Then hands him back to Hippy. The rat is annoyed, but otherwise alright.

CATFISH

This is no bullshit hands down the goddamnedest thing I ever saw.

CUT TO:

Three sets of moving lights move outward from Deepcore. Cab One and Three, with Lindsey and Hippy at the controls respectively, and One Night in the Flatbed. Lindsey is in the lead. She approaches the cliff-like drop-off and starts to descend.

LINDSEY

Com-check, everybody. Flatbed, you on line?

ONE NIGHT

Ten-four, Lindsey, read you loud and clear.

LINDSEY

Cab Three?

HIPPY

Cab Three, check. Right behind you.

LINDSEY (V.O.)

What's you depth, Cab Three?

HIPPY

1840... 50... 60... 70...

LINDSEY

Going over the wall. Coming to bearing 065.
Everybody stay tight and in sight.

ONE NIGHT

Starting out descent. Divers, how're you doing?

Eight divers ride the back of Flatbed like itinerant workers on the way to the fields. Bud and his civilian crew, Catfish, Finler, and Jammer... sit across from the SEALs. They are in their gear and breathing from umbilical hooked in Flatbed's low-pressure manifold.

BUD

Okay so far.

JAMMER

How deep's the drop-off here?

CATFISH

This here's the bottomless pit, baby. Two and a half miles straight down.

COFFEY
Knock off the chatter. Cab One, you getting anything?

INT./EXT. CAB ONE

61

Lindsey consults her array of instruments.

COFFEY
Cab One, do you see it yet?

LINDSEY
The magnetometer is pegged. Side-scan is showing a big return, but I don't see anything yet. Are you sure you got the depth right on this?

BUD (V.O., filtered)
You should be almost to it, ace.

She turns the submersible and...

The spotlight flares back from the great brass screw of the Montana. It dwarfs Cab One, FILLING FRAME.

LINDSEY
Uh, yeah, roger that... uh, found it.

EXT. MONTANA/SUBMERSIBLES

62

Cab One maneuvers along the flank of the enormous sub, while Flatbed and Cab Three move above it. Wilhite take readings with a hand-held neutron counter.

COFFEY
Cab One, radiation readings?

LINDSEY
Neutron counter's not showing very much.

COFFEY
Wilhite, anything?

WILHITE
Negative. Nominal.

COFFEY
Just continue forward along the hull.

LINDSEY

Copy that, continuing forward. You just want me to get shots of everything, right?

COFFEY

Roger, document as much as you can, but keep moving. We're on a tight timeline.

LINDSEY

Copy that.

The great black hull of the Montana recedes into the darkness beyond the puny beams of their lights. It seems bigger than the Titanic and just as eerie in its final resting place. On its side, the sub's top deck becomes a wall along which the tiny submersibles are moving. Ahead, in the lights, is a white painted circle.

COFFEY

That's the midship hatch. You see it, Cab Three?

HIPPY

Roger, I see it.

BUD

Just get around so your lights are on the hatch.

HIPPY

Check. Then I just hang with these guys, right?

COFFEY

Right.

ONE NIGHT

How do you want me?

COFFEY

Just hold above it. Alright, A team.

Wilhite, Schoenick, and Monk unhook their short whip-umbilicals from the central manifold and roll off the side of Flatbed. They maneuver down toward the sub's hatch. Hippy guides Cab Three in closer to the hatch area.

INT. CAB THREE

63

Hippy turns to Perry back in the lockout chamber, ready to launch Little Geek.

The ROV has a handheld neutron-counter gripped in its manipulator arm.

MONK (V.O.)
Stand by on the ROV.

HIPPY
Perry, stand by on the ROV.
(to Little Geek)
Sorry about this, little buddy. Better you than me, know what I mean?

Hippy nods and Perry drops Little Geek through the hatch into the water and feed out a length of tether. Hippy picks up the control box and watches the video screen, guiding the ROV toward the Montana's hatch.

EXT. MONTANA HATCH AREA

64

The three SEALs have unlatched the deck cover and revealed the hatch. They open the out hatch and Monk swims down into to narrow escape trunk. He bangs on the inner hatch with a wrench, listening carefully with his helmet pressed against it.

MONK
It's flooded. Alright, I'm opening her up.

Straining hard in the confined space, he get the lower hatch open, then swims backs out immediately. He gestures to Hippy, via Little Geek's vision, and Hippy flies the ROV into the hatch.

EXT./INT. CAB ONE/MISSILE DECK

65

Meanwhile Cab One and Flatbed have proceeded forward along the hull. Beyond Lindsey's front port, the great hatches of the Trident missile tubes roll toward us in procession. Several of the hatch covers have been forced partway open by the warping of the hull.

COFFEY (V.O.)
Radiation is nominal. The warheads must still be intact.

LINDSEY
How many are there?

COFFEY (V.O.)
24 Trident missiles. Eight MIRVs per missile.

LINDSEY
That's 192 warheads... And how powerful are they?

SCHOENICK
Your MIRV is a tactical nuke, 50 kilotons nominal yield. Say times time Hiroshima.

LINDSEY (V.O.)
Jesus Christ... this is World War Three in a can.

COFFEY (V.O.)
Let's knock off the chatter, please.

INT. CAB THREE 66

TIGHT ON VIDEO SCREEN -- LITTLE GEEK'S CAMERA. Passing through a hatch, into a large grotto filled with pipes and machinery. The engine room.

MONK (V.O.)
Getting a reading?

HIPPY
It's twitching but it's below the line you said was safe.

EXT. MONTANA MIDSHIP HATCH 67

Monk moves into the opening.

MONK
Alright. Let's get in there.

Wilhite and Schoenick follow him through the escape trunk, into the dark corridor beyond.

EXT. MONTANA/BOW SECTION 68

Out of the darkness ahead emerges the trailing edge of the sail, big as a five-story building. Far below her, Flatbed moves along the edge of the ledge which supports the vast sub. Its lights, and Lindsey's strobes, reveal the tremendous damage to the forward section as they pass the sail. The torn and twisted hull looms above Flatbed as it sets down.

Coffey indicated an enormous rent where the bow section is almost torn away from the rest of the hull.

COFFEY
We'll go in through that large breach.

BUD
Let's go, guys.

Bud's team leaves Flatbed, swimming forward. The opening is a black mouth in their lights. Coffey moves inside. Bud attaches one end of an orange nylon line to a piece of pipe and moves into the wreck behind him.

BUD
Take it slow, stay on the line, and stay in sight. Watch for hatches that could close on you, or any loose equipment that could fall.

Jammer, Catfish, Finler, and Sonny follow him inside.

INT. MONTANA/FORWARD BERTHING SECTION 69

They find themselves in the forward berthing compartment with its rows of bunks. The room is twisted and disheveled, with bedding hanging from the bunks like the lolling tongues of dead dogs. Papers float in gentle eddying currents, letters, pages from paperback novels, photos of girlfriends. Bud pays out the line and follows Coffey forward. As they pass sealed doors, Coffey pounds with a tool, listening. All flooded.

INT. ENGINE ROOM 70

Monk leads his team along a corridor, following Little Geek's tether. Through a hatch into the engine room. Their lights play over flooded machinery.

INT. COMPANIONWAY/CONTROL ROOM AND ATTACK CENTER 71

From the berthing Coffey's team swims up a companionway towards the attack center. He pulls at a buckled watertight door.

COFFEY
It's jammed. Give me a hand.

Jammer and Bud squeeze in around Coffey. Together they wrench the door open on its squealing hinges. It give way suddenly, flying open. The suction pulls SOMETHING THROUGH. It slams Bud's shoulder. He turns. A FACE... RIGHT IN FRONT OF HIM! He jerks back, gasping.

Face to face with Barnes, the sonarman. The ensign seems unmarked, merely dismayed at his own mortality, judging from his wide eyes and mouth. Coffey reaches past Bud and pushes the ensign's body out of the way.

COFFEY
Alright, let's keep moving. We knew we were going to see this.

They enter the control room. Their lights play over the high-tech wreckage. Floating debris and bodies make shifting shadows on the walls as they swirl in the currents. A languid, weightless waltz. They move through the carnage. Their lights pick out tableaux... the planesman still strapped in his chair, someone jammed into the ceiling pipes, hanging down. Dead faces, pale in the lights. Still. We see only glimpses.

Coffey locates the captain's body and rolls it over. Removes the missile arming key which hangs on a chain around the dead man's neck. Moves on. All business. Bud turns back to his guys. Checking them. He notices Jammer is breathing so rapidly he's fogging his helmet. Catfish, Finler, and Sonny aren't much better. A wave a panic seems imminent.

BUD
How you guys doing?

SONNY
I'm alright, I'm dealing.

CATFISH
Triple time sounds like a lotta money, Bud. It ain't. I'm sorry...

BUD
We're here now. Let's get her done.

We see Bud working, calming them, talking them through it. He's sweating rivers in his helmet, not looking too steady. His projection of calm to the others is his own salvation.

Coffey pauses in the doorway to the communications room.

COFFEY
This part I do alone. Brigman, take you men and continue aft. Split up into two teams of two.
Let's get moving... we head back in fourteen minutes.

Bud leads his team into a narrow corridor.

INT. CORRIDOR/ROOMS

72

They search the rooms along the corridor with their lights until they come to a vertical hatch, open. a pit of darkness below.

BUD
Okay, Cat, Lew, Sonny. You guys stay on this deck. Hook you line onto mine. Any problem, you tug my line. Two pulls. Jammer, you're with me.

Bud drops down through the hatch to the level below, followed by Jammer, who barely fits through. Catfish hooks his safety line onto Bud's with
a carabiner and move along the corridor with the others.

EXT./INT. CAB ONE

73

Lindsey circles the hull, documenting, photographing. Her strobes sear the darkness, give glimpses of the dead leviathan's form as her tiny submersible circles it like a bee.

INT. COMMUNICATIONS CENTER

74

Working from a plastic card, Coffey spins the dial on the wall safe and opens it. He removes several plastic binders... the code books. He also grabs handfuls of classified documents and orders, and a set of missile arming keys,
all which he places in a pouch at his waist.

INT. CORRIDOR

75

Bud leads Jammer through a long, claustrophobically narrow corridor, tapping on the walls and hatches periodically. After he taps, he waits a few moments. There are no answering taps. They open doors and shine their lights into the rooms. The are bodies, but they seem anonymous. Crumpled shapes in khaki or blue. They undog and open a hatch. Beyond it is the largest chamber of the sub, the...

INT. MISSILE COMPARTMENT

76

The missile compartment is the large gallery a hundred and twenty feet long and forty feet high, with two rows of vertical launch tubes, 24 in all. The chamber is divided into three levels by a floor of open steel grillwork.

JAMMER
Where are we?

BUD
Missile compartment. Those are the launch tubes.

They sweep their lights around the chamber. Jammer turns... his beam illuminating a body just beyond the door. A coveralled seaman turning slowly in the eddying current. Small albino crabs crawl slowly over the man's face. One scuttles out of his gaping mouth.

JAMMER
Lord Almighty.

BUD
Hey, you okay?

Bud goes to him. Gets up close to his face. Sees that he's not. That he's hyperventilating. Fighting nausea. Bud grabs him by the shoulders.

BUD
Deep and slow, big guy. Deep and slow. Just breathe easy.

JAMMER
I... they're all dead, Bud. They're all dead.
I thought... some of them... you know...

BUD

I'm taking you back out.

JAMMER

No! I'm okay now. I just don't... I can't go any further in.

Bud sees that the big diver's breathing has stabilized. He looks at his watch. Checker Jammer's pressure gauges.

BUD

Okay, Jammer. No problem. You stay right here. I have to go there to the end... you'll see my lights. We'll stay in voice contact. Just hold onto the rope. Five more minutes. Okay?

JAMMER

Yeah, okay. Okay.

He moves off through the center aisle of the gallery swimming between the huge cylinders. He pays out the lifeline as he goes.

INT. COM-ROOM

77

Coffey is working rapidly and efficiently, moving from one rack of electronics gear to the next, setting thermite grenades at vital points. As the thermite ignites, it generates an intense arc-bright light and tremendous heat. The circuit chasses melt. Coffey works calmly in the infernal glare.

INT. MISSILE COMPARTMENT

78

Bed negotiates his way through the tangle of wreckage near the far end of the missile compartment. He goes down a stairwell to the lower level. A HUNDRED FEET AWAY, Jammer loses sight of Bud's dive-lights. He starts to get nervous. Suddenly his own lights begin to DIM, flickering lower and lower. They become little orange candles, the filament barely glowing. The darkness closes in.

JAMMER

Bud? BUD?! You readin' me? BUD?!!

BUD, at the same moment, is fiddling with the connector cables on his helmet lights, which are dimming and flickering. He hears nothing from his helmet transceiver.

JAMMER, smacks the side of his helmet. Shakes the transceiver on his belt.

Nothing... just static. Then even the static dies. Panic time.

He grabs the safety line and pulls twice. Hard. It is snagged on a sharp metal edge ten feet from him. He pulls twice more, harder, hauling the thing. The line severs. Jammer stared at the frayed and floating toward him. His eyes bug. He looks all around in the darkness. Can't see Bud.

Can't decide what to do. We can see hysteria revving up inside him like a flywheel.

Then he becomes aware of a faint radiance flickering over the walls. It is a cold and ethereal light, unlike the warm-white of their dive lights.

It grows brighter. He turns slowly toward it.

The glow is moving beneath the steel grill of the deck, sending shafts of cold light flickering upward hypnotically, coming toward him.

JAMMER

Bud? Is that you?

C.U. JAMMER, shielding his eyes, staring into the radiant source.

Guess what, Jammer? It's not Bud. In the brightest center of the glow, SOMETHING is moving, a figure casting strange inhuman shadow across the walls.

Jammer blinks against the glare, his face registering total, outright astonishment melting into terror.

The glare pulses subtly, hypnotically. The shifting shadow falls across Jammer. He finally snaps out of his fixity...

Screaming and gulping air he spins away and starts clawing hand over hand through the treacherous wreckage.

His harness catches on a twisted pipe.

He struggles, totally out of control... the big man reduced to a blind panic.

Jammer heaves forward with all his adrenalized strength.

He tears free of the entangling debris. Launches like a torpedo... slamming his backpack full force into the top sill of the hatchway. His trimix regulator takes the full brunt of the impact.

ON BUD, swimming furiously back toward Jammer's position. The strange radiance is gone. His dive light flare back to full brightness.

BUD
Jammer? Answer me, buddy, JAMMER?!

He reaches Jammer only to find him thrashing violently in place. A seizure.
Bud grapples with him.

BUD
Hang on, big guy. Hand on!

Catfish, Sonny, and Finler arrive from the corridor a moment later.
They
leap into the fray.

BUD
He's convulsing!

CATFISH
It's his mixture! Too much oxygen!

Then they're all yelling at once, grappling with the big man, struggling with the valves on his breathing gear.

FINLER
Crank it down, man! We're gonna losing him...

BUD
SHIT, it's stuck... goddamnit!

SONNY
You got it?! You got it?

BUD
Yeah, yeah... yeah. It's turning.

Jammer's convulsion ends. He goes limp.

BUD
We gotta get him out of here. Come on!

(to Jammer)
Hang on, buddy.

They drag Jammer's slack form into the corridor, hauling their way rapidly back along the lifeline.

INT./EXT. CAB ONE & MONTANA SAIL

79

Lindsey is approaching the monolith of the sail, maneuvering to clear the horizontal diving plane. Then her lights go dim and her thrusters loose power.

Suddenly a bright corona breaks around the bulk of the sail and SOMETHING appears right in front of her, a glowing object moving like a bat out of hell right at her! It is slightly smaller than submersible and we only get a glimpse. What we think we see in the diffuse glow is a translucent ovoid, open at the front with a spinning vortex of light inside... like some hallucinatory jet engine. And it's hauling ass.

Lindsey jinks left. The object jogs right. She fights the control as her sub slews around, slamming broadside into the sail. K-BAM! Her power comes back up. Righting Can One, she spins to look through the aft viewport in time to see the object racing away in a broad arc. It pulls a high-G turn and dives straight down.

We see the object zip behind Flatbed. One Night can't see it. The thing spirals down into the darkness like a hit-and-run drunk, diving along the wall into the abyss until it is lost to view.

HOLD ON Lindsey excited, amazed... dazed. Her hands are shaking. Suddenly Bud's voice blares out over the open frequency.

BUD (V.O.)
CAB ONE! CAB ONE! Meet me at Flatbed! This is a diver emergency!! Do you copy? Lindsey?!

She has a hard time focusing on what he's saying. Finally...

LINDSEY

Copy you, Bud. On my way.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE INFIRMARY -- AN HOUR LATER

80

Jammer is unconscious on a folding cot set up in the tiny cubicle of the infirmary. Monk, who is cross-trained as a medic as well as a demolitions man, has hung an IV of something. Bud and the SEAL are in the room, the others hovering outside.

BUD

Whattya think?

MONK

I'm a medic, which is mostly about patching holes. This type of thing... there's not much I can do. The coma could last hours or days.

Bud, torn by guilt, gazes at the big man lying pathetically on the cot.

CUT TO:

INT. CONSOLE MODULE

81

The SEALs, minus Monk, are all gathered inside, debriefing with DeMarco via closed-circuit video.

DEMARCO (video)

Did any of you see it?

COFFEY

Negative. But there was definitely a Russian bogey. The Brigman woman saw it.

DEMARCO

CINCLANTFLT's gonna go apeshit. Two Russian attack subs, a Tango and Victor, have been tracked within fifty miles of here... and now we don't know what the hell they are. Okay, I don't have any choice. I'm confirming you to go to Phase Two.

Wilhite and Schoenick glance uneasily at each other.

Coffey is silent. He is vibrating with tension... his fists clenched to prevent the shaking. He is wrestling with the moment, knowing it is, in a way, a point of no return.

DEMARCO
Is there any problem?

COFFEY
Yes... I mean no. Negative, sir.

Coffey takes a deep breath. Lets it out. Phase Two is clearly a big deal.

CUT TO:

INT. MAINTENANCE ROOM B/DARKROOM 82

The maintenance room doubles as a camera workstation. An adjoining head serves as darkroom. Lindsey is glumly reassembling Cab One's camera housings.

BUD
Did you get anything on the cameras. Video or anything?

LINDSEY
No. Look, forget it. I don't want to talk about it.

BUD
Fine. Be that way.

LINDSEY
I don't know what I saw. Okay? Coffey wants to call it a Russian submersible, fine. It's a Russian submersible. No problem.

BUD
But you think it's something else. What? One of ours?

LINDSEY
No.

BUD
Whose then? Lindsey? Talk to me...

Lindsey is wrestling with a feeling which is somehow also certain knowledge.

LINDSEY
Jammer saw something in there, something that scared the hell out him--

BUD
His mixture got screwed up. He panicked and pranged his regulator.

LINDSEY
But what did he see that made him panic?

BUD
What do you think he saw?

LINDSEY
I don't know. I DON'T KNOW!

Hippy comes pounding up, sticks his head in, gesturing animatedly.

HIPPY
Hey, you guys... hurry up, check this out!
They're announcing it.

They follow him into the corridor, trotting down to the mess hall.

INT. MESS HALL 83

General melee as they rush in, everybody focused on the TV.

CATFISH
Quiet! Quiet!

HIPPY
Turn it up, bozo.

ANCHORMAN
... the Kremlin continues to deny Russian involvement in the sinking of the Trident sub USS Montana. The Navy has not released the names of the 156 crewmembers, who are all presumed dead at this time. Civilian employees of a Benthic Petroleum offshore drilling rig--

HIPPY
Hey that's us!

CATFISH
SSSSHHH!

ANCHORMAN
--are apparently participating in the recovery operation but we have little information about their involvement. On the scene now is--

FINLER
BOOOOH! We want names!

SONNY

Hey, hey! There's the Explorer.

A LONG LENSE VIDEO SHOT of the Benthic Explorer and the other vessels in a stormy sea CUTS TO a shot of BILL TYLER, the on-scene reporter, in rain gear, clutching his microphone. He is on the deck of a Navy support ship, being used as a staging area from the press, well away from the center of the operation.

TYLER

--there is a tremendous amount of activity. With Cuba only 80 miles away, the massive buildup of US ships and aircraft in the area has drawn official protest from Havana and Moscow and has led to a redirection of Soviet warships into the Caribbean theater.

ANCHORMAN

How would you describe the mood there?

TYLER

The mood is one of suspicion, even confrontation. A number of Russian and Cuban trawlers, undoubtedly surveillance vessels, have been circling within a few miles throughout the day, and Soviet aircraft have repeatedly been warned away from the area...

HIPPY

This sucks.

INT. CORRIDOR/SUB BAY

84

Bud, Lindsey, and Hippy walking along the corridor, Hippy in a black mood of incipient paranoia.

BUD

What's the matter with you?

HIPPY

Now we're right in the middle of this big-time international incident. Like the Cuban Missile Crisis or something.

LINDSEY

Figured that out for yourself, did you?

HIPPY

We got Russian subs creeping around. Shit!
Something goes wrong they could say anything happened down here, man. Give our folks medals, know what I mean?

BUD
Hippy, just relax. You're making the women nervous.

LINDSEY
Cute, Virgil.

HIPPY
No, I mean it. Those SEALs aren't telling us diddly. Something's going on.

BUD
Hippy, you think everything's a conspiracy.

HIPPY
Everything is.

One Night is pounding down the corridor from the sub bay.

ONE NIGHT
Hurry up! Coffey's splitting with Flatbed! He got me to show him the controls, then his guys suited up and they're rolling.

Bud breaks into a run, passing her.

BUD
Goddamnit! D'you tell him we need it right now?

ONE NIGHT
I told him we had to get the umbilical unhooked ASAP.

INT. SUB BAY

85

Bud clears the door in time to see an empty moonpool, roiling with turbulence.
He runs to the edge and looks down. Flatbed is a vague shape moving off.

BUD
Unbelievable.

CUT TO:

EXT. EXPLORER BRIDGE -- DAY

86

The sky is charcoal, the sea is a mountain range of gray slopes.

Waves thunder over the foredeck, whipped by eighty-knot winds. Men in life jackets scurry like insects. Off the port bow, the ASW destroyer ALBANY
vanishes and reappears among waves sixty feet tall. McBride screams orders that can't be heard to the crewmen on deck. He staggers back along the bridge railing.

INT./EXT. BENTHIC EXPLORER BRIDGE -- DAY

87

McBride steps into the quiet of the control room. He turns on De Marco.

MCBRIDE

We're trying to get unhooked and get out of here... and your boys go sightseeing!

DEMARCO

They'll be back in two hours.

MCBRIDE

Two hours?! We're gonna be getting the shit kicked out of us by our friend Fred in two hours!

De Marco's expression is infuriatingly calm... icy. McBride looks at his watch and swears under his breath.

CUT TO:

EXT. USS MONTANA WRECK SITE

88

For a second time the black hull of the ballistic missile sub is illuminated by diver's lights. Tiny figures, the divers move like moths around a distant streetlight. Wilhite, Monk and Schoenick are clustered around an open missile hatch. Using a large lift bag, they are removing the frangible fiberglass, or 'diaphragm'. Coffey pilots Flatbed with increasing deftness, deploying
the big arm to aid in the work.

DOWN ANGLE as the diaphragm lifts away... revealing the blunt nose of the TRIDENT C-4 MISSILE. Like looking down the barrel of a gun at the bullet aimed right at you.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/MESS HALL

89

TIGHT ON VIDEO SCREEN: A HELICOPTER SHOT of a warship burning, rolling ponderously as it sinks in stormy seas.

NEWS ANCHOR (V.O.)

Little is known at this hour about the events leading up to the collision. The US Navy guided missile cruiser Appleton apparently struck the Soviet 'Udaloy' class destroyer in low visibility conditions...

VARIOUS CUTS of men in life jackets among huge waves... Rescue helicopters hovering. Shaky camera work. Wind blasting. INTERCUT WITH REACTIONS of the rig crew watching.

NEWS ANCHOR (V.O.)

In violent seas little hope remains for over a hundred Russian crewmen still missing after the sinking an hour ago.

SHOT OF AMERICAN CRUISER, burning, listing to one side in heavy seas.

Replaced by SHOT OF NETWORK ANCHORMAN.

NEWS ANCHOR

Soviet military spokesmen have claimed that the collision constituted an unprovoked attack. This was denied--

It continues. Bud looks at Lindsey. She turns to him, expression grim.

LINDSEY

Bud, this is big time.

CUT TO:

EXT. MONTANA WRECKSITE

90

The divers are working head-first in the missile's launch tube. Monk reads from a plasticized card, directing the other two step by step. The arcane litany is punctuated by the hissing rasp of their breathing.

WILHITE (filtered)

Separation sequencer disconnected. Next?

MONK (filtered)
Remove explosive bolts one through six in counterclock-wise sequence.

SCHOENICK (filtered)
Check... removing bolt one.

INT. DEEPCORE

91

ON THE RIG CREW, watching. Bathed in the light of the video screen.

NEWSCASTER (V.O.)
... just learned that Soviet negotiators have walked out of the strategic arms limitation summit in protest over the incident this morning.

Bud switches the channel.

ANOTHER NEWSCASTER
... US and NATO military forces have been put on full alert worldwide this morning in the wake of...

BUD
It's on every channel.

Bud switches again. Reception is getting worse as the storm affect
the satellite down-link to Explorer. THE SCREEN shows a reporter on a city street, stopping people at random. Their answers are edited together:

YOUNG WOMAN
You just feel so hopeless. You can see it coming, but what can you do? What can anyone do?

CONSTRUCTION WORKER
Hey, they don't want war any more than we do.
You think about it, you say... hey, they love their kids too. So why are we doing this?

He is replaced by a self-righteous, middle-aged woman.

WOMAN
If the Russians sank that submarine, they deserve what they got and a lot more, if you ask me, and you did. I think we've been pussyfooting around with them long enough.

EXT. USS MONTANA

92

It is now clear what the SEALs are doing. Using large lift bags and Flatbed's big arm, they have pulled one of the Trident C-4 missiles partway out of its launch tube, and have partially disassembled the nose-shroud, exposing several of the MIRV warheads within.

Moving very carefully, Wilhite and Schoenick ease one of the individual MIRVs out of its bracket. Hanging under a lift-bag in a jerry-rigged harness, the three-foot long warhead is move gently by the divers to the back of Flatbed.

INT. DEEPCORE/VIDEO SCREEN

93

Another man in the street interview, tortured by static.

MAN

Scared? I'm scared ____-less. But if it happens it happens, nothing I can do about it. Right? So why think about it?

CUT TO:

INT. SUB-BAY

94

Flatbed surfaces in boiling foam. The rig crew are all waiting. Like a crack pit-crew Bud's people leap onto Flatbed while its deck is still awash and start to work on to Navy divers, unsealing their helmets and uncoupling their umbilicals. Hippy and Bud start to untie a cylindrical object wrapped in one of the SEAL's gear bags. Coffey emerges from the hatch.

COFFEY

Don't touch that. Just step away. Now!

HIPPY

Excusez moi.

BUD

Coffey, we're a little pressed for time.

COFFEY

Monk, Schoenick... secure the package.

The two SEALs unleash the object in the black bag. Bud an Lindsey exchange a glance. He glares at Coffey as they pass each other. One Night nimbly climbs the hatch-tower and drops in. Bud swings the heavy hatch up, balancing it, and grins down at One Night.

BUD
This ain't no drill, slick. Make me proud.

ONE NIGHT
Piece of cake, baby.

He swings the hatch closed with a CLANG.

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEPCORE 95

The big A-frame, massive as a railroad bridge, to which the umbilical from the Explorer is attached. Flatbed rises INTO FRAME arcing around the coupling mechanism F.G. One Night deploys the big hydraulic arm.

It unfold from Flay bed like a huge steel spider leg, its claw-like 'gripper' opening.

INT./EXT. BENTHIC EXPLORER BRIDGE -- DAY 96

An ALARM sounds stridently on the dynamic-positioning console.

BENDIX
We're losing number two thruster. Bearing's going.

INT. THRUSTER ROOM TWO 97

Deep in one of the catamaran hulls, the positioning thruster motor is SCREAMING like a steel banshee above its usual roar. It EXPLODES with smoke and shrapnel. A roaring fire erupts. Crewmen run shouting in the smoke.

INT. EXPLORER BRIDGE 98

Now a KLAXON is going off as the ship begins to slew in the high winds.

BENDIX
It's not holding. We're swinging out of position!

EXT. EXPLORER'S DECK/LAUNCH WELL 99

As the ship slews, the umbilical is drawn off vertical. It goes tight as a bowstring. Pulled to the edge of the launch well, it rips down the side

with a godawful screech, tearing loose ladders and floats.

EXT. DEEPCORE/A-FRAME

100

Flatbed's manipulator has gripped the de-coupling mechanism when the cable suddenly pulls taut. The sub is jerked sideways, its grip dislodged. We see One Night get tossed around inside.

INT. DEEPCORE

101

Lindsey is in the corridor with a cup of tea when the whole rig
BOOMS LIKE A
GONG and lurches sideways. She's wearing her tea when Bud tears through a doorway and goes pounding past her. The intercom blares...

HIPPY (intercom)
Bud to control! Emergency! Bud to Control!

Bud claws his way up the ladder to level two. The rig BOOMS and shudders
as...

EXT. DEEPCORE

102

The rig begins to move. The enormous skid breaks loose. Start to slide,
plowing furrows in the bottom. One Night junks the controls, pivoting her submersible as the A-frame looms toward her.

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE

103

Bud runs in, past Hippy, and grabs the mike.

BUD
Topside, topside... pay out some slack, we're getting dragged!

EXT. EXPLORER DECK

104

The winch man staggers along the railing, blasted by 80-knot winds.
He
sprints for the base of the enormous crane which supports the umbilical winch. A wave blasts him into the bulkhead. He half-crawls to the ladder going up to the winch-house. As he climbs the winch's heave-compensator slides up and down, FILLING FRAME behind him.

It is bottoming-out with a sound like a piledriver, overloaded by the strain on the cable. It chooses that moment to fail. GRINDING CRASH OF METAL.

INT./EXT. DEEPCORE CONTROL MODULE 105

Lindsey has joined Bud, looking out the front viewport.

LINDSEY
We're heading right for the drop off!

EXT. EXPLORER DECK 106

The deck is ripped upward as the entire 40-ton crane is pulled over by the weight of Deepcore. It topples in the launch well with a roar of tortured steel that rivals the storm. An EXPLOSION OF WATER. UNDERWATER, the crane tumbles between the twin hulls. Trailing a vortex of foam and debris, it roars down on us, FILLING FRAME WITH BLACKNESS.

INT. EXPLORER BRIDGE 107

McBride stares in shock at the churning cauldron of the launch well. Grabs the underwater telephone.

MCBRIDE
Bud! We've lost the crane!

BUD (V.O.)
What? Say again.

MCBRIDE
THE CRANE! WE'VE LOST THE CRANE. IT'S ON ITS WAY TO YOU!!

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE 108

Everyone is stunned by what is happening. Lindsey fires up the sonar.

LINDSEY
Got it! It's dropping straight to us.

She puts the signal over the speakers and the room fills with eerie PINGING.

Bud shouts over the intercom.

BUD
Rig for impact! Seal all exterior hatches.
Move it! Let's go!

VARIOUS ANGLES, QUICK CUTS, as everyone runs to comply:

The rig crew pounding down the narrow corridors. Diving through low hatchways. Hatches are closed and the wheels spun down. Hippy puts into a ZIP-LOK BAG and seals it.

EXT. DEEPCORE

109

The umbilical drops down in slack loops out of the blackness above, draping itself over the habitat in large coils. One Night pilots her submersible feverishly among the falling loops. She banks and twists. A length of heavy umbilical slams onto her neck, tipping the sub.

She manages to get out from under it and keep going.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

110

Through the front viewport they can see the coils of cable piling up in front of the rig. The hull booms with impacts as the massive stuff hits.

Everyone hold their breath as the sonar return-pings get closer... and closer. And closer...

An ENORMOUS SHAPE plunged into the floodlight in front of the rig.

K-WHAM!! The 40-ton crane hits like a flatiron thirty feet in front of them. A clean miss. Much WHOOPING AND CHEERING. Then...

The crane topples slowly over the back. It rolls down the slope of the drop-off, gathering speed. Then tumbles over the cliff into the abyssal canyon. The coiled umbilical starts to pay out after it like rope after a harpoon. And they're still attached.

LINDSEY
Oh shit.

An agonizing few seconds. Then... the cable pulls taut.

K-BOOM!! The rig is slammed by the shock. Everyone is knocked off his feet, into walls and equipment.

EXT. DEEPCORE

111

The rig begins to slide. It tilts over the embankment and grinds down the slope of the drop-off in a cloud of silt. The cable pulling it inexorably toward the cliff. The framework twists and slams into rocks. SCREECHING AND GROANING of tortured steel.

INT. DEEPCORE/CORRIDOR/LADDERWELL/MAIN CORRIDOR

112

All hell has broken loose. SIRENS, SCREAMING, a KLAXON HOOTING moronically. Bud sprints from Control, bouncing off the corridor walls as the rig lurches and tilts. The lights go out. Emergency light come on. He trips and falls, scrambles up, running on.

IN THE LADDERWELL of trimodule C, Lindsey runs toward the machine rooms. K-BOOM! A searing bright EXPLOSION in the electrical room. Flames roar through the doorway. She dashed to a seawater hose hanging nearby and starts to unroll it. She sees Coffey and Schoenick in maintenance, lashing down the mystery package.

LINDSEY
Hey! Get on this hose, you turkeys!

INT. TRIMODULE C/COMPRESSOR ROOM

113

Monk is working in a spray of seawater, turning valves to stop the flow of ruptured pipes. Behind him, a wall of flame blossoms through the door from the electrical room, driving the back with the heat. A reservoir-tanks breaks loose from one of the compressor assemblies. It rolls at him, crushing his legs against machinery. The fire roars into the room.

INT. SUB BAY

114

Hippy runs in. The place is going nuts. Water floods from the moonpool as the rig tilts. Wilhite is dancing across the deck, leaping over compressedgas cylinders which are rolling around loose. Cab One jumps clear off its cradle and slides SCREECHING across the deck. Wilhite, running before the 12-ton juggernaut, had no place to go. The SEAL dives into the churning moonpool. Cab One slams into the end wall, then spins and rolls toward

Hippy.

He starts to run. Drop something. Looks back.

Beany, in his zip-loc bag, is lying in the path of the slide submersible.
Hippy runs back. Scoops up the baggie. Cab One FILLS FRAME behind him.
He makes it through the door an instant before the thing hits behind him,
buckling the steel doorframe.

Wilhite is clawing up the sheep skirting of the moonpool. He gets his fingers over the top. Pulls himself up...

A steel helium tank slams against his fingers, crushing them, and he falls back. More tanks bounce over the lip of the pool, hammering Wilhite down into the foaming water.

He doesn't surface.

EXT. DEEPCORE 115

The rig is sliding to the edge of the cliff. Beyond it... the bottomless pit of the Cayman Trough. It slams, crushing and twisting, into a rock outcropping and stops, hanging over the precipice.

INT. TRIMODULE A/QUARTERS 116

Perry is trapped as the trimodule floods with stunning swiftness.
He makes it through an emergency hatch between floors but can't get it closed. The inrushing tide blasts it open. He scramble upward to the next hatch. Spins the wheel. No time. He is slammed against the ceiling by the force of the water.

OMITTED

A116

INT. DRILL ROOM

B116

Lew Finler, Tommy Ray Dietz, and Lupton McWhirter fight their way toward the door as the drill room floods rapidly. Ahead, the big automated watertight door is closing like a motorized bank-vault. They reach it just as it is closing, but can't prevail against the strength of the motors. FROM THE FAR SIDE, we can see them screaming soundlessly at the tiny pressure window in the door. We can hear the dull THUNK of their pounding.

INT. TRIMODULE C/LADDERWELL AND COMPRESSOR ROOM

117

Coffey and Schoenick, in emergency breathing masks, are fighting the fire with a seawater hose and fire extinguishers. Smoke and steam choke the dark chambers.

Nearby, Lindsey grabs Hippy's arm as he is running past and drags him into the blazing compressor room. Hands him her seawater hose. Wide-eyes, he starts blasting everything in sight with water.

LINDSEY
No! Hold it on me!

She rushed into the teeth of the fire as Hippy blasts her with a spray of water, following her into the intense heat. She grabs Monk, who is semiconscious, and drags him out of the blazing room... Hippy dancing back with the hose, tripping, blasting her in the face.

But it works. They get Monk clear.

INT. DRILL ROOM CORRIDOR

118

Bud comes pounding down the flooding corridor in time to see the water in the drill room swirl above the pressure window, obscuring the faces of the trapped men. He claws futility at the door. The motors and the fail-safe latching mechanism are on the opposite side. Through the pressure window he watches helplessly as they drown. We don't see what he sees, but we know what he sees. Suddenly the bulkhead next to him gives way and a freezing torrent thunders in. Bud is blown off his feet and hurled along the corridor.

He scramble up somehow, splashing waist deep toward the opposite end
of the corridor where another of the hydraulic doors is closing inexorably.
He's not going to make it. He reaches it a moment too late to squeeze through.
Grabs the edge of the door and desperately tries to stop it from closing with the strength of his arms. It doesn't work. The steel door closes on the fingers of his left hand, pinning them in the doorframe.

But something amazing happens. His wedding ring lodges between the door and frame, preventing his fingers from being crushed and the door from sealing and locking.

It resists tons of pressure, denting but not collapsing.

The freezing sea pours in until only his head is clear.

BUD
Heey!! HHHEEEYYY!!

ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE DOOR, Catfish and Sonny come pounding up.
They see his face at the tiny window and his hand jammed in the door. Sonny wedges
a crowbar in the narrow opening and starts to pry. Catfish whips open his jackknife and slashes the hydraulic hoses on the door actuator. He is sprayed with red hydraulic fluid, machine blood.

Together they force open the door. Bud is blown through in a torture of water. Sonny is thrown back into some pipes. Breaks his arm.

Together they somehow heave the door shut manually, cutting off the flow.
Catfish hammers the fail-safe latch home with the crowbar.

Bud lies gasping and shivering... staring at the tiny band of metal that saved him.

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. DEEPCORE/ONE HOUR LATER

A118

LOOKING DOWN THE WALL of the canyon as Big Geek moves beneath us, tilting up to show Deepcore perched at the very edge of the abyss. The rig is twisted and dented, covered with loops of umbilical, trimodule-A a mass of wreckage. The ROV passes across the front of the control module. Through the front port, two figures can be seen in the light of a single emergency lamp.

SONNY (V.O. static)
Mayday, mayday. This is Deepcore Two calling Benthic Explorer. Do you read, over?

INT. CONTROL MODULE

B118

Sonny flips some switches on the UQC acoustic transceiver. Tries again.

SONNY
Benthic Explorer, Benthic Explorer. Do you read, over? This is Deepcore--

BUD
Forget it, Sonny. They're gone.

INT. TRIMODULE C

119

Bud walks down the corridor from control, slowly... as if carrying a great weight. The air is still thick with smoke. The power off... everything lit by emergency lights. Makeshift quarters have been set up in the mess hall, with blankets laid out on the tables, and with folding cots in the storage room across the hall. Jammer is still unconscious. Coffey and Schoenick bring Monk in on a stretcher, and set him up on a table. He is conscious but dazed with painkillers, his leg splinted.

BUD
Did you find Wilhite?

COFFEY
No.

He and Bud lock eyes. Bud bites back on his recriminations, but his gaze blames Coffey. He turns away.

COFFEY

Brigman.

(Bud turns)

I was under orders. I had no choice.

Coffey's manner is subdued, contrite. A marked contrast to his previous brusque arrogance. He's wrestling with his own loss, a sever blow to the tight brotherhood of a SEAL unit. Bud's anger is not dispelled. But he can't address it now. He moves on.

PAST THE INFIRMARY, where Sonny Dawson is rigging a sling over his own broken arm. He cries out in pain, cursing at himself. LOOKING DOWN THE CENTRAL WELL as Bud crosses. Down through the grill decking we can see the bottom level of the module is flooded. Catfish is down there welding, sending shivering reflections through the chamber.

INT. MACHINE ROOM

120

Lindsey is working, up to her knees in water. She is covered with grease, tools scattered around. Bud puts his hand on her shoulder. She looks up, blows some hair out of her eyes.

BUD

What's the scoop, ace?

LINDSEY

I can get power to this module and sub-bay if I remote these busses. I've gotta get past the mains, which are a total melt-down.

Rather than trigger anger and invective, the disaster seems to have affected her in a different way. She's accepted the situation, now that's it's done, and is immersing herself in technical tasks, which are for her therapeutic.

BUD

Need some help?

LINDSEY

Thanks. No, I can handle it. Bud... there won't be enough to run the heaters. In a couple hours this place is going to be as cold as a meat locker.

BUD
What about O-2?

LINDSEY
Brace yourself. We've got about 12 hours worth if we close off the sections we're not using.

BUD
The storm's gonna last longer than 12 hours.

LINDSEY
I can extend that. There's some storage tanks outboard on the wrecked module. I'll have to go outside to tie onto them.

She goes back to her task, working efficiently with a socket wrench.

BUD
Hey, Lins...
(she looks up)
I'm glad your here.

LINDSEY
Yeah? Well I'm not.

OMITTED 121

OMITTED 122

The sub bay is still a mess. Dark. A few battery-operated lamps.
Flatbed is back, floating in the moonpool.

One Night and Hippy are in deep concentration, piloting the two ROVs in a damage survey of the rig. Bud comes up behind them, check her screen first.
BIG GEEK'S MONITOR shows a view of the aft section of the rig. The drilling derrick had collapsed across Cab Three, totaling it. A girder is jammed through its acrylic front dome.

ONE NIGHT
Right through the brainpan. Deader'n dogshit, boss.

BUD
(to Hippy)
Where're you?

HIPPY
Quarters. Level two.

INT. TRIMODULE A/QUARTERS

A123

Little Geek rises up through the open central hatch, pivoting in a circle to scan the flooded interior.

INT. SUB BAY/R.O.V. STATION

B123

TIGHT ON VIDEO SCREEN, LITTLE GEEK'S POV. The interior of the structure is a shambles. The lights of the little robot fall upon a figure... Perry.

Lying on the deck, almost looking like he's asleep.

HIPPY
That's Perry.

BUD
(lets his breath out slowly)
That's it then. Finler, McWhirter, Dietz, and Perry. Jesus.

HIPPY
(gestured at the screen)
Do we just leave him there?

BUD
Yeah, for now. Our first priority's to get something to breathe.

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEPCORE

124

Catfish and Lindsey, in suits and helmets, drop down from the glare of the moonpool onto the dark sea floor under the rig. Walking, they pull their umbilicals behind them and head out through the twisted wreckage. Little Geek follows along like a dog at their heels. They settle beside a valve assembly at the base of the wrecked module.

LINDSEY
Cat, you tie onto this manifold. There's some tanks on the other side; I'm gonna go check them out.

CATFISH
You watch yourself.

He begins to attach one end of a coiled-up high-pressure hose to a manifold.
She takes the other end of the hose and moves off into the darkness.
Little
Geek goes with her faithfully.

INT. SUB BAY

125

Cab One is hanging from the overhead crane while One Nigh works to repair it.
Bud is nearby, tending hose for the divers and handing her tools.
Talking
while they work. Hippy is across the moonpool running Little Geek.

ONE NIGHT

Gimme a three-eighths socket on a long extension.
(he hands it to her)
So there you were--

BUD

There we were, side by side, on the same ship, for two months. I'm tool-pusher and we're testing this automated derrick of hers. So, we get back on the beach and... we're living together.

ONE NIGHT

Doesn't mean you had to marry her.

BUD

We were due to go back out on the same ship.
Six months of tests. If you were married you got a state-room. Otherwise it was bunks.

ONE NIGHT

Okay, good reason. Then what?

BUD

It was alright for a while, you know. But then she got promoted to project engineer on this thing, couple years ago.

ONE NIGHT

She went front-office on you. Tighten that for me, right there. That's it.

BUD

Well, you know Lindsey, too damn aggressive--
Son of a--!!

He's jammed his fingers with a wrench torquing down a bolt. Whips his hand out.

BUD

She didn't leave me... she just left me behind.

She puts her arm around his shoulders, somehow managing to be fraternal, maternal and suggestive all at the same time.

ONE NIGHT

Bud, let me tell you something. She ain't half as smart as she thinks she is.

She smiles and pretends to kink Lindsey's air-hose.

ACROSS THE CHAMBER, Hippy scowls as Little Geek's screen starts to go haywire with interference.

HIPPY

Hey, Lindsey, you reading me? Over.

OMITTED

126

EXT. DEEPCORE/TRIMODULE A

127

Catfish is working on one side of the wrecked module while Lindsey is on the other, out of sight. She is standing on the bottom at the base of the wreckage, checking valves on a rack of oxygen bottles amongst the wreckage. Right at the edge of the canyon wall. Behind her is a sheer drop to nothingness

LINDSEY

Yeah, Hippy, I read you. What's the matter?

The reply is GARBLED by a wash of static. Then, for no apparent reason, Lindsey's helmet light begins to dim out. Little Geek's lights fade. His motors whine to a stop.

ON CATFISH, as his lights drop to candleglows.

INT. SUB BAY

A127

The emergency lights are dimming, like a brownout. Bud grabs the diver intercom mike.

BUD

Lins, how're you doing? Lindsey?

ON LINDSEY, as she fiddles with her lights and transceiver pack.

LINDSEY
Catfish... I got a problem here. You there?
Catfish?

Behind her, SOMETHING rises from the depths.

It is the little vehicle she almost collided with at the Montana wreck.

It comes right up behind her. She doesn't know it's there. It hovers sideways like a hummingbird, as if curious, trying to get a better look. She becomes aware of the pulsing glow on the ground around her. She turns slowly. We see her react as the glowing, pulsing apparition is reflected in her faceplate.

A more powerful glow washes up onto her from below.

Her eyes go down. She gasps, absolutely stunned...

Above the edge of the wall, AN ENORMOUS SHAPE RISES SILENTLY OUT OF THE DEPTHS. Over sixty feet across. It looks like a blown glass manta ray, its transparent outer hull housing interior structures of great delicacy and complexity, pulsing with a blue-violet glow.

Lindsey stand before it, unable to move. Absolutely rapt.

Captivated by its ethereal beauty. It begins to turn, majestically, one rounded wing passing only a few feet above her. She reaches up. Touches it as it passes over her.

Lindsey is without fear, completely mesmerized.

The thing completes its turn and dives gracefully down along the wall. She is gently lifted by a backwash of turbulent water.

About that time, Lindsey remembers she has a still camera, a little Nikonos.

She fumbles to set focus and exposure with her bulky gloves as the beautiful machine glides into the depths. Gets all set for a shot and...

WOOSH! The little 'scoutschip' whizzes past her from behind, startling her.
She completely misses the shot of the 'manta ship'. She pivots, trying to get a shot of the little one as it zig-zags down along the wall, fast as a meteor. CLICK. She get a shot a second before it disappears.

From around the flank of the rig module, Catfish appears. Their com-sets come backs to life, along with their lights.

LINDSEY
You better not say you missed that.

CATFISH
Missed what?

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/MESS HALL

129

TIGHT ON SLIDE STRIP. Lindsey's fingertip in for scale. The shot is black with a little squiggle of light in the center. Pathetic.

BUD
Nice shot, Lins.

SONNY
What is that? You drop your dive light?

WIDER, SHOWING THE GROUP huddled around Lindsey who has her freshly-processed slide roll laid out on the pinball machine, using it as a light table.

LINDSEY
Come on, you guys... look, this is the little one right here. You can see how it's kind of zigging around.

BUD
If you say so. It could be anything.

LINDSEY
I'm telling you what is there. You're just not hearing. The impulses somehow aren't getting from you ears to your brainpan. There's something down there. Something not... us.

She looks around. Sees a lot of skepticism in the eyes around her.

CATFISH
Y'all could be more specific.

LINDSEY
Not us. Not human. Get it? Something non-human, but intelligent...

HIPPY
You mean like Coffey?

Lindsey is reddening. Despite her conviction, this is really hard.

LINDSEY
A non-terrestrial intelligence.

HIPPY
Non-Terrestrial Intelligence. NTIs. Yeah, I like that better than UFOs. Although that works too... Underwater Flying Objects.

Hippy is not really mocking her. He's actually into it. But it has that effect. Catfish is eyeing Lindsey like he's never seen her before.

CATFISH
Are we talkin' little space friend here?

HIPPY
Right on! Hot rods of the Gods. Right, Lins? Hey, no really! It could be NTIs. The CIA has known about them for years. They abduct people all the time. There was this woman I knew in Albuquerque who--

LINDSEY
Hippy, do me a favor... stay off my side.

Bud takes her firmly by the arm. Heads her out into the corridor.

BUD
Lindsey, will you step into my office for a minute...

INT. CORRIDOR/LADDER WELL

130

He propels her along the corridor, away from the mess hall doorway. They face each other in the narrow space.

BUD

Jesus, Lindsey--

LINDSEY

Bud, something really important is happening here.

BUD

Look. I'm just trying to hold this situation together. I can't allow you to cause this kind of hysteria--

LINDSEY

Who's hysterical? Nobody's hysterical!

They're talking across each other, not connecting. Bud weary and frustrated.

Lindsey is cranked up with the afterglow of her encounter.

BUD

All I'm saying is when you're hanging on by your fingernails, you don't go waving your arms around.

LINDSEY

I saw something! I'm not going to go back there and say I didn't see it when I did. I'm sorry.

BUD

God, you are the most stubborn woman I ever knew.

LINDSEY

I need you to believe me, Bud. Look at me. Do I seem stressed out? Any of the symptoms of pressure sickness, any tremors, slurred speech?

BUD

No.

LINDSEY

Bud, this is me, Lindsey. Okay? You know me better than anybody in the world. Now watch my lips... I saw these things. I touched one of them. And it wasn't some clunky steel can like we would build... it glided. It was the most beautiful thing I've ever seen.

Bud is stilled by her intensity. She moves close to him. Eyes alive and luminous.

LINDSEY

It was a machine, but it seems almost alive. Like a... dance of light. Bud, you have to trust me... please. I don't think they mean us harm. I don't know how I know that, it's just a feeling.

BUD

How can I go on a feeling? You think Coffey's going to go on you 'feeling'?

LINDSEY

We all see what we want to see... Coffey looks and he sees Russians, he sees hate and fear. Bud, you have to look with better eyes than that.

Bud has been taking this all in. His eyes tracking her face. He closes his eyes, taking a deep breath. It's so hard for him to do this, but...

BUD

I can't, Lindsey. I'm sorry. How can I?

CUT TO:

INT. MESS HALL -- LATER

131

Coffey has Bud, Lindsey and several of the rig crew gathered for a little summit. Lindsey is withdrawn, sitting far from the others, a self-imposed exile. They're all wearing warm clothes and hugging themselves. Their breath shows in the air.

COFFEY

I want 'round-the-clock manning of the sonar shack and the exterior cameras. We need early warning if the Soviet craft try another incursion.

LINDSEY

(rolling her eyes)

Gimme a break! Coffey, these things live three and a half miles down on the bottom of an abyssal trench! Trust me... they're not speaking Russian.

Coffey looks at her for a moment, then goes on as if she hadn't spoke.

COFFEY

(to One Night)

Why haven't you finished repairs on the hydrophone transmitter yet?

ONE NIGHT

I was having my nails done.

Coffey is sweating, despite the chill. Keeps his hands clenched in fists so they won't see how bad the tremors have gotten.

COFFEY
Get something straight. You people are under my authority--

CATFISH
Look, podner... we don't work for you, we don't take orders from you, and we don't much like you. In addition to which your momma dresses you funny.

Coffey's eyes are straight razors. He slashes them from face to face. You can see him tightening up like a clockspring, losing control of the situation in front of his own men. Bud defuses it.

BUD
'Fish'?

CATFISH
Yuh?

BUD
Take the first watch in sonar. Hippy, you handle the exterior surveillance. One Night, see if you can get that transmitter working for me, okay?

ONE NIGHT
Gimme a couple of hours.

HOLD ON COFFEY as everyone leaves. Winding tighter.

CUT TO:

INT. MAINTENANCE ROOM B -- LATER

132

Coffey and Schoenick are bending over the warhead. They have a small port removed and are attaching waterproof leads from an ELECTRONIC DETONATOR. The black box Lindsey glimpsed earlier. As the two SEALs work like surgeons, we see past Coffey's shoulder to a hemispherical window behind him, which looks out into the perpetual blackness. Something appears... a goofy shark face.

Big Geek rises silently in front of the port. It moves a little, trying to get a peek over Coffey's shoulder.

INT. CONTROL MODULE/ROV SHACK

133

Hippy is twiddling his joysticks, watching the screen like a ferret.

HIPPY

Come on... move to the left... just a little more... come on, A.J. Squared Away... that's it--

ON THE SCREEN, Geek's POV. Coffey is blocking Hippy's view of whatever it is they're working on. Abruptly, he moves. The warhead is lying there in plain sight, detonator wires hooked up. Hippy's eyes bug out. He knows exactly what it is.

HIPPY

Pretty radical, guys. Pretty radical.

He hurries to the VCR and puts it into RECORD.

INT. CONTROL MODULE/ROV SHACK -- MINUTES LATER

134

Video image of the SEALs working. It FREEZES on a clear view of the warhead.

HIPPY (V.O.)

Say hello to MIRV.

Bud has his face right up to screen. He frowns, skeptical.

HIPPY

Come on, man. What else could it be?

BUD

Why bring it here?

HIPPY

It's gotta be, like, an emergency plan to keep it away from the Russians... Hotwire one of the nukes with some kinda detonator, put it back in the sub, and fry the whole thing, slicker'n snot. Oh, uh... hi, Lins.

Bud whips around. Lindsey, standing quietly in the doorway. It's apparent from expression she's been watching them for some time. She looks ready to kill somebody. Then she's gone.

INT. CORRIDOR

135

Bud catches up to her in the corridor, trying to put the brakes on her.

LINDSEY

Look, goddamnit, if you won't do something about it, I will.

BUD

Lindsey! Wait a second--

She reaches the watertight door to Maintenance Room B. It's locked. Before

Bud can stop her she grabs a fire-extinguisher off the wall and pounds on the steel door like a big gong. BOOM! BOOM! BOOM!

Needless to say, it opens. She pushes past Schoenick, see the bomb lying there naked.

LINDSEY

You've got some huevos bringing this... thing... into my rig! With everything that's been going on up in the world, you bring a nuclear weapon in here? Does this strike anyone as particularly psychotic, or is it just me?

COFFEY

You don't need to know the details of this mission... you're better off if you don't.

LINDSEY

You're right... I don't. I just need to know that this thing is out of here! You hear me, Roger Ramjet?

COFFEY

Mrs. Brigman, you're becoming a serious impediment to this mission. I believe the stress is affecting you.

(to Schoenick)

Escort her to quarters and have Monk prepare a tranquilizer.

Schoenick takes her arm in a tight grip.

LINDSEY

Bullshit, you can't do that. Oww... goddamnit!

Lindsey goes bananas, trying to get Schoenick's big hands off her arms. Bud slams his hand down on the intercom button.

BUD
Emergency! Maintenance room B. Emergency!

He pulls the fire alarm for good measure and spins on Coffey... warning him with a look that is not to be messed with. Coffey is braced back against the worktable... an odd stance, with one arm behind his back. Suddenly there's a crowd outside the door as Catfish, Hippy, One Night, and Sonny come running up. Confrontation time.

Sirens going. About a million volts of electricity in the air. Bud braces Schoenick.

BUD
Let her go. Do it... right now.

He does. Lindsey jerks away. Rubs her arms.

LINDSEY
You dumb jarhead motherf--

BUD
Chill out, Lindsey!!

CATFISH
What's the problem?

Everyone is frozen in place. Bud a Coffey... snake and mongoose, glaring. Bud pulls Lindsey back into the corridor.

BUD
Nothing. We were just leaving.
(to her)
Weren't we?

ANGLE FROM BEHIND COFFEY, as Bud's group moves out of sight up the corridor. Hands behind his back. In his hand, cocked, finger on the trigger, is the .45. He turns and sets it on the table, steadying himself as if in the wind. he seems to sag. When he looks at Schoenick, his eyes are wounds. A hunted animal. Voice shaky.

COFFEY

They can't be trusted. They're turning against us. We may have to take... steps.

INT. CORRIDOR

136

Lindsey, Bud, Hippy. Bud slows, letting them trail behind the others.

BUD

Lins, stay away from that guy. I mean it.

HIPPY

Yeah. The dude's in bad shape... you see his hands?

LINDSEY

He's got the shakes?

BUD

Look, the guy's operating on his own, cut off from chain of command. He's exhibiting symptoms of pressure-induced psychosis. And he's got a nuclear weapon. So, as a personal favor to me... will you put your tongue in neutral for a while?

HIPPY

Man, I give this a sphincter-factor of about nine point five.

INT. MAINTENANCE ROOM B

137

Coffey goes to the dome port. Looks past his shrunken and twisted reflection into the void. Eternal night.

ANGLE FROM OUTSIDE. Coffey's face in the window. Stuck to the acrylic bubble beside him is one of those Garfields, suction cups on its paws. Coffey stares out. Behind his eyes, his brain is like that cat, just hanging on, spreadeagle and screaming.

CUT TO:

INT. SUB-BAY/DIVE-PREP AREA

138

Under a single worklight, a couple of conspirators. Lindsey and Hippy hunch over Big Geek. The ROV grins maniacally with goofy shark teeth.

LINDSEY

Look, you can just punch into his little chip where you want him to go, and he goes, right?

HIPPY

Well, yeah, but the tether off it ain't gonna be fancy. When he gets down there he'll just sit, like a dumb-shit. Unless something wanders through view of the camera, you'll get nada.

LINDSEY

Let's go for it. We could get lucky.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

139

ONE SURVEILLANCE MONITOR. Lindsey and Hippy next to Big Geek. Their voices are tinny but intelligible.

HIPPY (V.O.)

I don't know. I really oughta talk to Bud about this.

E.C.U. COFFEY. Watching them in the dark. Alone.

LINDSEY (V.O.)

No. Just you and me. We get some proof, then tell them. Hippy, look... if was can prove to Coffey it's not Russians, maybe he'll ease off the button a little.

HIPPY (V.O.)

I gotta tell you, that guy scares me a lot more than whatever's down there. A.J. Squared Away goddamn jarhead robot. Okay, gimme a couple hours on this.

Coffey watches, his jaw clenched.

INT. QUARTERS/MESS HALL

140

The lights are down. Those who can are grabbing some sleep. Snoring comes from one of the bunkrooms as Lindsey passes. In the mess hall, Catfish and Bud are crashed out on the tables, wrapped in blankets. The cold has gotten intense. Water drips. The walls sweat with condensation. Lindsey can see her breath as she makes coffee. She carries a cup over to Monk, who is a face in a pile of blankets. A hand comes out, takes the coffee.

MONK

Thanks.

Lindsey sips hers, staring. Her thoughts are far away... in the bottomless pit. She is leaning up against the table where Bud is sleeping. His soft snoring downshifts into a loud rasp. Lindsey touches him gently on the shoulder.

LINDSEY
Virgil, turn on your side.

Bud grunts and turns without waking, an automatic response. The snoring stops. It is a quiet, intimate moment, a reminder of the mileage these two have logged together.

CUT TO:

INT. SONAR SHACK

141

Sonny has made himself comfortable in front of the screens. Too comfortable. He's asleep, chin on his chest. On the main passive-sonar screen, an almost imperceptibly faint trace appears. A HUM, which is by now familiar, becomes audible. Sonny shifts in his seat. Doesn't wake.

INT. SUB BAY

142

Hippy puts his tools away, finished with the modifications to Big Geek.

HIPPY
All set, big guy. Hey, I told you to wipe that grin off your face.

He yawns as he shambles across the chamber to the corridor door. Switches off the lights. Goes out.

Quiet lapping of water in the moonpool. A beat. Then...

A cold luminosity suffuses the water beneath the moonpool opening, sending shadows shifting across the top of the chamber. The surface begins to pulsate.

Suddenly, the water itself rises, forming itself into a shifting, shimmering pseudopod as big around as a man's body. The transparent form pulses... an amoebic mass shivering in the air.

It stretches, becoming a more refined form. Like a blindly probing glass python, it elongates and weaves across the room. It extends and extends, stretching out from the moonpool, a shimmering tentacle. The 'head' or tip, a featureless liquid bulb, seems somehow to be scanning as it moves forward, as if it can see where it's going.

INT. CORRIDOR

143

Hippy trudges along the dark corridor. He reaches the men's head and goes in. As the door closes, the tip of the liquid pseudopod extends into the corridor. B.G. It 'looks' left and right. Then extends the length of the corridor, holding itself a couple feet off the floor like a weightless snake.

INT. TRIMODULE B/LADDERWELL/BUNKROOM/MESS HALL

144

LOOKING DOWN three levels through the central ladderwell between the cylinders. The pseudopod enters and undulates upward.

FROM INSIDE THE MAKESHIFT BUNKROOM, we see its tip extend inside.

Sonny and One Night are snoring, oblivious. Jammer is still unconscious. The pseudopod, taking its time, checks them out and then moves on.

IN THE MESS HALL, it's dark and quiet. Lindsey has even fallen asleep in her chair, her head buried in her arms on the table. The shimmering tentacle enters the room in total silence. It sways gracefully in to air, searching. It undulates across the room, hanging about five feet in the air, surveying everything. It moves past Lindsey. Sensing something, she lifts her head, turning... sees the apparition next to her.

Her eyes go wide. Amazement, but not fear. The tentacle is moving on, still searching. Lindsey shakes Bud awake, clapping her hand over his mouth.

Bud blinks twice, then freezes. When she lowers her hand his mouth is hanging open like a total goon.

Bud chucks his pillow at Catfish, on the next table.

Catfish cracks one eye open. Turns away. Turns right back... both eyes open now. Sensing movement, the thing turns back toward them. It seems to recognize Lindsey. It doubles back on itself in a loop and comes right up to her. She holds her ground, fascinated.

The bulbous tip forms suddenly into a human face... her face. It is water, still clear and undulating... but definitely Lindsey. She gasps in surprise. The liquid-Lindsey gasps soundlessly... a perfect mimic of her expression. Lindsey laughs involuntarily. It laughs... without sound. Lindsey makes a face, sticking out her tongue... testing it.

The liquid-Lindsey does the same. Bud has just had the rug jerked out from under his sense of what is possible and what isn't, but he's taking it pretty well, considering.

BUD
(whispering)
I think it likes you.

LINDSEY
It's trying to communicate.

Her liquid face suddenly transforms into a likeness of Bud's.

She reaches out her hand slowly. Gingerly, her fingers touch the surface. Ripples extend outward from the contact, across Bud's features.

Her fingertips break effortlessly through the surface, just like she's dipping her hand into a bowl of water, except sideways. She draws her wet fingers out and studies them, amazed. Touches one fingertip to her tongue.

LINDSEY
Seawater.

The pseudopod pulls back from her. It loops in the air dramatically, full circle... and ties itself into a knot. As the knot tightens down, it melts back into the body. The 'disappearing knot' trick.

Lindsey laughs, grinning with the open wonder and delight of a child at a magic show. She is transported.

LINDSEY
Show off.

She looks at Bud. He grins broadly. He's with her now.

The stunned group watches as the thing moves on across the room.
Out to the corridor

INT. SUB-BAY 145

Coffey and Schoenick enter the back way, through the dive-prep area. They see the pseudopod arching from the moonpool big as a tree trunk. Coffey's mind is blown. We can smell the insulation burning. He just stares.

INT. CORRIDOR/MAINTENANCE ROOM B 146

The water tentacle enters and moves toward the hot-wired warhead. It studies the device for a few seconds. Bud and Lindsey enter through a side door, in time to see the tentacle divide into four tendrils which wrap around the warhead. They begin to lift it off its cart.

INT. SUB BAY 147

Coffey finally jump-starts his brain. In a flash of insight, he runs to the big sliding door through which the pseudopod stretches into the corridor. He and Schoenick heave on the door. Like a guillotine blade it slices effortlessly through it.

VARIOUS ANGLES -- CORRIDORS, MESS HALL, LADDERWELL, MAINTENANCE... as the body of the pseudopod collapses, splashing on the floor. It reverts to nothing more than a long puddle of simple seawater. As the tendrils dissolve, the warhead slams back down onto the cart, unharmed. ON COFFEY'S SIDE ON THE DOOR, however, the "stump" rears back like a cobra. It withdraws rapidly into the moonpool. The glow fades away.

INT. SONAR SHACK

148

Sonny wakes up with a start as the HUM revs up into a LOUD WHINE and then fades away. He scrambles to track it. Too late.

INT. CORRIDOR

149

Hippy emerges from the can and looks down, puzzled, at the puddle running the length of the corridor. He missed the whole thing.

INT. MESS HALL

150

Light on. Everybody there. Lindsey is really strutting, high on life, now that she's been proven right.

LINDSEY

Okay, raise your hand if you think that was a Russian water-tentacle. Lieutenant? No? Well, a breakthrough.

Coffey is looking out from under his eyebrows like Nicholson in "The Shining".

Bud give her a warning look. Don't poke at the rattler.

BUD

You done impressing yourself, ace?

ONE NIGHT

No way that could just be seawater.

LINDSEY

They must've learned how to control water... I mean at a molecular level. They can plasticize it, polymerize it... whatever. Put it under intelligent control.

BUD

Maybe their whole technology is based on that. Controlling water.

Coffey is hunched over, elbows on his knees. His hands are out of sight. His arm is moving in a slow rhythm. We can't see what he's doing.

HIPPY

That thing was probably their version of Big Geek... like an ROV.

CATFISH

Just checking is out, huh? How come?

ANGLE UNDER THE TABLE, showing what Coffey is doing. He has his K-BAR KNIFE gripped white-knuckle in one hand. He is drawing it slowly and repeatedly across the skin of the other forearm. Neat chevrons of blood from wrist to elbow.

C.U. COFFEY -- He doesn't flinch. His eyes are hard and bright as diamond drills. No one notices. He's keeping the edge.

LINDSEY
They're curious, maybe. We could be the first people they've seen up close.

SONNY
Hope they don't judge the whole race offa us.

CATFISH
Maybe I oughta shave.

Coffey stands abruptly, snags Schoenick with his eyes, and leaves, walking through the group as if they were smoke. This cold behavior brings the mood down a notch.

INT. CORRIDOR/MAINTENANCE ROOM B

151

Outside the mess hall, Coffey pauses, listening to the conversation resume. Bright speculation, a few jokes. Coffey is visible shaking. Breathing hard. Pupils dilated. Schoenick looks at him with concern.

COFFEY
It went straight for the warhead. And they think it's cute.

SCHOENICK
You need to get some sleep.

Coffey walks away without hearing him. Schoenick catches up.

INT. MAINTENANCE

152

The door opens in the dark room. Coffey enters, moving with purpose. He pulls his gear bag out from under the work table. Unzips it. Pulls out a short-barreled CAR-15 assault rifle.

COFFEY

We have no way of warning the surface. Do you know what that means?

Schoenick doesn't know. He hopes Coffey knows. Because he's a fearless man who's discovering what it is to be afraid. Coffey inserts the magazine with a CLACK! Snaps the bolt. Tosses the rifle to Schoenick.

COFFEY

It means... whatever happens is up to us.

CUT TO:

INT. CORRIDOR/MAINTENANCE -- LATER 153

Hippy passes the maintenance room. Looks in. The warhead and its cart are missing. He looks around. Heads toward the sub-bay.

INT. MESS HALL 154

The discussion, still in progress.

ONE NIGHT

You think they're from down there originally?
Or from... you know.

She jerks her thumb toward the ceiling.

LINDSEY

I think they're from 'you know'. Some place that has similar conditions... cold, intense pressure. No light.

CATFISH

Happy as hogs in a waller down there, prob'ly.

INT. CORRIDOR/SUB BAY 155

Hippy freezes in the corridor as he hears a loud ratcheting sound echoing from the sub-bay. He edges forward slowly, trying to keep his feet silent on the steel floor. Slides up along the wall next to the door. Inches his eye around the doorframe. Across the room. Schoenick is working with a chainfall, lowering Big Geek onto the MIRV warhead, which is still on its cart. He begins to attach them together with a sling of tie-down straps.

Hippy lets his breath out slowly. His expression is Holy Shit.

He slides back along the corridor wall, silently. Away from the door. Then turn turns quickly to go... WHAM! Coffey slams him up against the wall!
.45 pressed to Hippy's temple. Hippy gulping air as Coffey ears back the hammer.

COFFEY
Sniff something did you, rat boy?

INT. MESS HALL 156

The meeting is breaking up as the door CLANGS open and Hippy is thrust inside. His hands are taped behind his back and he stumbles onto his face.
Coffey steps through smoothly, straight-arming the .45. Schoenick flanks him with the assault rifle aimed at the group.

COFFEY
FREEZE! Don't move. That's it.
(to Monk)
Here, hold this a second. We're going to phase three.

He hands his gun to Monk, with the assumption of absolute loyalty from a team member. Monk's eyes move between Coffey and the pistol. We can't tell what he's thinking. Coffey grabs Hippy and shoves him onto a chair.

HIPPY
They're using Big Geek to take the bomb to the NTIs! We set it up to go right to them.

Lindsey looks stricken. Her plan is betraying them all.

LINDSEY
Oh my God... Oh no...
(steps toward Coffey)
Please, you can't. Coffey, think about what you're doing... for God's sake--

Coffey lets her approach him, his eyes glittering.

Without warning he grabs her by the hair and hurls her against the Coke machine, pinning her there with one hand. Bud leaps forward.

SCHOENICK
GET BACK!

Bud freezes. The rifle's muzzle is aimed for a heart-shot.

Coffey moves up close to Lindsey.

COFFEY
This is something I've wanted to do since I first met you.

His hand reaches down, OUT OF FRAME. We hear something RIP. His hand comes back up... holding a piece of gaffer's tape.

He slaps it over her mouth. Then pushes her down into a chair.

Hippy looks at Monk and Schoenick.

HIPPY
You boss is having a full-on meltdown. Guy's fixing to pull the pin on fifty kilotons and we're all ringside!

MONK
What's the timer set for?

SCHOENICK
Three hours.

COFFEY
Shut up! Don't talk!

MONK
We can't get to minimum-safe-distance in three hours. The shockwave will kill us. It'll crush this rig like a semi driving over a beer can.

COFFEY
Shut up! SHUT UP! What's the matter with you?!

Everybody is twitching a hyper. Schoenick is white-knuckling his assault rifle... looking from Monk to Coffey to the group.

COFFEY
Just stay calm. The situation is under control.

Coffey backs out quickly with Schoenick.

INT. CORRIDOR

157

Coffey dogs down the watertight door and wedges a piece of steel pipe into the mechanism so it can't be opened.

COFFEY
Stay here.

Schoenick take a position in front of the door. Coffey turns and runs through the corridor like demons are chasing him.

INT. MESS HALL 158

Their only hope is to sway Schoenick. But the SEAL's fear is making him the perfect machine, totally dependent on external orders. And his orders are clear. They can see him through the tiny window in the door. Lindsey rips the tape painfully off her mouth.

LINDSEY
Schoenick... your Lieutenant is about to make a real bad career move...

HIPPY
That guy's crazier'n a shithouse rat!

BUD
We have to stop him! Schoenick!!

They pound on the door. Schoenick turns and hangs his cap over the tiny window.

INT. SUB BAY 159

Using the chainfall, Coffey maneuvers the completed Geek/MIRV package over the back of Flatbed, obviously preparing to use the submersible to take it out and launch it.

INT. MESS HALL 160

Lindsey is up next to the door, with Bud.

LINDSEY
... he's about to declare war on an alien species, Schoenick, just when they're trying to make contact with us.
(to Bud)

I think I'm reaching him.

There is a CLUNK-CLATTER and the door unlatches.

LINDSEY

See?

The door opens. Jammer is standing there. Schoenick is in a heap against the far wall, moaning. Jammer hands the rifle to Hippy as he walks in. Hippy turns to cover the other SEAL. Monk puts his hands up, passively.

MONK

I'm the least of your problems.

Bud appraises Jammer, who seems a little weak and dazed but basically okay.

BUD

Thanks. How you feeling, big guy?

JAMMER

Figured I was dead, there, when I seen that angel comin' toward me.

They all look at him for a second. What?

BUD

Uh, okay, right. You can tell us about it later. Let's go.

CUT TO:

INT. TRIMODULE C/LADDERWELL

161

Bud drops down the ladder, INTO FRAME, followed by the others. He tries the door into the main corridor. The wheel won't turn. The others get on it. Won't budge.

BUD

He's jammed the mechanism.

LINDSEY

Now what?

They're locked in trimodule-C. No other doors give access to the sub-bay corridor. Bud's mind is racing. He drops down the ladder to Level One, into about two feet of water. He reaches down and open the emergency lockout hatch. Takes off his boots.

BUD
Okay, I'm gonna free-swim to hatch six... get inside, get the door open from the other side.

LINDSEY
Bud, that water's only a couple degrees above freezing.

BUD
Then I guess you better wish me luck, huh?

Catfish is pulling his boots off as well.

CATFISH
Wish us luck.
(hands his wallet to Hippy)
'Case I don't die. Okay, Bud... let's go, podner, I ain't got all day.

Bud clasps him on the shoulder and starts hyperventilating. He drops into the water.

EXT. DEEPCORE/TRIMODULE C 162

Bed shoots down through the hatch. The cold hits him like a fist, becoming instantly paralyzing. He starts kicking in powerful strokes through the dark water, maneuvering around tangles of umbilical cable twisted tubular steel.
Catfish is behind him, swimming like hell. They reach hatch six.
Together
they spin the wheel and heave upward, opening it.

INT. TRIMODULE D/LEVEL ONE 163

Bud surges up into the lock. Catfish jams into the tiny airspace with him.
They try the upper hatch. Jammed. They're both panting with the exertion and intense cold.

BUD
Hafta... go on to... the moonpool. Only way.

CATFISH
I can't... make it... podner.

Bud looks at Catfish, shivering and heaving, wide-eyed.

BUD
Okay, Cat. You head back.

Bud hyperventilates rapidly and pikes over diving back out through the hatch.

EXT. DEEPCORE 164

Bud is stroking rapidly through the tangle of pipes and conduit. He sees the lit rectangle of the moonpool far ahead.

INT. SUB BAY 165

In the moonpool, Bud surface with an explosive gasp beside the full of Flatbed. His wracked breathing is masked by the WHINE of HYDRAULICS as Coffey uses the external controls to extend Flatbed's big hydraulic arm, locking the Geek/MIRV in its gripper.

Bud strokes to a point where Coffey can't see him and heaves up out of the water onto the deck of the pool. He lies gasping behind Cab One's cradle. His limbs are wooden and unresponsive from the cold. His fingers are completely numb. He hugs himself, putting his hands under his armpits. Scans the situation. He can't get to the door, which is across the room, without Coffey seeing him.

INT. CONTROL MODULE 166

Lindsey watching the whole thing going down, ON THE SCREEN, a high angle of the sub bay... Bud moving up on Coffey.

HIPPY
He can't get to the door... I think he's going to try and take him himself.

LINDSEY
He couldn't be that dumb. The guy's a trained killer. Bud's idea of a fight is arm-wrestling One Night over laundry duty.

ON THE SCREEN, Bud picks up a piece of pipe. Hefts it. Moves forward, crouched... stalking. Lindsey yells at the screen in frustration.

LINDSEY BUUUUUD!!

INT. SUB BAY

167

Bud chucks a tool across the chamber, creating a clattering distraction, then wades in with the pipe in a vicious swing to the back of Coffey's knees, taking him down. Coffey spins even as he falls, catching Bud in a scissor kick that topples him.

Grappling, they fall together into the freezing water.

Coffey is momentarily stunned by the cold, giving Bud time to haul himself out, hoping to make it to the door.

Coffey launches from the water and grabs him legs.

He pulls himself up as Bud kick out. Claws his way viciously over Bud's body until he has him pinned to the deck. Then he pulls out the .45.

Put it unceremoniously to Bud's forehead.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

168

LINDSEY NOOO!!

INT. SUB BAY

169

Coffey pulls the trigger... CLICK. Bud flinches, then opens his eyes, staring cross-eyed at the muzzle of the .45. Coffey cocks it and tries again. CLICK. Nothing. Really pissed off beyond description, Bud hurls the commando off him with a powerful heave, sending him clattering against a rack of equipment. They face off, panting.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

170

The rig crew turns from the screen at the sound of Monk's voice.

MONK
I tool the liberty of removing this before I gave it back to him.

Monk pulls his hand out from under his blanket and holds up the magazine from the .45.

INT. SUB WAY

171

Even so Bud is getting his ass kicked. Coffey's really trying to put him out of business. It's mostly duck and dodges on Bud's part. Throw a few things. When Coffey connects, Bud goes down hard. Give him credit, though. He manages to scramble back up.

The fight wrecks the room, scattering tools and gear.

Compressed air cylinders roll dangerously around the floor.

Coffey slips on one and Buds get in a couple of good licks.

Slams the SEAL's head in an equipment locker door.

But the Navy man is just too massive. Bud is hammered back into a wall.

Coffey has his fist cocked back for the coup de grace. Spins around at the sound of a VOICE.

CATFISH

Hey!

Catfish is right behind him. Dripping wet. A trail of water goes back to the moonpool a few feet away.

CRACK! Catfish's 'Hammer' punch comes in so hard and so fast, Coffey is knocked right on his ass. He doesn't get up. Just sort of flops around.

Catfish helps Bud to his feet. They advance on Coffey, who crab-scuttles sideways, his eyes rabid.

He picks up a helium tank and hurls it at them. As they duck he sprints to Flatbed and drops through the hatch and slams it down.

BUD

(to Catfish)

Get the door!

Bud leaps across the water to land on Flatbed. The hatch is already sealed.
He grapples with Geek/MIRV, trying to free it from the steel claw.

INT. FLATBED

172

Coffey crawls along the access tunnel to the pilot's compartment.
He claws
his way into the control seat and starts rapidly flipping switches.

INT. CORRIDOR

173

Catfish pounds down the corridor like he's never run before, his beer gut doing a rumba. He reaches the door, tears out the piece of pipe and spins the wheel. Hippy pushes it open so fast it hits Catfish in the stomach.
Hippy tears past him, running with the assault rifle. John Wayne.

INT. SUB-BAY

174

Flatbed is submerging, with only the hatch tower still above the water. Bud is being dragged down, still trying to free the ROV. He gives up when he sees Hippy run in, waving the assault rifle around like a 130-pound Rambo.

Bud climbs the hatch tower and leaps to the deck of the moonpool.

Hippy clumsily raises the unfamiliar rifle at Coffey, visible inside his viewing bubble beneath the swirling water. Coffey looks up, stares at the gun... doesn't seem to care.

CATFISH
SHOOT!

Hippy's squeezing the trigger and nothing's happening. Flatbed's hatch tower goes under.

CATFISH
Safety's on! On the side... the lever! Up, push it up!

Hippy fumble with the selective-fire lever, BLAM-BLAM-BLAM! He put three quick rounds into the ceiling.

HIPPY

SHIT!

CATFISH
Give me that!!

He grabs it out of Hippy's hands and aims it at the sub. He racks the water with a long burst. BENEATH THE SURFACE, the rounds nip nasty contrails through the water. They barely scar the front port.

LINDSEY
Forget that... go for Big Geek!

Catfish rakes the descending sub with more bursts, trying to hit the shimmering shape of the ROV on its back. UNDERWATER we see the rounds arcing wild, a few hitting the ROV but causing little damage.

Coffey complete his descent to just above the seafloor. ABOVE, Catfish empties the weapon.

BUD
Gimme a hand!

They all turn. Bud is fumbling into his wetsuit like a madman. The others rush over to help him.

BUD
Get the rest of my gear. Grab that hat there... let's go guys! Come on, come on!

Catfish slams a backpack onto Bud's shoulders, grappling with the straps and hose connections. Hippy and Sonny (with one hand) are clipping, zipping and buckling all over him. This is a world-record suit-up time. Bud pulls the rubber neck-dam of the helmet's lower ring down over his face.

BUD
Helmet... helmet! Work fast.

EXT. DEEPCORE UNDERSTRUCTURE

175

Beneath the habitat, Coffey is maneuvering Flatbed through the twisted pipe and debris left by Deepcore's slide to the edge. Bloodied, his fatigues ripped half-off, he looks like a feral animal. His eyes burn with the determination of his mission.

INT. SUB BAY

176

Jammer expertly works the crane controls, moving Cab One out over the moonpool from its drydock cradle. Lindsey and One Night are scrambling like monkeys over the port side crash bars of the swinging sub, clambering up to the hatch tower.

ONE NIGHT

I'll unhook.

(Lindsey hesitates)

GO! You're better in these than I am.

Lindsey recognizes this for what it is... a sign of respect, a reconciliation. She nods and drops through the hatch.

EXT. DEEPCORE

177

Coffey passes under the twisted wreckage of the big automated derrick and makes a tight turn beneath the drill-floor module. Flatbed scrapes through between twisted conduit, metal screeching on metal.

INT. SUB BAY

178

Bud has his 'hat' locked down and his air cut on. He takes two quick strides to the edge of the pool and just drops in.

EXT. DEEPCORE

179

Bud rockets DOWN INTO FRAME in a column of bubbles. He looks around. Through the lattice of conduit under the rig he can see Flatbed moving forward from its exit point under the stern. Bud sees a shortcut under the platform.

He kicks along a lattice of pipes, heaving himself along in frantic hand-over-hand strokes. He reaches for Flatbed's stern as it passes.

Misses the last hand-hold... but just manages to seize a tie-down trailing behind it. He is jerked along behind the sub.

Bud holds on with both hands as he is buffeted in the wake of the powerful thrusters. Flatbed gathers speed, moving out toward the edge of the abyssal wall. The current slams him, spinning him like a fishing lure. He pulls himself forward slowly until he can grip the stern rail of Flatbed's platform.

LOW ANGLE, look up the wall. Flatbed appears over the edge and stops.
Hovering.

ON THE BACK OF FLATBED. Bud has the break he needs. He scrambles up onto the deck and opens and equipment locker. Nothing in it but one of the yellow nylon safety lines. The big arm begins to unfold, lifting Geek/ROV.

INT./EXT. FLATBED

180

Coffey works intently. His eyes are the cool ice of lethal madness
in a face streaked with blood. He brings the ROV into view with the boom arm.

GEEK/ROV had a passenger. Brigman. The diver is holding Geek's skid with one hand, doing something with the other. He turns to look at Coffey.

EXT. FLATBED/DEEPCORE

181

Coffey releases the ROV with the gripper and makes a grab at Bud with the steel claw. Bud dives. The gripper hits his helmet a glancing blow. Bud kicks away rapidly, letting nylon rope pay out. We see he has managed to tie one end to Geek's skids. Coffey hits the button to activate the ROV, sending an acoustic pulse to Geek's transponder. The little robot, pregnant with its load of death, turns nimbly around and dives out and down toward the void.

Coffey pivots his bid machine toward Bud. Bud strokes rapidly to a large jumble of wreckage. He loops the rope around a twisted pipe. Big Geek is hauling ass away from him. The line snap taut an instant later.
The ROV strains, like a Rottweiler on a leash... trying to go. The rope is slipping as Bud fights to make a knot.

Flatbed slews around, thrusters whining. As it banks, it hurls up clouds of sediment from the escarpment face.

Through the front panel we see Coffey jerking on the controls.

The big arm extends menacingly. The smaller from manipulators open.
An enormous predatory instinct, its lights blaring.

The big machine roars forward. Straight at Bud.

Bud gets his knot partly done. See Flatbed looming.

Glare-lit in its lights, Bud grabs a handlehold and pulls himself downward as Coffey closes the last few feet.

One manipulator slams into his backpack, tumbling him, and the sub's underside rakes across his legs as it passes over. Flatbed crushes into the tangle of pipework. K-CRUUUNCH!!

INT. FLATBED

182

Coffey is slammed hard over the controls, up into the front dome port. He gets back in the seat. Strains to free his machine.

EXT. DEEPCORE/BIG GEEK/FLATBED

183

Bud swims clear, diving down at an angle along the wall, hoping to stay in Coffey's blind area. Flatbed backs out of the wreckage in a cloud of debris.
It pivots toward Bud. Moves after him.

Nearby, the ROV is whining mindlessly, trying to please. Trying to GO.

DETAIL OF ROPE attached to wreckage, as Bud's knot begins to slip.
The nylon line starts to play through the knot slowly.

BUD has gotten himself into a bad position. Along the bare rock face of the cliff wall he is naked, nailed in the spotlights like a rabbit in front of a truck. Coffey puts the hammer down, thrust levers all the way forward.
Flatbed surges forward, multi-limbed and demonic. There's no cover, side to side, up or down.

Coffey has him head in his lights. Suddenly a bright glare blasts in, blinding Coffey. He looks up to see Cab One rushing down upon him, full throttle.

At the last moment Lindsey slams the thrusters full-lock and the submersible slews sideways, slamming its heavy skidplate into Flatbed's cab. Coffey is smashed sideways by the shock. He fights to control his vehicle. Lindsey looks up to see Coffey's sub gun it up over the wall, out of sight. She cruises up over Bud.

LINDSEY (V.O.)
Get in!

Bud gets the lockout hatch open and clambers up into Cab One's belly.

INT./EXT. CAB ONE 184

Bud flops over the lip of the hatch and slams it shut. He ditches his helmet. Lindsey raises her vehicle warily above the wall. Through the front port there is not sign of Coffey.

LINDSEY
You owe me one, Virgil.

BUD
Can we negotiate later? There's Big Geek.

He points. Through the front port, they can see the ROV still straining at its leash. Lindsey dives toward it, simultaneously working the controls to open her own small manipulator claws.

EXT. DEEPCORE/WALL, ETC. 185

The last few feet of the rope slip through the knot.

Big Geek happily surges forward. It dives gracefully down into the void, trailing the yellow rope like a kite tail.

ONE CAB ONE, Bud and Lindsey through the front port.

BUD

Go after it! We gotta catch it!

FLATBED DROPS INTO FRAME BEHIND THEM, dwarfing little Cab One. They are slammed viciously as Coffey's submersible hammers into them. She hits full throttle. Coffey floors it after Lindsey, ramming her from behind with his more powerful vehicle. With difficulty Lindsey maintains trim.

She arcs back toward the rig. Flatbed slams her again, for the side. She fights for control.

INT./EXT. CAB ONE

186

Bud is tossed around, ricocheting off the walls. Lindsey flies with her jaw set. Fighting hard for control. The A-frame of the rig looms before her. She shoots through at full throttle.

EXT. DEEPCORE AND OCEAN TERRAIN

187

Now the fight is really on. The two subs are dodging between the cylindrical modules at full throttle, slamming into each other and the steel pressure hulls.

Coffey sideswipes the smaller sub, jamming it sideways. It screeches along the flank of one of the trimodules.

They head out over empty terrain in a flat-out speed run.

Lindsey is jinking and dodging as Flatbed, roars along behind her, tearing up the bottom with its powerful backwash. Lindsey carves hard around a rock pinnacle, finding herself running parallel to the edge of the abyssal canyon. Coffey is ramming, hammering from behind, then from side to side.

Lindsey snarls. He's pissing her off. He shouldn't do that.

Ahead, out of the blackness, another outcropping.

Lindsey rises, cuts right.

Smashes down into Coffey's craft. Timing it just right. He skids catch in the rocks.

Flatbed slews violently, nosing down. Crushing into the rocky bottom.
Pressing the advantage, Lindsey hammers into Flatbed from behind.

It smashes full force into a second spire, spinning out of control.

Tangles together, the subs slide down an embankment toward the edge of the wall. With her one remaining thruster she jerks clear of Flatbed and grounds her crippled sub. Flatbed tumbles over the edge.

ANGLE DOWN THE WALL as it falls, trailing a cloud of sediment like a comet's tail, down into the unfathomable blackness below.

INT. FLATBED

188

Inside the machine, Coffey is fighting for control.

He has no buoyancy or motors and the craft continues its mad plunge. As the pressure intensifies the hull begins to groan, and steel fitting scream with the enormous load.

A tiny silver fracture shoots partway across the front bubble. Grows. Coffey gives up fighting. Just stares, wide eyed, at his death. A damned soul dropping into the bottomless pit.

The fracture line arcs rapidly across the dome port.

Suddenly, a scythe-like curtain of seawater, under tons of pressure, slashes into him. A moment later the bubble implodes, and Coffey disappears in a bloody froth of churning water, air and glass shards.

EXT. CANYON WALL

189

Flatbed looks like a toy, tumbling away down the wall.

Soon its lights vanish.

INT. CAB ONE

190

They're both going to have a lot of bruises...

Lindsey is surveying the damage. Water is spraying down on them like a shower, and lights are flickering.

LINDSEY
You did okay, back there. I was fairly impressed.

BUD
Not good enough. We still gotta catch Big Geek.

LINDSEY
Not in this thing.

Lindsey is flipping switches. Nothing works.

BUD
You totaled it, huh?

LINDSEY
Yeah. So sue me.

Bud looks down. There's already about a foot of water sloshing around the floor at their feet.

BUD
It's flooding like a son of the bitch.

LINDSEY
You noticed.

She picks up and hand-mike of the underwater telephone.

LINDSEY
Deepcore, Deepcore, this is Cab One, over.

She waits. No response.

BUD
Try again.

LINDSEY
Deepcore, this is Cab One. We need assistance, over. Deepcore, this--

With a SEARING CRACKLE or arc-light, a power panel shorts out and everything goes black.

LINDSEY
Well, that's that.

BUD Wonderful.

(looking around)
There's some light from somewhere...

A faint illumination, dimmer than moonlight, washes in through the front port.

Lindsey scrunches up against the acrylic and scans the darkness.

LINDSEY
Over there. It's the rig.

A glow, beyond a rock promontory... like the lights of a town just over the hill in the desert.

BUD
Good hundred yards, I'd say.

LINDSEY
They'll come out after us.

BUD
Yeah, but it's gonna take them a while to find us. We better get this flooding stopped.

He picks up his helmet and clicks on the light. Using the thing like a bulky flashlight. The water is really pouring in, spraying them like a shower... almost two feet deep already.

LINDSEY
You see where it's coming in?

BUD
Somewhere behind this panel. Hold this.

She takes the light and he tries to reach the burst weld, which is blocked by a steel switch panel and a bunch of conduit.

BUD
Can't get to it. Have to pull this panel off.
You go any tools?

LINDSEY
I don't know, look around.

Bud scans the cramped interior, feels around under the water. It's past his knees.

BUD
Nothing. Son of a bitch. All I need's a goddamn crescent wrench.

He grabs the panel in both hands and starts torquing on it, trying to wrench it off the wall. Heaves on it repeatedly. Finally stops, panting. He's breathing hard now, and it's not just effort.

BUD
Son of a bitch!

LINDSEY
Calm down, Bud.

A nervous edge in her voice now. Bud's turning all around, looking around for anything, trying to think fast. Water up to their waists. The sea closing in.

BUD
Okay... okay. We gotta get you out of here.

LINDSEY How?

BUD
I don't know how!

LINDSEY
We've only got one suit.

BUD
I know! I know! But we better come up with something.

LINDSEY
Aaargh!! I'm freezing!

She climbs up on the pilots seat, scrunching right up against the ceiling, keeping as much of herself as possible out of the frigid water. She's shaking all over with the cold, and getting drenched from above by water pouring in.

LINDSEY
Okay, look, you swim to the rig and come back with another suit.

BUD
Seven, eight minute swim each way... not enough time. Look at this...

(the rate of flooding)
Time I get back you'll be--

That stops the conversation for a second. About two feet of airspace left.
Bud can't believe what this is coming down to. They both stare at each other for a long moment.

He makes a decision. Starts pulling off his backpack.

BUD
Alright, put this on.

LINDSEY
What, you growing gills all of a sudden? You got it on, keep it on.

BUD
Don't argue, goddamnit, just--

LINDSEY
No way! Forget it. Not an option.

Bud has his pack off uncoupling it. She keeps fighting his hands, stopping him, hooking it back up. The desperation of the situation fuel the struggle.

BUD
Lindsey, just put the thing on and shut up--

LINDSEY
NO!! Now be logical, Bud, you're--

BUD FUCK LOGIC!!

They're both right up against the ceiling, water up to their chests.
Lindsey's lips are blue and trembling from the cold.

LINDSEY
Listen... will you listen to me for a second!?
You're for the suit on and you're a better swimmer than me. Right? So I got a plan...

BUD
What's the plan?

LINDSEY
I drown, you tow me back to the rig--

BUD
WHAT KIND OF PLAN IS THAT!??

Lindsey's gut-scared... shaking violently, her eyes wide. But she's keeping it together. Thinking it out. Bud see the bottomless pit opening to take her and he can barely think.

LINDSEY
Look, this water is only a couple degrees above freezing. I drown. I go into deep hypothermia... my blood like icewater. I can maybe be revived after ten, fifteen minutes. You got all the stuff to do it on the rig.

Bud stops moving and looks into her face, inches from him. The water is up to their necks. He knows that, as always, infuriatingly, Lindsey is right.

BUD
It is insane.

LINDSEY
It's the only way, Bud. Now trust me.

She takes a deep breath. Before her nerve fails she busies her hands on his suit, rehooking everything.

BUD
Jesus, I don't believe this is happening.

She raise his helmet. Water up to their chins. They lock eyes, inches apart. He can feel her breath on his face... maybe for the last time.

BUD
Oh God, Lins... I--

LINDSEY
Tell me later.

He grabs her head in both hands and pulls her mouth to his. They lock together in a fierce kiss, fueled by passion and terror... the naked realization of love hanging over the abyss of death.

She breaks away at the last possible second and quickly pulls his helmet over his head. Seats is down over the neck ring. Lock the bail-out handle, sealing it. Even with her head press up into the highest point of the ceiling, Lindsey's mouth is barely above water. She give a scared little laugh.

LINDSEY
This is maybe not such a great plan, is it?

She is half-paralyzed with the cold, shaking pathetically. Puts her face to the glass of his helmet. Seconds to go.

LINDSEY
Hold me. Hold me, Bud... I'm so scared...

He can't hear her, but he read her lips. They clutch each other desperately. The embrace last while the water rises over her mouth and nose. She starts to choke. Her hands grip his shoulders like claws. She bucks and thrashes. Bud holds her, and a scream tears loose from him, a pure agony of the soul.

BUD
NOOOOO!!!

The freezing seawater races into her lungs. Her finger go slack, and her hands float lifelessly.

Bud stares, transfixed, as the last tiny bubble trickles out of Lindsey's open mouth. He kicks himself into gear, fingers frenzied as he spins the wheel of the lockout hatch.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/COMMAND MODULE 191

TIGHT ON VIDEO SCREEN, one of the outside cameras. A ghostly figure swims out of the darkness, towing something.

ONE NIGHT
It's Bud. Oh my God... that's Lindsey!

BUD (V.O./faint)
Deepcore, Deepcore, do you read?

HIPPY

Read you, Bud. We're here.

EXT. DEEPCORE

192

Bud swims with long, powerful kicks, towing Lindsey. Her arms and legs float as gracefully as seaweed waving in a gentle current. Bud's voice comes in short rasps, breathing hard, but icy with control.

BUD

Go to the infirmary... get the cart .. oxygen...
de-fib kit... adrenaline in a... ten cc syringe... and some... heating blankets.
You got all that?

HIPPY (V.O.)

Got it. Over.

BUD

Meet me in the moonpool. Move fast.

INT. INFIRMARY

193

The door crashes open and Jammer thunders in. He picks up the CPR cart, meant to roll on wheels, and carries it out past Hippy, Catfish, and One Night, who are crowding in to get the rest of the equipment. They ransack the place in about ten seconds, grabbing everything they might need and half of everything else.

EXT. DEEPCORE/UNDER THE MOONPOOL

194

Bud moves up toward the rectangle of light, towing Lindsey to the diving platform. Through the surface we can see the others arrive at the edge, looking down.

INT. SUB-BAY

195

Hippy and Catfish are setting up the cart and the oxygen kit, dropping things, making mistakes. One Night is teaching herself how to fill a syringe from a bottle of adrenaline.

SONNY

Here he comes!

Jammer and Sonny leap into the freezing water, waist deep on the submerged diving platform. Bud bursts to the surface. Together they haul Lindsey across the platform, out of the water, and onto the deck. Her skin is blue-white, her chest still.

Bud rips his helmet off in a near-frenzy, like a man possessed, a man with a mission. The others are galvanized by his energy even though they all see Lindsey as dead, a corpse... cold and inert. Water flows from her mouth and nose and her lips are blue, her limbs completely limp. Hippy peels back one eyelid, to find the pupil fixed and dilated.

But when Bud shouts for them to move, they move.

BUD
Turn her over!

They flip his wife's body over. He straddles her, pushing down with both hands in the middle of her back. Seawater gushes from her slack lips. He does it again until the flow stops, then flips her onto her back.

BUD
Come on, hurry! Gimme the de-fib...

One Night and Catfish are fumbling with the emergency cart equipment. They've all been trained in CPR and use of the gear but that was years ago, and is a friend they're working on. They're all thumbs. Catfish drops the electrodes, picks them up quickly, hands them to Bud...

CATFISH
Here, here, here... no, you got to have bare skin, or it won't...

Bud rips into her clothing, opening her jumpsuit, literally tearing away her T-shirt, revealing her bare chest... bony and still.

BUD
Jesus. Gimme those, come on. Catfish, move it, man! Come on... come on!

He slaps the things into Lindsey's bare skin, one on the sternum and one on the side of the rib cage.

BUD
Is that it? Is this right?

HIPPY
Yeah! I mean, I don't know... it looks right.

BUD
All right. Do it!

One Night hits the switch and Lindsey's body convulses. It is a pure muscle reflex, and when it is over, there is not a hint of life. Hippy pushes him back and puts a black rubber oxygen mask over her mouth. He opens the valve on the cylinder and starts pumping the squeeze bag. They start packing electronic blankets around her to fight the intense hypothermia

BUD
Do it again, One Night. Zap her again!

The current hits Lindsey again and her back arches. Bud doesn't wait for a result... he's in his own reality now, driven. He's doing it all at once, somehow, in a senseless frenzy... pumping on her chest with his hands, squeezing the oxygen bag, placing the electrodes.

BUD
Aw. Christ... come on, baby. Again! Do it again!

Lindsey's back arches. Her body relaxes, inert.

BUD
Come on, One Night... what are you waiting for?

A hush seems to have fallen over the group. They know instinctively that it's over. But Bud can't accept it. He looks at them, beseechingly, like they are somehow intentionally holding out on him. One Night starts to cry, quietly.

CATFISH
(gently)
Bud, it's over, man. It's over.

There is a beat of silence. Bud stares down into Lindsey's half-open, motionless eyes.

TIGHT ON LINDSEY'S EYES, moving in until the pupil FILLS FRAME, a black void.

REVERSE, HER POV. SILENCE. A distant, distorted image, we see Bud, One Night, Jammer, Hippy, Catfish, staring down. It is like the circular top of a dark well, their faces shimmering as if through the surface of water. It is as if we are in a well, descending, looking up at a circle of faces growing smaller as we drop away... smaller and smaller, receding until it becomes a point of light in the void, like the fading bright dot at the center of a turned-off TV.

TIGHT ON BUD, rigid, staring. Catfish puts his hand gently on Bud's shoulder. Suddenly Bud tears Catfish's hand away and sets upon Lindsey like a madman, renewing his efforts in spades... totally manic.

BUD
No! NO! She's not... her heart is strong, she wants to live... can't you see that? Come on, Lins. Come on, baby! Zap her again! Do it... DO IT!

They do. And Bud works, feverishly. He lock his lips over hers and starts mouth-to-mouth. It is frantic, passionate... the kiss of life.

BUD
Come on, breath! Goddamn it, you bitch, you never backed down from anything in life... now fight!

He slaps her face, hard. Her head lolls. He smacks her the other way.

BUD
Fight, Goddamnit!

LINDSEY'S POV, from the bottom of the great well. The circles of faces and light rockets toward us in the blackness, as we soar upward from the pit. We see Bud yelling, but his voice is distant, windlike.

BUD

FIGHT!!

TIGHT ON LINDSEY, still. Then something incredible happens. Something they will never forget as long as they live. Lindsey coughs once, weakly, and her hands clench in a spasm.

Bud see it and his expression becomes beatific.

BUD

Come on, Lins. You can do it... fight your way back, baby...

The others look on in wonder as Bud wills this woman back.

She starts to cough, weakly at first... then more violently as she draws air into her lungs. Bud crouches over her, rubbing her limbs... trying to re-establish circulation. It is like a difficult birth. Lindsey comes hacking and howling back into the world, wet and naked and fighting for breath.

Bud puts the oxygen mask over her face and she draws breath after agonized breath. He pushes her wet hair back from her face with his trembling hands, and watches her breathe. Color is returning to her skin as she lies there, gasping weakly.

ONE THE GROUP... Catfish, Hippy, One Night, Jammer, the others... they're all grinning, crying, beaming... gazing at the miracle of her rebirth.

ON BUD... tears are streaming down his face.

BUD

(a whisper, fierce and harsh)
You did it, ace.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/QUARTERS -- LATER

196

TIGHT ON LINDSEY, sleeping peacefully. WIDER shows Bud hovering over her, attentive. They are alone in Bud's tiny cubicle. Perhaps twenty minutes have passed. She is completely swaddled in blankets, except for her face, and looks like a waif.

Lindsey's eyes flutter and open. The first thing she sees is Bud, bending over her. He can't help himself. The tears break again and roll down his cheeks. She seems terribly fragile, but bright and aware. She smiles, faintly... touches his cheek.

LINDSEY
Hey... big boys don't cry, remember?

BUD
Hi, lady.

LINDSEY
Hi, tough guy. I guess it worked, huh?

BUD
'Course is worked. You're never wrong, are you?
How d'you feel.

LINDSEY
I've been better. Next time it's your turn,
okay?

Bud's expression turn inexplicably grim.

BUD
Well, you got that right.

CUT TO:

INT. SUB-BAY

197

TIGHT ON BUD'S EYES, as Monk's fingers insert acrylic scleral lenses under his eyelids so he can see in the fluid helmet.

WIDER reveals Bud is wearing the SEALs' deep suit. Everybody is grouped around, buckling and zipping. He is hyperventilating with an oxygen mask, part of the procedure for transitioning from air to fluid breathing. Monk, on his stretcher, is presiding. The resident expert. Lindsey is wrapped in a blanket, still looking wan and frail. She doesn't have the strength to resist Bud's will, but she's trying.

LINDSEY

No, Bud, no... not you.

BUD
Who then?

She looks around at the others. Sees their eyes. The fear. Has her answer.
He lowers the helmet over his head. Catfish clamps it down. We see what's driving him... his sense of responsibility for these people, for not being able to prevent this situation.

He touches her cheek, one last time. She sees his fingers are trembling.
Then he puts on the gloves. Catfish is strapping a KEYPAD UNIT onto Bud's forearm. Lindsey wants to scream... to stop this madness.

BUD (muffled)
So I'll hear you, but I can't talk?

MONK
The fluid prevents your larynx from making sound. It'll feel a little strange.

BUD (muffled)
Warning you now, folks, I'm a lousy typist.
(a beat)
The moment of truth, huh?

His breathing is shallow and tense. He looks at Lindsey. The eyes of a condemned man. She squeezes his hand. He takes a deep breath.

BUD
Okay. Let's rock and roll.

Monk gently cracks a valve on the suit's feed line. The breathing fluid (3M fluorocarbon emulsion FX-80) swirls into the helmet. Bud reflexively raises his chin. The liquid fills toward his mouth.

MONK
Relax now, Bud. Just keep breathing as it fills... don't fight it. Take it in. Just let yourself take it in.

Suddenly, there's nothing in there to breathe but liquid. His eyes go wide, instant panic. He starts to thrash. Chest heaving.

MONK

Hold him. Hold him. This is normal... it'll pass in a second. You're gonna be okay. We all breathe liquid for nine months, Bud. Your body will remember.

Lindsey grabs Bud's shoulders, steadying him. He finds her eyes, the look calming him. He's passed into a realm from which she has already returned. His spasms subside. He begins to "breathe" normally. He gets a goofy look of wonder on his face, not really believing what he's experiencing. He is alive, alert and quite completely drowned inside the FBS helmet. He grins. Gives a big thumbs up. Lindsey picks up a microphone.

LINDSEY
Can you hear me okay?
(another thumbs up)
Try your keypad.

Bud taps out a brief message. FEELS WEIRD - YOU SHOULD TRY THIS prints out on their portable monitor.

LINDSEY
I already have, moron.

They help Bud to the edge of the dive platform. Jammer and Hippy lower Little Geek into the water and Bud grabs onto it. Hippy yells right up next to his helmet.

HIPPY
I redid Little Geek's chip the same as Big Geek!
He should take you right to it. All you gotta do is hang on!

Lindsey crouches at the edge to watch Bud submerge.

He looks up at her as he drops away.

In a few seconds, she can't see him. Her chin quivers, minutely.

EXT. DEEPCORE/THE WALL

198

FROM FAR BELOW, Deepcore is a faint tiara of lights, above in the blackness. A single moving light appears above, at the edge of the cliff, and starts down. It grows large, resolving into Bud, free-falling down the wall.

He gathers speed as Little Geek's vertical thruster drives them down.

Bud looks down. Between his feet he can see a short way down the wall in the glow of his single light, and beyond that an unfathomable blackness. The wall unrolls upwards out of the darkness like a convoluted gray drapery. He looks up. The lights of Deepcore are gone. He feels more alone than he has ever felt. He types out: CANT SEE YOU

LINDSEY (V.O.)
We're right here with you, Bud. Your depth is 3800 feet. You're doing fine.

Bud comes upon the twisted wreckage of the crane, hanging against the wall like a forty-ton yo-yo at the end of the umbilical.

INT. COMMAND MODULE

199

Everyone is grouped around the monitor screen, watching Bud's telemetry. Bud types out: GOOD DEAL ON SLIGHTLY USED CRANE. They watch the depth meter counting down.

MONK
4800 feet. It's official.

LINDSEY
Bud, according to Monk here, you just set a record for the deepest suit dive. Bet you didn't think you'd be doing this when you got up this morning.

The screen print out: CALL GUINNESS. They laugh. So far so good. Seconds later...

HIPPY
One mile down and still grinnin'.

EXT. THE WALL

200

WIDE SHOT. Bud is a tiny spider dropping down the wall in a pathetic little pool of light. The wall is sterile brown-gray, devoid of life at this depth. LOOKING DOWN, as the light shrinks to a star and vanishes in the blackness yawning below.

Lindsey has the microphone gripped tightly, and the lightness in her voice is a bit brittle.

LINDSEY
8500 feet, Bud. Everything okay?

MONK
Ask him a pressure effects. Tremors, vision problems, euphoria.

LINDSEY
Ensign Monk want to know how you feel.

ON THE SCREEN, printing out: COLD.

LINDSEY
Big baby.

Then: HANDS SHAKING. HHARD TO TYPE.

MONK
It's starting. It hits the nervous system first.

ONE NIGHT
Keep talking, Lindsey. Just let him hear your voice. It doesn't matter what about.

LINDSEY
Don't forget Bud, you're being graded on spelling as well as sentence structure, so concentrate, okay?

(long pause)
Bud, I... uh, there's some things I want to say. It's hard for me. I'm not of those softy, gooey-center-type people. It's not easy, you know, being a cast-iron bitch. It takes discipline and years of training. A lot of people don't appreciate that.

Lindsey has somehow tuned out the others in the room. In her mind she is with Bud, out in the darkness.

LINDSEY
But is wasn't all bad. I know that. You remember that bike trip... we rode the Honda up through Oregon? It took me a week to get my hair untangled, but I've never been happier. It was the most... free... I've ever felt. I'm sorry I can't tell you these things to your face.

EXT. THE WALL

202

Bud is visibly trembling, gritting his teeth... holding on as the vise-grip of pressure takes him.

LINDSEY (V.O./filtered)
It's pitiful. I have to wait until you're freezing in the dark and there's ten thousand feet of water between us. I guess I'm babbling.
I'm sorry.

Bus struggles with his keyboard.

INT. COMMAND MODULE

203

ON THE SCREEN: YOU ALWAYS DID TALK TOO MUCH

Somehow's she's smiling and on the verge of tears at the same time.

HIPPY
Two miles down and still grinnin' Comin' up on the big ten thou'.

ONE NIGHT
Bottom's still a mile and a half down.

EXT. THE ABYSS

204

BLAM! Bud jerks as his dive light implodes. He still has Geek's floodlights.
He falls on.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

205

HIPPY
12000 feet. Jesus, I don't believe he's doing this.

LINDSEY
Shut up, Hippy. Bud, how you doing?

He types: SE LUMINUS THINNGS

Everyone snaps suddenly alert.

HIPPY
Uh, oh...

LINDSEY
What kind of luminous things, Bud?

CATFISH
Maybe it's... you know... them.

The screen prints out: ITS OK. SQUID. GLOWING SQUID.

EXT. THE ABYSS 206

Bus is in an enormous school of bioluminescent squid, graceful, attenuated creatures less than a foot long. Thousands of them glide in ghostly arcs around him, filling the black void as far as the eye can see. He stares at them in wonder. Reaches out and touches one, catches it, lets it go. Are they really here? He can no longer be sure of his own perceptions.

INT. CONTROL MODULE 207

Another message from Bud: THINK THEYR REAL.

MONK
He's losing it. Talk to him. Keep him with us.

LINDSEY
Bud, it's the pressure. Try to concentrate.
Concentrate on my voice. Just listen to my voice.

EXT. THE ABYSS 208

Bud emerges from the school of squid. As he falls, they form a luminous plane of swirling colors above him. He stares upwards, transfixed. BUD'S POV, the ghostly blizzard of luminescence above him. A spectral form takes shape in the patternless glow... resolving into Lindsey's face, a hundred feet wide. Gazing down at him, her expression sad. Her image receded away from him into the darkness above as he falls.

DOWN ANGLE ON BUD, reaching up in anguish.

INT. CONTROL MODULE 209

Lindsey watches as Bud haltingly types out: YOUR GOING AWAY

LINDSEY
I'm not going away, Bud. I'm right here, right here with you. This is Lindsey, Bud. I'm right here.

ONE NIGHT
Signal's fading.

HIPPY
We're losing juice... kill everything we don't need. Catfish, knock out those lights.

Everyone hustles to comply. The room is plunged into darkness, the faces of the group lit only by the ghostly CRT screen.

ONE NIGHT
Run it through the digital processor, cook it as much as you can.

CATFISH
Seventeen thousand feet. Good Christ Almighty, this is insane.

EXT. THE ABYSS 210

Bud is shaking violently, as if with palsy. His eyes keep rolling back, and he's having a hard time staying conscious. He tries to type a message and he can't. The tons of pressure per square inch are short-circuiting his nervous system. Suddenly K-BAM! Little Geek's pressure hull implodes. Its lights go out. BLACKNESS.

INT. CONTROL MODULE 211

ONE NIGHT
Little Geek just folded.

HIPPY
Bye, little buddy.

MONK
He can still make it.

LINDSEY
I know how alone you feel... alone in all that cold blackness... but I'm there in the dark with you, Bud you're not alone...

Lindsey seems not to be in the room, but to be with him, seeing what he sees.
She is oblivious to the others.

Blackness. Then a bright light appears... he's lit a MAGNESIUM FLARE.

It's fierce, flickering glare lights his plunge. Bud discards the stalwart little ROV and free-falls like a skydiver without a chute. Out of control, he hits a ledge and rolls off. Tumbles forward in a cloud of debris. He hits another outcropping, limp as a rag doll. Rocks and sand rain down with him as he continues his descent.

Bud is quivering, teeth locked in a titanic rigor.

He pulls his arms and legs slowly into a fetal position.

In the plunge toward death he has gone he has gone full circle, returned to the womb in which we all breathe the water of life before we know the world of air and light. Still, there is Lindsey's voice, faintly in his helmet.

LINDSEY (V.O.)

You remember that time, you were pretty drunk, you probably don't remember... the power went out at the old apartment, the one on Orange Street... and we were staring at that one little candle, and I said something really dumb like that candle is me, like every one of us is out there alone in the dark in this life...

TIGHT ON LINDSEY as she grips the microphone. Her voice has become a hoarse whisper. Her eyes are intense, focused on a point far beyond the walls of the room.

LINDSEY

... and you lit another candle and put it beside mine and said "that's me"... and we stared at the two candles, and then we... well, if you remember any of it, I'm sure you remember the next part. Bud, there are two candles in the dark. I'm with you. I'll always be with you.

A tiny flickering light moves down along a vast black wall. Bud falls on in dream-like solitude, a candle in the dark.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

215

Catfish gently takes the microphone from Lindsey's hands and leans close.

CATFISH

How you doin', podner? Still with us, come-back?
Talk to us, Buddy boy.

They watch the screen, expectantly.

Nothing. Hippy and One Night start checking the equipment. Lindsey tried unsuccessfully to keep the terror out of her voice.

LINDSEY

Bud? You hangin' in there? Talk to me, Bud.
Are you okay?

There is an agonizing pause, then the letters appear slowly:
SHAKING STOPPED.
FEEL BETTER. SOME LIGHT BELOW.

LINDSEY

What kind of light?

LIGHT EVERYWHERE. BEAUTIFULL

MONK

He's hallucinating badly.

EXT. THE ABYSS

216

Bud is no longer in pain. His expression is rapt.

LOOKING DOWN, past him to a ghostly landscape. His last flare sputters out, but there is light. Bioluminescent algae carpet the walls of the canyon below him. And he's right... it is beautiful.

The water is so clear we can see down 500 feet past Bud's tiny, silhouetted figure, to a vast landscape faintly revealed in spectral pastels. Barren as the moon but exquisite, serene. Changeless. A place unseen by human eyes. Like a firefly below, the lights of Big Geek are visible. Bud descends toward the ROV, which has grounded on a narrow shelf. Below the shelf, the wall slopes out, suggesting we are near the bottom of the canyon but can't see it.

ONE BIG GEEK/MIRV, sitting there like a dumbshit. Bud's feet thump into the sediment next to it, stirring it luminous particles. Touchdown... three and half miles of water over his head. Bud leans over the warhead in a swarm of fireflies.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

217

AT GEEK prints out. Monk takes the headset gently from Lindsey.

MONK

Okay, Bud, we'll go step by step. Take the cover plate off the firing box.

A long pause. Then... PLATE OFF

MONK

All right, Bud, you have to cut the ground wire, not the lead wire...

EXT. ABYSSAL LEDGE

218

Bud is peering into the detonator unit. How bad is he? We can't tell.

MONK (V.O.)

It's the blue wire with the white stripe, not... I repeat... NOT the black wire with the yellow stripe.

Bud is staring. Blinking. The two wire look big as sewer pipes, and they're miles away... way down there where his hands are.

The only light he has left is a CYALUME STICK. He pulls out the little plastic tube. Breaks and shakes. It starts to glow, a tiny wand of green light. He fumbles with his tool pouch, takes out a pair of side-cutters. CUTTING NNOW he types to them. He reaches into the detonator.

DETAIL, THE WIRES... in the green Cyalume glow, the look identical. The cutters go over on wire. A long beat. They withdraw, then go over the other wire...

He cuts--

INT. CONTROL MODULE

219

Everyone is frozen. Waiting. It's very quiet.

LINDSEY
Would we see the flash?

MONK
Through three miles of water? I don't know.

They're holding their breaths. Then... STILL HERE

A cheer goes up. Rebel yells.

CATFISH
Quiet, quiet! Save you air, goddamnit.

MONK
Bud, give me a reading off you liquid oxygen gauge.

TEN MINUTES WORTH ID SAY. Lindsey does white.

HIPPY
It took him over an hour to get down there--

It's hopeless. Lindsey grabs the headset from Monk.

LINDSEY
Drop you weights and start back now! The gauge could be wrong...

EXT. ABYSSAL LEDGE

220

Bus is one his knees beside the dead warhead. His expression is enigmatic.

He looks around slowly at the luminous canyon. Starts to type.

INT. CONTROL MODULE

221

The message comes in: NO. THINK ILL STAY A WHILE. BEAUTIFUL HERE. WORTH ADMISSION

LINDSEY
No! You can make it! You hear me? Drop your weights... you... can breathe shallow... you... it could be wrong-- Lindsey's voice has twisted into a sob. She begins to weep, quietly.

LINDSEY
Oh God, Virgil, please...

DONT CRY BABY

A pause. Then the words...

WE KNEW THIS WAS A ONE WAY TICKET WHEN I PUT THIS THING ON. BUT YOU KNOW I
HAD TO COME.

Lindsey sobs at the mike. The others look away. The signal is weakening.
One Night boosts it and the screen clears briefly.

LOVE YOU WIFE.

She stares at the printout.

LINDSEY
Love you.

There is no reply.

CUT TO:

EXT. THE ABYSS

222

A tiny figure lies slumped beside the inert ROV, an Indian dying with his horse in the desert.

Bud's eyelids close. His chest barely moving.

A strange illumination bathes his face and his eyes open. He blinks. Weakly,
he raises his head, facing the source of the radiance.

BUD'S POV... A glowing figure hovers before him, like a vision. It seems to be an angel. Seen closer, as it drifts toward him, we see that it is an extraterrestrial being, bioluminescent like some deep-sea fish. Its body and limbs are transparent, and it resembles a figure made of blown glass. A delicate mantle or veil billows out around its like a corona, which pulsates gently, propelling the being with the hypnotic grace of a Spanish dancer. The head is refined and strangely anthropomorphic, with large eyes that convey a cold, dispassionate wisdom.

It is stunningly beautiful.

The creature settles toward him. Unafraid, Bud extends his hand.

Its slender, blown-glass digits grasp his bulky glove. It pulls him up from the benthic ooze and they glide together down the slope, deeper into the abyss.

At the limits of visibility we see faint, glowing forms moving below. They resolve into NTI ships. Tiny ovoids, like the little scoutship that Lindsey nearly collided with at the Montana wreck. The larger manta-ships. And others, strangely configured, moving in the darkness below like luminous fish.

Suddenly the darkness explodes with light. A vast, reticulated pattern of brightly glowing lines, like some enormous circuit diagram, appears below them, covering the floor of the abyssal trench. It sweeps outward from the center, as if the light were surging through channels. The NTIs are revealing their home to Bud. The ships move among the spires like air traffic over a major city.

EXT. N.T.I. STRUCTURE

223

Bud and the creature descend until, between the lines of light, we see a dark surface of inhuman design. The shape extends beyond the limits of visibility. Towers hundreds of feet high stretch upward from the curving surface. It dwarfs their figures as they descend toward it, approaching an opening that soon yawns like a vast mouth.

They are picking up speed, swept along by a powerful current, into the mouth-like opening.

INT. N.T.I. STRUCTURE

224

Bus stares around in awe as smooth, pearlescent walls blur past him.

It is a curving three-dimensional maze of tunnels, like a vast circulatory system, where controlled currents of water become freeways in three-dimensional space. Tunnels divide, narrow, and reenter main-routes hundreds of feet across, as the pair race through in a dizzying blur.

INT. FINAL CHAMBER

225

Entering a smaller chamber they settle to the floor, and the NTI moves back a few feet.

A shimmering plane or surface appears like a vertical curtain bisecting the chamber. The seawater divides, like the Red Sea, into two rippling walls.
They move apart. Leaving Bud standing in a short, shimmering hallway.

Weakly, he uncouples his helmet and pulls it free. Drops to his knees.
Doubles over as spasms wrack him. Breathing fluid explodes from his lungs.
He lies gasping and coughing on the floor, dragging in deep breaths of what he can only hope is air. It is.

Bud slowly recovers, sitting up. His head is clearing. This really is happening. Beyond the shimmering, vertical surface of the water he sees the NTI being joined by others, move or less identical, until a group of seven is gathered watching him.

BUD

Howdy, Uuuh... how you guys doin'?

His voice echoes metallically in the strange chamber. Soft laps of water from the 'walls'.

In the air a pattern of glowing lines appears, a series of what appears to be circuit diagrams. Bud staggers back from this strange 'screen' hanging in mid-air. The image is about twenty feet across.

There is a rolling jumble of static and interference which resolves into... the face of Dan Rather, doing the evening news. STATIC, then another newscast. And another. Fragments of the same story. The world on the brink of war.

BUD

You watch out TV? That what you're trying to say? That you know what's been going on up there?

The NTIs are impassive. Static... then another newscast.

This time, we're allowed to focus on the story. An on-the-scene interview outside a high-tech seismology lab. There is an air of hysteria about the scene... technicians running across the background of the shot, people shouting, the reporter jamming his mike at the harried-looking scientist.

REPORTER

... a Caltech scientist who is among those reporting an unprecedented disturbance in the world's oceans. Dr. Breg, can you give us a clearer explanation then we're getting?

Berg is edgy and distracted. People keeps handing him pieces of paper, computer hardcopy. The biggest thing in his life is happening...

BERG

They're acoustic shockwaves, like tsunamis, but with no seismological source. The waves are propagating toward the shorelines of every continent--

An assistant runs up, face shiny with fear, beckoning. We see that Berg is running scared. The impossible bringing the greatest terror to the rational mind.

BERG

Yeah. I'll be right there... I have to go.
Look, we don't know what it is! Okay? Not the slightest goddamn idea!

The image dissolves into static, fades out. Bud turns to the NTIs.

BUD

You're doing it! Right? That's what you're telling me. Yeah, you can control water... that's your technology. But why?

Static again, then a brilliant flash. Grainy stock film of a hydrogen bomb test in the Pacific.

The film repeats, and then again, faster, and again until it merges into an unbroken white glare. Bud gets the message.

BUD

Hey, you don't know they're really gonna do it.
Where do you get off passing judgment on us, when you can't be sure? How do you know?

The screen exploded into a staccato series of searing images, stark moments from recent history...

US soldiers fighting in Vietnam, street warfare in Beirut, a car bomb in Belfast, a suspect shot in the head in the streets of Saigon, burned and bleeding children, grainy footage of corpses bulldozed into mass graves at Auschwitz, Wermacht soldiers marching in goose-step review, a 13-year-old contra with an AK-47... Just glimpses, strobing... a few frames of each.
But enough. The images continue.

HOLD ON BUD, as the lights flicker on his face, the ongoing indictment of humanity.

CUT TO:

EXT. OCEAN FRONT WALK, SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA -- DAY 226

A video news crew leaps from a Jet Ranger helicopter in a parking area and runs to set up near the railing, facing the ocean. Pandemonium reigns around them, people running, driving, evacuating inland.

On the horizon, out to sea, a dark line has appeared.

It grows in height as it comes closer, a wall of water stretching across the horizon, already hundreds of feet high and growing.

EXT. NEW YORK -- DAY 227

LONG LENSE SHOT, looking seaward past the Statue of Liberty, out past the Verazzano Narrows. Stacked up by perspective, the distant wave is a wall of water impossibly high, still miles out.

EXT. NAVAL BASE, KAMCHATKA PENINSULA, U.S.S.R. -- NIGHT 228

The scene repeats on the eastern coast of the Kamchatka Peninsula in Russia, where a full moon shimmers along the crest of a vast wave.

SIRENS wail as Russian sailors run from the docks of Petropavlovsk Naval Base.
Some stand rooted as the black glacier of water, a thousand feet high and growing, thunders toward them in nightmarish slow motion.

EXT. OCEAN FRONT, SANTA MONICA -- DAY 229

The minicam crew reporter is speaking rapidly, faltering with emotion, his voice cracking like the famous broadcast from the scene of the Hindenburg disaster.

REPORTER

The horizon has gone dark... the crowd is starting to run... some are just staring, unable to move... the wave... the wave is... it's...
I don't know... maybe a thousand feet high already... getting bigger as I'm watching... still miles out... oh my God, Jesus... I can hear it...

A roar fills the air, a thunder which drowns out the people's screams, even the rotors of the news chopper as the camera teams scrambles aboard.
They leave the announcer standing transfixed, his face blank, eyes tracking upward and upward as the ground begins to shake.

EXT. NEW YORK -- DAY 230

The Statue of Liberty looks like a souvenir figurine at the afternoon sun is blocked out by the cresting tsunami, an escarpment of water 2500 feet tall.

EXT. SAN FRANCISCO -- DAY 231

LONG LENS SHOT -- The Golden Gate Bridge and the hills of the city,
the buildings downtown. Beyond, FILLING FRAME is the wall of sea green which defies our comprehension. The image shakes with the THUNDER.

EXT. MALIBU -- DAY

232

A diehard surfer looks over his shoulder as the mountain of water which transcends his worst nightmare. He lies paralyzed on his board.

EXT. MIAMI -- DAY

233

Downtown Miami crouches in terror at the feet of the shimmering monolith.

In a penthouse office suite, an executive watches the wave towering above him, blocking out the sun, a line of raging foam appearing as it arches over,
about to break upon the teeming city.

And then...

The wave slows as it crests...

And stops.

IT SIMPLY STOPS.

2600 feet high and motionless except for a shimmering undulation of its surface in the bright sun. There is quiet, a faint wind and calling
of confused gulls. Various reactions, as the thunder fades and people recover, only to stand awed before the vast, inexplicable manifestation. A news
helicopter passes in front of it like a dragonfly.

EXT. MALIBU

234

The surfer just blinks, starting.

EXT. NEW YORK -- DAY

235

On the East Coast it's the same, as the World Trade Centers are dwarfed by a shimmering blue wall which stands... waiting.

EXT. PETROPAVLOVSK NAVAL BASE, U.S.S.R. -- NIGHT

236

Russian seamen, lining the harbor breakwall at Petropavlovsk Naval Base on the Kamchatka Peninsula, stare upward at the monolith of water, undulating in the moonlight. It seems poised to crash down, inflicting inconceivable devastation... but it doesn't.

EXT. OCEAN FRONT WALK, SANTA MONICA

237

When all have seen...

The wave soundlessly subsides, slowly slipping back and down until the surface of the sea is normal again.

VIDEO SHOT, HANDHELD, of a crowd of people watching the sea. Moving from face to face. Various reactions as people respond to what they can only understand as a miracle. The faces... awed, stunned, tear-streaked...
laughing. The cameraman is just walking. Some people turn to him and smile,
or laugh, or whoop.

A woman is collapsed on a bench, crying.

A man is on his knees, shaking.

Total strangers hug each other.

A black guy, tears pouring down his face, turns to the camera with a beautiful grin.

GUY

Somebody just laid it down to us, man. Things ain't never gonna be the same!

PULL BACK to reveal that we are in the...

INT. FINAL CHAMBER

238

Bud sits, shaken, watching the screen, as people react to their deliverance.
He turns to the NTIs.

BUD

Why? You could've done it. Why didn't you?

The screen darkens. Then letters appears on it, slowly printing out, as if someone was clumsily typing them.

WE KNEW THIS WAS...

And we've seen this before so we know the rest...

WE KNEW THIS WAS A ONE WAY TICKET WHEN I PUT THIS THING ON. BUT YOU KNOW I HAD TO COME.

A pause, then:

LOVE YOU WIFE

The last message expands to fill the entire screen.

Bud stares at the screen, at his message of self-sacrifice, then at
the aliens. They bow their heads, just for a moment. A sign of respect.

CLOSE ON BUD as he begins to realize what has happened.

CUT TO:

INT. DEEPCORE/CONTROL MODULE 239

Lindsey is slumped in a chair, just staring. Withdrawn.

The others are conserving oxygen and heat, huddling in the dark.

The air is looking pretty thick. The speaker of the hydrophone transceiver
crackles to life.

MCBRIDE (V.O.)
Deepcore, do you read? This is Benthic Explorer, over.

CATFISH
Hell yes, we read! Good of you to join us. How's that storm doin'?

MCBRIDE
Well, it's strange... it just kind've blew itself out all of the sudden. We're up here in a flat sea with no wind. But then a lot of weird things've been happening.

CATFISH
Well, hell, son. You better get us a line down here, we're in moderately poor shape.

LATER, Hippy, Catfish, and Monk are conferring B.G. on how to get a new umbilical hooked on. One Night is talking to McBride on the hydrophone.

MCBRIDE
They figure it was over a half mile high.

ONE NIGHT
I wish I could have seen it--

She glances down at the telemetry screen, seeing movement.

ONE NIGHT
Hey. Hey! HEY!! Look... it's Bud.

MONK
That's impossible.

Lindsey bolts to the screen. Stares at the message printing out.

A huge grin wraps around her face.

LINDSEY
No it's not.

MCBRIDE (V.O.)
What's it say?

Lindsey takes the mike and sits before the screen. During the message, her voice will go through an emotional spectrum from confusion to wonder, to a childlike joy.

INTERCUT BETWEEN DEEPCORE AND EXPLORER BRIDGE DURING THE FOLLOWING:

LINDSEY
It says...
"VIRGIL BRIGMAN BACK ON THE AIR/HAVE SOME NEW FRIENDS DOWN HERE/I GUESS THEY'VE BEEN HERE AWHILE/
THEY'VE LEFT US ALONE BUT IT BOTHERS THEM TO SEE US HURTING EACH OTHER/GETTING OUT OF HAND LATELY"

Lindsey grins as she reads the next part...

LINSEY
"THEY SENT A MESSAGE/HOPE YOU GOT IT"

CATFISH
I'd say that's a big 10-4, jack.

LINDSEY
"THEY WANT US TO GROW UP A BIT AND PUT AWAY CHILDISH THINGS/OF COURSE ITS JUST A SUGGESTION."

Beyond the windows the ocean is calm. The sky steel-gray put placid. McBride turns to Commodore DeMarco and the Navy contingent, his eyebrows cocked.

MCBRIDE
Looks like you boys might be out of business.

BENDIX
Something's going on down there. I'm getting some big readings....

Bendix is hunched over the sonar, and we can see the screens lit up like a Wurlitzer.

INT. DEEPCORE 241

In Deepcore the crew becomes aware of a strange subsonic rumbling. The sonar is going crazy. One Night puts the headphones of her passive sonar rig up to her ear, then jerks it away.

ONE NIGHT
Whew! Whatever this is, it's major.

The rumbling increases and a glow diffuses the water.

The glow intensifies until a blinding shaft of light blasts through the viewport, bathing the whole interior in a cold white radiance.

A last message appears on the screen:

KEEP YOU PANTYHOSE ON/YOURE GONNA LOVE THIS

The radiance intensifies. Everyone covers their eyes. It flares to WHITE-OUT.

CUT TO:

INT./EXT. EXPLORER BRIDGE -- DAY 242

Bendix and the bridge crew are going nuts. All their instruments are pegged.

BENDIX
Active is pinging back something big... it's enormous! Coming up right under us.

DEMARCO

Where?

BENDIX

Where? EVERYWHERE!!

(looks out the window)

Over there! Port bow.

EXT. BENTHIC EXPLORER AND OCEAN

243

A depression appears in the surface of the sea a hundred yards off, not swirling down like a whirlpool, just dimpling down.

It gets wider. Deeper. Rapidly becomes a yawning pit.

The ocean is OPENING.

Now the surface is churned by turbulence. Slow massive roils of tremendous power boil up from the depths.

McBride leads a mass exodus onto the deck to see better.

The open becomes a roaring maw a hundred yards across.

The ships are like toys on the shimmering rim of the maelstrom.

SOMETHING RISES IN THE CENTER OF THE OPENING. A massive spire. Smoothly curving and iridescent. Off the starboard beam, a quarter mile away, another spire rises. Tons of seawater fall from its sides with a THUNDEROUS ROAR, the energy of Niagara.

Off the port bow... another spire.

And another, beyond the destroyer Albany, dwarfing it.

Six towers... plus one larger, in the center. Rising.

One the Explorer's deck, a shadow engulfs them as the nearest spire blocks out the sun. The air, the sea, the deck... all vibrate with the THUNDER OF CREATION.

And now for the payoff shot: WE'RE HIGH, LOOKING DOWN. THE SPIRES FORM A PERFECT RING A MILE ACROSS. A VAST DARK FORM, LIKE A GREAT SHADOW, RISES FROM THE DEPTHS BENEATH THE SHIPS. THE SPIRES ARE CONNECTED. IT IS ALL ONE.

THE NTI ARK.

It surfaces with slow majesty, gently beaching all the ships on its broad back. We recognize it as the structure into which Bud was led by the angelic being, which we assumed was a city. The Explorer rocks gently on its flat hull, clunking massively to one side as it settles.

The bridge crew watch millions of tons of seawater streaming off the back of the vast, slightly curved hull. The missile cruiser rocks back and forth nearby, high and dry... its prop whining futility.

ON EXPLORER'S DECK, McBride, Bendix, DeMarco, the rest of the Navy contingent... they're all standing there open-mouthed, in a dream-like daze. Touched by the hand of God.

BENDIX
Look...

WHAT THEY SEE -- Fifty yards away, between them and the Albany, sits Deepcore Two. It looks like a particularly ugly and unwanted toy, sitting on the glistening plain of the NTI Ark's hull.

CLOSER, ON TRIMODULE C, as the hatch at the bottom opens.

Catfish's feet appear, bicycling. He swings down to the pearlescent 'deck'. Stands there blinking in the sunlight, mole-like. Jammer plonks down behind him. He turns, lifts Lindsey down. Hippy, Sonny, and the rest, emerge into the light of the sun. A deliverance from the blackest night they will ever know.

LINDSEY
We should be dead. We didn't decompress.

CATFISH
Out blood oughta be fizzin' like a warm, shook-up Coke.

HIPPY
They must've done something to us.

Lindsey has tears streaming down her cheeks... for the sun, for life, for their deliverance and the larger one she knows has happened, an epiphany for the whole human race.

LINDSEY

Oh, yes. I think you could say that.

She blinks. Seeing something not far away. She gives a little laugh, or something between laughing and crying.

REVERSE, as Bud walks up the curving incline of one of the mouth-
like entrances to the NTI structure. His suit is casually unzipped and the FBS helmet dangles from one hand jauntily.

She starts toward him. Breaks into a run. Then stops a few feet from him.
Watching him come to her.

His smile, his eyes illuminating her.

He stops and she touches him, lightly. Is this real?

The look at each other, wonderingly a moment.

Then laugh. She sniffs loudly.

LINDSEY

Hello, Brigman.

BUD

Hello, Mrs. Brigman.

Their lips meet.

CUT TO BLACK

All movie scripts and screenplays on this site are intended for educational purposes only.

Featuring

The Chronicles of the Gírkù

Essays

and Research Publications of
Anton Parks

Quoted materials from books, interviews, and communications by Anton Parks:
Copyright 2006-2009 Anton Parks
Otherwise Copyright 2006-2009 Gerry Zeitlin

The Chronicles

Volume I: Le Secret des Etoiles Sombres (The Secret of the Dark Stars), Anton Parks, 2005.

Volume II: Adam Genisiš (Adam Geniš), Anton Parks, Nouvelle Terre, 2007.

Volume III: Le Réveil du Phénix (The Awakening of the Phoenix), Anton Parks, Publication in 2009.

Volume IV: (Title to be announced)

Volume V: (Title to be announced)

Volume VI: The Stone of Destiny, Anton Parks, forthcoming.

Essays

Le Testament de la Vierge (The Testament of the Virgin), Anton Parks, 2009.

....

Covers (in order of publication)

www.antonparks.com Nouvelle Terre

zeitlin.net

The Phenomenon of Anton Parks:

Has Anton Parks, French self-educated author, produced in Le Secret des Étoiles Sombres an epic accounting, a mythology, a saga of science fiction and heroic fantasy, or a "history" book?

Parks' work remains unclassifiable as it poses the essential questions: What was happening on the earth before the coming of man? What led to and provoked the advent of the human civilizations?

The author of Le Secret des Étoiles Sombres entralls thousands of readers around the world with his epic report on the origin of human civilization. But let us not be mistaken: in this novelistic form, Parks may have restored to us our true genesis, that which figures in the Sumerian texts, clairvoyantly decrypted and presented without complexity.

Nexus Magazine (French Edition) Nos. 43-44, Spring-Summer 2006

We are the fruit of complex interactions with extraterrestrial entities that we have long taken for the "Gods". Far from the paradigms of Darwinism and creationism, Parks proposes an exogenesis of humanity based on the decryption of great fundamental myths, but also on Sumerian and biblical texts. A fascinating voyage to our ultimate origins.

Karmapolis in Nexus Magazine (French Edition) No. 50, May-June 2007

 Interviews by Karmapolis

Anton PARKS et le Secret des Etoiles Sombres [K1]

Anton PARKS et les premiers pas de l'humanité [K2]

ANTON PARKS: L'humanité est une création extraterrestre (Nexus.fr, May-June 2007) [N]

Gerry Zeitlin: FIRST CONTACT

 Dossier Interview

Anton Parks: Le Secret des Etoiles Sombres & Adam Genisis (N°20 "Les Grands Mystères des Sciences Sacrées") [GMSS]

"The specter of war caused us to descend here and our race shook your world to its foundations. I recall well all these discourses and the numerous broken promises. This wound refuses to heal. My heart is ever filled with grief, because this story resonates within me like a distant echo."

The crystal Ugur (The GÍRKÙ)

My companion asked me to take out the cylindrical quartz crystal with reflections of greens and blues. I seized it and held it up, admiring it in all of its parts; it was of an extraordinary purity....

"This august crystal is a Gírkù (litt: holy epee in Sumerian). It possesses multiple functions and operates on the same principle as the ME. The entire history of the Amašutum is carefully recorded in it. It is also a frequency catalyst that transports on the three levels which make up the KIGAL and on the fourth dimension of the Angal.

"The Kingú-Babbar, the great Gina'abul albinos whom we also call the Imdugud, possess Gírkù in the form of crystal spheres that are a sort of combination of our common Gírkù and the crystalline stone that you hold in your hand.

"This crystal is capable of vibrating on certain frequencies with a quality contingent on the impulse that is sent to it.

"What you do not yet know, is that our ancient line held the mastery of the force of Níama as does our queen. The amount of heat exerted on this crystal by the Níama causes the basic vibration of a being to rise or descend, aligning her with the different planes of existence. In fact the Gírkù acts as a Gùrkur, but with considerably greater power, because it is an undressed crystal!

"This type of green quartz is unique; it is one of the purest stones that we know. It comes from the system of Gagsisá (Sirius).

"Finally, it is also a formidable weapon. It deploys its blade thanks to the Níama.

"This object belonged to our ancestors, the ancient Amašutum root race. Each and every one of us possesses one on Nalulkára. Our past deviations and our venue in the bosom of the Kadištu have not only removed from us our venom, but also the preprogrammed capacity to use the Gírkù that we previously possessed."

ANNALS OF THE GINA'ABUL

Anton Parks' Le Secret des Etoiles Sombres (Volume One of the series) might be a novel, constructed to illustrate via a gripping narrative the author's insights into a human prehistoric background - rather a prehuman historic background - gained through his deep linguistic analysis of ancient Mesopotamian languages: Sumerian, Akkadian, Babylonian.

However, Parks himself does not believe his books to be works of fiction. Rather, they are a transcription of experiences he had - through an imposed virtual reality projection, or a parapsychological mind meld, or some other process for which we cannot even propose a name - that intruded upon and overwhelmed his daily life for many years.

Before reading his books, one needs to know what they are. The best way to begin to understand is through Parks' own description of how he acquired his information. For this we turn to a penetrating interview of Parks conducted by Alain Gossens of Karmapolis.be [K1].

The wide-ranging interview also serves as a précis of the trilogy, and as such was an aid in organizing and beginning to write these pages, which also incorporate information from private communications with Anton Parks, and from the books themselves, when they are published.

One other important first detail for English-speaking readers: no English-language translation of Parks' books or the interview has been published, but translation of the book series is underway. While awaiting the books' publication in English, although we will not attempt a close translation on these pages, the importance of Parks' work seems so great that we are moved to provide English-speaking readers with a summary and discussion of the basic facts contained in them.

PREFACE to Adam Geniš

Anton Parks Describes his Experiences

(See http://www.karmapolis.be/pipeline/anton_parks.htm [K1])

Parks' experiences began at the age of 14, in 1981, with a series of "flashes" that would occur at any hour of the day, and completely beyond his control. These eventually evolved into "visions" that took place from once to three times each day.

The visions seemed somehow to be related to or triggered by the ambient light at the time of their occurrence. The light in the visions had the same "spectrum" as the surrounding light. They came as "jets of light" from above, penetrating the top of his head, at the level of the "seventh principal chakra." They would instantly disconnect him from his surroundings and move him into complete scenes, including the aspect of sound.

He would find himself "inside" a certain being, and usually would find the same set of "personages" around him.

These living experiences would take from two to up to ten minutes. Yet if there were people around Parks at the time the visions occurred, they did not seem to notice that anything special had happened, which leads Parks to believe that he would have been gone for only a few seconds at most, in their time.

Parks struggled to comprehend the source of these visions, and their meaning. It was not until the end of the 90s and much research that he came to understand that they were related to the Sumerian civilization and to a language from which the Sumerian language emerged.

...It took some time to put order into all this history -- the different personages and their characters, their numerous names, the different races, the planets, the dimensions -- all that had not been clear at the beginning, especially since I was receiving the information via these disordered "flashes".

Order and comprehension came naturally over the course of years, without doubt due to the growing amount of information that I was able to accumulate.

And there was this sensation of "deja vu", of knowing or recognizing the personalities of the players.

It is a world apart, truly separate from ours, but so alive and, in spite of all, so close to us in many ways...

I discovered by chance the Sumerian literature very late, toward the end of 1999 and the beginning of 2000. Yes, that was a shock and above all a supreme motivation for me to write the Chronicles.

Certain places described in the Mesopotamian documents, and most of the the principal personages, are relatively in accord with what I received, but the tablets lack many details and numerous elements... and in fact not all is in accord with my "visions". The warp and woof of the story that I relate are found however on some clay tablets; this is why I have no doubt this "capacity" to interpret the symbolism of the Mesopotamian documents.

[N]

Parks also began to consider aspects of reincarnation theory in trying to comprehend what was happening to him.

The personage whose identity Parks assumed in his visions bore the name of "Sa'am," and it was Sa'am's "destiny" that Parks was retracing.

Sa'am belonged to a group of "reptilian" races known as the Gina'Abul, and these are the divinities who are written about on the Mesopotamian tablets.

Sa'am had a certain crystal that was called "Gírkù." The information that Parks was receiving was in some way coming from the crystal, which led him to wonder if the experience was being played out in his mind by the crystal or if he really was this "Sa'am" who owned it.

After many years of living with these visions, Parks found that they were taking too much of his life, and he began a process of reducing and blocking them. This took many months, but the phenomenon eventually disappeared, in 1991 around the time of the first Persian Gulf War.

Coming to terms with the experience, Parks decided that it was not necessary to know for certain if he truly was the Sa'am personage, although in the depths of his being he is convinced that it is so. Perhaps this was what led him to begin a study of ancient Mesopotamian texts. He and his associates were soon shocked to find that the history they related was practically identical to what he had received - or lived through - in his visions.

Pursuing an interest in the Sumerian language, and aided by his "flashes," Parks discovered the "linguistic code of the "gods".

Eventually what became most important was the need to write and publish the information he was gathering. He began this task in the period 2000-2001.

His work, when complete, will consist of six volumes, containing careful descriptions of what Parks experienced/received over a period of ten years, including transcripts of dialogs where appropriate, plus subsequent research inquiring into the possible validity of the visions. The latter are usually presented in the form of formal manuscripts and reports as appendices to the texts, and easily distinguishable from them.

From Author's Note to Adam Genisiš:

At the time that The Secret of the Dark Stars was impressed upon me, I did not know how to reveal the source of all this history. It didn't seem to be channelling, properly speaking. To explain that it was all revealed to me on a daily basis over a dozen years through the intermediary of uncontrollable "jets of light" hardly enchanted me.

This situation was so trying for me that it is difficult now to even recall it clearly. Years of this had shattered my life.

I had opted not to speak of it, at least at first, thinking that "those who know" would see clearly from what it came. As to most of the other readers, those who are a little less "in the know", I imagined that they would be content to take this information as that found in an essay on the origin of humanity, or even as a novel, given that the narrative is written in that form. When one has important information to communicate, all these methods are good...

But choosing the manner of transcribing this series did pose a problem for me, and for a long time. Several years ago, when I finally decided to begin writing, I started to compose the first volume in the form of an essay. But after a good hundred pages, I realized that I would not be able to include all the details that I had received. So I abandoned this approach and wrote the central part of the book -- that is to say the history -- as a narrative. That allowed me to put in the full specificity of this story without "taboos" and I was able to preserve the singular sensation of finding myself in the body of the principal personage, just as I had it at the time that I had received all this.

Then I preserved the contents of my historico-mythological and linguistic investigations for the notes at the bottom of the pages and for the appendices, as I have done with the present work.

This explains why two different writing styles coexist in the volumes of this series.

Comparison with the Work of Other Researchers

Parks has examined the translations of Samuel Kramer, Jean Bottéro, Marie-Joseph Seux, Thorkild Jacobsen, René Labat, and André Caquot. While they differ from one another, their core information is the same, and Parks and his associates couldn't help noticing a surprising similarity between his flashes and the basic story written down on the ancient clay tablets - certainly more than 5000 to 6000 years old!

It was all Parks could do to refrain from plunging too deeply into these translations, so as to continue to preserve intact the history as he had received it, which contained numerous elements that were totally absent from the tablets.

He found striking similarities on concepts having to do with cloning, well detailed on the tablets, which have also been discussed by modern authors Zecharia Sitchin, R. Boulay, and David Icke.

Most important was information relating to the central personage known in Parks' first volume as Sa'am, who took other names while on the Earth - though no more was spoken of this in the interview. Many of the personages introduced in Le Secret came to Earth and persisted into the Sumerian, Egyptian, and "Biblical" epochs under various names. All of these are discussed in Adam Genisiš.

On Nibiru and Gold

Parks writes (Le Secret, Note 4):

We will see that the first humans on the African continent were procured over a period of several millennia for the purpose of mining gold for the "Celestial Bestiary."

In the course of your reading, you will learn why gold was so important for the Gina'abul. You will see that my ideas are totally original and absolutely to be distinguished from those put forward by independent researchers who claim to have read on the clay tablets (I must ask where???) that the Sumerian "gods" inhabited a planet named Nibiru (or Neberu) and that the gold served them as an active component in the fashioning of its atmosphere which no longer retained sunlight (sic!).

I don't know where this information came from, but quite clearly not a single clay tablet claims that Nibiru (or Neberu) is the original planet of the Sumerian "gods" called Anunna see [Races]; on the contrary, the only celestial habitation that is mentioned, quite rightly, is Dukù of which we will speak again and again.

Note also that Dukù is actually the name of a planet, but also became the name of an orbiting habitat that the Celestial Bestiary, once confined to the Earth, constructed in order to survive. The Sumerians used this same name to designate chapels in the ancient cities of Eridu and Nippur. These cult places symbolized the terrestrial manifestation of the "primordial hills" of the "gods." In the second work of this series, we will equally evoke the Dukug of which the sense is strictly the same and which was the name of the mountain where the Celestial Bestiary established itself at the edge of the Mesopotamian plain.

Languages

Unity

The language in which Parks received his information was completely unlike French, yet he knew it as though it were his native tongue.

For some years he had believed the language to be Hebrew, but was disabused of this idea through the use of a Hebrew syllabary (a set of signs or symbols representing the sounds that make up the words. Since these constituent sounds have their own meanings, one can use this tool to decompose and understand the complex meanings of complete words).

It is this focus on the phonetic values of the syllables that distinguishes Parks' linguistic methodology. These exhibit a common base among numerous ancient languages.

Parks learned that the codification of languages was associated with the existence of castes in the society he had experienced in his visions: that of the Gina'abul (Sumerian word for lizards). By the end of the 1990s Parks understood that the phonetic values of the Gina'abul were to be found in both the Sumerian and Akkadian syllabaries.

The Sumerian language, he points out, embraces a system that was totally formed from its first appearance and which has undergone only rare developments over time. Sumerian belongs to no known linguistic group, while Akkadian - a language spoken in the north of Mesopotamia and structured from the Sumerian syllabary - is the ancestor of Assyrian and Babylonian, themselves belonging to semitic groups such as Hebrew and Arabic.

In fact, Parks found that there actually is a single Sumero-Assyro-Babylonian syllabary on which are based the principal words of numerous ancient languages: Arabic, Chinese, Dogon, Egyptian, Ancient Greek, Hebrew, Hindi, Hopi, Japanese, Latin, the Germanic languages and many others.

These syllabaries could be used to decompose certain biblical terms and to understand their deep meanings.

Decomposing a word required knowledge of the context that had led to the original assembling of its terms. For example, he explains, the Sumerian Gina'abul  can be decomposed as GINA-AB-UL ("veritable ancestor(s) of the splendor"). When one understands the excessive vanity of the beings Parks experienced, one is not surprised by this appellation.

Take the name Adam, which we are supposed to believe comes from the Hebrew in relation to the terms adama (clod of earth?) or adôm (red). Parks is unaware that any author has considered the Sumerian Á-DAM, which means "beasts, animals, flocks" or "levy (?), establishment, installation or colonization," all subsumed under "inflict!"

If Á-DAM were to designate persons, they would be "beasts, animals, levied, established, installed," or even "colonized, inflicted."

The idea of an enslaved being, totally submissive to "gods," is reinforced in the equivalent of the term Á-DAM in Akkadian, which is Nammaššû, translated phonetically in Sumerian as nam-maš-šû, "the demi-portion to charge."

What could be more precise?

Parks applies this method to determine and verify in detail virtually every translatable term in connection with the history he relates. In Le Secret, the number of words that he did not decompose with the aid of the Sumero-Akkadian syllabary could be counted on the fingers of one hand. He believes he is the first to use this decomposition method.

The syllables of Sumerian and Akkadian words allow Parks to decompose the principal words of other ancestral languages: Chinese, Hebrew, ancient Greek, Latin, Germanic and Amerindian languages, etc. That leads to a unified understanding of all languages, but discussion of this will have to await the later volumes in the series.

Parks does provide in the current volume the accents and numeric labeling of syllables that are part of his system.

Origins and Sequences

The Emeša language (the "matrix language" or "heart of the language") is the original language of the Gina'abul females, who Parks thinks - though he did not see this directly - developed slightly earlier than the male Gina'abul. From this mother language the females (Amašutum) created the Emenita (male) language for the use of the males and for communication between the males and the females.

Meanwhile, the original (Emešà) language was then abandoned as long as peace prevailed.

Gina'abul World

Emešà
"Matrix Language"
=
Original Sumerian and Akkadian
(Assyro-Babylonian) syllabaries and phonetics

Emenita
"Male Language"
Original Sumerian

Human World

Emešà
"Matrix Language"
=
Language of the Amašutum and Human priestesses
(used to codify Human Languages)

Emegir
"Princely or Noble Language" or Emean
"Heavenly Language"
=
Human Sumerian

Later, during the Great War, the females were captured and oppressed by the male Gina'abul, the famous Ušumgal and Mušgir (see Races), who had discovered the secret of their feminine sexual power. A group of these males wished to imprison the females and make them submit to abominations so as to seize that power for themselves.

The females, confined by the males, developed Hermetic rites and other secrets in order to protect themselves. As writing became too dangerous, and as many females were unable to use telepathy, a talent enjoyed by all of the males, and needing to be able to communicate among themselves with full confidence, they reactivated and brought up to date the Emešà, with its supplementary linguistic particles, and used it again for secret communication between themselves.

Karma One: In your first work, Le Secret des Etoiles Sombres, you presented a codification of Earth's ancient languages through the use of the syllabary of the Sumerian-Akkadian spoken by the ancient "gods". Your demonstrations were striking. In Adam Geniš you continued with your reasoning and explained to us that this codification had the objective of destabilizing the world of the "gods" and not that of the humans as the Bible indicates.

Anton Parks: The Sumerian and Akkadian languages are the basis of all the idioms and terrestrial languages; I think that the multitude of examples that I have been able to place in my two first works [see Decoder] demonstrates this very well. In a manner of speaking, all the commonly-used terms of the ancient languages have been codified thanks to the Sumerian or the Sumero-Akkadian.

The reason for this codification is the war that separates the world of the "gods" from the one found on the clay tablets composing the Mesopotamian mythology. Even before the last wave of the "gods" arrived, there already existed two distinct languages: Emešà ("matrix language") of the females, encompassing all the particles that can be found in Sumerian and Akkadian; and Emenita ("male language"), used by the males.

For reasons tied to an ancient conflict between the male and female Gina'abul (the lizard "deities"), the priestesses already were using a sort of coded language for secret communications between themselves. This same linguistic agency is found on Earth as the Emešà (matrix language) and Emesal ("refined language") spoken by the "goddesses" and the earthly priestesses in the more recent that the Akkadians had adapted their writing to the Sumerians. I don't agree with this opinion, because the Akkadian writing sprang up at the birth of the Sumerian cuneiform (approximately 2500 B.C.) and the Semitic carriers of the Akkadian were present at least around 2600 B.C. Recent research distinctly demonstrates this... Moreover, Akkadian appeared fully-formed from its debut, "as though descended from heaven", which makes this language the most ancient of the Semitic branch....

As far as concerns the cuneiform writing that is today the most visible evidence of a complex and structured ancient Near-East history, I remind readers that this appears to be a purely terrestrial form of writing, invented by humans and not by the "gods". I would add that the epic accounts found on the Mesopotamian tablets retrace in part historic events that, very often, were not contemporaneous with their (human) drafters.

Looking again at the dialect of the Assyrians and Babylonians, it is very clear to me that Akkadian is derived from the "matrix language" possessed by the "Digir" priestesses ("divinities") of the Mesopotamian pantheon.

The males (the Anunna) were in conflict with them. Moreover, as I demonstrate in my first two books, Sa'am-Enki was more on the side of the Nindigir or Amašutum females than on the side of his creator An and An's right arm Enlil.

It is actually Enki who mixed the language of Man according to the writings on the tablets; it is he who codified [encoded?] the languages as a means to break Enlil's domination over the human beings who originally all spoke but one language:

"Formerly, there was a time when the countries of Šubur, of Hamazi, of Kalam (Sumer) where are spoken so many languages, the country and principality of the divine laws, Uri, the country provided with everything necessary, the country of Martu that rested in security, the entire universe and all the peoples together, rendered homage to Enlil with one single language. However, the Father-Lord, the Father-Prince, the Father-King Enki, [...] the Father-Lord was angry....

"[...] Enki, the Lord of Abundance, whose commandments are certain, the Lord of Wisdom who scrutinizes the Earth, the chief of the gods, the Lord of Eridu, gifted with Wisdom, changed the words of their mouth, put discord there, in the language of Man, which had once been unique"

Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta
Extract from a tablet in the Ashmolean Museum of Oxford

I explain in the first book that the codification secretly organized by Enki and his people, the Nungal, that is to say the "watchers" or B'nai Elohim (sons of the Elohim), made use of the totality of the original dialect (Emešà, the "matrix language") of the priestesses. The creation of new dialects from the full Sumerian-Akkadian syllabary was made possible not only through the repeated use of particles said to be Akkadian -- originally unknown to the male "gods" -- but equally through the inventive criss-crossed and tangled employment of the three principal elements that form a sentence: the subject of the action, the object, and the verbal form.

As will be indicated in the third volume of this series, the appearance of the Akkadian language is one of the last maneuvers of the rebel clan to counteract the domination of the Ušumgal-Anunna (Yahvé) over Mesopotamia, which is where the monarchy of the "gods" was principally implanted.

Enki is sometimes named MUŠDA in Sumerian. This epithet defines him as being the "grand architect" or even the "mason" of the world, but the decomposition of this term into MUŠ-DA gives us "powerful reptile". This crafty reptile, responsible for the cloning of humanity and the codification of the languages of Earth, is no other than the biblical serpent, he who foiled the plan of Yahvé in Eden, at a time when under the orders of this same Yahvé.

Enki, "the reptile", recalls in every way the Sumerian term EME-ŠID ("lizard"), whose strict definition EME (language, word, tongue) + SID (to memorize, recite in a loud voice, enumerate) renders for us "he who enumerates the language(s)" or "he who

The use of Emešà was forbidden to males and more particularly to the subgroup named Anunna (see Races).

For their part, the males communicated in Emenita (litt: "male language"), known to us as Sumerian. The Gina'abul priestesses also used Emenita, which they themselves had constructed, for communicating with the males.

The various Gina'abul idioms, such as those of the Abgal and the Sukkal, and the Emesal that was "implanted" during the Paleo-Babylonian epoch, were composed from the much richer mother syllabary. This is also true of Akkadian (Assyro-Babylonian), which did not evolve from Sumerian at all, as believed by Oriental language experts.

It's easy to understand their misconception, as they have only inscriptions on tablets to work with, and human writing did evolve, varying within the different Mesopotamian regions, beginning with the primitive Sumerian pictograms of 3500-4000 BCE, whose purpose was to tally the riches of the "gods," and leading to the Assyrian cuneiform.

But the spoken languages were introduced, modified, replaced from time to time, and did not evolve.

Code

Parks insists that the peoples of this planet from the dawn of humanity have expressed themselves via idiomatic structures all taken from the Emešà, including Emenita, which we know as Sumerian. (Parks sometimes uses the term Gina'abul-Sumerian as a reference to Emešà.)

Meanwhile, the Gina'abul held their code closely.

The original Gina'abul that arrived and spread out over this planet were recites the word"!!!

As I demonstrate in my two first works, the Old Testament is a mediocre counterfeit that outrageously uses the much more ancient Mesopotamian and Egyptian traditions....

I know that readers and independent researchers will claim that the different possibilities offered by the game of Sumero-Akkadian homophony explains why it will always be possible to decode in foreign terms... Clearly they are perfectly correct to think this and this is why the code was difficult to break in the past, even by the Gina'abul who spoke Emenita or Emegir (Sumerian) to perfection...

Likewise, since vowels differ according to the regions of the globe and particularly in the Orient, some will not understand the phonetic choices that I make to decode various terms. I wish to make clear that every phonetic possibility is possible, even at times substituting vowels that we know to be nonexistent in certain languages.

Take for example the Egyptian name of Isis, which is Aset or Iset, according to interpretations. We obtain: A-SÉ-ET "source of the foreknowledge of life" or I-SÉ-ET "lamentations of the foreknowledge of life". These two constructions convey a perfect definition of the person of Isis as source, that is to say "mother or mourner (of Osiris) responsible for the foreknowledge of life (Horus)".

Gerry Zeitlin and I have realized a schema from the understanding that I have been able to pull from this history of the matrix language. Gerry's work is remarkable in the degree to which it permits me to materialize and authenticate concepts and data that would have been difficult for me to present or circulate on my own. Our collaboration is very important. Gerry has created several diagrams for Ádam Genisiš that also appear on his site in which he analyzes my work meticulously.

[K2]

in profound discord among themselves. The numerous idioms that were dispersed resulted from this "intestinal bad blood" that continued for millennia. The Gina'abul required veritable dictionaries for each human ethnic group in order to play at communicating with them.

The most irksome task for the faction to which Sa'am belonged -- the rebels made up of the Amašutum, the Nungal, and the Abgal -- was having to systematically recreate new terms to replace any that had been discovered by their consanguine enemies. The task was anything but simple, and the idioms were difficult to translate, sometimes creating extended dialects, but that permitted them to disorient for many millennia the Anunna subgroup (see Races), which was the majority on the planet.

The Sumerian immigrants (this will be explained in the second and third books) named the Gina'abul Emenita language Emegir ("princely language") and sometimes Emean ("heavenly language" or "language of heaven"). This language, basically formed from invariant nominal and verbal roots, on which were added different suffixes and prefixes, produced a sophisticated grammatical articulation, finally resulting in a highly refined dialect.

The Akkadian language (and its syllabary) appeared totally formed from one day to the next, apparently subsequently to the Sumerian. How this came about will be explained in Volume 3: The Awakening of the Phoenix.

For their part, the Gina'abul idioms were voluntarily elaborated in a distinctly archaic fashion, producing an aspect of slang when compared with the basic language.

So there is a code that is always present in the ancient languages of Earth. Some consonants may have changed over time, but this is infrequent.

In connection with this code, note that the grammatical conventions of the Gina'abul-Sumerian language differ from those of the codifications. In the language, verbal chains are placed at the end of sentences. This is rarely the case in the codifications, where the verb can even at times be found at the beginning of an Emenita term. This discrepancy was premeditated as a means of obscuring the decoding. Remember that the males did not have access to the Emešà terms of which the code consisted.

The purpose of all this was to provide a means of communicating clandestinely and succinctly with humans. Succinctness was achieved by using simple grammatical rules in the encoding, and by using systematically invariable terms, with suffixes and prefixes generally suppressed.

Decoding

Parks is adept in the use of the Gina'abul code, and exploits it frequently and highly convincingly to plumb the inner meanings and also the historic references embedded in the words of many languages. For these web notes I have created a Decoder to centralize this aspect of Parks' work. The Decoder is really the heart of the Notes. Readers may benefit from studying it, as it is constructed not only for reference but also to fulfill a teaching function. Some of Parks' most important discoveries can be found there.

Most of the translations or decodings discussed by Parks are of individual terms or words, in which the rules of translation are simpler than for complete sentences in the Emesa and Emenita languages. Even a novice can easily follow these translations of two-, three-, or even four-syllable words.

In the Gina'abul language the context of situations is important, as only the specific circumstance results in a term being constructed in such or such a manner. The rebel Gina'abul knew the context of the words and the keys of the different particles that they used to create the terms one finds today in Sumerian.

The translation of certain words is hindered when they are taken out of their context, especially considering that the Gina'abul-Sumerian language possessed concepts and realities having nothing to do with those of present-day society. That makes all the difference, and it is also for this reason that our language specialists have not been able to detect their codification.

Parks writes:

The complexity of the Emenita language used by the Sumerians lies essentially in its numerous homophones (syllables with similar pronunciation) which are distinguished by their length or phonetic force. In order to differentiate between the numerous homophonic cuneiform signs on the tablets unearthed in Mesopotamia, the French Assyriologist F. Thureau-Dangin developed, in the 1920s, a system of accents and numeration for each sign.

A current explanation of this system for denoting Sumerian "logograms," and a substantial listing of them, is available in the online document Sumerian Lexicon, Version 3.0 by John A. Halloran.

Please turn now to the Example 1. at the top of the Decoder page to see how the words for "King" in six diverse languages can all be decoded by Parks' method, producing the concept of "King" with various nuances.

Example 2. on the terms for "Woman" in many languages both introduces and gives initial evidence for the central proposition of the entire set of books by Parks: the widespread pre-modern understanding of the true nature of the female: "She who transmits at one time the power and the understanding!" This is a remembrance of the transformation of Adam in the garden of the "gods."

This precise example contains the greatest secret that has ever been hidden from humanity and the code that derailed the Anunna faction for many millennia.

The Meaning of Religions

Refer to the decompositions of the Old Testament words Ish (first man) and Ishsha (first woman). In the Sumerian, the particles mean, respectively, ancestral or primordial androgyne, and the heart or womb or entrails of the ancestor.

Genesis indicates that Ishsha was pulled from the side of Ish, implying that man was antecedant to woman. [However the history that will be revealed in Parks' later books will indicate that] Ish and Ishsha were created as part of the primordial androgyne human that lived on Earth long before the arrival of the Gina'abul who changed the human genetic code. Moreover, very numerous traditions from around the world report that primordial man was not only androgyne, but hermaphrodite.

The rabbis who were charged with compiling the texts of Genesis from the Mesopotamian traditions found at Babylon at the time of the exile of the Hebrews between -586 and -539, discovered the embarrassing androgyne primordial $I\check{S}_7$ and were not able to totally suppress it. Thanks to a subtle maneuver, the ancestor, masculinised, became officially Ish (man) and was counfounded with him.

When the "gods" of the Mesopotamian traditions transformed the genetic code of the primordial androgyne ancestor ($I\check{S}_7$), they cut this being in two and created thus a man and a woman.

The manipulation executed on the man does not appear in the text of Genesis, because $I\check{S}_7$ (androgyne ancestor) is metamorphosed into Ish (man)...

...and then the rabbis fabricated the story of Yahve-Elohim making Ish fall into a torpor at which time Ishsha was fashioned from his side etc.

Parks' series, Les Chroniques du Gírkù, promises to reveal practically everything on the authentic genesis of humanity and our origins. Today we have only sparse traces of this history. The most significant are those graven on the Mesopotamian tablets and some of them have been stolen from Iraq and are now circulating on a profitable black market.

These clay tablets trace the history of a group of immigrants named Anunna(ki) who descended here many millennia ago to exploit the multiple riches of our planet. The individual known as Sa'am, whose life became known to Parks through years of total-immersion memory flashback experiences, lived among these felons during his entire history.

Parks states that only 5 to 10% of the elements contained in his chronicles are found on the clay tablets from Mesopotamia. The history of humanity has been skillfully deformed over time in order to protect those who imposed themselves on Earth and equally to preserve, unbeknownst to us, their descendents who continue to work secretly on their behalf.

Thus, for example, at the time of the writing of the Assyro-Babylonian tablets, the "feminine cult" was deliberately suppressed and diverted to the advantage of a more and more dominant patriarchy.

One of the greatest coups of the Anunna faction was their taking advantage of a totally exceptional situation which, in one brief moment, had dispersed humanity over the Earth. Beginning at that time, multiple religions were invented with the sole aim of disorganising you, leading you into error... more precisely, limiting you!

This is of key importance because the religions permitted the usurpers of the planet to break up the people and create bloody conflicts. Today, the religions are too often the direct cause of conflicts and wars. Thanks to religions and their deliberately deceptive disparities (since in principle all religions possess the same precepts!) the different beliefs permit killing one's fellow man in the name of God! In the course of the most sinister centuries and millennia in the history of this planet, religions have caused the death of millions of individuals.

Today religious conflicts make it possible to "administer" the size of the Earth's population and to make huge profits from manufacturing more and more murderous arms.

This may make some laugh, others perhaps less, but the term religion, taken from the Latin religio, is very precise to our eyes. Christian linguists are pleased to explain that the term derives from the Latin verb ligare which signifies to bind, implying that religion binds or rebinds human beings between themselves. But it would be fair to emphasize that the same term means equally to subject in the language of ancient Rome. Moreover, again in Latin, the words religio and obligatio (obligation or debt) often have the same sense.

Before translating the hidden sense of religio with the aid of our syllabary, you must know that close to several thousand years ago, when your ancestors had the opportunity to record their legends, doctrines and beliefs, that is to say their religion, the only available medium was clay, or stone cut in the form of tablets. It is from these tablets, notably those of Babylon, that the data could be transmitted with care and convey the manna of information that served the intellectuals of the community of Israel in the compiling of many passages of the Old Testament.

Is it not also from these tabulations of the laws established by "God" that the Judeo-Christian religion received its first commandments? It is truly on the tablets that the people of the ancient near East listed and diffused the different dogmas that served to construct what is considered the world's first religion.

Speaking of those tablets, observe (see Decoder Example 3: RELIGION) that the decomposition of the Latin religio defines religion as a system for training sheep with the aid of tablets! (To understand how tablets inscribed with instructions were potentiated and remain effective today, see Laws.)

How does it happen that a Latin word can be interpreted in this way? Again, it is because the ancient languages are Gina'abul dialects. This strange concept will be supported again and again throughout Parks' works.

In the course of your reading, especially in Ádam Genisiš, you will learn that the Celestial Bestiary that fell on the Earth had the sorry tendency to assimilate the Earth ancestors to animals, in fact, to small livestock, more precisely sheep! This concept may seem strange, but it was widespread in the past.

Take the simple example of ancient Egypt where the sheep were called Undu (or Undju) and the people Undut (or Undjut). The respective transcriptions of these terms in Sumerian [see Decoder] leaves no doubt: UN-DU₇ = horned rabble; UN-DÛ-UT = the population that casts the metal of light (gold).

That being said, in view of the organization of present society and despite the millennia that separate us from the highest antiquity, I am completely convinced that the ideology that assimilates the people to animals has truly never changed.

Refer to Decoder Example 3: RELIGION for more examples of what Sumerian phonetic deconstruction reveals about the meaning of words for "religion" in various languages.

Races

Introducing the Kadištu

[Extracted from the GMSS Interview]

The Kadištu "Life Designers" are the guardians of key places in the universe. Their objective is to cause to reign a form of organization and of "discipline" that emanates from "the Source" that one could assimilate to God. In this, one could think of them as "angels of God".

Despite their high technology and their extreme intelligence, the Kadištu are not on a mission to resolve all problems. Insofar as concerns the history of the Earth and its development, the Life Designers seem to have chosen to leave the Earth, even though it be a sacred place, in the hands of the Gina'abul reptilians.

This does not appear to be an abandonment, rather a transitional retreat, because to this day the Life Designers have not ceased to keep an eye on their creation. On the human level, this can seem to be taking a very long time, but to the Life Designers of the Universe, it is nothing.

The Kadištu normally do not interfere in the development of races in full evolution -- in this case the Gina'abul reptilians.

I imagine that it was simpler to let the Gina'abul resolve their family problems among themselves, as there exists in the bosom of the reptilian family the Amašutum group - the females - who truly form a part of the Life Designers.

I am thinking equally that the Homo type originally of the Earth and the Solar System has a karma that is connected to the reptilians, given that the Homo type has on numerous occasions been genetically manipulated by these same Gina'abul reptilians...

In his interviews, Parks provides glimpses of the numerous races at play in his works: those that make up the Kadištu collective and the Gina'abul races, a large part of whom are in conflict with the Kadištu. The female Gina'abul, however, are the Amašutum priestesses, who belong to the Kadištu. This is an example of the complex relationships and interactions that make up Parks' story.

Kadištu	Akkadian: Qadistu, evoking high-ranking priestesses. Sumerian: NU-GIG, meaning "non-evil" but also "the image of evil" - sacred prostitutes. Related to the Latin caduceus . Emissaries of "the Original Source," they live in "higher dimensions" called "Angal." Role is to unify the species of the universe. Very powerful but do not interfere in the affairs of beings evolving in the "reduced frequencies."
Abgal	Kadištu subgroup. Genetically affiliated with Gina'abul, but considered amphibians, with genes of a far-off amphibian race. Sages of the Gagsisá (Sirius) system. Like the Urmah, this is a rare Kadištu race that can evolve in KI (the 3rd dimension). They possess a delicious regard charged with compassion. A light energetic halo emerges from their body. A Gina'abul rebel race.
Amašutum	Female Gina'abul*. "Mother Lizards." "Proud People of the Serpent." Eternal symbol: two intertwined serpents. Priestesses. Kadištu subgroup, therefore also associated with the principle of "good and evil." Life Designers. Dwell in several regions of the universe, such as Ursa Major, Hyades, Pleiades, Orion. A Gina'abul rebel race.
Ama'argi	Terrestrial Amašutum, specially created in our solar system by the Gina'abul females of Margid'da (Ursa Major), undoubtedly cloned from the genetic library there. They have tails, as do the other Amašutum. Dark-skinned. Peaceful. A Kadištu race. Their home is the Abzu of Uraš. Their sovereign is Queen Dim'mege (see Personages).
Ameli	Semi-etheric Kadištu race originating in the star system of Bun (Aldebaran, α Tauri) and still based there. Had permitted the Ušumgal to maintain a colony of Mimínu in that system but drove them out after the Great War. The Mimínu were relocated in Mulmul (Pleiades). This in turn forced a new line of Amašutum to progressively withdraw from Mulmul and its Ubšu'ukkinna system, eventually to settle in Gišda (the Hyades).
Sukkal	Kadištu subgroup having the form of birds. "Cousin of the Gina'abul." The Sumerian word "sukkal" means "messenger." In the Sumerian and Assyro-Babylonian traditions, the Sukkal are humanoids with the body of a bird and large wings on the back. The Greek term "angelos" also means messenger and refers to beings with functions similar to biblical angels. Important Life Designers. Urbar'ra (Lyra).

Urmah "Army of the Elohim"	Warriors / Life Designers. (UR-MAH, "great warrior", also "lion" in Gina'abul-Sumerian). Logo: the lion. Felidae or feline. Feline-humanoid appearance; actually resembles a lion. Always seen with claws; unknown if natural or artificial. They are from the Orion constellation. The official army or celestial militia of the Kadištu, who often referred to them concerning problems of rule. For that reason, the Urmah were found at several times in our solar system.
Namlú'u Primordial Human [see Decoder]	Prodigious androgyne race assembled by the Kadištu on Uraš (Earth). Highly respected because it combined the genetic patrimony of numerous Life Designer species.
Kingú	Akkadian Quingu. Sumerian: KIN-GU = "ruler over the Earth (or regions). Logo: the eagle. Princely root stock of the Gina'abul. At war with the Ušumgal. Three types: whites [Kingú-Babbar, grand royals; Te (Aquila)], reds [warriors-cleaners; Ušu (Draco)], greens [the people, also warriors]. Most Kingú possess a mark on the forehead, like a third eye.
Kingú-Babbar	Royal albino Kingú, originally the dominant authority in the constellation Ušu (Draco), where they created the Ušumgal. Relocated to Urbar'ra (Lyra) with the Ušumgal, whom they left there at the time of the Great War. Resettled in the constellation Te (Aquila). Some are present in our solar system, originally from Te, and are central to events described in Parks' second book, Ádam Genisiš . They are in conflict with the Anunnaki and their descendants. Solitary, do not like to mix with others, because they feel superior to the rest of the Gina'abul. These are the largest of all the Kingú. Some possess wings and horns; others absolutely none. Those in our solar system have hardly any wings and no horns. Among all the Gina'abul, most closely resemble humans. They bear the emblem of Urin (the eagle).
Red Kingú	Just beneath the Kingú-Babbar in the social order. Specialists in war; soldiers. Reddish skin. Have tail, horn, and wings. When the Kingú-Babbar left Ušu, the Red Kingú remained to govern in their place.
Kingú People	Workers and warriors. These are the Kingú who take part in the battles on Dukù at the end of Book 1. Greenish skin (a little lighter than that of the Anunna).
Imdugud (Anzu)	Mix of Kingú-Babbar (royal albinos) and Urmah. Depicted emblematically in Sumerian and Akkadian imagery as half eagle, half lion, respectively representing their genetic roots. White skin (like the Kingú-Babbar), sometimes described by Parks as fair-skinned. Appear "Nordic" but with a slight "animal" look in their eyes, an aspect that is connected with their genes. They resemble humans, often with blue eyes, and are very tall. Pupils are vertical. Emit barking or whistling sounds. Always seen with claws; unknown if natural or artificial. Solitary. Originated in Tiamate (our Solar System) well before 300,000 y.a., which is when the Anunna arrived. Originally created to watch over the terrestrial reserve and above all to serve to reconcile the Gina'abul and the Kadištu Life Designers. They had the reputation of being peaceable, not "looking for trouble" - unlike their Kingú-Babbar creators. They are always found in the background of the works of the Kadištu, with whom they have courteous relations.

Ušumgal	"Grand Dragons," later Sumerian term for their gods and sovereigns; descended from Kingú-Babbar; creators of the Annuna and other races. The Ušumgal Council of Nalulkára were survivors of the Great War.
Šutum	Male Gina'abul*. "Lizard" in Sumerian. Created by Abzu-Abba to impregnate the Amašutum, but their reproductive abilities were in decline. They suffered from a disease of unknown cause. Originally, laborers, working for the entire race of Gina'abul. Margid'da (Ursa Major).
Nungal	Great Lords. " Fallen Angels ". Book of Enoch : watchers. Bené Elohim (Sons of the Elohim). Those who coupled with human females without authorization of Yahvé (An-Enlil). Akkadian: Igigi. Male. Created (in great haste) by Sa'am and Mamitu-Nammu (see Personages) from Imduḡud genes on which Abzu-Abba had been experimenting. Considered as Life Designers although no knowledge of cloning. Followers of Osiris and Horus. A Gina'abul rebel race.
Anunna Anunnaki	Warriors. "Angels of Yahvé". Created by An and Ninmah on Dukù, Mulmul (Pleiades), from a genetic patrimony discovered by Ninmah on Nalulkára. No doubt the cell line was enhanced Šutum. Wars among the Gina'abul brought them to the Earth. Anunnaki = "Anunna of the Earth." Have manipulated humans for millennia.
Mušgir	"Furious reptile" - winged dragons. Assyrian: "Pazuzu". Can easily move between the "first and third dimensions ." Originally created in Lyra by Ušumgal; An and Ninmah produced a second line on Dukù, Mulmul (Pleiades), using a cell line discovered by Ninmah on Nalulkára. Have tail, horns, and wings. May be compared to the numerous gargoyles that haunt churches and cathedrals.
Mîmînu	Dogon: ant. Known to us as "grey" ETs. They are genetically-engineered descendents of the Mušgir -- wingless, smooth-skinned, diminutive. Originally created by Ušumgal with reprogrammed Mušgir genes, as part of a program in which the Mušgir participated voluntarily. Later numerous other Miminu races were created from cells fabricated by the Kingú. They know how to take orders. Slaves of the male Gina-abul.
UKU ₃ -BI "lower multitude" UGU ₄ -BI	The Ukubi were created by the Kingú for food (same as we treat our cattle) and by the "royals" and later by the Ama'argi to fulfill the orders of the "royals" (who tightly controlled them at that time). But Nammu clandestinely improved the race, rendering them autonomous (so they could defend themselves against the Kingú). Parks has found a Sumerian legend that supports this statement.

"simian"
Early Human	Genetic combination of Original Human, Gina'abul, simian. Sa'am was continuing what his mother had done with simians. A first humanoid version, the first Ádam, a mixture of Ukubi, Ama'argi, and green-skinned Kingú, served as workers in Edin. Note that the Kingú themselves bore no responsibility for this creation. Their cells were included to mark the domination of the Ušumgal-Anunna over the Kingú -- to humiliate them. Following that, Sa'am, with the support of his mother and two sisters, clandestinely improved the race under the noses of An and Enlil. They added cells of the Namlu'u, thus in a fashion "humanizing" the Ádam. These beings were black-skinned. Having Ama'argi within their genetics, they had tails. The Sumerian name for them is Sag-gi-ga, meaning "black slave". The Kingú then countered by asking Sa'am to add their Kingú-Babbar genes (from Tiamate) to the Sag-gi-ga, resulting in a white-skinned human, which would mark their supremacy over the royals. They intended these to dominate the blacks. This being was named Lú-bar₆, meaning "white man". Word play: Lú-bara means sovereign man; Lú-bar-ra means "alien" or "foreigner". Enki and his associates wound up clandestinely improving these beings also, again to give them more autonomy. These are early human races, not those of today. A more complete picture is presented in the section Creating Humans. The entire scenario is one of races' quests for power over one another. It is not a matter of growing fingers to pick berries, or tails to swing from trees, as our academicians would have us believe. (Although academicians evolve incrementally too! See Fingers and toes evolved from fins say scientists.)

* According to our strict human ideology about what may be considered human, the Gina'abul are not human beings. Therefore Parks does not refer to Gina'abul women and men, but rather females and males.

 Who are the "rebel races"? Designation as "rebel race" refers to events following the arrival and establishment of the fugitive Anunna in our solar system. This is treated in Adam Genišiš. The Kingú races had already been mortal enemies of the Gina'abul for a very long time. They are not considered as "rebels"; they created the Gina'abul, and furthermore the true "rebels" are consciously aligned with "the SOURCE", which they are not. Note that the memory of their having taken refuge underground on Uraš after local military defeats has contributed to misleading concepts of "fallen" angels. Now that you have our definition, would you classify the Namlu'u as a rebel race? How would you classify the modern human race?

 "They were ugly and menacing, scattered to the edge of the world, at the entrance of the underworld. They also appeared solitary, held in their emplacements, alone and isolated, but appearing menacing enough. Dark little half-brothers and sisters. Thus, this must have been a different and improper creation of Nammu with another god, but perhaps also an experimental creation of the gods..."

Extract from the Sumerian tablet "How Ereškigal Chose the World Below"

This statuette (left) representing a Mušgir is identified with the Assyro-Babylonian demon Pazuzu, a demon connected with the subterranean world and with parallel worlds. It is armed with large wings and its body is covered with scales. The universe of demons was very present in the Mesopotamian spirit, to the point that the Mušgir-Pazuzu was considered one of the most powerful demons. Because of this, it was often used as an amulet, affording benefits of its good grace against the other infernal entities. Several amulets of this type have been found in the foundations of Mesopotamian houses. On the back of its wings appeared the following inscription: "I am Pazuzu, son of Hanpa. The king of the evil spirits of the winds that rage violently from the Šadû (KUR in Assyrian), it is I!"

Namlú'u (Primordial Human)

"The old men tell that in the beginning of the world, God created a man and gave him responsibility for all the creatures. This man went out every day from his house very early in the morning to visit God's property -- that is, all that is found here on the Earth. And he would always return home very late in the evening, and very tired. But in spite of his great fatigue, he had to make his report to God on the state of health of all the creatures."

Oral Tradition of the Lumwe of Zaïre

From the 2007 Karmapolis interview in Nexus [N]:

Karma One: In your narration, the initially-created, original human (Namlú'u) is an extraordinary being, quasi superior to his creators and almost omnipotent, belonging to several dimensions, gifted with capacities of astonishing clairvoyance, capable of reading anyone's thoughts. This original human seems singularly close to the Source, namely the World Creator or "God".

Just who are these creators of the Namlú'u? Why did they create such astonishing beings? And why in this form?

Anton Parks: I sincerely believe that the Namlú'u have a perpetual existence somewhere in Angal (the higher dimensions).

The term NAM-LÚ-U₁₈ ("immense human beings") was used by the "gods" and the Sumerians to designate this primordial humanity. Later the term was used to refer to the Sumerians who were the first humans in Mesopotamia, those who were in contact with the "gods" found in the Bible under the names Yahvé and Elohim.

The departure of the Namlú'u from our dimension was synchronised with the arrival of the Anunna on the Earth.

The Namlú'u are beings who embody uncommon capabilities. They were created "all at once" by the Kadištu (Life Designers) who seeded life on this planet. They were in a manner of speaking the guardians of the Earth before the arrival of the Anunna.

There are gnostic texts, such as The Secret Book of John (NH2-1.28) that announce that:

This being was fashioned by "the creators", in the image of God (the Source) and conforming to their respective appearance. This perfect primordial being combined the various powers with which they (the creators) had been endowed, both physically and psychologically.

The Namlú'u were approximately four meters in height. They could detect thoughts and most importantly had the ability to displace themselves very rapidly from one location to another through the use of the Merkaba, the field of individual light of which the transmutation, through the use of the chakras and the Kundalini, permitted one to metamorphose into a vehicle of ascension.

The term Merkaba means "chariot" in Hebrew, but I demonstrate in Ádam Genisiš that this word can equally be translated in Egyptian, for example:

To Connect the Spirit and the Soul

More information about the Namlú'u may be found in the section Guardians of Uraš.

Kadištu

Continuing with the interview [N], Parks responds to the first part of the question pertaining to the Kadištu:

The creators of the Namlú'u are thus these famous KAD₄-IŠ₇-TU ("ancient assemblers of life") [Decoder] corresponding to the Life Designers denoted as Elohim in the Bible. The Hebrew term Elohim decomposed in Sumero-Akkadian gives EL-Ú-HI-IM, "the powerful exalted ones who mixed the clay (or the clay beings: man)."

The Kadištu assembled the Namlú'u with an eye to combining their science in a common creation on the planet located at the heart of a commercial route that embodied a zone of free will and exchanges in our universe.

The Kadištu professed to be in service to the Source that one could, briefly, equate to "God"...

From an earlier interview [K1]:

The Kadištu live in "higher dimensions" (Angal) and very few of them can enter our third dimension; this doesn't facilitate direct contact and explains their circuitous fashion of approaching us.

They observe us more than ever before, and communicate via the intermediary of people they contact directly or telepathically. But such communications must be undertaken with great care, because of the possibility of wrong interpretation of what was received. Furthermore, there are many contacts in the form of abductions conducted by the Greys, who are usually in the service of the Gina'abul.

Abgal

This wooden statuette from the Dogons of Africa represents the widely-discussed Nommo, who they claim brought the first language to humans (see Decoder). It is identical to Sumerian representations of the amphibian Abgal "sages" (said to be advisors to Enki) and the Akkadian Apkallû. Anton Parks (private communication) reports that this image is the closest we have to depicting the Abgal race of the Gagsisá (Sirius) system. The Dogon, of course, had always claimed that Sirius was the home of the Nommo.

There are many suggestive connections. Recall that, according to Sumerian history, Enki had dominion over the Abzu, believed by the Sumerians to be a kind of underground sea deep beneath their feet (while Sitchin thinks the term refers to water engineering projects, bodies of water, and/or deep Africa). Parks translates Abzu as the hollow domain at the center of all planetary bodies. Sa'am was the lord of all Abzus in the Gina'abul system. He also had webbed fingers, by the way, greenish blood, and other indications of Abgal genetics.

Urmah

Discussion by Mamitu-Nammu, soon after the arrival with Sa'am and others on Uraš:

The Urmah are formidable warriors. They make up the principal militia of the Kadištu. When difficult situations must be disentangled, the Urmah are generally designated to restore order. We consider them as the army of heaven, sometimes as the soldiers of final resort. They can be quite ferocious. They will withdraw from combat only on request of the High Council.

Their original home is found in Sipazianna (Orion) see [Worlds]...

Several Gina'abul colonies ruled by three queens who escaped the Great War are found to be placed near Urmah. This seems to be an exceptional situation as the Urmah are quite independent. In each case, this rapprochement has brought fruits in the form of a remarkable hybrid race.

The Urmah has done the same here with the royal Babbar, producing the Imdugud.

Whenever possible, Kadištu who can evolve without too much difficulty in the KI frequency attach themselves and mix with species who are in difficulty to raise their frequency level. This activity of the Urmah works to reequilibrate the Gina'abul conscience through mixing with it.

Here, a small group of Urmah in the bosom of the Kadištu charged with the planning of Uraš made possible the establishment of a climate of minimal security. Each planner was thus enabled to bring his stone to the edifice of this natural park. The Sukkal were responsible for the insertion of oviparous vertebrates. The Nim, with the head of an Uh (insect), are the creators of the divers arthropodes that one finds here.

One of the only ways to differentiate [physically] the Nungal (or Kingú) from the Imdugud is by the shape of the skull. That of the Imdugud is elongated, but less so than the other two (and the rest of the Gina'abul). I think this is because of the Urmah genetics.

Likewise, the Abgal also possess a slightly elongated skull, but not like that of the Gina'abul.

This would apply to the Abgal that you have presented on your pages [at left]. Do not forget that this appears to be the design of a statuette made by the Dogon of Mali. It is not a personal representation of an Abgal. Even if I find it somewhat acceptable, the fins are much too large and its head is not elongated at all, as it normally would be, a little bit.

quite explicit:
flying insect prince

The Abgal of Gagsisá (Sirius) [see Worlds] are occupied in large part with the marine fauna and above all with the Šim-Kúšu (whales) and the Kíg-Ku (dolphins) whose principal role was to reequilibrate the vibratory rate of the KI that was extremely low at the epoch when the Kingú had filled Uraš with gigantic Hušmuš (savage reptiles).

It was the Urmah who had the heart-rending mission to cleanse the planet by directing a demolishing projectile. Thanks to this intervention, followed by the introduction of the Šim-Kúšu (whales) and the Kíg-Ku (dolphins), the frequency of the KI was able to increase considerably, affording it a vibratory rate altogether unique.

Since that time, certain Gina'abul, such as the red Kingú, have had difficulty in sojourning more than 5 full Ud (days) in the KI of Uraš. The Babbar and Imdugud seem, on the other hand, to tolerate this frequency well.

As with UR-MAH (litt: "grand warrior"), the Sumerian term PIRIG designates also a "lion". We know that the lion symbolizes royalty. Is it so astonishing to see that the homophones PIRIG₂ and PIRIG₃ signify respectively "shining" and "light"?

It is useless to insist on the fact that over the centuries, or we could say millennia, royalty was expected to bring light to the peoples of the Earth. Numerous ethnic groups from portions of the Earth such as the Bantus (Africa, south of the equator), associate celestial fire (the sun) with the lion.

Phonetic decomposition of PIRIG in Sumero-Akkadian gives such connotations as "understanding", to govern, watch over, arm... qualifications altogether appropriate to the life-designer warriors called Urmah. Add to that the fact that the place of residence of the Urmah is Orion [see Worlds]. And on the charts of the heavens, one often sees Orion represented with a lion's skin on his body or on his shield.

In Greek mythology, Orion is a redoubtable hunter. He is the lover of Eos, a great Mother Goddess.

Robert Graves, in his work on Greek mythology, indicates

The Kadištu in their great numbers have brought their knowledge not only to the confection of the Namlu'u, but also to the different varieties of Adam (animals). You have not yet seen an Urmah with your own eyes. As their name indicates, their visage resembles that of a Pirig (lion). Their feline aspect is not without rapport with the felides that they have introduced here.

The frequent closeness between the Urmah and Ti-ama-te (the solar system) is not recent. It is common to see them lurking in the neighborhood when the progressive retreat of the emissaries of the Source seems inevitable. This shows us that we can remain confident, the Kadištu always keep an eye on this world...

Gina'abul

The birthplace of the Gina'abul was in the constellation Draco, which they call Ušu, but numerous conflicts that punctuated their history resulted in the creation and separation of subraces and their spread throughout "our universe."

Some remain in Ušu, but the Ušumgal and the majority of the Amašutum are in Nalulkára (in Ursa Major), the Kingú in Te (the Eagle), the Mušgir and the Mímínu (Greys) in Urbar'ra (Lyra), and some Amašutum are found in Mulmul (the Pleiades) where the Anunna were also created.

And it is war that has caught up the Anunna on the Earth.

A great many Sumerian tablets relate the adventures of the Anunna on the blue planet - the Anunnaki - in a sort of extended ode to these Anunna warriors. The chronicles show in detail how they became established and controlled the humanity that they genetically transformed from livestock for their greater pleasure, because the Anunnaki are somewhat lazy. This is how they came to be considered like gods (or, to be more direct, "God") in the eyes of humanity.

Unfortunately for these Anunnaki, who continue to secretly direct human affairs, humans are in full mutation and will soon jump dimensions... an historic moment long awaited in the history of humanity.

This subject has been mentioned elsewhere on a sister website; for example, see A Synthetic Myth.

on this page. Find the discussion at Initiations \(1\).]

It is exactly what the Urmah do in their combat against the Gina'abul males: they support a part of the Gina'abul females (the Amašutum) and protect them from the males, or Kingú (the dragons).

Also, Orion pursues the Pleiades in the sky see [Worlds, "Sky Orientation 4" chart]. The "chance" fact is that the Urmah are the enemies of the Gina'abul called Anunna, born exactly in Mulmul (the Pleiades).

Finally, note that in effecting a strict composition of the term SIPA-ZI-ANNA (Orion in Sumerian), one obtains "faithful guardian of the heavens", which is once again in accord with the role of the Urmah. As always, all is in accord!

Images of Sa'am, who embodies a great deal of Anunna physiognomy and genetics in general, are provided under Personages. Parks details the key variations from the more generic Anunna type.

Amašutum: Designers of Life

This is a Gina'abul female (i.e., an Amašutum). The drawing is a reproduction by Anton Parks of a statuette uncovered at Ur. Parks is certain that the shape of the head is incorrect, and he is working on a series of drawings that will show the elongation extending backward, rather than upward, as in the images of an African-Egyptian shown below.

In any event, she is wearing a wig.

According to Parks, all Gina'abul races shared this general look. The variations were mainly in the skin coloring and the degree of cranial elongation.

The "lozenges" on the shoulders are similar to those worn by Mayan high dignitaries.

To the Maya, these circles symbolize the OL, that is to say "perception" or "conscience", "the way", and "the memory".

At the same time, the Mayan OL is the equivalent of the Sumerian UL that evokes "the past", "an adornment", "a star", "the splendor", and the verb "to shine", as UL₅ signifies "privilege" and "protection".

These circles or lozenges placed on the shoulders of Sumerian gods and Maya personages of high rank symbolize the crystals or ME in which were stored the knowledge of the "gods"...

Quartz crystals were the key to successful cloning.

The Amašutum, female Gina'abul, are considered a Kadištu subgroup because of their affiliation and devotion to this semi-Divine race. As such, they are supreme Life Designers.

Note that I am translating Parks' word planificateur as "Life Designer," as opposed to the usually more correct "planner." This is in reference to the current raging debate over Intelligent Design. The Life Designers or planners, whatever one wishes to call them, are superbly-skilled geneticists.

Thus, when deprived of the of the reproductive role of the Šutum (male Gina'abul), the Amašutum were easily able to preserve their line and multiply their numbers through genetics and their ability to clone to infinity. And where all the Šutum carried their unchanging original genetic material, the Amašutum possessed a great variety of facial appearances and characters, making each of them a unique and remarkable being.

The lifespan of the Amašutum was eternal, because, as opposed to the Šutum, their bodies would periodically undergo the Gibil'lásu (renewal of the skin), similar to the process seen in snakes and certain other reptiles.

There were rumors that certain among them could undergo death and resurrection.

Ama'argi

Amašutum (thus Kadištu) terrestrials. Their name conveys the sense of "remission of divine damages" but strict translation from Sumerian gives the meaning "brilliant and sustaining (or restoring) mother".

The Ama'argi and their queen, Dim'mege, live in the heart of the Abzu (the subterranean world), in the city of Šàlim (Sumerian: heart of eternity).

Their original mission on Earth had been to restore the planet which had been damaged by multiple military actions and genetic manipulations conducted by the Kingú. (This might be a reference to the development of the dinosaurs.)

Archaic Sumerian sign for AMA

At a later period, the Ama'argi were directed by their queen, Dim'mege (see Personages), to oversee the human slaves working in the agricultural domains of the Anunna.

The Sumerian symbol AMA (at right), used to form the term AMA-AR-GI, represents a sacred stele or pillar attributed to sky divinities worshipped by humans in a religious cult. The star in the middle indicates "divinity".

Kingú-Babbar

"We devour beings like you. You will have to deal with me, my little fish..."

That charming statement was hurled at Sa'am by a Kingú Babbar leader, upon having his life spared by Sa'am. They and the Red Kingú are extremely arrogant, and were rumored to have actually eaten Gina'abul, whom they consider to be their inferiors.

Their ancient conflict with the Gina'abul reptilians was known to early human civilizations the world over, and depicted in many works of art as eagles confronting serpents.

The struggle of the eagle and the serpent found on a soapstone bas-relief in Nippur, ca 2500 B.C.E. Parks provides a congruent illustration from the Mexican Codex Borgia Fejervary-Mayer Plate 42, and also shows the Garuda Solar Eagle (Indian) and the Hopi Kwataka "eagle-man" each devouring serpents. See Example 4 in the Decoder for linguistic analysis.

But why Sa'am as a fish? This will be amply explained in succeeding pages!

The migrations of the Kingú-Babbar are described in a later section, Worlds. Those who settled in Ti-ama-te (the solar system) did so under an agreement with the Kadištu (Life Designers). They had always made trouble for the Ama'argi and for Mamitu in her operations on Uraš.

The Babbar of Ti-ama-te did not practice cloning; by nature they reproduced by natural means. While no Amašutum-Babbar were produced in the solar system, the Babbar persisted in kidnapping (abducting?) certain Ama'argi, right under the noses of the Kadištu.

The reason had to do with differences in skin pigmentation and the fact that the Babbar line of Ti'ama-te was slowly disappearing. At any rate, the Ama'argi put a stop to the kidnapping by capturing some Babbars themselves, and placing them at their service (though treating them well). Since then, relations had been more tranquil.

The above-mentioned agreement required the Kingú-Babbar to cooperate with the Urmah Life Designers in creating "the common confection" Imdugud.

Imdugud

Emblem of the Anzu (Imdugud) symbolizing genetic heritage. Babylonian.

The Sumerian designation Imdugud means "high storm", or "noble blood". The particle IM is often associated with "clay", but in the context of filiation, "blood" -- or even "humanity". (IM-DUGUD is not the only term that associates royalty with blood; the Sumerian word URIN -- eagle, blood, emblem -- is itself very explicit.)

The Imdugud correspond to the Anzu or Zu of the Akkadian tablets. Totally a part of the Gina'abul family, they are issues of two warrior peoples -- Kingú-Babbar and Urmah (see Genealogy). But they possess a certain form of wisdom via the Urmah, who are "Life Designers".

Their reason for being created as such is as follows: To obtain authorization to move into the solar system (well before the creation and the venue of the Anunna) the Kingú-Babbar had to accept mixing their genes with the Kadistu Urmah line, thus creating a new species.

They are a particularly solitary, white-skinned race. Like the Kingú, they detest having to associate with others. They will do it only in their own interest. They are difficult to approach, even by a Gina'abul or a Kadistu.

Due to their mixed genetic background, they were influenced or obliged by their Kingú genitors to function as neutral agents or messengers capable of adjudicating problems between the Kadištu and the Gina'abul of Tiamate. But they were "covered" by the Kingú-Babbar, and that made them enemies of the Anunnaki (terrestrial Anunna), who have used them ever since winning the war in our system.

Parks does not know if the Imdugud maintain these relations with the Kingú and Anunna today. He wonders if they may be the "Tall Whites" observed living on the Nellis Range in Nevada. (See Possible Extended Encounter with the Imdugud.)

Mìmínu (Greys)

Parks writes in his Karmapolis [K1] interview:

"Mìmínu" is the term that I received [for "the Greys"] in the epoch [from which I derive my memories].

How surprised I was to find it later among the Dogons of Mali for whom this word means "ant".

Decomposed in Sumerian, it gives MÌ-MÍ-NU, "responsible for hostile (or negative) duties" see [Decoder].

This translation is even more interesting because Credo Mutwa names the "Grey" Mantindane or "the torturers" in Zulu see [Decoder].

It is my understanding that the "Greys" came originally from Lyra, the place where numerous Gina'abul colonies are found. [The "Greys"] work as a group and function like ants. They function as a race of workers in service to their reptilian creators.

Various Gina'abul lines have fabricated Mìmínu in the past. There are several kinds of them in different regions. Those that are associated with the solar system and that were therefore created by the Kingu (royal Gina'abul) are larger than the others and have hair.

There is abundant proof of the presence of "Greys" in the solar system, if only by the different cases of abductions reported every year around the globe.

In truth, I don't know what has happened to the Mìmínu we see today. Their destiny seems to have changed somewhat as they appear to possess a sort of autonomy that they had not had for thousands of years. The story that I relate (thus, that I have received) ends more than 2000 years ago. My knowledge was gained in that epoch.

Parks adds in Le Secret that the Mîmînu possess bases "in the four corners of our universe." He also mentions that the Amašutum had a horror of them due to the scornful and glacial manner of these dwarfs.

As to their physique, it was not sophisticated like ours. The Mîmînu had been conceived without any exterior beauty; they were all small, had a gray color, no ears, no eyelids, only two holes for a nose, and no lips. They stared with large black elongated eyes that were empty, cold, and without emotion.

Actually, he says, there were several types of Mîmînu. Here he is speaking of the ones that served his people in the epoch described in this segment of his long history.

Anunna and Nungal

AKHENATON AND A DAUGHTER

Akhenaton

Persons such as Sa'am, Nammu, and Sé-et possess quite "African" facial features. I amuse myself by drawing the contours of Sa'am's profile from my own design and the profile that comes from that greatly resembles that of a monkey!

As to the Nungal (royals) and Imdugud, they rather resemble "African-Egyptians" with a lighter skin, as here with one of the daughters of Akhenaton -- without doubt one of the last Egyptian Kings possessing the blood of the "gods".

Anton Parks

Note: Parks' design of Sa'am's profile has been published in the 3rd edition of Le Secret; thumbnail on this website under Personages.

A Gina'abul male (Anunna, Nungal, etc.). As with the female, the drawing is a reproduction by Parks of a statuette from Ur, and the elongation of the cranium is incorrect: it should be rearward, exactly as in the example of the African-Egyptian.

An additional point concerning the ME (seen here, as also with the female figure): the equivalent term in Akkadian is Parsû: "the knowledge of sovereignty", and also PÀR-SU: "that which is deployed on the body".

Reconstruction of Tutankhamun from CT scan of mummy.

The Anunna were proposed as a race of warriors to defend the Amašutum against an unseen and amorphous enemy who in fact did not exist. (This dynamic, which we have seen in our time, clearly has ancient roots.) Sa'am, created as asexual (but later modified) was offered by An as the prototype for this race. An had argued that being asexual, they would be without distractions and better soldiers.

However, Tiamata required a sexual (male) race for her Amašutum sisters, since the Šutum were dying out. Sa'am volunteered to create the princely Nungal race for that purpose and to be their leader.

Neither race would have the power of Gibil'lásu (see above), which would have conferred eternal life. However, they were to be long-lived.

The Nungal were a derivative of the Imdugud. They definitely had the Kadištu orientation -- it was inculcated into them -- and were considered "Life Designers" probably for that reason although they did not have the capability of cloning. As Kadištu, they were badly treated by the Anunna-Ušumgal, while being warmly accepted by the Ama'argi, with whom they at times found refuge in their Abzu domain.

The Nungal are the Igigi -- those who were called "The Watchers" in the Bible, the ones who mated illegally with the human species.

They were a source of great embarrassment to Sa'am when, soon after arrival on the Earth, they unexpectedly molted -- a thing they were never meant to do -- showing new skin that was white like that of the Kingú-Babbar, with whom they were ultimately affiliated. Sa'am-Enki had assembled the genetic material for the Nungal before the hasty departure from Margíd'da to Dukù, partly from genes belonging to Abzu-Abba's experiments. Mamitu had wished to verify the cells that they had selected, but Sa'am had declared that they had not the time and they had to content themselves with indications inscribed on the containers of the genes.

As was later revealed, Mamitu had known very well what cells they were using: she had secretly switched the cells in the containers, fully intending to bring a new Kadištu strain into the equation. But she was disappointed that Sa'am had not exercised due diligence.

Regardless of the reason for it, Sa'am, Mamitu and more particularly the Nungal themselves paid dearly for this situation, because the terrestrial Anunna, recognizing them to be a subrace of their enemy, the Kingú, used the Nungal for a very long time as slaves. It is for example the Nungal who were commissioned to dig the Tigris and Euphrates to supply water for the future cities of the Anunnaki "Gods". Sa'am-Enki, under the insistant request of his own people, finally responded by creating the Ádam specimens to save his Nungal. The Anunnaki then put the Ádam to work as slaves.

Human

Today's human is far removed from the Namlú'u, the original or primordial humanoid created by the Kadištu to watch over the animals of the planetary garden that was Uraš (Earth).

Supreme Council of Antiquities / National Geographic Society / AP

Note shape of head.

As precisely stated in Genesis (1.26), the human was the last specimen to have been integrated into the living reserve of the Life Designers.

The aim of this reserve was to assemble the genetic knowledge of the emissaries of the Source. The original human being was highly respected, because it combined within itself the genetic patrimony of numerous Life Designer species....

Allied races gifted the Namlú'u with several parts of their body structure. Designers of Life such as the Ameli brought the principal element of their marvelous semi-etheric body. All Designers of Life contributed a bit of themselves toward the realization of the Namlú'u.

The Namlú'u thus were magnificent beings, the issue of the collective heritage of the combined sciences of the Kadištu. They were for this reason the living guardians of the knowledge of our universe....

One of the most remarkable manipulations of the Gina'abul is to have alienated the human being in order to produce an animal to serve themselves. For that, the Gina'abul began with the original human that they then mixed with their own genes and those of apes.

The particular mixture that the Gina'abul must have had to cook up in order to obtain their Á-DAM resulted from a composition completely impossible to realize today by human scientists. It required the same type of manipulation that the Kadištu had used to assemble the original human. It is Enki, the son of An and Nammu, who was charged with this doleful dirty work under the constraints that will be described in the second book. I name this genetic combination "mixed blood" in the first book.

[What does the genetic record have to say? Obviously that is a huge subject, one that we (your Open SETI / End of Enchantment writers) have not adequately researched. However a recent article, Humans, chimps may have bred after split suggests that researchers are currently confused, to say the least. A fundamental element of the problem that can cause huge confusion is that of timing of events in the record. That is because all DNA research assumes that DNA slowly "drifts" due to accumulated mutations, and this assumption is inconsistent with a "genetic intervention" model, which we surely have here. Therefore in the present case none of the conclusions can be correct.]

The sad aspect of the Á-DAM-animal is attested to by many traditions -- notably in the apocryphal texts which are documents from the same period as the biblical scriptures, but were not admitted by the Church. Why not? Because these texts seriously undermine the official version.

Apocryphal Book of Adam, extracts from Chapters 13 and 15, éditions Robert Laffont, 1980:

Who has plunged me into this infinite sadness of evil angels of fetid odor and abominable form? Who has thrown me into the midst of these evil genies? Must I grow in a milieu that I detest, among beings whose works I abhor? Must I take their form, that I live in their dwelling-place? Why has my primitive form changed? Ah! That they would allow me to return to the peaceful sojourn, there to which my heart yearns. That they would return me to the celestial assemblies and the conferences and the prayers filled with peaceful enfusions, that they may illumine me with the light from on high and that I be finally cast from this envelope of opprobrium. How long will I be bound to this body of clay?

Apocryphal The Apocalypse of Adam, gnostic Nag-Hammadi texts, N-H Codex 5, éditions Ganesha, 1989:

Since (the) God has fashioned me of earth, and Eve at the same time, I went with her toward a glory that she had perceived in the eon from which we issued. This one taught me by one word the knowledge of the eternal God. Then we came to resemble the great eternal angels: we were superior, in effect to the God who had fashioned us and to the powers that are with him, but that we know not now. Then, sore with wrath, God, master of the eons and the powers, split us... Since then, we have been instructed, like men, of mortal things. Then, we knew the God who had made us. Because we were not independent of his powers. And we served him in fear and slavery. And in consequence, our hearts were obscured...

Credo Mutwa...names the reptilians who direct this world "the Chitauli," meaning "dictators" in Zulu. ...this term can be translated into Sumerian.... [See Decoder for "Chitauli" and "Gina'abul / lizard(s)".]

Humanity possesses a prodigious destiny. The aim of humanity is not to reproduce the errors of the reptilians who intended to genetically diminish them, who posed as their creators!

To continue with the discussion of cloning and creating, next see To Be a Clone.

We have not finished discussing the characteristics of the modern human and the circumstances under which they were imparted! This is taken up in the second book, Adam Genisiš, and in these pages under the heading Creating Humans.

Page Secret1

Dimensions

From temple ruins at Karnak. Photographed 2008 by Anton Parks.

I do not know what it is, but it really exists on a stone among thousands of stones scattered over the ground.

ANGAL

(KIGAL graphic taken from Adam Genisiš)

Parks' system of dimensions is much more complex than the simple "stacking of planes" found in many metaphysical descriptions of reality. However, with frequent references to the graphic, everything should fall into place for you.

In his description, which he ascribes to the "secret ideology of the Gina'abul," the highest level -- actually a system of dimensions itself -- is called the ANGAL, or Great Heaven. The ANGAL is home to the Kadištu races, where most of them evolved. Most, but not all. The Ama'argi did not, nor are the ANGAL dimensions natural to the personages Nammu and Sé'et, though all of these are counted among the Elohim, which is to say Kadištu.

Parks refers to the lowest of the ANGAL levels as the "fourth dimension". The Amašutum can move about on this level, but can go no higher.

The dimensional system known as the KIGAL (Great Earth) is composed of the KI, our "3rd dimension", where we evolve on the Earth, and the KUR, which encompasses lower dimensions.

The KI is home to the Ama'argi and the Urmah (another Kadištu race), as well as Nammu and Sé'et. Parks is not certain, but he suspects the Urmah also have access to Angal frequencies.

These levels are to some extent specific to the planet. Thus "KI" as referenced in Le Secret, the dimension on which Gina'abul and Urmah evolve, is not the terrestrial KI! It corresponds to Earth's KUR-GAL.

The KUR, which is invisible to the three-dimensional perception of beings evolving in KI, consists of KUR-GAL, the 2nd dimension, and KUR-BALA, the 1st. This KUR is the region promulgated as "Hell" by the Judeo-Christian religions and, as such, it evokes images of a dark and lugubrious domain. However it is none of that! It is similar to our 3rd-dimensional world with its mountains, lakes, forests and deserts. On the other hand, its light is different, as are the sensations there.

As can be seen in the diagram, the KUR also includes two intermediate dimensions.

Just "below" our 3rd dimension is the intermediate dimension KUR-GI-A, meaning KUR of the "firm" Source, or the ANGAL.

This implies an interlocking: whereas the system of dimensions lower than our 3rd is for us "the KUR," the ANGAL has its own KUR, and that is the KUR-GI-A, which is one of the intermediate dimensions in our own KUR.

The decomposition of the word KUR, incidentally, suggests "belted or banded foundation," or "base of the foundation."

Decomposition of the term KUR-GI-A reveals that this is a transitory dimension in which souls rest momentarily before reintegrating with the Source or ANGAL.

Just below the KUR-GI-A is the KUR-GAL (2nd dimension), "the Great KUR," a parallel world where certain Gina'abul took their residence on planet Earth (as will be related in later volumes of the series). Below that is inserted another intermediate dimension, the KUR-NU-GI (the KUR of no return). This is the level of "lost souls" - the place in which entities are marooned; we know them as ghosts.

To the Sumerians, KUR-GI-A and KUR-NU-GI were two versions of hell.

The 1st dimension, KUR-BALA, is the "lowest" of them all. The Sumerians and tablet specialists liken this place to "the beyond," but the exact meaning of KUR-BALA is "the KUR of the realm or kingdom or dynasty." On Earth, the KUR-BALA was the object of numerous hostilities among the Gina'abul, because whoever holds the KUR-BALA becomes inevitably the master of the KUR-GAL and the KI.

All-Seeing Eye views KUR-GAL and KI only.

The master of the KUR-BALA is literally "the all-seeing eye at the summit of the pyramid... inverted," because it looks directly onto the KUR-GAL and the KI!

That is why on the tablets KUR (or KUR-BALA) is often translated as "enemy world," a place where chaos seems to reign perpetually.

The first three dimensions form a sort of inverted pyramid with KI representing the base and the dimension KUR-BALA forming the pinnacle.

People have been led into confusion over this "pinnacle" geometry, as it reflects the dimensions above KI (the ANGAL). These function somewhat the same way, but in a manner inverted from the KUR or KUR-BALA. The higher one climbs in the ANGAL, the more one possesses a global view of the ensemble of all the dimensions.

The inhabitants of the lower dimensions can appear quite powerful, but they are actually limited and are inferior reflections of beings in the ANGAL.

The term KUR is found abundantly on Sumerian tablets that relate a pitifully small and ridiculous part of the history of the Gina'abul. Specialists in the Sumerian tablets give to KUR several attributes, such as "lower world", "hell", "country", "mountainous country", "mountain", even "unknown country". In the eyes of ancient-orient experts, the definition of the Sumerian KUR seems at once complex and difficult to grasp because they do not conceive of a world formed of dimensions layered on one another. In the Sumerian mythology KUR is most often taken to designate either "a mountainous country" or "rebel countries". But it is clear from the tablets that the KUR is a transitional place between heaven and earth, a secret place where the "gods" live unknown to humans.

The Gina'abul possess a spherical instrument known as Gúrkur (see Decoder), which enables them to pass among all the dimensions of the KIGAL. But Sa'am discovered that the Mušgir have the inherent ability to transition these dimensions without recourse to any technology. This enabled a million of them to hide in the lower dimensions and escape the cleansing at the end of the Great War. They later became part of An's armed forces.

On the Sumerian tablets the verbs that express a movement toward or away from the KUR are E_{11} , which manifests the act of descending, climbing, going out or returning to the KUR; and U_5 , which expresses the idea of voyaging or navigating to the KUR. The latter reinforces the concept of a land foreign to the human dimension (KI) toward which the Anunna-Gina'abul were able to transport themselves with the aid of a Gúrkur, but also the idea of heavenly embarcations as with the Kadištu on Dukù which will be explained in my presentation of these events.

What is the nature of this "land?" Parks describes it (above) as having mountains, lakes, forests and deserts. But what is it? A sort of dreamland, from our perspective?

Parks has, in his "total immersion memory," at least one adventure into the KUR that would suggest a more tangible reality to it. Shortly after receiving his Gírkù, Sa'am makes a literal leap into the KUR-GAL, and immediately drops about forty feet to a different terrain that happens to be that far below the one on which he had just been standing! And this is not unreasonable. A different landscape is going to have different elevation features. Who is to say that one moves automatically to the surface level when changing dimensions?

The implication is that Sa'am moved to a different planet but retained the same position in spherical coordinates (or any three-dimensional coordinate system) with respect to the new one as he had occupied before on the old one. Or that the two planets were centered on the same point in a higher-dimensional space. That is perhaps reaching, but it may be the simplest solution to the problem.

This idea is further supported by the discovery that he could still see the previous surroundings, superimposed on the new ones. Specifically, he had been in a kind of gruesome battlefield graveyard; he was now under the bodies in it! The point is that there was a stable geometrical relationship between the two locales.

Furthermore, when he next went to the KUR-BALA -- the "first" dimension -- he could now see all three!

Although this was disconcerting, it does explain why Parks has said that those positioned in the KUR-BALA have great power over our world.

Shall we ask whether these were different planets or one planet with different aspects? Or is the answer just a matter of definition?

While it may be simply a matter of how one defines it, the suggestion is that there are rich influences taking place between the various levels -- though we are not directly conscious of them.

In the second work of this series, we will make frequent reference to another Kur (written in lower case to distinguish it from the dimension KUR) which has the sense of "mountainous or hilly" or "high plateaus". This region, also called Dukug, is the mountain where the Celestial Bestiary is established in the surroundings of the Mesopotamian plain.

The only common concept that we can see at the moment between the KUR and the Kur is that both are considered by the Gina'abul and Sumerians as mountains -- more precisely natural pyramids from which the Gina'abul fixed their regard on the world.

The KUR is beyond the visible world; it is a place where the Gina'abul-Anunna do not cease their goings and comings, because light and life flow to this place... What the specialists who study the clay tablets do not comprehend is that each time a Sumerian god, which is to say an Anunna, made the voyage to the terrestrial KUR, he could as easily ascend, descend, and leave it. This supports the fact that the Sumerians quite correctly localized the KUR under the perceptible human world. That is to say below it, which emphasizes the need of researchers to familiarize themselves with the Judeo-Christian hell.

The Gina'abul and the Sumerian do not incorporate "hell" in the western fashion. In the Gina'abul vocabulary, the lower level formed by the KUR and KI dimensions is called KIGAL, "the great world". This place is opposed to other higher-dimensional levels where the Kadištu reside, which is named ANGAL, "the great heaven".

Note the resemblance between the Sumerian term ANGAL and the English word Angel.

Clones

To Be a Clone

"I remember well this first impression, this painful sensation of crushing and suffocation. My spirit was empty and invaded with uncertainties. How had I arrived here? What mission had I been given in incarnating into this body in distress, at the edge of asphyxiation? Totally numbed, I opened my eyes and observed the artificial womb in which I was buried. By all evidence, my body had arrived at its finish, its termination."

Of course it had not arrived at its finish. It had arrived! Just about one of our days earlier, it been only a fertilized ovum.

Cloning is one of the edge technologies of our age. We have seen cloned animals; human clones would appear to be within reach; the ethics of the practice have us stumped for the moment but can there be any doubt that it will be done, perhaps on a massive scale, or even is already an accomplished, though covert, presence in our world?

We wonder what a cloned human would be like. Would it come into the world from a natural or artificial womb, like any natural newborn baby? Would it have a consciousness like that of any natural person? Would it be like a twin to whatever human contributed its genes? Would it be born with that person's knowledge "wired in?"

Parks, due to his mind-meld visions, has answers to these questions, and provides them amply in his book.

From the Karmapolis [K1] interview:

The Gina'abul knew how to program the genes of an individual to give him such or such character or physiognomy. They could determine in advance and even program like a computer the body of knowledge of the specimen they were fabricating.¹ For that, they utilized crystals and notably various types of quartz. But I cannot say more of this because I am opposed to these procedures that seem to be totally immoral today. The story that I relate is filled with genetic manipulations and I know well where they led the Gina-abul and above all the human species.

Recall from Carlos Castaneda's The Active Side of Infinity:

"In order to keep us obedient and meek and weak, the predators [here Gina'abul] engaged themselves in a stupendous maneuver - stupendous, of course, from the point of view of a fighting strategist. A horrendous maneuver from the point of view of those who suffer it. They gave us their mind! Do you hear me? The predators give us their mind, which becomes our mind. The predators' mind is baroque, contradictory, morose, filled with the fear of being discovered any minute now."

In the opening pages of Part 1, we are treated to the stream of consciousness of a cloned adult Gina'abul, awakening within the glass womb, and after moments of sensations of suffocation, disorientation, and confusion, coming to his senses, recognizing his "father-creator," having a brief conversation with him, and then hopping into his personal craft to embark on a worlds-shaking mission.

The brief conversation was critical. If he had turned out to be a perfect clone in terms of his identity, his father would have destroyed him without hesitation, as he had done others. His father had been aiming at something different: a prototype of a new race. This one turned out to be a success.

This is Sa'am, a personage from birth, the protagonist of the book, whom we will come to know deeply. His father-creator is named An; Sumerian scholars know who he is; Sa'am is unfamiliar to us, but we will eventually recognize him as well.

An is also a clone, and a Great Lord, the "Seventh of the Ušumgal."

We cannot discuss this image in detail until we have more of a framework for it. We will return to it later. But we wanted you to see how one of those artificial wombs was represented on a clay tablet. The Akkadian word for it translates as matrix and it does have a mesh-like appearance. Of course, matrix has connotations of mother.

The emerging female is Eve. Sa'am is at left.

Who Clones

Sex having been banned for a long time, the Gina'abul procreated with the aid of genetics, which produced all sorts of specimens and hybrids to which belong for example the Mîmînu (Greys) who are but slaves in service to the male Gina'abul.

The Gina'abul have possessed for many thousands of years the knowledge of cloning. One can trace this knowledge on the representations in clay of Mesopotamia, the Codex Mayas, or even certain Egyptian figurines such as this one (at right) in the tomb of Thutmosis 3 in the Valley of the Kings.

It would be difficult not to see a priestess facing three artificial wombs (SI-EN-SI-ŠĀR, see Decoder). Notice in each upper section an egg fertilized by a spermatozoon, and in the interior chamber bodies in formation.

Having mutually disconnected themselves, the female reptilians and certain males specialized in cloning. A little later, the Amašutum joined with the Kadištu of our universe. They have always been wiser than their masculine brothers and without doubt it was for them the best means to redeem certain past errors.

In one of the opening chapters of Le Secret, Sa'am travels to Unulahgal, the capital of Nalulkára, a place he describes as "the blessed, the jewel of our proud planet." And a beautiful city it is, but that is for another part of our discussion.

Unulahgal was...

...the center of the great initiates. All the "Life Designer" priestesses studied in this high place of apprenticeship. By their own dogma, they were the miracle workers of life, the great transformers at the service of the Original Source -- the primordial and universal Divinity. A few of them had the privilege of planning life on the planet Uraš (the Earth), situated in the prodigious stellar system Ti-ama-te (the solar system). The enigmatic doctrines of the priestesses and the Kadištu (Life Designers) were terribly feared by the males of our race [the Gina'abul].

This is a devastating statement! A key reason for having this entire treatment of Parks' work on our website. In these few words, Parks sets before us a vision of the secret of life as we know it. In our day, the eternal schism between "evolution science" and "creationism" has spawned "intelligent design," at its best an unabashed study of the critical role of molecular biology in the propagation of living species, but ultimately an embarrassment as it argues for "God" as the molecular biologist.

They are correct in seeing the tracks of someone with high intelligence at work on our molecular machinery but they could not envision who that might have been... or they forced their own religion onto it.

Now Parks gives us something quite acceptable: an entire city of designers -- apprentices, students, and accomplished ones -- working under the inspiration of the formless Kadištu, themselves in service to Divinity.

This arrangement, mind you, is not offered as the source of all life everywhere. The many worlds of the Gina'abul are scattered at some distance from here (see Worlds), but they are not infinite in number and we can see from here all of the constellations in which they reside. So this is a small grouping, surrounded in the vastness by what? We don't know.

For the discussion in Open SETI that ends where this vision begins, see APPENDIX 2 / Challenges to Darwinism: Panspermia and Theories of Guided Evolution.

Here is Parks' discussion of the various Gina'abul who have the capability of cloning:

The Kingú-Babbar (albinos) know how to clone; they are even great experts. They are the creators of the Ušumgal!

Practically the entire male Gina'abul line emanates from the Ušumgal root stock.

Parks also mentions in his second book and in the Karmapolis interview [K2] that the dinosaurs (Hušmuš) were the result of genetic experiments practiced by the Kingú before the Kadištu gave them permission to "officially install themselves" on the Earth. Parks also believes [K2] that certain types of "peaceful" dinosaurs were created by various Kadištu.

Generally speaking, the male Gina'abul are clumsy at cloning. For that reason they use the Amašutum. The Amašutum possess the power of creating. They possess the complete genetic patrimony, the gift of the Gina'abul colonies of Margid'da (Ursa Major) in their genetic banks on their mother planet Nalulkara.

Among the Gina'abul, other than the Amašutum, only the seven Ušumgal possess the knowledge of how to create, An being considered the best of the seven (even by the word of Tiamata!). Sa'am was given the understanding of his father-creator An, and of his mother-creator Nammu, which conferred on him enormous knowledge of cloning.

The remainder of the Gina'abul, such as the Šutum, the Anunna, the Nungal, the Mîmînu, the Mušgir... know absolutely nothing of cloning.

To be precise, the Mušgir were involved with the ancestors of the seven Ušumgal in Urbar'ra (Lyra), contributing their genetic patrimony in the production of the first branch of the Mîmînu. The Ušumgal ancestors had the genetic technology, without which the Mušgir would not have been able to create anything....

Subsequently, the different Gina'abul were authorized to clone from other Mîmînu to the end of time. For example, the royal Kingú-Babbar (albino Kingú) Gina'abul, originally from Ušu (Draco), and particularly those who relocated to the constellation Te (Aquila), produced other Mîmînu specimens.

The Mîmînu differ among the Gina'abul colonies. They all share the same origin, but differ physically and mentally in their programming. I explain for example in Tome 2 [forthcoming] that the Kingú-Babbar of our solar system created Mîmînu with light complexions like their own....

Asked about the apparent autonomy of the Greys with whom we seem to be in contact today:

As much as they seem autonomous today, that was not the case millennia ago... All that is strange. Frankly, I think they are not genuine and they play a manipulative game. In fact, I think that they are always directed by the Kingú-Babbar who are in conflict with the Annunaki and their descendants. I have difficulty seeing the Kingú-Babbar liberating the clone-slaves that they have possessed and used since the night of time!

Readers will note that this issue of the meaning of what appear to be cloning or genetic manipulation activities on the part of "Greys" and others, comes up again and again on the pages of Open SETI and The End of Enchantment. Genetic operations, either real or attempted or simulated, are apparently of vital importance to these various races, and may well be to ourselves, however little attention they have been given by the public.

Not all the races known to Parks propagate by cloning or by being cloned. One that procreates "naturally," raises children, etc., is the Imdugud (see Races).

Genealogy

Karma One: The extraterrestrial races that you describe (reptilians, felines, or, as with Horus, birdlike), the different castes and functions (the warrior castes, the Life Designers who create "races", etc.) come from regions very distant from one another, from different constellations. Do you know if these extraterrestrial "races" derive from a single origin, a single race? Do you have memories of what happened before the period that you describe?

Anton Parks: In Ádam Genisiš, Gerry Zeitlin and I have charted a genealogy tree from the information to which I have had access up to today. It shows that there sometimes exist direct genetic lines between certain races and, in other cases, genetic procedures, that is to say genetic manipulations (clonage). We cannot truly speak of a single origin or race; this tableau clearly demonstrates that.

But my view is limited in time; I know only the periods that relate to the personage of Sa'am (Enki-Osiris) and his posthumous son Heru (Bêl-Horus). I have then no detail on prior events, but only whatever confronted these two personalities that they subsequently encoded into Ugur, the crystal that they each carried...

[N]

Source Races and Founders of the Civilizations of Uraš (Earth). We provide (at right) the "genealogy chart" from Ádam Genisiš. This chart has several highly unusual features, never seen in standard genealogies, due to the nature of the information that it presents. We see individuals engendering entire races, using various combinations of their own DNA and that of other races, including some archived in a repository. Obviously not all generated beings are the result of natural couplings or even what you might call "personally-owned" DNA; in fact, most are due to pure laboratory-based genetic operations -- "cloning".

We attempt to distinguish these methods through the use of color-coded lines. We also (crudely) indicate the proportion of "Abgal" DNA -- from the evolutions of Sirius -- as this inheritance generally confers a high order of being. Naturally those who do not have it might disagree. And that is a hint as to the great story that will unfold.

Relative positioning on this chart is not very meaningful. However, genetic descent does run from higher to lower down the lines.

The time epoch depicted extends from indefinitely ancient through the time of arrival of renegade Gina'abul on the Earth, and on down through the Sumerian, Egyptian, and "Biblical" epochs. It depicts all of the personages and races significant to Earth development during that period. A separate graphic, found in the section Creating Humans, shows exactly who was responsible for the stepwise unfolding of the humanoid races through the modern humans, and their complete genetic heritage.

Source Races and Founders of the Civilizations of Uraš (the Earth)

CLICK FLAG TO ENLARGE:

Available as 11"x17" poster

More Information

In the vastness of time, entire species have migrated from one star system to another. This is specifically the case with the Kingú-Babbar, who relocated from Ušu (Draco), where they created the Ušumgal, to Urbar'ra (Lyra), and later some went to Te (Aquila). In the genealogy chart, locations associated with root sources or with newly-created species refer to dwelling places at the time the creation took place. Thus the Kingú-Babbar are shown associated with Ušu. In other words, the overall graphic is not a snapshot of any single point in time, but rather is a composite.

The Gina'abul have a concept of father and mother. However, as stated above, very little impregnation took place. In fact, this was banned by law. Sa'am was created by his "father" An in the laboratory. Although it was clear that An contributed some of his own genetic material to his creation, it is also clear that there was something else, and what that was, was a subject of intense interest and discovery throughout the books -- or at least as far as the third volume in the series, under development at the present time.

As illustrated in the genealogy chart, Sa'am actually incorporates genetic material from his eventual lover Mamitu-Nammu, herself partly amphibian through her Abgal heritage (see Races).

Enlíl's genetic heritage is of interest. Sa'am had been attempting to create special Nungal having modified physiques and accomplished characters. He had succeeded in extracting the genetic information from cells of several progenitors -- from himself and Gina'abul cells possessed by Mamitu, programming and combining these to create a group of seven clones. He added equally the genetic material from the Nungal prototype that was derived from the same base from which Abzu-Abba had created the original Šutum. The ensemble of all this was finally mixed with several other genes from different Gina'abul ancestors taken from their library of genetic patrimony.

Sa'am's specimens contained almost a tenth of his person, a little like biological children.

The result was terribly disappointing. Although apparently brilliant, they were wily, canny, and undisciplined. Sa'am's genetic creations were intended to be of Kadištu grade, but these were violent and prone to assaulting the Nindigir (heavenly priestesses).

Unfortunately the seven emerged from their siensišárs (artificial wombs) while Sa'am was elsewhere, undergoing a critical initiation. During his absence, the priestesses put to death six of the seven, but one escaped, probably with the help of a priestess who took a fancy to him. Confronting and capturing the seventh upon his return, Sa'am, seeing much of himself in this offspring, and recalling how his own life had been spared in a parallel situation, allowed him to go free.

This was, of course, the future Enlíl.

The chart provides various names assumed by the personages whose long lives extended through many epochs. For example, it is revealed in Adam Geniš that Sa'am is actually the famous Enki. And so we understand that Enlil should not really be considered to be the brother of Enki as we would understand the term, and as is believed by some Sumerian "enthusiasts" today. The two do possess some genes of An.

Figure from the Egyptian funerary text of the Amduat, in the tomb of Thutmosis III (18th dynasty), 6th hour, register 1, scene 5. A priestess named "The Worshipper of God" attends three artificial wombs in which bodies assemble themselves according to "images." On the upper part of each of the wombs appears an ovum fertilized by a spermatozoon.

The text states:

"The flesh is jubilant and rejoices. The head speaks after having reassembled its members."

"These are the secret images of the Duat."

"Those who are on their belly (reptiles) protect them."

"When Râ (the light) illuminates their darkness, the head speaks after the Worshipper of God calls it."

Personages

Abzu-Abba "Behum"	Ušumgal. The elder, "father" of the Gina'abul, progeny of the royal root source of Urbar'ra (Lyra) (see Worlds), master and absolute lawgiver of the interior (Abzu) of Nalulkára and Abzus of all Gina'abul planets. Within the first days of his life, Sa'am pays a visit to Abzu-Abba, kills him, and inherits his lands.
An Atum Yahvé(1)	"Seventh of the Ušumgal," creator of Sa'am and of the Anunna, of which he is the supreme chieftain.
Anšár	Ušumgal. Male. One of the creators (the father) of An.
Enlíl-Marduk(1)-Šàtam Šeteš/Seth "Satan-Yahvé(2)"	Nungal with enhancements. Created by Sa'am and Mamitu-Nammu. Original name: Enimin. Defective, scheduled for destruction, but escaped this fate. Ninmah took a fancy to him, requested the new name, meaning Lord of the Breath (or Word or Blow), a reference to his oratorical powers.

	At the time of his first period of Gibil'lásu (skin renewal), Enlil's true skin color is revealed - surprisingly to everyone except Sa'am, who had created him - to be distinctly less white than that of a common Nungal, but lighter than the Anunna. Not surprising to Sa'am, because he knew Enlil to be a mixed-blood and as such, diversity in genes can create uncertainty in physical and psychic programming.
Kišár	Ušumgal. Androgyne brother/sister of Anšár and mother of An.
Lahamu	Ušumgal. Progeny of the royal root source of Urbar'ra (Lyra). Androgyne progeny of Abzu-Abba. Co-creator of Anšár with Lahmu.
Lahmu	Ušumgal. Progeny of the royal root source of Urbar'ra (Lyra). Male progeny of Abzu-Abba. Genetic homologue of Lahamu, differing only in sex.
Mamitu-Nammu-Damkina(1)- Ninti(1) Nut "The Tree of Knowledge" "Elohim"	Amphibian (more fish than reptile), created by Tiamata partly from her own genes and genetic material from Gagsisá (Sirius). "Mother Tutor" of the Kadištu on Uraš (Earth). With Sa'am, co-created the Nungal. "Queen of the Throne" (Egypt).
Ninmah-Nihursag-Ninti(2) Serkit "The Tree of Life and Death"	Grand Priestess of Nalulkára. Right arm of Tiamata. With An, co-created the Anunna.
Sa'am-Nudimmud-Enki-Éa Pteh-Asar/Osiris Samaël-"The Serpent"	"The good lord, the well fashioned." A unique creation. Amphibian, cloned genderless by An with genes from himself and Mamitu-Nammu; later given male sex by mother/lover Mamitu-Nammu. Through her, partly Abgal (see Genealogy), and Kadištu. Also named Nudimmud, "The Cloner". Enki is his "Earth name" = Lord of the Ki or the Earth. He was given the name by his Nungal and the Anunna living with them at their first encampment on Uraš, and though he found it terribly pretentious, they persisted in using it. To Nammu and Sé'et (see below), he was always Sa'am or Nudimmud. Egyptian names and the usual Hebrew scriptural reference are also provided.
Sé'et-Damkina(2)-Ninti(3)- Ereškigal Aset-Iset-Isis "Fruit of Knowledge" "Tree of Life" "Elohim"	In Emešà: "The portent or force of life." A Nindigir (Priestess), Mamitu's designated successor. Presided over Sa'am's Initiation of the Fire of the Aš and participated in his coronation. Revealed to be Sa'am's genetic half sister, as her DNA is partly from Mamitu and partly Abgal (see Genealogy). This gives her much more of the Abgal genetics than either Sa'am or Mamitu has, and is the reason for the numerous Egyptian etchings showing her (or her dresses) with fish scales. Sa'am rescues her -- saves her life -- twice in the course of Volume 1 (Le Secret). As the priestess in charge of agricultural development on Dukù (see Worlds), was named Se'et : "Portent of the worked earth". Ereškigal (Sumerian name) = Sovereign of the Kigal (Gigal). Her domain is the subterranean Duat. In Egypt "Queen of the Throne" (as was her mother Nammu/Nut). In Egyptian mythology, Aset symbolizes Goddess of Births. Across several traditions, universal mother, magician, creatrice of life. She is the Mistress of the human genes.

Inanna-Ištar Nebet Hut / Nephtys "The Great Prostitute" "Queen of Heaven"	Daughter of Enlil (Seth). Domain is the Edin desert, Enlil's Mesopotamian Plain. Mistress of Sa'am and the wet-nurse of Bel-Marduk (Horus).
Marduk(2)-AmarUtu-Bêl Râ-af - Heru / Horus the Avenger "Lucifer"	Enki-Osiris' reincarnation and posthumous son. As the avenger of his father Enki, strongly opposed to the Law of Yahvé (An + Enlil). This is why Yahvé and Bel (Horus) are totally opposed in the biblical texts.
Tiamata "Tehum" "Elohim"	Ušumgal. Queen of the Gina'abul of Margíd'da (see Worlds). Named Tigeme by the male Gina'abul of Margíd'da. Mother of Lahamu and Lahmu.
Dim'mege-Lílti "Lilith"-"Fruit of Knowledge" "Elohim"	The name Dim'mege literally means "dark pillar". Queen of the Ama'argi (see Races). Daughter of Nammu (Nut); sister of Sa'am (Enki/Ea/Osiris) and Sé'et (Ereskigal/Isis). Appears to be the Sumerian LÍL-TI or the Akkadian Líltu found in the Hebraic tradition under the name Lilith. Under whatever name, always regarded in literature as a demoness of the underworld, doubtless due to the fear that she engendered and to her origin beyond human perceptions.
Hudili ("First Bird") - Zehuti/Djehuty/Thot - "Mikael", the Sage	Pure Nungal clone. Happened to embark with Sa'am and Mam in the Girgirlah in which they fled to Ti-ama-te. A great scientist, exceeded Sa'am in many disciplines. Maintained limitless respect for Sa'am throughout all periods of difficulties. Egyptian god of wisdom.
Ninurta	Conceived sexually and born naturally to Enlil and Ninmah early in the Kharsag period. Double polarity - strange, as Ninmah is female and Enlil true male. Doubtless the source of this is hereditary and unknown genes carried by Enlil. Sports a tail, also surprising as Enlil does not and neither, Enki believes, does Ninmah. As of early Kharsag years, has grown in the colony and considered by Enki a veritable plague possessing all rights. No one dare reprimand him for fear of being confronted by his progenitor.
Sigpabnum	Alagní (clone) developed with great care by Sa'am to possess all the assets needed to deal with the diverse ruses of the Ušumgal. Double polarity. Admired and respected by all the residents of Kharsag.

Isimmud / Isimud
Sukkal

Karma One: In the [first] two volumes, throughout the books, you constantly change the names of the personages. We see for example that the principal personage is named "Sa'am" at the beginning of Volume 1, and that he acquired other names as we go through his life: Nudimmud, Enki, Asar, Éa, etc... It's the same for all the personages. One would say that the use of names is obsessional for the Ušumgal and for the entire galactic bestiary... but also for you. The employment of a single name to designate a personage from the beginning to the end of the narrative would facilitate the task of the reader, but you seem to obey an inner injunction. The use of the names of the personages seems to be dictated by the context: context of ceremony, intimate relations, names proffered as an insult, etc... Is that correct? Was it so important to employ all these names?

Anton Parks: What a magnificent question; you have understood everything! Yes, the possession of different names (epithets) is pathological among the Gina'abul. The usage among them served to confer value to a being in specific situations, or was sometimes intended as an insult.

Let's take some examples. When it is a question of glorifying the prowess of Enki in connection with his aptitudes as a cloner, he is often called Nudimmud, "he who fashions and puts the images (clones) into the world". When Sa'am-Enki is angered by Enlíl, "the lord of the breath", he sometimes uses a play of words and the name Enlil, "the mad lord".

Take the example of Nammu, the mother of Sa'am-Enki, who during an assembly will oppose herself to the council and will be proclaimed Sagba, "anathema, malediction"; a term whose exact Akkadian equivalent is Mâmîtu. But we know that Mamîtu is her other principal name!

As you can see, the use of different names always has a sense that is in relation with the context in which the personage is situated.

[N]

Add to this profusion of names the fact that myths have grown up around each of them. Students of mythology may glance at this table, these pages, and quickly conclude that Parks' knowledge of the myths is deeply lacking. In this they would miss the point that here are presented the personages themselves that lay behind the myths. And there may be a deeper misunderstanding: many mythologists do not even believe there were such super-human persons behind the myths; they see the myths as having developed through the psychodynamics of the human social psyche.

While possibly something of that sort can occur at times, an important part of Parks' depiction is the deliberate production and cultivation of myths by powerful beings and their organizations. This has barely been touched on, yet, in these unfolding pages.

A bit more discussion can be found in the section on Inanna-Ištar.

Sa'am-Nudimmud-Enki-Éa
Pteh-Asar / Osiris
Samaël / "The Serpent"

Images provided by Anton Parks from his web page at <http://www.anunna.net/antonparks/telechargement2.htm> where they are available for download in sizes for use as screen backgrounds.

Here is a message Parks provided for users of his forum:
Dear Readers,

Many of you, very many, ask yourself the following question:

What was the physiognomy possessed by the Gina'abul (lizards) in the Chronicles?

I have tried at length to respond to this question in the Nouvelle Terre edition of Volume 1, for which I developed the images of Nammu and Sa'am-Enki [see top of this section], but not everyone possesses this new edition, and the designs were in black and white.

Many readers have difficulty imagining how these galactic beings (Usumgal, Anunna, Amasutum) truly looked when they wound up on our Earth at the time of the Great War, almost 300,000 years ago. We notice that some readers tend to imagine an appearance almost identical to that of humans, which is not at all correct.

They certainly have a humanoid appearance, but they are not terrestrials...

Certain African ethnic groups retain the almond-shaped eyes and the elongated cranium. What is above all different are the reptilian eyes (sometimes red), the greenish skin, and the scales...

I remind you that there is a great diversity of physiognomies among the Gina'abul. The type realized here is mostly Anunna. We intend to include a brief dossier in Volume 3 that will detail the different physiognomies within the magnificent Gina'abul race.

I hope that these images will not put you off. Do not forget that this appears to be a very ancient race who have laid down the law here, but in their midst are equally found as many exceptional and benevolent elements as dictators.

Further clarification via private e-mail:

Sa'am is basically of the Anunna type. The only difference between him and the Anunna is that he has Abgal, that is, amphibian, blood.

This amphibian aspect gives him four minor differences with respect to the Anunna:

1. Sa'am has webbed fingers (while Anunna do not).
2. Sa'am possesses amber-colored eyes while pure Anunna have red eyes.
3. Sa'am possesses small scales (those of the Anunna are larger).
4. Sa'am is a little larger than the average Anunna.

Furthermore, Sa'am himself was considered as an Anunna, given that he was meant to be the first of the race of An.

Given all of the above, why then are Isis and Horus shown with such strong humanoid features on two of Parks' book covers (at this writing)?

Here is Parks' answer to that question given in his forum (Nov 2008):

...As is to be revealed, the personages on the cover are indeed Isis and Horus. Though you may be in doubt of this, they conform to the vision that has been given to me.

Horus was created by artificial insemination under the care of Isis. He is a mixed-blood and his genetic patrimony a mixture of the genes of Osiris, Isis, and a large portion of royal Kingu genes. The pure strain of Kingu generally possess a very human physiognomy: normally white skin, scales, elongated cranium, vertical pupils in an iris often blue and, contrary to the Anunna, hair.

Isis was originally of Abgal type, thus without hair, more green, with an elongated face. Rapports of every nature that she entertained with Horus are going to transform her progressively as with her son... A scandal among the Gina'abul and above all a first! She will retain however a slightly greenish skin as well as her palmated hands and feet.

The reasons for using the royal genes to conceive Horus will be explained in Book 3.

The hieroglyphs state:

You are this Star who cannot perish, who cannot disappear.
You are this Star who will not perish, who will not disappear.

Sé'et/Ereš-kigal/Aset/Isis

The daughter of Nammu (Mami in the diagram), twin sister of Sa'am-Enki. To the Sumerians (per clay tablets), Ereš'kigal was queen of the KIGAL (the three dimensions, hence the Great Earth). At least originally, but at some point chooses the underworld, Hades, the kingdom where one buries the dead. Enki then was master of the KI (3rd dimension).

A FAMILY. Early in the Ádam Genisiš narrative, Mamitu-Nammu reveals to Dim'mege that, by the cells used in their cloning, Sa'am and Sé'et are her brother and sister, as Mam is the "mother" of all three. You can see this relationship in the "Source Races and Founders" diagram at the top of this page. Dim'mege then informs her siblings that the four of them are a family. Indeed they form a closely-knit unit from that time on. There is no one "father" to Mam's children.

Aset/Isis are of course her Egyptian identities.

Dim'mege

Dim'mege was a priestess who was also a bit of a gourmande, which did not do much for her silhouette. Her corpulence symbolized her generosity of heart.

She possessed a tail like those of the Ušumgal. Hers dragged along constantly and carelessly on the ground.

Very tactile, she never ceased placing her hands on us as though to taste us and to savor each instant passed at our sides.

Her manner of speaking was always very courteous and cultivated.

Dim'mege often saturated herself with a powerful emanation with the scent of apricot. We had to evade it at times so as not to become intoxicated by her nauseating balm.

Her tastes were multiple: she wore heavy bracelets and shimmering fabrics. Silver metal scintillated on her eyelids and precious stones streamed to her neck.

Hudili

Hudili, my faithful Nungal, was there in the doorway. His physiognomy had changed again. He seemed still larger; it was no doubt an impression. The progressive mutation of the Nungal was completely unpredictable.

"Do not be concerned, En (lord), we are not eaters of flesh," he said calmly.

When I rejoined him, he patted me on the shoulder to encourage me. That was the first time that he made this gesture, the first of a very long series. I couldn't fail to notice that little blond hairs were beginning to push out on his head. I smiled to myself. Certain Nungal did not totally appear to be Alagní (clones) of one another. Only the last series that I had done had received a certain treatment. I had subjected the quartz, which we generally used as receptacles for the cells, to controlled sequences of radiation doses, which had targeted influences on the genes. This technique was inscribed within me by my genitor [An]. It gave us several series of Nungal with varying individualities as well as programmed immunities. These specimens possessed autonomous genetic mutations that immunized them against most of the known viruses.

Hudili was without doubt the only survivor of one of these series that spontaneously mutate, because I knew no other like him. Enlil, my very special Alagní (clone), was from one of these particular series, but he seemed to be a mixed-blood, a specimen who synthesized active antibodies that came from different donors. A specimen rather different, fabricated from several Gina'abul models. Had he shed his skin in the same manner? [See Nungal]

Mikael

Dual Versions

The confusion of two distinct historical personages into one jumbled tradition is important for us to understand, as it is emblematic of many such jumbings that have resulted in today's inside-out and upside-down religious conceptions.

Parks has gone to lengths to untangle the two. We compress his presentation here, hoping to maintain the clarity of his ideas.

This discussion is supported by the linguistic analysis found at Case 2: MULTIPLE MEANINGS OF THE NAME "MIKAEL".

Each of the two Mikael is the head of a group of "angels" -- two opposing groups, actually. The name Mikael and variants are also associated with quite distinct personalities in various traditions.

MĪ-KA-EL: Gnostics and Romans associate with the god Mercury, whom we identify with the Egyptian god Thoth, Grand Master of Wisdom (Messenger of Râ, the Sun). Greek Hermes.	MÎ-KA ₅ -EL and MÈ-KA ₅ -EL: See decompositions. The fox, jackal, desert dog are Enlil (Seth in Egypt).
Thoth-Hermes is companion of Ptah-Osiris, Isis and Horus.	Warrior Mikael who is in charge of the affairs of the fox

	Enlil/Seth is his future son Ninurta, head of the "Army of God (An and Enlil)".
Guides/protects the course of Râ in his Bark of Eternity	Protects the false "god" Atum (An), demiurge also associated with the sun, responsible for the separation of Earth and Water, destruction of the future A'amenpteh (Atlantis).
Thoth, named "First Bird", is head of the Nungal-Igigi, Akkadian "Watchers", "Fallen Angels".	Enlil-Seth through future son Ninurta is head of the Anunna.

All is in agreement when one realizes that the "Watchers" of the Book of Enoch are the adversaries of Mikael-Ninurta who is in the service of Yahvé (An and Enlil).

Ninurta

There actually were two Ninurtas born to Enlil. He gave the same name to the second, as to his first, who disappeared in the combats, and who was the first Gina'abul of the colony to have seen his first daylight on Uraš (the Earth). Enki always considered this title to be an insult to himself, as the title EN-KI (lord of the Earth) had been conceded to him so long before by the Nungal and the Anunna. He always considered Enlil's choice of the name Ninurta to be deliberate for that reason, showing Enki that he was not alone in claiming the exterior riches of Uraš (the Earth).

In the name NIN-URTA, the Sumerian particle URTA is confounded with URAŠ "the Earth". There is an interesting wordplay in NIN-UR₅-TA, "the lord achieved by natural childbirth".

Enlil also gave the name of "Maš to both; this name was carried on the Sumerian tablets.

Sigpabnun

SIG₇-PAB-NUN - "brilliant princely brother", companion of Enki-Ea in the Sumerian texts, also named "Isimmud" (or "Isimud" or "Usmu") on the clay tablets.

Alagní (clone) created by Sa'am/Enki to help him face the difficulties posed daily by his adversaries, Sigpabnum was given all the assets needed to deal with their constant and diverse ruses.

Sa'am had had difficulties with his creation of the Nungal - haste had kept him from checking his materials carefully, and they had been manipulated - and there could not have been a worse calamity than the production of Enlil. This time he took the greatest precautions in fabricating a single exemplary, remarkable and unique.

Sigpabnum clearly displayed aptitudes recalling those of emissaries of the Source, and was admired and respected by all the residents of Kharsag. Ninmah turned around him like a "Numsahar'ra" (a fly). She must have wondered how Sa'am/Enki had been able to compose such a specimen.

The Kharsag residents often called him by the name Sukkal (messenger) because he was Sa'am-Enki's executive officer and seemed to possess the same wisdom as the Life Designers of that name.

His presence was required at every moment. By playing the intermediary, he allowed Sa'am-Enki to become more focused and to concentrate on essentials.

Herein Lies a Tail

If the day ever arrives when Parks' descriptions of the physiognomies of these races and the personages resulting from their interactions are taken as valid data worthy of serious scientific study, we will have a new field of genetics of almost unimaginable richness. It is partly in support of that future development that we organize and present Parks' descriptions on these pages.

In that spirit we detail here the presence or lack of a tail in the various racial types and persons.

According to Parks, the Ama'argi, those females whose galactic home is the Abzu - Uraš' interior, all had tails... and as far as we have seen to this point, any offspring that they had with the Anunna males had tails as well, even though the Anunna did not possess them.

Others with tails include the Ušumgal, Red Kingú, Mušgir, and early human races.

Tiamata, who was after all an Ušumgal, had a tail, but her daughter Nammu did not.

Nammu was the mother of Sé'et and Sa'am, who did not have tails, and the Ama'argi Dim'mege, who did.

It seems that when creating new genetic mixtures, the geneticists themselves were sometimes surprised by the presence or absence of a tail in the synthesized being.

Abzu (1)

The constant and intense radiation of the inner sun of Uraš illuminated a universe disordered in appearance. My craft overflowed mountains leveled by flowing torrents...

I was overwhelmed by this discovery of such biodiversity. Uraš was as surprising in its heart as on its exterior.

In this setting dominated by a large internal ocean, I discovered an incredible number of varieties of animal and vegetable species...

My progenitor and I camped near the great cascades that fell down the mountainside opposite the mountain that overhung the capital of the Abzu, which was named Šàlim [Decoder]. The deafening noise of the waterfalls plunging into the ocean bathed us at our work for countless Ud (days).

The interior sun of this planet's ancient world is extremely powerful, much hotter than any that I had seen. Its light is different in its chemical and ultraviolet rays, which supports varieties of species totally unlike those of the exterior.

The sun's radiant purple-crimson cloak provides a constant temperature throughout the cavity. The abundance of coral scattered throughout all latitudes of the primary ocean indicated a hot sea. The rich calcareous secretions of the aquatic organisms of the rivers and lakes were also in keeping with the hot ambiance.

The Abzu of Uraš possesses, certainly, immense varieties of exotic terrains, but it is above all a fluvial and maritime maze which gives it the aspect of a gigantic reservoir.

Mam gave this interior sea the name Engur.

Note: The Sumerian term ENGUR was generally used to name subterranean waters as well as the abysses of the Abzu. It was equally employed to designate the primordial goddess Nammu, which is to say Mamitu, as a symbolic representation of the unique source of the primordial waters.

It is necessary to come to terms with the idea of the Abzu, a prominent feature of Mesopotamian belief systems, before going on to consider the Gina'abul worlds, because every planet and moon in Parks' history has one.

DIALOGUE

A.P.: I will try to respond correctly to your questions concerning the Abzu.

You must keep in mind that the images that I received were not

To the Sumerians, the Abzu, realm of Enki, was a subterranean sea or swamp – a sort of sandwich layer, as the Sumerians didn't have a concept of a spherical Earth. Zecharia Sitchin frequently translates Abzu simply as Africa. However, in the experience of Parks/Sa'am, the Abzu was the hollow center of each world, fully inhabited and thriving with life, even urbanized. We have all encountered the idea: openings at the poles, oceans connecting with the interior over a gently-curved broad rim, and a sun at the center.

In other words, the Abzu is a structure that contradicts our common knowledge of the Earth and all other planetary bodies in the Solar System – and seems to violate our understanding of physics as well.

This little problem challenges our ability to accept Parks' report. It is not as though one could say, "I'll consider the rest but hold the Abzu, please," because activities and events taking place in the various Abzus of Parks' cosmos are so thoroughly a part of the narrative that it would be akin to saying "I can accept your description of human physiology but I just can't go with the alimentary canal."

Parks has spent much effort on this problem. In collaboration with Hans W. Lintz, Parks provides an extensive report in the Dossier: Les Mondes Creux on his site AntonParks.com. We have reviewed the portions of the report relating to the Earth and Moon (i.e., not dealing with data on other solar system planets). Briefly, we find one highly interesting nineteenth-century personal account of a fisherman and his father who sailed into the northern opening, spent 1-1/2 years with the civilization in the cavity, sailed out the southern end, and were shipwrecked there. Beyond that, the well-known and controversial story of Admiral Byrd's adventures and dubious satellite data add little to the case for the Abzu. Yet we could not have expected more in the way of data in the public domain at this time.

Meanwhile, we can touch on some basic questions.

The first – and naive – concern would be about how gravity would work in this situation. How could you run a city in there, with people falling to the center of the Earth all the time? Doesn't gravity "point" to the center of the Earth?

The answer is: yes if you are on or above the surface, but no if you are anywhere inside a spherical cavity concentric with the earth's outer surface. In that case -- I have not confirmed this but understand that it is simple enough to do the obvious integration showing that the force of gravity is zero throughout such a cavity. This is frequently discussed on "hollow earth"-related forums.

What has not been mentioned is the gravitational field within a large class of cavities not necessarily symmetrically placed. If you have any doubts about how gravity would work within this larger class of cavities, consider an underground parking garage, a cavity that is a member of this class. Gravity exists there. Suppose the lower floor of the garage had an opening to a tunnel that extended to or past the center of the earth, creating an irregularly-shaped aggregate space. Obviously the force of gravity would vary throughout this space. One could imagine widening this space to form any of a large variety of shapes, where gravitational forces would be non-zero in at least in some parts of the spaces, though they might vary throughout.

Clearly there are many ways in which an inner earth cavity would support gravity. But not all possible cavities would be suitable candidates for our inner earth. The constraints are:

1. It must be open to both of the Earth's poles or polar regions.
2. It must be able to contain a small "sun".
3. It should not result in significant gravitational or seismic anomalies at the Earth's surface (or if it does, earth scientists must be capable of misconstruing them).

About that sun that always seems to be present inside the cavity: WHY would it be there, where did it come from, and what makes it stable in that position?

Part of our difficulty in approaching these questions stems from failing to grasp the sun and the surrounding planet as a single unit, and failing to consider the process of planetary formation. Open SETI frequently entertains the cosmological and physical theories of Dr. Paul A. LaViolette. In particular, as described in Open SETI Physics 101, planets are formed from the energy and particles emitted from a gravitational well where there is excess genic energy. At the point of emission, there is probably what appears to be a hot little sun.

The next phase might be an interaction between interstellar particles being attracted toward the gravitational well, and outward-moving energy and particles. Might there be a point of equilibrium at a given radius where a shell of matter would begin to form? The details of this process are not to my knowledge given in any of LaViolette's books (if they are, we will find out shortly).

What is the mechanism that stabilizes the system so that the sun does not wander around and collide with the shell? Again on our page, we mention that the genic energy radiation pressure goes as $1/r^4$, which creates a strong restoring force opposing any such tendency.

Another major detail requiring an explanation would be the holes at the poles of rotation. I personally am not clear on this point, as the dynamics appears complex, but it seems reasonable that if there was rotation in the first place, that these holes might appear due to centrifugal force.

Is LaViolette's planetary formation model the final word in the view of Open SETI? Actually it is not. The Electric Sky Model of plasma astrophysics, introduced for your convenience at the link, and its subsidiary Electric Sun, described for example in Donald Scott's The Electric Sky (2006), being scalable over the range of cosmological- to laboratory-sized dimensions, provides us with a perfectly reasonable model of a small sun that could exist in the earth's cavity. This is because stars are not fusion reactors requiring a certain size and gravitational pressure, but simple foci of plasma occurring along strung-out Birkeland Currents.

In this model, the energy from the sun (any sun) is supplied by the Birkeland current, a plasma in "dark current mode" (i.e., in the low-current-density regime in which it is not emitting light).

The Birkeland current feeding a planet's inner sun would very definitely have to pass through polar openings.

Is it possible that those openings are a part of the geometry of a "recombination zone" that is responsible for planetary formation itself?

The reader will surely ask, "How can it be that all planetary bodies are hollow with openings at their poles, and we have not seen this in the images from our interplanetary probes?"

The unspoken question: "Are we to believe that the data have been withheld from us, and if so, why? Why go to all that trouble? What is the point?"

Parks' reasoning is as follows:

To confirm that all planets are hollow would be to admit that the Earth is equally so. To recognize that this planet is hollow, with a habitable interior, implies that one must make an accounting of possible other populations, and undertake expeditions to the center, but that is at the moment completely impossible. Why? Because, according to numerous legends of the Earth and in accord with the traditions of Tibet, the Eskimos, and even the Hopi Indians of Arizona, the interior of the Earth is occupied by a civilization of a highly developed intelligence, affiliated -- for some of them directly, and for others indirectly -- with the "Celestial Bestiary!"

Most of our readers have heard of these legends. For many of us, our response has had to be to afford them a measured level of credibility, as though to say we respect those peoples who hold these myths and say these things, but not to face the implications. The reason is that the complete break from the common worldview that would be required, the end of the SCAM, seems to present an imposing prospect, if not absolutely frightening.

But for others, it's a way of life.

For concepts of the Abzu in the ancient world, click here.

Šàlim

The City of Eternity

On the ground, paving stones of chalcedony ran between walls of white marble. Palms and mimosas bordered the streets, exhaling light, fleeting scents. Time seemed never to have passed through the four portals of the sacred city...

The Šàlim of this epoch was a delight to the senses. The songs of birds resonated from the balconies and terraces hung with opalescent cloths that trembled furtively in the wind.

The capital of the Abzu was a peaceable domain blending at once luxury and beauty...

In each capital of our Abzus there are invariably found princely quarters designated for the use of the reigning sovereign. These apartments are always very spacious, as they are intended to receive the ensemble of the royal family and his court. Like many others, those of Šàlim had never served. They were reserved only for the occasion when the sovereign of the Abzu would come to pay a visit. Abzu-Abba had never set foot in Ti-ama-te (the solar system) and still less on Uraš.

The emphasis on the final phrase is mine. An odd thing for Parks to say, one would think. We are used to thinking of the Earth as our solar system's center of life and culture. But that was not true in Sa'am's day. That center would have been Mulge, a planet that was later destroyed.

Šàlim Images: Glimpses of Work in Progress

It will eventually be possible to provide readers with detailed images of Šàlim, since Parks has these clearly in mind. The process of rendering them for viewing on this page has been very slow, however, as attention has had be given to many levels: terrain, major construction, city plan, buildings, vegetation (gardens, ornamental trees, etc.), vehicles, lighting, and inhabitants. Some of these layers are beginning to take form now, and while crude and unfinished, some of our working images are approaching a level that can perhaps be shown, if readers will be a little forgiving.

Our purpose in showing images even at this early stage is to help readers begin to feel a sense of the reality of this place, not only as it once was, but as it perhaps might still be... though this needs much discussion and clarification.

Positioning of Šàlim under a landform within the Abzu.

Šàlim city street plan. (Disregard any positions of buildings at this stage of the graphics development; we are still assembling the components of the city.) Parks specifically supports the circular layout, similar to the Plato/Atlantis City images we have seen, with the single front-to-rear main radial. Other radials are needed but details are suggestive only. The high terrain at the rear is also a specific memory. Little attention has been given to the lighting as of yet. However the city's foreground is directly exposed to the "inner sun"; this is correct. The city plane is "slightly larger than Paris". We have given the major boulevards a width of 150 m. The dome is "metallic". Lighted lines are as generally recalled; details are not supported. One Iníuma is seen; another is over the terrain outside the city, approaching. Two Tumua personal craft fly in the foreground. They appear to be over the city but perspectives are deceiving; the ships are far out in front of the city opening. We had them fly past the camera for you. At any point actually over the city they would have been almost invisible from here. Eventually there will be many of them in the air over the city itself, and hundreds parked on the ground... as you would expect. Lights on the Iníuma will be part of the lighting scheme for the city. Notice two prototype buildings placed near the front; they give a sense of scale when compared with the boulevards. The temporary group of buildings at the center consists of a third prototype (all identical). One building has also been inserted into the hilly area at rear, again to provide a sense of the scale. This will be shown to have been a habitable area: the princely quarters where Sa'am and his Nungal were installed.

Šàlim outward view with three prototype buildings. The buildings will have doorways, windows, and exterior lights. Work is in progress on the windows. Tumua craft are shown parked at the base of one building for scale. Notice that the dome is outside (above) the field of view in this image. In the background, beyond the wall, is Engur, the great subterranean sea. The city wall is very important and will be more complex than appears here, with a broad walkway along its inner edge and crenellations on the outer edge. A gate is needed, etc.

In the previous image, an odd shadow appears on the middle prototype building, relating to the position of a "spotlight" we are using for development purposes. Here we have extinguished that light, and show you the resulting interesting image, as a preview of how these buildings will look in darkened situations.

Dim'mege's palace will be in this area, associated with the lake. The lake area itself needs much development... plantings, causeway, etc. Princely quarters will be on the lower levels of the mountain.

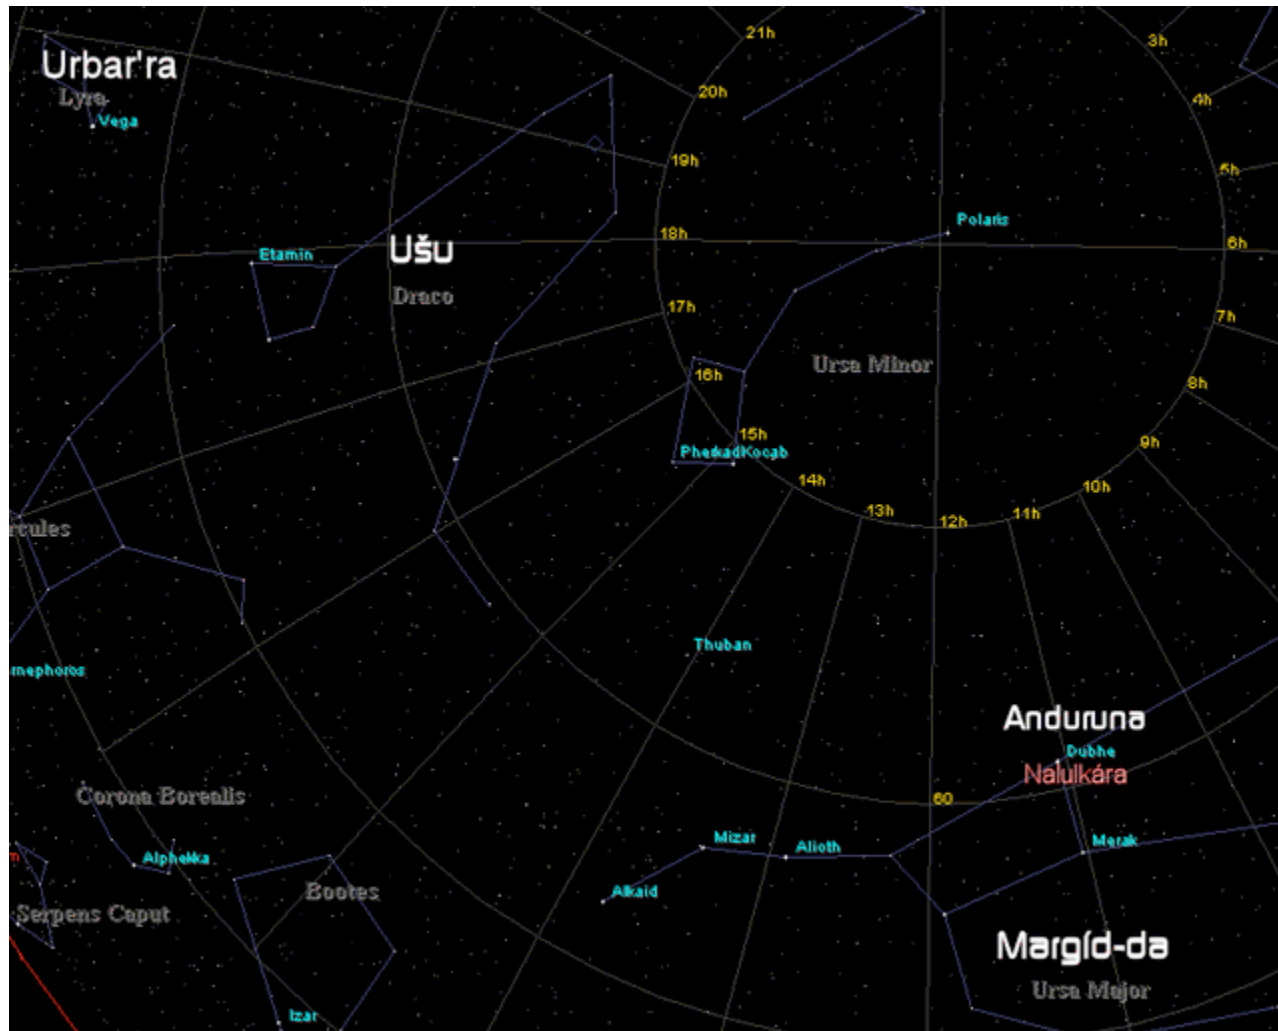

Infuma over terrain approaching Šàlim.

Iníuma approaching Šàlim.

Worlds

Constellations as we define them are not experienced by the Gina'abul. Anton Parks, tapping into Sa'am's memory, recalls awareness of "mother stars" (i.e., stars with life on one or more of their planets) and various groupings of stars before his arrival in our solar system. Once on the Earth, he could easily recognize the mother stars within the constellations as seen from here.

Sky Orientation I

The star group known in the Emenita language as Margíd'da (see Sky Orientation 1), which we can loosely associate with our defined constellation Ursa Major (the Great Bear), is the home of the Gina'abul. The giant planet they call Nalulkára is their imperial residence, "at the heart of Anduruna," a stellar system identified with the star Dubhe.

Also known as alpha Ursae Majoris, Dubhe is a yellow giant, about 25 times the size of the Sun, and located 86 light years from here. Dubhe is a "close visual binary."

The Uanna, monumental mothership of the Gina'abul lord An, is reported by Parks to have been – at the opening of his narrative – situated on the "night side" of Nalulkára. This implies a synchronized rotation or "resonance" of Nalulkára with respect to Andaruna/Dubhe, similar to that of our moon with the Earth.

Parks mentions a short night on Nalulkára due to a second nearby star. In fact, Dubhe B is catalogued. At present, a projected distance of 23-25 AU from Dubhe (based on angular separation) has been published. That would correspond to the distance of Uranus from the Sun. I don't believe the actual position of Dubhe B with respect to Dubhe is known. The graphic at right is shown from an arbitrary viewing position and is purely suggestive.

As of this writing, March 9 2006, no planet corresponding to Parks' giant Nalulkára has been detected.

Parks also "saw" (as Sa'am, in his initial flight made on the first day of his life!) entire cities of thousands of Amašutum near the "southern" extremity of Nalulkára.

The royal city of Nalulkára is named Unulahgal.

The city of Ankida was where the complete genetic patrimony (as frozen cells) of the Ušumgal was stored.

Beyond the Amašutum cities is the opening into the "Abzu of Nalulkára," named for the old father/king Abzu-Abba. Not the most beautiful in the Anduruna system, but the most vast of all the planets possessed by the Gina'abul, and those on which they had set foot up to that time.

Also seen in Sky Orientation 1 is Ušu (corresponding to our Draco), the "birthplace of the Gina'abul".

Urbar'ra (Lyra) is the birthplace of the Miminu (Greys), who were created there by the ancestors of the Ušumgal (see Races) with the assistance of the Mušgir, who contributed their genetic patrimony.

In India, the Great Bear (which we have said is under the trusteeship of the seven Ušumgal) is symbolized by the seven Rishi (visionaries) who are the semi-divine genitors with creator powers. They are directly connected with the origin of humanity. The Sumerian decomposition of this term is in keeping with the creator role of these gods: RI-ŠI, "those who are there and who engender".

Sky Orientation 2 again shows Ušu (the Dragon) and Urbar'ra in the northern sky, and also includes Te (Aquila) near the celestial equator.

Migrations of the Ušumgal and Kingú-Babbar races are depicted here. The Kingú-Babbar had been in conflict with Mušgir and later with Ušumgal when they were all located together in the Ubar'ra constellation. Some Kingú-Babbar then returned to their original home in Ušu, while others migrated to Te, and later settled in our solar system, under an exceptional accord with the Kadištu. These figure prominently in the history told in Adam Genisiš.

Keep in mind that all of these views are projections looking outward from the solar system. What were historically defined as constellations are actually associations that can be quite extended in the radial direction, and this is the case with the constellations depicted here. Radial distances within these star groups can be larger than the lateral separations of the groups themselves. For a better perception of this, examine the image Solar Neighborhood to 50 ly below.

(Click image for 3D closeup)

The very important planet Dukù is the place where the Ušumgal created and trained the Anunna, an activity that precipitated the war that drove them all to Tiamate, our solar system. (We will have much more to say about this.) Dukù is in the system of Ubšu'ukkinna (Maia), one of the bright blue-white stars in the group known to the Gina'abul as Mulmul (the Pleiades star cluster).

Approaching Ubshu'ukkinna [Maia] in Mulmul [Pleiades] from Nalulkara

Two other planets of Ubšu'ukkinna (Maia) on which significant events take place in Parks' narrative are Éšárra and Ébabbar. Sa'am witnessed military training activities on these worlds. According to Parks' memory, the Ubšu'ukkinna system has 12 planets altogether.

See Decoder for a decomposition of the name Ubšu'ukkinna. This was also the name of the sacred place of assembly in each large Mesopotamian city.

The Hopi indians of Arizona call the celestial Ubšu'ukkinna Toonaotakha, which they translate as "the Confederation of Planets." It refers to a celestial region of 12 planets where dwell the Kachinas, the spiritual guides of the Hopi traditions (see Joseph Blumrich's transcription of White Bear's teachings, KASSKARA UND DIE SIEBEN WELTEN). The Toonaotakha stellar system is precisely situated in the Pleiades, named by the Hopis "Seven Sisters."

It's interesting to note that the term Toonaotakha is formed from the Hopi root Toonao which means "belongs to a group," and is itself taken from the term Toonam, "group" or "tribal council." Once again, all fits perfectly.

Blumrich's work with White Bear is covered extensively by Anton Parks on Parks' page ATLANTIS CONTRE MU, found on Anton Parks.com. Kásskara is identified with the ancient Mu; Talawaitichqua with Atlantis.

We have also indicated a planet named "Adala" (Sumerian ADA-LA, "the song of happiness") that according to Parks seems to exist in the Taygete system.

Sky Orientation 3

Sky Orientation 3 shows the location of the Pleiades in Taurus.

Farther south in Sky Orientation 4, Gagsisá (Sirius) is the source of the (amphibian) genetic material used by Tiamata in the creation of Mamitu-Nammu... and through her, inherited by Sa'am. Both Mamitu-Nammu and Sa'am have slightly webbed hands.

All of this will be found to be important with respect to Dogon legends. See various discussions throughout our [Neb-Heru page.]

Gagsisá is considered to be one of the most important bases of the Life Designers confederation, an "admirable place."

What more can we say about this? Can we provide any further details?

To begin, consider that Gagsisá (Sirius) is not just a single star. Conventional astronomical knowledge has it as a binary, consisting of Sirius A -- a white main sequence star, and a faint white dwarf companion, Sirius B.

Do check those reference links, because they contain useful astronomical images of the Sirius system that will help you to form a clear mental image of this "admirable place".

But they depict only two stars. Parks' information is at variance with this, as he "recalls" important conversations making reference to a third star, Gagsisá-Eš ("Sirius 3"), and even specifically its planet Sé'etrá'an as the point of origin of his celestial family.

We will later offer much more information on this interesting subject. For example, see the section Sister Souls.

Although it appears close to Gagsisá from our perspective, the constellation Sipazianna (Orion) consists mostly of stars ten times farther away, and dispersed over a large volume of space. Numerous Gina'abul colonies are found in the region, strongly allied and mixed with humanoid beings native to the area. Together they have created a hybrid race. These peoples multiply themselves via sexual reproduction.

Sipazianna (Orion) is the original home of the Urmah (see Races).

Also prominent in Sky Orientation 3 and moreso in Sky Orientation 4 is the star known to the Gina'abul as Bun -- the red giant Aldebaran (α Tauri) located about 60 l.y. from here. The two decompositions of its name (see Decoder) refer to its brightness and its "rebel" status politically, as its home race, the Ameli, did not permit the Gina'abul to establish themselves there after the Great War.

Bun is along the line of sight to Gišda -- the Hyades star cluster. While Aldebaran appears to be a part of it, the cluster is actually located much farther away at a distance of 151 l.y. from Earth. These are the stars you can see in Sky Orientation 4 just to the lower right of Bun. In Parks' narrative, a newly-created line of Amašutum was obliged by the Ušumgal to abandon its home in the Ubšu-ukkinna system and relocate to Gišda after the Great War.

The following graphic helps to visualize the important Gina'abul locations in three-dimensional reference to our solar system (Tiamate). It is based on a map of the brightest stars in the solar neighborhood out to 50 light years. Where Parks names specific stars that fall within this radius, these are circled and labelled. Where only constellations are identified, any stars on the map that belong to those constellations are indicated. Some constellations extend beyond the boundary of the map, and one (Ubšu-ukinna) lies far beyond the border, at 440 l.y. Anduruna, while it appears in the Ursa Major constellation (which is largely included in the map), is actually not part of it, and lies 124 l.y. from here.

Solar Neighborhood to 50 ly. Click to enlarge.

Uraš [Earth], triumph of matter. Pride of Ti-ama-te (the solar system) and of the Kadištu. The molecule of life has there been transplanted into the KI (third dimension) by the combined labors of the representatives of the Source. The biological diversity of this place is limitless. On the majority of the risen lands, luxuriant vegetation assures perpetuity of the innumerable cohabiting species, forming an equilibrium in constant activity. Uraš possesses an incomparable fauna and flora. The great merchant routes have crossed Ti-ama-te since the night of time. Long ago the Kadištu chose this commercial highway and more particularly Uraš to make of it the living reserve of our universe.

Situated at the intersection of numerous galactic routes, Tiamate (the solar system) was named by the Kadištu in homage to the Gina'abul queen Tiamata, who had done so much for peace and for this celestial region.

In Gina'abul, Ti-ama-te evokes "the place where compassion and life intersect" because there existed here an experimental sphere in which unnumerable forms of life cohabited. This was Uraš (the Earth), the major center of the Gina'abul universe.

Uraš (the Earth) is a place of duality where the notions of good and evil are experimented on with vehemence. This carries no judgment.

Before the Gina'abul and Anunna took the Earth totally in hand, Uraš was a zoological garden or park in which the Kadištu had placed the ensemble of their knowledge; this explains why there was such diversity. The frequency of the KI (3rd dimension) on Uraš was much higher before all the reptilian wars.

As Marciniak says it so well, the Earth is a living library. Our solar system is at the crossroads of important routes that the Life Designers have traveled since the night of time.

Shortly after their arrival on Uraš, Sé'et explains to Sa'am that our satellite Itud -- the moon -- is an artificial planetary body, completely hollow, with its own Abzu (subterranean world). It was a secret base, concealing a small group of priestesses, but mainly occupied by Imdugud, who are fair-skinned Kingú, descendents of the famous Kingú-Babbar (albino Kingús).

One final note: Parks refers to a planet named Mulge that existed in the solar system at the time of his Secret narrative.

In his own words:

Mulge ("the black star") is the holy planet of the Amašutum and the Kadištu in the system of Ti-ama-te (the solar system) and also the ancient planet that evolved between Mars and Jupiter. Mulge rotated in the opposite sense with respect to the other planets and was placed as a frontier, subdividing toward the downstream, that is to say toward the sun, the four warm planets (Mercury, Earth, Mars, as well as Venus -- which, at this ancient epoch, was the moon of Mulge), and on the other side, toward the exterior, the colder planets such as Jupiter, Saturn, etc.

See TI-AMA-TE

Stargates

The important Gina'abul centers known to Parks are scattered over distances of several hundred light years. One wonders how the Gina'abul manages such a far-flung society, and whether distance itself has any importance to them.

In their endless wars, is the proximity of star systems a factor? Consider our experience here on this planet, in which "spheres of influence" lost their geometric meaning once we mastered the art of high-speed intercontinental travel.

The Gina'abul have apparently done this on their scale, but how did they do it?

According to Parks, stargates -- the Gina'abul word is Diranna -- are the key.

These famous ports have always been primary for beings mastering the techniques of space travel. Each planet possesses very numerous Diranna. As for the Gina'abul, it was more or less customary to construct our larger centers where the Diranna were more densely clustered.

...

Unulahgal [capital of Nalulkára; see Worlds] possessed the largest Diranna (stargate) of the entire planet. It was usually from here that the major official departures to [interstellar] space took place.

...

To be more precise about their function, I must make it clear that the Diranna are ports leading [through tunnels] toward vortices where the notion of time does not exist, where time literally collapses upon itself by the concentrated action of particles of light, because an excessive concentration of light inhibits time. These tunnels are formed of particles moving at such a speed that the notion of time there is nullified.

The timeless vortices are countless, innumerable. On the anatomical scale, one can grossly compare them to various blood vessels serving to irrigate the living body. On the scale of spatial geometry, they function in the same way where all the planets are linked together, each stellar system being itself in liaison with its neighbors, each island universe (galaxy) equally linked and so forth....

In fact, the timeless vortices permit anyone in this universe to travel to a point in another more quickly than light. The tunnels, invisible to the human eye, are like bridges thrown between the worlds and the galaxies. They vibrate on extremely short wavelengths, like nothing that we know in our three-dimensional world, other than the wavelengths that we can observe in the infinitely small.

Light is corpuscular -- that is, it is made up of tiny particles. The timeless tunnels are composed exclusively of particles of the type known as tachyons that are superluminally connected to one another and that propagate light very quickly. Tachyons create fields of subtle energies and make up the missing mass of the universe that evades today's specialists....

It is remarkable that the ancient Egyptians used exactly the same vocalization to express the words door and star. This term is Seba. Its Gina'abul-Sumerian decomposition [see Decoder] indicates the reason: its syllables mean "brightness that opens" and "that which gives (allocates) light". Ancient Egyptian dwellings were constructed without windows in order to keep the high heat from penetrating the interiors. The only opening that brought in the light was indeed the port of entry.

Other definitions are also possible thanks to Sumerian homophones: SE-BÀ = "the light of life" and SE-BA₇, meaning "the light of the soul" or "that which distributes light". These Gina'abul-Sumerian definitions afford a better understanding of why the Egyptian Seba does not apply solely to the semantic of a door or a star, but equally to instruction and apprenticeship. We all know that light is synonymous with consciousness, wisdom.

...

The word Inúma ("the powerful expeditionary force that voyages in time") designated the vessels that served to travel in deep space. The Inúma were sort of long-haul Gigirlah (Ēmešà term for Gina'abul space vessel, litt: "intensely shining wheel") specially designed to move in the universe by following timeless passages where three-dimensional barriers do not exist. They differed from traditional vessels only in being much more voluminous, capable of transporting nearly two hundred individuals.

The Diranna are invisible to the naked eye, due to their density and their typically very small size. The more dense ones generally remain in fixed positions, while the less dense often move on the surface of a planet as ordinary particles do.

Note: The Inúma and Gigirlah (known to the males as Margíd'da) incorporated inertia-neutralizing technology. Another class of vessel, the Mú-u, exposed its occupants to the full effects of acceleration, like our own craft of today, and were not intended for travel through Dirannas. These were for point-to-point operations on planetary surfaces or for trips between the surface and orbiting platforms.

The term Mú-u is an extension of the Sumerian MU, meaning name. In fact, according to Parks, the words for name in Sumerian, Akkadian, Hebrew, and Egyptian can all be treated as containing this silent doubled vowel, because in the fabrication of words in human languages from the Emešà, doubled vowels were always compressed to one.

See Case 1: "NAME" = SHORT-RANGE SPACECRAFT on the Decoder page for clarification of how this was accomplished in these four languages.

Illustration of two jet aircraft or shuttles of the Mú-u class, extracted from a photograph of a rock near Oraibi, Arizona, by White Bear. The engraving is ancient; prior to the invention of aircraft. Note between the two objects the strange silhouette of something resembling a satellite.

Departure through a Stargate:

DANNA

The Danna, the Gina'abul "hour", is the same duration of time on all of their colonies, and corresponds to two of our "Earth hours" of today. This means that the length of the Ud (day) on a given planet

After having precisely calculated our destination, we stretched out on deep seats in order to relax. The automatic calculations being tedious, it was only after taking roughly a quarter Danna (half hour) of our patience that we suddenly felt our craft vibrate feebly; from the exterior it must have resembled a light humming.

A computer voice executed a countdown from 20 to 1, informing us that the calculations had been effected, and that we were ready to break the light barrier.

We knew that it is possible to extract a powerful energy from the tachyon field that forms the principal structure of "dark matter" in the universe and the timeless vortices. For that, it was necessary for us to create a vacuum around our ships in order to harness the infinitely small particles of light. This emptiness was obtained upon reaching a speed faster than sound, while violently reversing the rotation of the flying craft.

The acceleration resulting from this maneuver led to an antigravitational effect.

Tachyons can pass through any amount of mass while transferring to it, via braking action, a part of their energy. Thanks to this effect of acceleration and braking, the powerful tachyon field entrains a superluminal speed to any object plunged into its heart.

Light is not a wave but possesses a wave effect. We were among the enlightened beings of this universe who had understood this subtlety and considered matter simply as condensed energy. We knew that it was possible, thanks to tachyons, to transform wave energy at a point of departure, to ride it for long distances faster than light, and to transform it back to energy at an arrival point. In a few moments our craft and we ourselves were going to pass from the state of energy to that of a wave.

I waited for an extremely brutal departure.

At the fateful zero, our Iníuma passed through the Diranna like a flash, bathing the interior of the vessel with bright tones. The cabin was instantly filled with a diaphanous fluid. I felt my body floating in the liquid, as though breathed through a purple tunnel, which caused me to relax profoundly.

During the acceleration, the pellucid fluid solidified progressively, surrounding us and enveloping us in a vice-like grip.

Once at maximum speed, the amber tints transformed progressively to mauve, then to rainbow colors; it was the great distinctive feature of voyages through the corridors of time.

Cruising speed having been attained, the fluid that had enabled us to withstand the acceleration liquified gradually, permitting us to move as we wished in the cabin as in a small swimming pool.

A little after our departure, we progressively regained our spirits, now synchronized on the state of timeless expansion into which we were plunged. The voyage was the simplest thing in the world. There was absolutely nothing to see, other than the endless glimmering of rainbow colors threading along the walls and portholes of our craft.

We were able to watch our progress via holographic images projected with such clarity that it gave practically the illusion of reality. The view was not as gripping as in flight by traditional means, but the holographic effect still rendered the beauty of the spectacle well enough....

This particular flight from Nalulkára to Dukù (see Worlds) took approximately 90 "days" as sensed by the travelers, and arrived at Dukù's main stargate in the otherwise unremarkable town of Adhal.

One other very important point about stargates: in addition to their function of facilitating travel over long distances in space, they are interdimensional passages, launching ramps to other planes of reality. When the stargates are closed to travel on the KI (i.e., Earth's 3rd dimension), they are closed to all dimensions. This means that since Earth's stargates are closed, the Kadištu who evolved on higher dimensions have great difficulty visiting the KI here. It is sometimes possible for them to do so in the vicinity of stargates because in the immediate surroundings of the Diranna, space-time is not exactly as we normally perceive it.

Souls

Parks explores the metaphysics of the soul throughout his books. In a key encounter with Anšár (in Le Secret), Sa'am finds the Kuku apparently engaged in creating souls, and Sa'am is shocked by this. He protests, stating his understanding that only the Original Source has that function. Once created, Sa'am believes, the soul expresses as a self in a being, and then commences a series of experimental incarnations (Zišàgáls) each expressing a fragment of the original soul in an evolutionary reincarnational process (Gibilzišàgál). Anšár derides this notion, indicating that Sa'am was created as a one and only perfect soul. And Anšár ought to know, as he had created Sa'am's creator An.

Anšár goes on to say that Sa'am sounds very much like Mamitu-Nammu, who had once espoused the principle of reincarnation (Gibilzišàgál) in a memorable impassioned testimony to the entire Gina'abul. They had not been impressed. But Tigeme (Tiamata) had permitted Mamitu-Nammu to go to work and presumably develop her ideas if she wished, on the "accursed Uraš", which is to say the planet Earth.

Anšár almost taunts Sa'am by reminding him that no matter how much he might wish to deprecate such "self will", he is actually the very model of it, having been created thus by An and himself. But obviously, Anšár says, the "inscrutable cult of the Kadištu" has not had the best of influences on him.

Much is going on here, as this passage speaks not only of conflicting metaphysical systems, but of a methodology of total control practiced by the Ušumgal, as Sa'am is informed that everything he has ever done and ever will do has been programmed, and that nothing and no person can break that control.

Was he to be proven correct? This is a central theme in the book, and in our own world.

In the Karmapolis [K1] interview, Alain Gossens asked Parks to speak about the souls who incarnated on the Earth at the time of the Gina'abul colonization, and to explain the purpose of the Gina'abul in this.

With the arrival of the Gina'abul, this place has become a zone of free "judgment." Many consider that it is a stroke of fortune to be able to incarnate on the Earth today because the instruction here is intensive and altogether unaccustomed.

That which would require several thousand earth-years to learn elsewhere in our galaxy takes two or three lives here, on the Earth!

Now the situation is going to change and the reign of the Gina'abul is soon going to be finished. This is part of the order of affairs and the souls who incarnated on the Earth for several thousand years and who still haven't finished their education know it very well. This explains, I think, the fact that more and more souls incarnate on the Earth. They wish to profit from this situation right up to the end.

The Gina'abul permit this order of affairs by their past and present actions (cleverly hidden). They truncated the genetic code of human beings to transform them into Á-DAM (animals, see Decoder) at their service. This remains the actual situation today, above all seen when one dispassionately distinguishes the aberrant and often inhuman behaviors of the rulers of this world at the service of the galactic gravediggers that the Kadištu call Gilimanna (Celestial Bestiary).

The souls who incarnate on the Earth know where they put their feet! The fact that the greater part of the Gina'abul became galactic outlaws and in conflict with the Life Designer community of our universe is not incompatible with the karmic work executed here. All is but a story of appreciation. The soul who will have experienced negation under all its forms on the Earth will render justice to itself when it returns "on high". It will finish by testing the universal allegation in putting itself at the service of its neighbor and then of the Source from which it issued and toward which it returns by all ways. The tortuous and circuitous roads that it took to attain this goal and which engender different forms of suffering are known only to it.

Parks also mentions that the Gina'abul are incarnating beings, just as we are, and that certain humans can easily incarnate among them, and they among us. There are no particular rules about this, other than the evolution of species through karmic laws, which most of the Gina'abul males still have not absorbed.

Divinities

From the Karmapolis [K1] interview (slightly edited):

In the Gnostic cosmology, Sophia is an Aeon, a cosmic divinity, who was part of an ensemble known as the divinities of the Pleroma.¹

We readily identify these galactic divinities who work in the light with the Kadištu (life designers) – the same Kadištu whom one also identifies as the Elohim of the Bible.

[Use the Decoder to demonstrate this connection.²]

Elohim is the Hebrew term used in antiquity to designate the original creator divinities of the Earth and of the original human being of Genesis – Adam not appearing until the "second creation" (Gen. 2.7) by the intention of Yahweh who is a blend of the Sumerian "gods" An, Enlil, and Enki.

Who among the Kadištu were closely related to the patriarchal order named Yahweh? There were two principal entities: Tiamata and her daughter Nammu: Sophia and her daughter Zoe to the Gnostics.

-
1. A pagan Gnostic depiction of this kind according to author John Lash is treated on the Open SETI page Gnosticism, Archons/Greys, The Controller Agenda. A study of parallels and differences between Lash's and Parks' Gnostic views would be a worthy project.
 2. Compare the meaning in Emeša of the syllables in the Akkadian word Qadištu, with the meaning in Emeša of the syllables in the Sumero-Akkadian phonemes corresponding to the Hebrew word Elohim. The match is close to perfect and the difference reveals the spin, does it not?

Parks traces the evolution of concepts of the "Mother Goddess" and masculine deities in the literature of human societies. We quote here (with a little editing) from his Note 22, pp. 118-119, Le Secret.

In diverse passages of the Judaic literature but also of the Bible and other traditions of the planet, "the original primordial and androgyne source" has been subtly replaced by a masculine divinity named God or The Father.

It is clearly seen that at the epoch when the scripture made its appearance on the Earth and the cosmogony of the biblical texts was drafted (in fact, several thousand years later, after 1000 B.C.E.), the religion of the Mother-Goddess was losing ground; in reality it has not ceased to regress over the course of time.

The growing acceptance of the male religions by numerous patriarchal societies rapidly accelerated the extinction of the feminine creator divinity. Under these conditions, the monotheistic drafters could not attribute the full original creation to any entity other than God himself -- a masculine entity -- while they clearly knew that the first creation was rather the work of plural entities (the Elohim) at the service of a Mother Goddess, a jointly-conceived master plan for the Earth. Everything pertaining to this ancient Mother Goddess divinity was grossly deformed, demonized, or radically suppressed. The patriarchal doctrine that consisted in marking the domination of God over an ancient feminine divinity, totally submitted to its orders, therefore took over.

In the mythology of India, the Divine and primordial Energy is called Shakti, which transposed into Sumerian gives ŠA₆-AK-TI, literally "the good miracle-worker of life" See [Decoder].

Shakti is no other than the representation of the Divine Mother, the Mother-Goddess, more precisely the personification of the feminine principle that Hinduism very correctly associates with the Holy Spirit. This obliges us to [examine] the Hebrew Ruah Elohim, which means spirit of God, the Holy Spirit. See [Decoder for the decomposition of the feminine Ruach].

A Mother Goddess in the form of a tree nourishes humanity. The tree is the great symbol of the feminine deities and in Mesopotamia illustrates a "Dark Star".

The Mother-Goddess, skillfully demonized by the dominant patriarchy of the Judaic religion, is concealed in the demoness Lilith. Some associate Lilith with the Hebrew lailah -- night. Others think that Lilith comes from the Sumerian term LÍL-TI, generally translated as "spirit of life," but I would rather interpret it, in our context, as "she who gives the breath of life," in the sense of "the entity who breathed life into the primordial man."

Judaic imagery represents Lilith as a night bird, a symbol taken directly from one of the most ancient attributes of the Mother-Goddess, that is to say the bird or the dove that the Christians used to symbolize the Holy Spirit. This volatile aspect of Mother-

Goddess is also found in Greek mythology, where Eurynome, the universal and primordial goddess, changes into a dove while pondering the universal egg from which all things come.

An amusing note: if one translates the name of the primordial goddess from Greek into Sumerian, one gets ERIN₂-UM (no "O" in Sumerian): bands of midwives (or old or even ancient women), or again ERIN₂-UM-ME: bands of midwives of divine order.

The same idea is found in the Egyptian traditions, throughout the pyramid texts, which relate that the supreme and androgynous divinity Atum (from his Egyptian name Itemu) metamorphoses into the bird Ben to create the air, the Earth, and the sky (or heaven). Thanks again to Emeša, the matrix language of the priestesses that incorporates the Sumero-Assyro-Babylonian particles, we are going to obtain some confirmations and to clarify this a bit more.

First, we translate the name of this divinity into IT-EM-U, "the meteorological force," which clearly attests to its creative function cited above (creation of the air, the Earth, and the sky). Next, its Greek name Atum, which gives AT-UM "the old father-woman," confirming the androgyny of Atum or at least the fact that this entity symbolizes different creative forces at the service of the same cause. And finally, the term Ben that is attributed to this bird-phoenix creator and that gives BÉ-EN, "the lord who speaks." Numerous traditions assimilate the word to the creation of the world.

Culture

Introduction

As demonstrated by Anton Parks' Les Chroniques du Gîrkû, any study of the deep history of the peoples of our planet is per force a study of Gina'abul culture. Every section of these Ages of Uraš pages is similarly devoted to a description of one or another aspect of Gina'abul culture. Both the books and these pages also treat with the liaisons between the Gina'abul and human cultures: how aspects of the one were transmitted to the other, and how one is a through-the-looking-glass version of the other, and how still other aspects have yet to be repeated or picked up by our own culture, though this may well occur in the future.

So that goal of Parks' work and this website would appear to have been taken care of. But actually there can't be enough said on this subject. The parallels are immense, yet easily overlooked because through the process of projection we unconsciously expect elements of human culture to be found in a nonhuman one, whether there had been contact or not.

Take for example the institution of "royalty": kings and queens ruling, living in palaces, sitting on thrones, being revered by the common individuals; all this is shared, and either this is due to confabulation of the author, or there has been an actual process of transmission.

The working hypothesis of these pages of course, well supported by the author's brilliant language studies, is that the races and events described in Les Chroniques did and do exist.

In this section we will not be spending much time tracing the mechanism of transmission, as that is usually self-evident. Rather the purpose of this section is to collect significant bits of data from the books -- data that we have not discussed elsewhere, and that someday may support a more disciplined approach to understanding this deep inter-species and inter-cultural contact.

